Declared that the policy of Congress was to establish a federal program on smoking and health whereby the public would be "adequately informed" of the possible health hazards of cigarette smoking, and commerce and the national economy would not be impeded by diverse cigarette labeling and advertising regulations.

Required that as of Jan. 1, 1966, all cigarette packages, cartons and containers for sale in the United States bear the following statement: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health," to be located in a "conspicuous place" on every package and appear in "conspicuous and legible type" in contrast with other printed matter on the package.

Stipulated that no other statements on smoking and health could be required on cigarette packages and that, until July 1, 1969, no statement on smoking and health could be required in the advertising of cigarettes labeled in conformity with the Act's provisions.

Stipulated that except as otherwise provided in the Act, nothing in the Act could be construed to limit, restrict, expand or otherwise affect the authority of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to unfair or deceptive acts or practices in cigarette advertising, nor to affirm or deny the FTC's holding that it had the authority to issue trade regulation rules or to require an affirmative statement in any cigarette advertising.

Required submission to Congress within 18 months after the effective date of the Act and annually thereafter of reports (1) from the Health, Education and Welfare Department on current information on the health consequences of smoking and recommendations for legislation and (2) from the FTC on the effectiveness of cigarette labeling, current practices of cigarette advertising and recommendations for legislation.

Imposed a fine of $10,000 on anyone violating the provisions and provided that the Attorney General would enforce the Act.

Background

REFERENCE -- Smoking Linked to Disease; Government Action Delayed (1964 Almanac p. 246).

The U.S. Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health Jan. 11, 1964, issued a detailed report on tobacco smoking and health which indicated a probable causal relationship between cigarette smoking and lung cancer and a variety of other diseases. The report concluded that "cigarette smoking is a health hazard of sufficient importance in the United States to warrant appropriate remedial action." The question of what constituted "appropriate" action was not resolved in 1964.

On June 24, 1964, the FTC, acting under provisions of the 1914 Federal Trade Commission Act and the 1938 Wheeler-Lea amendments, which gave the FTC general authority to prohibit unfair and deceptive trade practices, including false and misleading product advertising, announced a rule "for the prevention of unfair or deceptive advertising and labeling of cigarettes in relation to the health hazards of smoking." It required that cigarette packages bear a warning of the health hazards of smoking, as of Jan. 1, 1965, and that cigarette advertising bear a similar warning as of July 1, 1965, unless the tobacco industry's advertising was reformed voluntarily in the interim. (For discussion of FTC regulatory powers over advertising, see Congress and the Nation, p. 1177).

The FTC ruling was the focal point of the ensuing dispute, which led to a delay of any administrative or legislative action until 1965. The tobacco industry, as well as several Members of Congress, challenged the FTC's authority to promulgate such regulations. The industry immediately made plans to challenge the authority in the courts, which could have delayed implementation of the rules for several years. On April 27, 1964, the industry announced that as of Jan. 1, 1965, its advertising would be covered by a voluntary Cigarette Advertising Code designed to eliminate advertising which aimed specifically at youth or which made health claims. The broadcasting industry also amended its codes to specify that neither advertising nor programming was to depict smoking as promoting health or as necessary or desirable for young people. Other industries likely to feel the impact of a loss of advertising voiced concern.

The views of the industry and others were presented during intermittent hearings of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in 1964, but no further action was taken in either chamber during the year. Finally, the FTC Sept. 3 agreed to a request of Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.) to postpone the effective date of the labeling requirement until July 1, 1965, when the advertising requirement was to take effect, in order to permit Congress to consider alternatives.

It was clear by the end of 1964 that Congressional action could take any of three basic forms:

- No legislation at all. In the absence of any legislation, the FTC regulations would go into effect (if unchallenged in the courts), and there was the additional possibility of a variety of regulations -- possibly more stringent than those of the FTC and certainly more bothersome to the industry if they varied from state to state or locality to locality -- by state and local bodies. Because of the industry's position, this approach was never a serious possibility.
- Legislation specifically authorizing the FTC (or another federal agency) to promulgate regulations affecting cigarette labeling and/or advertising. This approach was opposed not only by the industry and its supporters in Congress, but by the traditional foes of federal regulatory powers over private industry.
- Legislation requiring a single uniform health-hazard warning on cigarette labels (the warning might even strengthen the industry's case in later court suits by individual smokers) precluding imposition of any other labeling requirements at any level, and barring the FTC or any other agency (federal, state or local) from establishing additional requirements for health-hazard warnings in advertising. This was the approach favored by the industry (see below).

LOBBYING CAMPAIGN ON BILL

A united effort of the normally competitive major cigarette producers to obtain a common goal culminated in enactment of S 559 in precisely the form recommended by the industry. By playing down -- or placing in doubt -- the health issue and playing up the economic impact of the FTC regulations, the voluntary actions already taken by the industry, and the possibility that the FTC regulations might set a precedent for similar federal regulations affecting other industries, the tobacco strategists gained broad enough support to enact their bill.

Because the regulations could affect nearly every district in the South, virtually all Southern Members of Congress supported the industry position. In addition, the industry cause was embraced by conservatives -- mostly Republicans -- who objected to stringent federal regulation of private industry. The importance of tobacco taxes as sources of revenue in most states influenced the positions of other Members. And the potential impact of the advertising regulations on the incomes of the advertising, broadcasting and news industries, whose support was vital each election year, brought additional supporters.

Finally, President Johnson's failure to take a position on the issue and the lack of unanimity in the Executive Branch on an effective approach to the problem were powerful aids to the industry's cause.

The only major organizational effort to fight the industry came from the National Interagency Council on Smoking and Health, composed of public and private health groups including the American Assn. for Health, Physical Education and Recreation; American Assn. of School Administrators; American Cancer Society; American College Health Assn.; American Dental Assn.; American Heart Assn.; American Pharmaceutical Assn.; American Public Health Assn.; American School Health Assn.; Assn. of State and Territorial Health Officers; Department of Classroom Teachers of the National Education Assn.; National Congress of Parents and Teachers; National Tuberculosis Assn.; U.S. Children's Bureau; U.S. Office of Education; and U.S. Public Health Service. Notably absent was the American Medical Assn.

Industry Campaign. The tobacco industry had anticipated both the Surgeon General's report and the FTC regulations before they came. Late in 1963, the six largest cigarette producers (American Tobacco Co., Brown & Williamson, Liggett & Myers, Philip Morris, P. Lorillard and R. J. Reynolds) retained lawyers from several top Washington law firms. Beginning early in 1964, the lawyers met constantly with representatives of the companies. This was the committee which performed behind-the-scenes functions such as writing testimony, drafting bills and amendments and generally presenting the industry's point of view -- sometimes in person, sometimes on paper.

Also early in 1964, the industry chose former Congressman Earle C. Clements (D Ky. -- House 1945-48; Senate 1950-57) to conduct and supervise its overt lobbying activities. In addition to his experience as a legislator (he was Senate Democratic Whip under Lyndon B. Johnson during the 1953-56 sessions), Clements had the respect and friendship of many current Members of both chambers. It reportedly was Clements who engineered the over-all strategy of the industry.

When the FTC announced its June 24, 1964, regulations, the industry was ready. It had two choices: it could challenge the FTC's authority to promulgate such regulations in the courts or it could take the matter to Congress and ask for legislation to overturn or modify the ruling (leaving open the possibility of future court challenges if Congress ever allowed the FTC rules to take effect). It chose the latter approach.

The next step was to plan the strategy. The industry decided that its basic strategy would be to accept a labeling requirement in return for protection against advertising requirements.

In preparation for the presentation of its case to Congress, the industry April 27, 1964, announced that it was imposing its own voluntary cigarette Advertising Code. It also made clear that it would fight the FTC ruling in the courts if Congress allowed the ruling to take effect.

Legislative Goals. Although intermittent hearings were held in 1964 by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the real legislative battle occurred in 1965. The first and most crucial points of attack were the two legislative committees handling labeling and advertising legislation -- the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and the Senate Commerce Committee, whose recommendations were highly likely to be accepted by the membership at large.

The industry was represented by a single spokesman: Bowman Gray, chairman of the board of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. Gray pointed to evidence of the industry's concern over the possible connection between smoking and health. In 1954, he said, most of the cigarette manufacturers and representatives of organizations of tobacco growers had formed the Tobacco Industry Research Committee (later re-named the Council for Tobacco Research, U.S.A.) to finance research on tobacco and health. Grants totaling $7 million had been made by the Council, in addition to grants made by individual companies for similar purposes. Also, he said, in January 1964 the industry pledged $10 million to the American Medical Assn.'s Education and Research Foundation for research into the possible association between smoking and health. Further, he reminded Congress that the industry had voluntarily agreed to regulate its own advertising. Finally, he stressed the economic importance of tobacco and warned against measures which could disrupt this vital industry. He concluded that no governmental action was necessary or desirable to warn against alleged health hazards of smoking.

However, he said, if any action were taken, it should be taken by Congress and no one else. In this case, he said, the industry would prefer legislation which: (1) made clear that the legislation preempted the field, so that states and federal agencies could not impose conflicting regulations; (2) required a warning on cigarette package labels, but one phrased in a "fair and factual manner" and which reflected "the lack of definitive clinical and laboratory scientific evidence of the relationship between smoking and health"; (3) required that no federal, state or local authority could impose a requirement for a warning in advertising for cigarettes packaged in conformity with the legislation's labeling provisions; (4) contained no requirement for a statement of the quantity of any ingredient (nicotine, tar, etc.) on the label; and (5) countermanded the proposed FTC regulations. The final provisions of S 559 complied with all of these proposals.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Commerce.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 22-April 5 on S 559, S 547.

S 559 was introduced Jan. 15 by Commerce Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.). The bill required that all cigarette packages bear prominently, in conspicuous and legible type, this statement: "Warning: Continual Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health." Cigarette packages were also to state the average tar and nicotine yields per cigarette. The bill prohibited imposition of any other warning requirements by any federal, state or local authority (thus in effect preempting all the FTC requirements -- advertising as well as labeling). Failure to comply with the bill's provisions was declared a misdemeanor, and enforcement was left to the Attorney General.

S 547 was introduced Jan. 15 by Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.). Instead of preempting the FTC's authority, the bill specifically gave the FTC the authority it had assumed it already possessed to set advertising and labeling standards. It stipulated that the requirements set by the FTC must include a regulation that each cigarette package bear a label which stated: "Caution -- Habitual Smoking Is Injurious to Health" and which set forth the cigarettes' average yield of each "incriminated agent" -- each substance determined by the FTC to contribute to the medical hazards of smoking. In addition, the bill required that all cigarette advertisements carry the same warning required on cigarette labels and that the industry provide for elimination of advertising which tended to make smoking appeal to children. Any advertising which failed to comply was to be deemed a false advertisement of drugs by the FTC. The bill specifically contained a Congressional finding that "the unrestricted promotion and advertising of cigarettes in interstate commerce, in the light of the conclusive evidence that cigarette smoking is injurious to health, constitutes a grave threat to the public welfare."

TESTIMONY -- March 22 -- Surgeon General Luther L. Terry endorsed the concept of cigarette label and advertising warnings because they "could materially increase public awareness of the health hazard by providing concrete evidence of governmental concern" and they "would prevent the consumer from being led to the belief that the product is safe." However, he said S 559's provision for Justice Department enforcement of such provisions would "create difficulties" because manufacturers "would have no assurance, such as a regulatory agency could provide, that its proposed label statement would be considered to comply with the bill's mandate as to prominence, location and layout of the label on the package." Terry said it would be "preferable to leave formulation of the precise warning required to administrative regulation," in order to make allowance for possible technical improvements which might "result in a safer cigarette" justifying "a reduced warning or perhaps even its omission." Terry also suggested that legislation should include "specific authority...to prohibit or regulate the use of statements that either negate the warning or...might give the consumer the misleading impression that a given cigarette is safer than others." He said any statement of contents should be in accordance with standardized regulations and should present meaningful information to the consumer to allow him "to make an intelligent choice." Terry recommended that legislation, instead of setting forth specific components which must be disclosed on the label, should provide regulatory authority to "decide which particular components of cigarette smoke should be discussed on the label,...the analytical methods to be used,...(and) the manner in which the information is presented to the consumer." He recommended that the Health, Education and Welfare Department be given authority to enforce labeling regulations and that the FTC "continue" to exercise authority over cigarette advertising.

Dr. Leroy E. Burney, former Surgeon General (1956-61), represented the American Public Health Assn. He said the APHA in 1963 adopted a resolution which recommended educational measures to deal with the smoking problem, continued voluntary efforts to control cigarette advertising -- particularly that directed at young people, and programs in schools and communities designed to deter young people from smoking and to encourage adults to stop or reduce their smoking. Dr. Morton L. Levin, also representing the APHA, said labeling required in the bills would be "an effective, less costly, although partial substitute" for a broad public education program on smoking.

Dr. Harold S. Diehl, vice chairman of the National Interagency Council on Smoking and Health, said that the Committee "apparently faces a basic issue as to whether in a democratic capitalistic society human health can be given precedence over financial gain...."

Dr. Louis N. Katz, spokesman for the American Heart Assn., supported S 547, with the required warning statement changed to read: "Caution: Habitual Cigarette Smoking Frequently Constitutes a Serious Hazard to Health." He also supported the labeling requirements and other provisions of S 559 but regretted "the absence of cigarette advertising requirements in this bill."

Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah), who co-sponsored S 559, said he was "not wedded to any one approach," but Congress "should without delay pass effective legislation to deal with the cigarette labeling and advertising problem."

Mrs. Neuberger said her bill was "clearly a compromise" between no controls and legislation banning cigarettes, but "I believe in the ability of the American people to make intelligent decisions when given all the facts." She said that by requiring that each package disclose the average tar and nicotine contents, the bill "attempts to stimulate competition among the cigarette producers to reduce the levels of these incriminating agents."

March 23 -- Dr. Thomas Carlile, spokesman for the American Cancer Society, strongly supported legislation to require warnings in cigarette advertising and labeling because the public should realize that "the overwhelming body of evidence makes it clear that heavy cigarette smoking is a most dangerous personal habit." Carlile strongly opposed any measures "that would directly or indirectly prevent the Federal Trade Commission from acting to protect the public by the supervision of advertising."

Requirements for health warnings were also endorsed by spokesmen for the National Congress of Parents and Teachers and the National Tuberculosis Assn.

March 24 -- Bowman Gray, chairman of the board of the Reynolds Tobacco Co., testified for the Tobacco Institute Inc., which represented nine tobacco companies producing nearly all cigarettes in the United States: American Tobacco, Brown & Williamson, Larus & Brother, Liggett & Myers, P. Lorillard, Philip Morris, R. J. Reynolds, Stephano Brothers and United States Tobacco. He said these manufacturers "do not believe that a caution notice is necessary either on cigarette packages or in advertising." However, he said, if Congress felt such a notice on packages "would serve a useful purpose," any legislation "should make absolutely clear that the Congressional statute preempts the field." Even if a labeling requirement were enacted, he said, a warning should not be required in advertising. In addition, Gray said there was "no legitimate reason for" any requirement for a statement of tar and nicotine yields on packages. He said "it would be wrong for the Government to take a step which would lead the public to believe that the reduction or absence of a particular ingredient in cigarette smoke has health significance when conclusive scientific proof of that fact is lacking." He said the FTC's existing warning requirement was "unwise, unwarranted, and is not a fair factual statement of the present state of scientific knowledge."

Statistical Proof Disputed

Dr. Thomas H. Burford, professor of thoracic surgery at Washington University, St. Louis, said there was "a large volume of good scientific evidence which tends to refute the rather hastily accepted premise that cigarette smoking is causally related" to lung cancer. As long as "the cause of cancer is unknown," he said, "it would seem only reasonable that to raise an alarm about cigarette smoking is unwarranted."

Dr. K. Alexander Brownlee, associate professor of statistics at the University of Chicago, presented evidence to demonstrate that "the existing statistical evidence" was not "sufficient to justify any scientific conclusion that cigarette smoking causes cancer."

Dr. Thomas J. Moran, pathologist from Danville, Va., said "the cause or causes of lung cancer, as all human cancer, has not yet been scientifically established, and research into its causation along all possible avenues of approach is urgently needed."

March 25 -- Dr. Louis H. Clerf, professor emeritus of laryngology and broncho-esophagology at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, said the report's findings of a probable cause between cigarette smoking and lung cancer had "overshadowed all other possible causes and probably has influenced many research studies." He said "there is only a statistical relationship between cancer of the lung and cigarette smoking.... Additional research is necessary."

Dr. William B. Ober, director of laboratories at Knickerbocker Hospital, New York City, and assistant professor of pathology at Albert Einstein College of Medicine, said "I do not feel that the evidence which has been accumulated to date has anything more than a limited statistical value to indicate that excessive smoking may have a statistical association with lung cancer." He pointed out that to say that a large proportion of lung cancer patients "have been heavy cigarette smokers for 20 or 30 years or longer...is quite a different matter (from saying) that a large proportion of those people who smoke heavily will develop cancer of the lung." He said the "only really scientific statement one can make at the present time is that no one really knows what causes lung cancer."

Dr. John H. Mayer, head of the division of thoracic surgery at Kansas City general hospital, said it was "unfair and premature" to draw a conclusion that there was a causal relationship between cigarette smoking and lung cancer, and "serious consideration needs to be given to such possible factors as viruses, hormones, air pollution and perhaps to other things not presently even being considered."

Dr. Henry I. Russek, consultant in cardiovascular disease at the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital, Staten Island, N.Y., said that "statistical findings linking the tobacco habit to coronary disease afford no proof of a causal relationship since excessive smoking, like overeating and failure to obtain adequate exercise, is often an undeniable manifestation of psychological stress."

Drs. Joseph H. Ogura, Alden H. Miller, George A. Sisson and Harold G. Tabb, all professors of otolaryngology, said in a joint statement that "the attempt to assign causal significance to any one factor that appears with high frequency in case histories is not the way to make a scientific determination of the cause of a disease as complex as cancer." "Our present knowledge," they said, "would indicate that it is premature to incriminate any of the present suspects" as a cause of cancer of the larynx.

Dr. Alvis E. Greer, former president of the American College of Chest Physicians and managing director of the Greer Clinic in Houston, Texas, stated "without equivocation that the cause of cancer of the lung will not be found by the present tendency toward concentration on one particular suspect." He said it was "illogical to embrace the theory that smoking is the cause of lung cancer and to ignore such other possible factors as environment, heredity, immunology, the effects of chronic respiratory infections, hormonal influences and viral infections."

Testimony by FTC Chairman

March 29 -- FTC Chairman Paul Rand Dixon made it clear that in the absence of legislation specifically forbidding it, the FTC would enforce both its advertising and labeling requirements. But he said that cigarette manufacturers had already threatened to fight the regulations in court, and without specific legislative permission for such enforcement, it might take four years of court fights to settle the question. He urged that any law passed "should neither preclude nor preempt the Commission's authority under existing law with respect to cigarette advertising and thereby leave such advertising unregulated." He said, "Cigarette advertising, not labeling, has been the principal sales method employed in the marketing of cigarettes." Warned by Committee members that the advertising requirement could wreck cigarette advertising, he replied, "I have more faith in the ingenuity of American businessmen."

April 1 -- Six witnesses challenged the finding of the Surgeon General's 1964 report on Smoking and Health that there was a probable cause between cigarette smoking and cancer and other diseases. They included a professor of surgery, a private consultant on medical research, a medical director of a heart hospital and medical center, two university pathologists and Darrell Huff, author of the book, "How to Lie with Statistics."

April 2 -- Fourteen doctors testified that additional research was necessary to establish a causal relationship between cigarette smoking and various diseases. The doctors were Dr. Raymond J. Barrett, clinical assistant professor of surgery at Wayne State University; Dr. Hiram Langston, clinical professor of surgery, University of Illinois; Dr. Sheldon C. Sommers, associate professor of pathology at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons; Dr. Jack M. Farris, associate clinical professor of surgery, University of California in Los Angeles; Dr. Ian MacDonald, clinical professor of surgery at the University of Southern California; Dr. Sherman Kaplan, chairman of the department of medicine at Mt. Sinai Hospital, Miami Beach; Dr. Milton B. Rosenblatt, associate clinical professor of medicine at New York Medical College; Dr. Harry S.N. Greene, chairman of the pathology department at the Yale University school of medicine; Dr. R. H. Rigdon, professor of pathology at the University of Texas in Galveston; Dr. Israel Rappaport, consultant to the chest service of Bellevue Hospital, New York City; Dr. Sigmund L. Wilens, consultant in pathology from New York City; Dr. Henry Easton McMahon, lecturer in cardiology at the New York Polyclinic Medical School; Dr. Henry Garland, clinical professor of radiology, University of California Medical School; and Dr. Ferdinand C. Helwig, clinical professor of pathology and oncology at the University of Kansas School of Medicine.

Robert C. Hockett, testifying on behalf of the Council for Tobacco Research, an organization supported by representatives of tobacco manufacturers, growers and warehousemen, suggested that "in the absence of corroboratory clinical and experimental evidence, judgments that cigarette smoking is a major factor contributing importantly to mortality would seem to go beyond the realm of scientific conclusions, and to contain a considerable element of guess and gamble."

Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) suggested that "the FTC is without authority to promulgate a rule such as it has proposed with respect to cigarettes." In past instances, he said, Congress had "found that it was necessary to grant the FTC specific authority to promulgate trade regulation rules." He said Congress "should halt this claim of authority by the FTC by preemption, at least until it determines whether it desires to give the FTC a broad authority which...would not be limited to cigarettes but could be extended to any other product."

Bill Reported

The Commerce Committee May 19 unanimously reported S 559, amended (S Rept 195).

Major Provisions. S 559 required that all cigarette packages bear the following statement prominently on the front or back: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health." The bill also stipulated: that no other statement could be required on packages and that, for three years, no statement relating to smoking and health could be required in advertising of cigarettes labeled in accordance with the Act's provisions; imposed a fine of up to $100,000 on anyone violating the provisions; required the FTC, in cooperation with HEW, to transmit to Congress within 18 months and annually thereafter a report on the effectiveness of cigarette labeling, current information on the health consequences of smoking, current practices of cigarette advertising, and recommendations for legislation; and left enforcement to the Attorney General.

Committee Views. The Committee said it was "satisfied that the public interest requires the inclusion of a fair and factual cautionary statement on every cigarette package," but that "it was the Committee's unanimous judgment that no warning in cigarette advertising should be required pending the showing" that the warning on packages, the voluntary advertising code of the tobacco industry and various smoking education campaigns had failed to alert the public "to the potential hazard from smoking."

Concerning the findings of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee, the report said, "While there remain a substantial number of individual physicians and scientists -- the Commerce Committee received testimony from 39 of them -- who do not believe that it has been demonstrated scientifically that smoking causes lung cancer or other diseases, no prominent medical or scientific body undertaking a systematic review of the evidence has reached conclusions opposed to those of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee".

On the need for a warning, it said that despite the widespread distribution of the Surgeon General's report, "too many Americans, particularly teen-agers, are unaware of the extent of the potential hazard in smoking and...these people will not be convinced until the Federal Government, upon which they have come to rely for cautionary labeling of hazardous substances, takes affirmative action which manifests its concern."

The report said the bill precluded warning requirements by other authorities in order to avoid "chaotic marketing conditions and consumer confusion" which might result from "a multiplicity" of state and local labeling regulations. The Committee dropped a provision which would have required cigarette packages to list the nicotine and tar content of cigarettes because it was not clear what ingredients of cigarettes were actually harmful.

Supplementary Views. Mrs. Neuberger supported S 559 but said the "impact on the public...would be greater if what Congress really wants to do -- decrease cigarette consumption -- was specifically spelled out," as in her bill (S 547). She proposed a one-year moratorium on a federal requirement for a warning in advertising, instead of the three-year moratorium, and also opposed the provision for preemption of health hazard warning requirements in advertising by state and local governments, "the traditional guardians of public health." Mrs. Neuberger also recommended that "regulatory authority be provided to decide which particular components of cigarette smoke should be disclosed on the label."

Sen. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) said the bill should provide that when the Surgeon General had determined the harmful ingredients of cigarettes, package labels should be required to show the content of such ingredients.

Agency Views. In letters to the Committee, contained in the report, the Agriculture Department said it had stepped up research to identify the damaging components of cigarette smoke; the Commerce Department suggested that legislative action be put off pending "some indication of the effectiveness" of the action proposed by the FTC and the tobacco industry; the FTC recommended that the label be required to state that cigarette smoking "is" hazardous to health, not "may be" hazardous, said the moratorium action should be set at six months or one year, and stated that "cigarette advertising, not labeling, has been the principal sales method employed in the marketing of cigarettes...."; the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said it should regulate labeling and the FTC should be empowered to regulate advertising.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 16 passed S 559, by a 72-5 roll-call vote, and sent it to the House. (For voting, see chart p. 1050)

Before passing S 559, the Senate defeated two strengthening amendments by Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.). One, rejected by a 29-49 roll call, would have provided a one-year moratorium on advertising warnings in place of the bill's three-year ban. The other, defeated by a standing vote, would have: applied the three-year moratorium only to the FTC, thus permitting other agencies or state or local governments to prescribe their own requirements; required a statement on packages and cartons of harmful components in cigarettes; barred statements on packages or accompanying literature (such as advertising displays) which negated these statements; and changed the required warning to read: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking Is Hazardous to Health."

Most of the debate on S 559 concerned the three-year moratorium. Proponents of the ban said the labeling rule would be a "first step" in protecting the nation's health. They said that during the three-year moratorium, an effort would be made to formulate regulations less harmful to the industry than the FTC advertising regulation. Ross Bass (D Tenn.) said it was "entirely punitive to make any company which advertises its products contradict its views as shown in the advertising." Sam J. Ervin (D N.C.) said the moratorium was "reasonable" in view of the importance of tobacco to the United States: 750,000 families in 21 states grew tobacco; 550 factories employing 96,000 people manufactured tobacco products; 300,000 people had invested $3 billion in tobacco factories; and federal, state and local governments collected more than $3.2 billion in tobacco excise taxes.

In support of shortening the moratorium to one year, Frank E. Moss (D Utah) said it would be "reprehensible of the Government...to refuse to act...for as long as three years and at the same time preclude state and local authorities from taking the action they feel is necessary to protect the public welfare." Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) said the "only reason" there was opposition to the amendment was "that the cigarette lobby is a very strong lobby."

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 16 -- Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- Prohibit for one year (rather than for three years) any requirement that cigarette advertising contain a health warning. Roll-call vote, 29-49.

Neuberger -- Make the advertising-requirement moratorium applicable only to the FTC; require a statement of harmful substances on packages; change the package warning to read: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking Is Hazardous to Health." Standing.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HELD HEARINGS -- April 6-May 4 on three bills.

HR 3014, introduced by Rep. Walter Rogers (D Texas), and HR 4007, introduced by Rep. Ancher Nelsen (R Minn.), made it unlawful to manufacture, import or package for domestic sale or distribution any cigarettes which failed to bear the following label on each container: "Caution: Cigarette Smoking May Be Hazardous to Your Health." The bills barred the Federal Trade Commission or other agencies from requiring any health hazard statement or other warning in cigarette advertising when the advertised cigarettes had been packaged in conformity with the bill's labeling provisions. HR 4244, introduced by Rep. Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.), required that cigarette packages carry the nicotine and tar content of the cigarettes on the package and the statement, "Warning -- Contents May Be Dangerous to Health."

TESTIMONY -- The bulk of the testimony was similar to that heard in the Senate hearings.

During a three-day appearance April 6-8, FTC Chairman Dixon said the Commission had the authority to regulate both cigarette labeling and advertising and was taking "appropriate...action" to require a health warning on cigarette packages and advertising, effective July 1. Dixon said there was "a consensus of medical and scientific opinion that cigarette smoking is a significant cause of certain grave diseases and contributes substantially to mortality from those diseases and to the over-all death rate." He said the FTC found "that the methods by which cigarettes have been and are being sold to the consuming public -- by means of labeling, and advertising, which fail to disclose the health hazards of cigarette smoking -- are deceptive and unfair to consumers -- especially children and teenagers, among whom cigarette smoking is very widespread -- under settled legal principles governing truth and fairness in advertising." He opposed legislation which would "single out cigarettes and exempt them from any requirement that advertising must disclose the danger attendant to their use." Dixon added, "The principal means of promoting the sale of cigarettes is advertising, not labeling."

Bill Reported

HR 3014 was approved 23-8 and reported with amendments June 8 (H Rept 449) by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Changes from Senate Bill. On most points, HR 3014 was similar to the measure passed by the Senate. The major difference was that the House version permanently banned the Federal Trade Commission and other agencies from requiring that cigarette advertising include health warnings. The Senate measure prevented such action for a three-year period. Other respects in which the bills differed were as follows:

The Senate bill required the health warning in "conspicuous and legible type" on the front or back panel, whereas the House measure stipulated that the wording could be carried on side panels in lettering slightly bigger than typewriter point (10-point type for packages, 12-point for cartons).

The House bill included additional language expressing Congressional findings and policy on cigarettes and health.

The Senate version imposed criminal penalties up to $100,000 in fines for violation, whereas the House version carried a maximum penalty of $10,000 in fines. The Senate measure also contained a provision, not in the House bill, which directed the FTC, in cooperation with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, to transmit to Congress annual reports on the effectiveness of cigarette labeling, current information on the health consequences of smoking, current practices of cigarette advertising, and recommendations for legislation.

Minority Views. Rep. John E. Moss (D Calif.) "strongly opposed" the features of the bill which "preclude the imposition of more stringent labeling requirements or the imposition of health warnings in advertisements." He said "the endorsement of this legislation puts the Federal Government in the position of saying that cigarette smoking constitutes a serious health hazard, but that traditional guardians of public health, the state and local authorities, cannot act to protect their citizens if they believe a warning statement in cigarette advertising would do so." The labeling requirement, he said, "does little to act as a remedy to curb the cigarette health hazard.... A more realistic and responsible approach... would be to warn the nonsmoking consumer of the health hazard before the product is purchased -- rather than remind the individual who already smokes and after he has the product in his possession, that it may be harmful to his health." He suggested that "we must first concern ourselves with public health and welfare, not legislate to the whims of a special interest."

FLOOR ACTION

The House July 22 passed HR 3014 by voice vote, with a minor amendment. Before passage, a motion by Donald Rumsfeld (R Ill.) to recommit (kill) the bill was rejected by voice vote.

The House then substituted the provisions of HR 3014 for those of S 559 as passed by the Senate, passed the amended S 559 by voice vote, and sent it to conference with the Senate.

The House rejected three amendments designed to strengthen the controls in the bill. (See below)

Debate on HR 3014 centered on the bill's provision to prohibit state or federal agencies from requiring advertising warnings or package warnings other than the one specified. Proponents of the ban said the bill provided an "adequate" caution statement to smokers. Oren Harris (D Ark.), chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and floor manager of the bill, asserted that city- and state-enacted warning requirements would make the job of labeling "impossible" for manufacturers. Walter Rogers (D Texas), who sponsored HR 3014, said that failure to include the ban could give the FTC the power to "write the death penalty" for the U.S. tobacco industry.

In support of deleting the ban, Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.) questioned whether the "simple words of caution" in the warning statement "may have any result because of the tremendous advertising campaign which may be put on." Such an advertising drive, Roosevelt indicated, would actually mean those words would be "overlooked or minimized" in a manner which would "fool the public." Charles S. Joelson (D N.J.) said the warning measures provided by the bill would "have as much effect as to put a label on heroin warning that heroin may be habit forming."

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

June 22 -- Leo W. O'Brien (D N.Y.) -- Specify the overseas possessions of the United States which would be covered by the bill. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 22 -- Lionel Van Deerlin (D Calif.) -- Require the caution warning to appear on one of the two largest panels of cigarette packages rather than a side panel. Voice vote.

James Roosevelt (D Calif.) -- Delete language in the bill which prohibited any requirement of a package warning other than that in the bill and which entirely prohibited any requirement of a caution warning in cigarette advertising. Standing, 102-107; teller, 91-146.

Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) -- Require cigarette packages to carry a statement of the total nicotine and tar content of the cigarettes in the package. Voice.

Conference

REPORT -- The conference report on S 559 was filed July 1 (H Rept 586). On the major House-Senate difference -- the length of the moratorium on advertising requirements -- conferees provided a 4-year ban in place of the Senate's three-year moratorium and the House's permanent ban. In resolving other differences, the conferees accepted the House's declaration of policy, agreed on a compromise requirement on the size and location of the label warning, accepted the House's $10,000 fine for violations instead of the Senate's $100,000 fine, and revised the Senate's requirements for reports from the FTC and HEW Department.

ACTION -- The Senate July 6 by voice vote and the House July 13 by a 286-103 roll-call vote (R 116-15; ND 87-85; SD 83-3) adopted the conference report and sent S 559 to the President. (For voting, see chart p. 978)

Sen. Magnuson July 6 explained that "legal scholars may disagree as to the present authority of" the FTC to require health hazard warnings in advertising, "but there can be no disagreement that at the close of the (moratorium) period...the FTC will emerge with its full present powers to do what it then deems necessary to protect the nation's consumers."

Opponents in the House July 13 staged a last-ditch effort to defeat the measure. Moss said it failed to serve "a single legitimate public need." He said Congress had "a very solemn responsibility...to the (4,000) young men and women of the United States (who) start smoking each and every day" to see that they were alerted through advertising warnings. He objected that the bill "stripped every other agency, every other jurisdiction, federal, state and local, of the right to do that which we are too timid to do."

Veto Urged. In a July 16 letter, Sens. Joseph Clark (D Pa.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) and Gaylord Nelson (D Wis.) and Reps. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.), Richard Bolling (D Mo.), John E. Moss (D Calif.) and Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.) unsuccessfully urged a veto of S 559. The letter said S 559, "instead of protecting the health of the American people, protects only the cigarette industry." It said the "cigarette industry itself" admitted that the labeling requirement "will have little or no effect on the rate of consumption of cigarettes," and the "essential feature of the bill is the postponement by four years" of the FTC ruling affecting cigarette advertising. Any doubts about the relationship between cigarette smoking and health, they said, could be "amply explored during the four years that FTC Chairman Dixon has estimated it will take to litigate the validity of the FTC's rule. Delaying the beginning of such litigation until July 1, 1969, which this bill will do, means that it might be eight years before an FTC rule could acquire the force of law." A veto was also urged by private groups, including the Americans for Democratic Action.

Bill Signed. The President signed the bill July 27 without comment. (For remarks of his press secretary, see p. 344)

CONGRESS VOTES CONTROLS ON BARBITURATES, AMPHETAMINES

HR 2 -- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 130) March 2, 1965.

- Passed, amended, by the House by a 402-0 roll-call vote March 10. (See p. 942)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 337) June 21.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote June 23.
- House by voice vote agreed to Senate amendments July 8.

PL 89-74 -- Signed into law July 15.

Congress in 1965 enacted an Administration-backed bill (HR 2) expanding federal controls over depressant and stimulant drugs. The bill was intended to reduce illegal distribution and use of barbiturates, amphetamines and other drugs affecting the central nervous system or producing hallucinogenic effects.

Under existing law, it was already illegal to sell barbiturates and amphetamines at retail without a prescription. HR 2 strengthened and broadened this prohibition by setting up, in effect, a permissible "chain of distribution," beginning with the manufacturer, and making it illegal for anyone not in the chain to possess the drugs except for his own use or that of members of his household or his pets. The bill also made it unnecessary for the Government to prove that the drugs had moved in interstate commerce before it could seize illegal supplies or proceed against violators. In addition, it increased the record-keeping required of manufacturers and distributors (including both drug wholesalers and retail pharmacists), strengthened the powers of federal inspectors and enforcement agents, and limited prescription refills. Although the new controls in the bill applied specifically only to barbiturates and amphetamines, the bill permitted the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to bring under the new controls by administrative regulation any other drugs which he found to have the same effects.

HR 2 was similar to, but stronger than, a bill (S 2628) which was passed by the Senate in 1964, but which received no hearings by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

In addition to imposing sharper controls on barbiturates and amphetamines, HR 2 also strengthened federal prohibitions against the counterfeiting of trademarked, brand-name or any other drugs.

PROVISIONS

As signed into law, HR 2, the Drug Abuse Control Amendments of 1965, amended the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act as follows:

Declared that the additional regulation of depressant and stimulant drugs was required regardless of whether the drugs moved in interstate or intrastate commerce.

Defined depressant or stimulant drugs as barbiturates, amphetamines or any substances determined and designated by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to be habit forming or to have potential for abuse because of their stimulant or depressant effect on the central nervous system or their hallucinogenic effect.

Prohibited the manufacture, compounding or processing of any depressant or stimulant drug except by: manufacturers, compounders and processors registered with the Health, Education and Welfare Department and otherwise qualified under local laws who engaged solely in legitimate activities spelled out in the bill; suppliers of these persons; wholesale druggists registered with the Department, pharmacies, hospitals, clinics and public health agencies operating in conformity with local laws regulating the practice of pharmacy and medicine; practitioners licensed to prescribe or administer such drugs; persons using the drugs in research, teaching or chemical analysis and not for sale; employees of these persons or organizations acting in the course of their employment; and government employees acting in the course of their official duties.

Prohibited the selling, delivery or disposal of any depressant or stimulant drug except by those named above or by a common or contract carrier or warehouseman acting in the course of his employment.

Prohibited to all other persons possession of these drugs except for use by the possessor for himself or a member of his household or for administration to an animal owned by him or by a member of his household. Stipulated that in any criminal prosecution for possession in violation of the Act, the Government bore the burden of proof that the possession did not come within these exceptions.

Required those manufacturing, compounding, processing, selling, delivering or otherwise disposing of any such drug (except licensed practitioners -- see below) to prepare and keep for three years a record of all stocks of each such drug on hand. Required those manufacturing, compounding or processing such drugs to prepare and keep for three years a record of the kind and quantity of each drug prepared. Required those selling, delivering or otherwise disposing of the drugs to prepare and keep for three years a record of the kind and quantity of each drug received, sold or delivered, the name and address of the person receiving it, and the person's registration number, if any, assigned by the Government. Stipulated that no separate records or set forms for any of the records were required as long as records containing the required information were available.

Directed that every person required to keep these records permit an inspector designated by the HEW Secretary to have access to and copy the records, at reasonable times. Permitted the inspector to inspect, at reasonable times, any facility in which a drug was held, manufactured, compounded, processed, sold, delivered or otherwise disposed of, and to inventory stock and obtain drug samples, giving the owner a receipt describing the sample obtained. Exempted from inspection all financial, sales, pricing, personnel or research data.

Exempted from the record-keeping and inspection requirements licensed practitioners (who by law may prescribe or administer depressant or stimulant drugs in their professional practice). The exemption would not apply if the practitioner regularly dispensed the drugs to patients and charged for them.

Prohibited filling or refilling of prescriptions for depressant or stimulant drugs more than six months after the date of issuance and prohibited refilling of such prescriptions more than five times, unless the practitioner issuing the prescription renewed it in writing or orally if it was promptly reduced to writing and filed by the pharmacist filling it. Made the prohibitions applicable to prescriptions issued before or after the Act's effective date.

Permitted the Secretary to exempt a drug from application of the requirements when he determined they were not necessary for the protection of the public health. Required him to exempt any depressant or stimulant drug which under the Act (1) could be sold over the counter without a prescription or (2) included one or more substances not producing a depressant or stimulant effect on the central nervous system or a hallucinogenic effect if these substances were present in such concentration as to prevent the substances producing such effects from becoming habit forming or from having a potential for abuse because of their effect on the central nervous system or their hallucinogenic effect.

Permitted the Secretary to appoint advisory committees of experts to advise him on such exemptions and on which drugs, not specifically named in the Act, should be classified as depressants, stimulants or hallucinogens and thus made subject to the Act by administrative action.

Required any persons wholesaling, jobbing or distributing any depressant or stimulant drug to register with the HEW Secretary their names, places of business and all establishments where they operate. Under existing law, any person so registered was subject to inspection by the Food and Drug Administration and must be inspected at least once every two years. Existing law also required persons (with certain exceptions) manufacturing, compounding or otherwise preparing drugs to register with the Secretary. HR 2 required these persons who were manufacturing or preparing depressant or stimulant drugs to indicate this fact on their registrations. (Note: The registration requirement did not apply to retail druggists, doctors, nurses, researchers or teachers.)

Permitted seizure and condemnation of any drug involved in a prohibited act under the bill, any counterfeit drug, or any container or equipment used in their manufacture.

Provided that any persons over 18 years of age who disposed of drugs covered by the bill (by selling, delivering, etc.) to anyone under 21 was subject to imprisonment of not more than two years and/or a fine of up to $5,000 for the first conviction and imprisonment of not more than six years and/or a fine of up to $15,000 for subsequent convictions. (The existing Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act provided more lenient penalties for persons violating other specified parts of the Act.)

Authorized an inspector or investigator designated by the HEW Secretary to examine or investigate depressant or stimulant drugs or counterfeit drugs to: carry firearms; serve search and arrest warrants; execute seizure; make arrests without a warrant if the offense was committed in his presence or, in the case of a felony, if he had probable cause to believe the person had committed such an offense; and make seizures even before obtaining a court order or instituting legal seizure proceedings.

Made it a federal crime to forcibly assault, resist or interfere with any HEW employee conducting an investigation or inspection under the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

Made the two sections above effective on enactment of the bill.

Strengthened existing controls over counterfeit drugs (which could be deemed misbranded and seized) by no longer requiring the Government to prove that the drugs moved in interstate commerce and by authorizing the seizure and condemnation of equipment used in the manufacture of the drugs. Defined counterfeit drugs as drugs which, or the containers or labeling of which, bore the identifying mark of a drug manufacturer, processor, packer or distributor other than the person or persons who in fact manufactured, processed, packed or distributed it.

Asserted there was no intent to exclude state laws on drugs unless there were a direct conflict with the federal law, and no intent to prevent enforcement of state criminal laws on drugs covered by the bill.

Made most provisions effective on the first day of the seventh month following the month of enactment (Feb. 1, 1966).

Background

REFERENCE -- 1964 Almanac p. 253.

The Senate in 1964 by voice vote passed a bill (S 2628) requiring manufacturers and others (except physicians) receiving or dispensing "psycho-toxic" drugs to register with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and to keep complete records of the quantities of the drugs they handled and make these records available to food and drug inspectors. The bill applied to drugs in intrastate as well as interstate traffic, and gave federal drug officials power to bring under the laws other drugs, in addition to barbiturates and amphetamines, that were found to have similar effects on a person. S 2628 was referred to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in 1964, but no hearings were held.

S 2628 was based in part on the recommendations of the President's Advisory Commission on Narcotic and Drug Abuse, released Jan. 25, 1964, by President Johnson.

Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Jan. 4, 1965, introduced HR 2, which was similar in most respects to S 2628. But HR 2 also specifically prohibited the counterfeiting of drugs.

President Johnson Jan. 7, 1965, in a special health message to Congress, called for legislation to bring barbiturates, amphetamines and other "psycho-toxic" drugs under more effective controls. Mr. Johnson said, "Narcotics are not alone among the hazardous, habit-forming drugs subject to improper use. Barbiturates, amphetamines and other drugs have harmful effects when improperly used. Widespread traffic resulting from inadequate controls over the manufacture, distribution and sale of these drugs is creating a growing problem which must be met. We must also counter the threat from counterfeit drugs." Mr. Johnson repeated these requests in his March 8 crime message. (For texts, see p. 1383, 1394.)

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HELD HEARINGS -- Jan. 27-Feb. 10 on HR 2.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 27 -- George P. Larrick, Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, said HR 2 went "a long way" toward meeting the need for "improved controls over the distribution" of depressant and stimulant drugs. He said that while most such drugs "are valuable therapeutic agents," their misuse had contributed to "the rising toll of deaths on our highways, juvenile delinquency, violent and bizarre crimes, suicides and other antisocial behavior." Larrick said that if the bill were enacted, the FDA intended to see that "other types of drugs capable of causing...ill effects," such as tranquilizers, were covered by regulation. He said application of the bill to intrastate drug commerce was necessary because of a "conflict" in the courts over accepting testimony as proof of interstate commerce in the absence of other evidence.

Druggists' Objections

Ralph R. Rooke, speaking for the National Assn. of Retail Druggists, endorsed the "principle and purpose" of HR 2, but registered "vigorous objection to the bill's authorizing FDA agents to inspect, among other business and professional records, the pharmacist's prescription files." This authority, he said, would discriminate against pharmacists while exempting physicians and would "broadly duplicate state drug enforcement activity."

Jan. 28 -- Dr. Henry Brill testified that the American Medical Assn. "generally supports the enactment of HR 2," but said the legislation should be restricted initially to barbiturates and amphetamines, which he said were the only two drugs "for which any significant misuse is shown." The definition of "depressant or stimulant drugs," he said, should be expanded to specify drugs having a potential for abuse "leading to adverse effect on the public health...."

Drug Manufacturers' Views

Dr. Austin Smith, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., also said the definition of drugs subject to added controls was "too broadly drawn and might be used to bring under the act many drugs which should not be so treated." He said a drug should not come under the bill "until there has been substantial actual abuse constituting a public health and safety problem."

J. Curtis Nottingham, president of the American Pharmaceutical Assn., said his only reservation about HR 2 was "whether pharmacists should be included within its scope at all." He said that physicians were "rightly" exempted, and that he hoped Congress had "similar faith in the integrity of practitioners of pharmacy...."

Feb. 2 -- Dr. Lawrence Peters of McNeil Laboratories named six additional drugs which he recommended for inclusion under the controls proposed for barbiturates and amphetamines. He said the six were "competitive" with barbiturates, were prescribed for the same medical purposes and had a "substantiated record of abuse and as great a potential for abuse" as barbiturate products. However, he said, the products would not be automatically covered by HR 2 as it was written.

Feb. 5 -- Rep. Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.), sponsor of a bill (HR 3416) identical to HR 2, said the legislation would "plug up these big holes in the regulatory scheme of things by means of which the illicit drug trade has been allowed to flourish...." She said one reason the problem had become so severe was "the ridiculously easy direct purchase of wholesale quantities of the drugs by unlicensed, unregistered distributors." Mrs. Dwyer pointed out that the bill would not automatically regulate non-barbiturates and non-amphetamines which had similar properties and effects and were "known to be subject to the same abuse and to be equally dangerous." She said she hoped the Committee would amend the measure to make "all stimulant and depressant drugs which are substantially involved in drug abuse...subject to the bill's provisions in the same way and at the same time."

CBS Experiment

Feb. 9 -- Jay McMullen, a television producer for the Columbia Broadcasting System, described a four-month experiment undertaken in 1964, in which he established a fictitious company and ordered barbiturates and amphetamines from 19 drug firms. McMullen said he had received deliveries on 47 percent of the orders from companies in eight states, and that the drugs, for which he had paid $600, were worth an estimated $250,000 to $500,000 in the illicit drug trade.

Dr. V.D. Mattia, executive vice president of Hoffman-LaRoche, Inc., a pharmaceutical manufacturer, supported HR 2 but said that legislation alone would "not eliminate drug abuse." However, he said the bill would do much to cut off the sources of illicit drug trade. Mattia favored amending the bill along lines suggested by Dr. Austin Smith, president of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., to control only drugs which had been abused, instead of all with a potential for abuse. He said there was "no basis to determine potential for abuse. ..."

Feb. 10 -- Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D Mo.) said that HR 2 would go far toward stopping "illegal traffic in non-narcotic drugs which are frequent substitutes for narcotics...." However, she said that an omnibus bill (HR 1235) she had introduced to rewrite the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act of 1938 contained stronger provisions than HR 2 "on control of the dangerous and habit-forming depressant and stimulant drugs...." She urged the Committee to expand the scope of its hearings "to include all phases of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act requiring improvement and amendment." These, she concluded, would include provisions, such as ones in HR 1235, to initiate or tighten controls over therapeutic devices, cosmetics, dietary foods and deceptive labeling and packaging.

Bill Reported

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 2 unanimously reported HR 2 (H Rept 130) with amendments. Major amendments made by the Committee included the addition of (1) provisions restricting prescription refills; (2) provisions (requested by the Department of HEW) giving Food and Drug Administration inspectors new powers of arrest and seizure in cases involving drugs covered by the bill; (3) provisions applying the record-keeping and inspection requirements to doctors who dispensed the drugs regularly and charged for them; and (4) provisions (requested by the Department of HEW) permitting seizure not only of illegally produced drugs, but of the machinery used in their manufacture.

Majority Views. The Committee said that testimony at the hearings had indicated that "over 9 billion barbiturate and amphetamine tablets are produced annually in the United States, of which it is estimated that over 50 percent, or 4-1/2 billion tablets, are distributed through illicit channels." The Committee said drug abuse was "closely bound up with juvenile delinquency. It also contributed to the rising crime rate in the United States. Misuse of these drugs has contributed to the rising hazards of accidents on the highways."

The Committee said there had been "little voluntary control activity on the part of those involved in the manufacture and distribution of these drugs to prevent or curtail this illicit traffic." It said legislation was necessary "in order to deal with the substantial illicit traffic in barbiturates and amphetamines in the United States."

FLOOR ACTION

The House March 10 passed HR 2 by a 402-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 942)

Two minor amendments were adopted. (See below)

Harris March 9 praised the drug industry for its production of "miracle" drugs but added that "one problem that faces us is the fact that many of these new drugs have ...side effects. There are some people who take drugs because of their side effects -- because of the way the drug affects their minds as well as their bodies." He said the problem "arises, in large measure, out of the fact that these drugs are so freely available," either because they are obtained through illicit channels or because they are manufactured illicitly in the first place. He emphasized that "we do not...intend by this legislation to hamper or curtail in any way the proper use of these drugs in the practice of medicine.... What we are trying to do is to keep these drugs available only for legitimate medical uses."

He added that in most cases the records and inspection requirements would place "no extra burden" on anyone. He said 85 percent of the pharmacists already kept records, and "they can keep those records or they can keep separate records under this bill, just so they keep accurate records."

Harris said the bill had been supported in testimony by the American Medical Assn., the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn., the National Assn. of Retail Druggists, the American Pharmaceutical Assn. and the American Trucking Assn.

The only dissent registered in two days of discussion came March 10 from John Bell Williams (D Miss.), who supported the bill but opposed a provision under which physicians who regularly dispensed the drugs were made subject to the reporting and inspection requirements.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

March 10 -- Oren Harris (D Ark.) -- Make clear that the bill would not operate to the exclusion of state drug laws. Voice vote.

Paul G. Rogers (D Fla.) -- Revise a section imposing special penalties on anyone selling drugs to a minor so as to define minor as a person under 21, instead of a person under 18. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION -- June 21 reported HR 2 (S Rept 337) with amendments. There were no hearings.

One amendment stipulated that in any criminal prosecution for possession of a depressant or stimulant drug by an individual, in violation of the Act, the Government would bear the burden of proof that the person did not possess the drug for himself, a member of his household or an animal belonging to the household.

A second amendment made it clear that in identifying drugs subject to the Act's provisions, the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare could (but was not required to) appoint an advisory committee to assist him.

A third deleted a House provision which excluded from the bill's coverage peyote (mescaline), but only when used in connection with ceremonies of a bona fide religious organization. The Committee said it would leave determinations on peyote to the Secretary.

In March 12 and April 12 letters to the Committee, the HEW Department "wholeheartedly" endorsed HR 2.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 23 passed HR 2 by voice vote and returned it to the House after approving by voice vote the amendments added by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

In brief discussion of the bill, Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) said widespread use of stimulant and depressant drugs, particularly by teen-agers, represented "a new dimension of the drug problem in this country. For many decades, we have struggled with the so-called hard narcotics menace. The opium derivative heroin...has always been prevalent in our city slum areas that for centuries have attracted all manner of vice and crime, but the use of all these narcotics rarely penetrated into the more stable neighborhoods. Today, the dangerous drugs are popular among people in all walks of life, ranging from truck drivers to students to suburban housewives," with the "greatest impacts in the ranks of our teen-age population."

In addition, Dodd said, "these new drugs...appear to possess certain properties that make them even more dangerous and harmful than opiates...the amphetamines often used in combination with barbiturates have been hidden accomplices in tragic acts of violence, in accidents and in suicides."

Final Action

The House July 8 agreed by voice vote to the Senate amendments to HR 2, sending the bill to the President.

During brief discussion July 8, Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), sponsor of HR 2, explained that the Senate's "burden of proof" amendment was "consistent with our intent in passing the bill." In supporting the second amendment he said that the House provision which required appointment of an advisory committee if requested by an interested party "could have been utilized to delay the effectiveness of orders issued by the Secretary." Explaining why the provision on use of peyote was deleted, Harris inserted in the Congressional Record a July 2 letter from the Food and Drug Administration which said that if the North American Church could establish that it was "a bona fide religious organization and that peyote has bona fide use in the sacrament of the church," sacramental use of the drug was protected by "the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom."

President Signs Bill

President Johnson, signing the bill July 15, said that "at least one-half the annual production of certain useful drugs is being diverted to criminal traffic.... We know all too well that racketeers in this field are making easy victims of many of our finest young people. The Congress hopes, and I hope, that this Act will put a stop to such vicious business."

Dr. Austin Smith of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Assn. July 15 hailed final enactment of HR 2 and said that enactment of complementary state laws, coupled with strong enforcement at all levels and cooperation among police groups, would be helpful.

AGENCY FOR THE ELDERLY

HR 3708 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 145) March 9, 1965.
- Passed by the House on a 395-1 roll-call vote March 31. (See p. 946)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 247) May 26.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 27.
- Senate amendments agreed to by voice vote of the House July 6.

PL 89-73 -- Signed into law July 14.

Congress in 1965 enacted the Older Americans Act (HR 3708), establishing an Administration on Aging in the Health, Education and Welfare Department and authorizing a five-year program designed to coordinate federal activities related to the elderly and to improve and expand programs for the aging on both the federal and state level. The new agency replaced the HEW Office of Aging which was under the jurisdiction of the HEW Commissioner of Welfare.

The bill also authorized federal grants totaling $17.5 million in fiscal 1966 and 1967 to states and to public and private non-profit organizations for developing programs for the elderly.

HR 3708 was opposed by only one Member of the House, Dave Martin (R Neb.). The Senate passed it, with minor amendments, by voice vote.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 3708:

Created an Administration on Aging in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, directed by a Commissioner on Aging appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Administration would serve as a clearinghouse for information on problems of the aged, assist the HEW Secretary on matters concerning the aging, administer grants under the Act, provide technical assistance to state and local governments, develop and arrange for research and demonstration programs, prepare educational materials and statistics on aging and "stimulate more effective use of" existing programs for the aging.

Authorized appropriations of $5 million for fiscal 1966 and $8 million for fiscal 1967 for grants to states for community planning and coordination of programs for the aged, establishing or expanding programs and training of specialized personnel to carry out the programs. Appropriations for fiscal 1968-70 would have to be authorized later by Congress. No funds could be used for construction in establishing or expanding programs, except for "minor alterations and repairs." States would receive specified allotments plus grants based on a state's population of persons 65 or older.

Authorized appropriations of $1.5 million for fiscal 1966 and $3 million for fiscal 1967 for grants or contracts with public or private non-profit organizations and agencies for study, development, demonstration and evaluation projects related to the needs of the elderly and for specialized training of persons to carry out the programs for the aged. Appropriations for fiscal 1968-70 would have to be authorized later by Congress.

Prohibited grants to or contracts with organizations in any state which had designated a state agency to administer projects under the Act unless the HEW Secretary had consulted with the state agency.

Created a 16-member Advisory Committee on Older Americans, with the Commissioner on Aging as chairman and other members from outside the Government, to advise the HEW Secretary on matters involving the aging.

Background

A White House Conference on Aging in 1961 recommended a federal coordinating agency to deal with problems of the elderly. In 1962 President Kennedy set up a President's Council on Aging to carry out the proposal. (1962 Almanac p. 196) On Feb. 21, 1963, he sent Congress a "Special Message on Aiding Our Senior Citizens." It was the first Presidential Message dealing exclusively with programs for the aged. In it President Kennedy requested enactment of a new Senior Citizens Act and proposed that federal funds be provided to develop services for the elderly, train personnel and build recreation centers. (1963 Almanac p. 990)

The House Education and Labor Select Subcommittee on Education held hearings on the President's bill (HR 7957) in 1963. The Committee in 1964 reported a revised bill (HR 10088), but it was not cleared by the House Rules Committee for floor action. (1964 Almanac p. 229)

The Senate special Committee on Aging submitted a report (S Rept 124) March 16, 1965, on "Developments in Aging, 1963 and 1964." The Committee said the problem of income for the elderly was becoming more serious because of "a trend toward a smaller percentage of the over-65 population in the nation's work force and a longer life expectancy for this age group." The majority recommended that the U.S. Employment Service expand its services for older workers, that Congress provide grants for experimental projects aimed at increasing employment for the aged and that earnings limitations on old-age assistance recipients be liberalized. The Committee recommended legislation to protect the elderly from frauds and proposed federal grants for states and local governments, schools and non-profit organizations to construct centers and develop programs for the aged.

The Committee majority recommended a Social Security medical care program and expansion of the Kerr-Mills program. Views signed by all of the Committee's seven minority members except Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) called for changes in the Kerr-Mills program to encourage greater participation by states and "careful" consideration by Congress of medical care proposals that would provide for voluntary, state-administered plans. George A. Smathers (D Fla.), Committee chairman, indicated his opposition to a medical care program under Social Security.

House, Senate Action

The Older Americans Act of 1965 (HR 3708) was introduced in the House by John E. Fogarty (D R.I.). Fogarty also had introduced the two earlier bills. The House Education and Labor Committee reported HR 3708 March 9. The Committee's report (H Rept 145) said that both the Select Subcommittee on Education and the full Committee gave the bill "overwhelming bipartisan approval."

Dave Martin (R Neb.) cast the only House vote against HR 3708 on the 395-1 roll-call vote passing the bill March 31. (For voting, see chart p. 946) A member of the Select Subcommittee on Education, Martin said no hearings were held, the Subcommittee considered the bill for only "five minutes" and the full Committee gave it "very little consideration." He said the bill covered "the entire waterfront" and in "future years" would cost "billions of dollars."

John H. Dent (D Pa.), floor manager of HR 3708, said 10 percent of the nation's population was 65 or older and that it was "time to acknowledge the existence of these good citizens with an agency, not associated with welfare, ...with the authority and ability to speak on all matters of interest to the aged."

Several Republicans spoke in favor of the bill. They included Melvin R. Laird (Wis.), chairman of the House Republican Conference. He said that a separate agency for the aged, not under the Commissioner of Welfare, was "needed now."

Amendments proposed by Paul Findley (R Ill.) and accepted by voice vote required, when proposed projects were to be administered by a single state agency, state approval of the projects before grants could be made to public and private non-profit organizations and agencies.

The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee reported HR 3708 with minor amendments May 26 (S Rept 247) and the Senate passed the bill May 27 by voice vote without debate. The Senate amendments substituted language requiring only consultation with the state agency, rather than approval, before grants could be made to non-profit organizations.

The House July 6 agreed by voice vote to the Senate amendments, clearing the bill for the President's signature.

Later Developments

In signing the bill into law (PL 89-73) July 14 President Johnson referred to it as the "Fogarty-McNamara Bill." (Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.), a member and former chairman of the Senate Committee on Aging, reported HR 3708 to the Senate on behalf of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.) President Johnson said, "Under this program every state and every community can move toward a coordinated program of services and opportunities for our older citizens. We revere them; we extend them our affection; we respect them. We have been talking about it for years. Now we are doing something about it. It is a fait accompli."

President Johnson Oct. 1 named William D. Bechill, executive secretary of the California Citizens Advisory Committee on Aging, as HEW Commissioner on Aging. He was confirmed by the Senate Oct. 22.

An announcement by the HEW Department that the Administration on Aging had become operational was criticized by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) on the Senate floor Oct. 13. Morse quoted the announcement as saying that the new agency "supersedes and will expand the work of the Office of Aging." He said the statement "is completely at odds with the Congressional intent in establishing the Administration on Aging," which was to deal with "problems and services to the aged that have nothing to do with old-age assistance" -- the function of the superseded Office of Aging. Morse said "older Americans did not want the principal agency dealing with their needs to be a welfare agency." He called for "fresh approaches and fresh faces," not "welfare-oriented" bureaucrats to staff the new agency.

The Select Subcommittee on Labor of the House Education and Labor Committee held hearings Aug. 25-Sept. 2 to consider the problem of job discrimination on the basis of age. Testifying Aug. 25, Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz cited losses not only to individuals but to the national economy caused by discrimination against older workers and stated the need for a public policy on old-age problems in employment. Mrs. Colleen Boland, president of the Air Line Stewards and Stewardesses, Local 550 (AFL-CIO), complained Sept. 2 about the insistence of some airlines that a 32-year-old stewardess is too old for the job and thus should be fired -- a policy apparently based on the assumption that a stewardess of that age was no longer attractive to male passengers.

SCHOOL AID FOR THE DEAF

Congress in 1965 enacted legislation to establish a National Technical Institute for the Deaf and to expand the federal loan service of educational media for the deaf.

Institute for the Deaf. An Administration-backed bill, HR 7031, authorized the establishment of a National Technical Institute for the Deaf. The bill was passed by voice votes of the House May 17 and the Senate May 26. The Institute was to be a residential facility for post-secondary technical training and education, aimed at preparing deaf persons for successful employment. It was to complement Gallaudet College, a liberal arts college for the deaf in Washington, D.C., which is partially financed by the Federal Government. HR 7031 directed any institution of higher education interested in establishing the Institute to submit a plan, and authorized the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to enter into an agreement with one of these institutions to establish and operate the Institute.

In signing HR 7031 into law (PL 89-36) June 8, President Johnson said, "This institution will help to meet the needs of hundreds of deaf young people, both students and adults, who want to be and can be trained for various technical occupations and placed in very useful careers."

It was estimated the costs for the Institute during the first four years would be between $12 and $13 million, with operating costs thereafter totaling about $2 million annually. An initial appropriation of $420,000 was made for the program.

Media for the Deaf. Congress enacted a bill (S 2232 -- PL 89-258) to expand the existing federal loan service of captioned films for the deaf to include in the service all educational media such as auditory training materials and equipment, educational television with captions, and other teaching tools. The bill also permitted distribution of such media to parents of deaf children and others directly involved in the advancement of the deaf, or actual or potential employers of the deaf, as well as to the deaf themselves.

S 2232, passed by the Senate Aug. 31 and by the House Oct. 5, increased the existing $1.5 million annual appropriations authorization to $3 million in each of fiscal years 1966-67, $5 million annually in fiscal 1968-69 and $7 million annually in fiscal 1970 and thereafter. S 2232 also established a 12-member National Advisory Committee on Education of the Deaf to study methods and problems of educating the deaf and to make recommendations for legislative and administrative actions.

In the general supplemental appropriations bill (HR 11588) Congress earmarked $100,000 of college aid funds for the Advisory Committee and $100,000 for a National Conference on Education of the Deaf, to be held in 1966.

PL 89-117 -- Signed into law Aug. 10.

Congress in 1965 passed the most far-reaching housing and urban development legislation since the landmark Housing Act of 1949.

Designed to provide a comprehensive plan of federal assistance over the four-year period of 1966-69, HR 7984 authorized an estimated $7.8 billion to fund a variety of new housing and urban development programs and to extend and broaden existing ones. One major new undertaking was an Administration proposal for federal rent supplements for families or individuals unable to afford standard private housing within their own incomes.

In addition to the omnibus bill, Congress, in separate legislation, authorized the establishment of a Department of Housing and Urban Development. (See p. 382) In all, President Johnson obtained the bulk of his housing requests in 1965.

A major impetus for both measures came from the increasing demands for better planned and more attractive cities, orderly urban development and adequate housing for low-income and impoverished individuals. President Johnson in his "Great Society" speech of May 22, 1964, had accorded urban development the role of one of the "three places where we begin to build the Great Society," (see box). In addition, many major existing housing programs were scheduled to expire in 1965.

The bill authorized major new federal efforts to provide good housing for the poor in other than traditional public housing. The major program was rent supplements; it was expected to encourage many private non-profit groups to develop housing for low-income individuals who otherwise might seek public housing space. In addition, another provision of the bill authorized the use of federal funds to place low-income individuals in existing private housing at costs comparable to those for providing public housing. This was a modified Republican proposal.

The Administration's rent supplements proposal was the most publicized--and the most controversial--feature of the bill. President Johnson called the proposal "the most crucial new instrument in our effort to improve the American city."

Under the provision, an individual was to pay 25 percent of his income for rent in private, non-profit housing and the Government was to pay the balance.

Who would be eligible to receive supplements was a major element in the controversy over the program. Eligibility standards underwent a basic change before the bill became law. The Administration originally proposed that the supplements be made available to persons with income too high to permit them to live in public housing but too low for them to pay rents necessary to obtain good private housing. The proposal specifically excluded persons eligible for public housing. The final bill, however, made eligible for supplements only persons who were also eligible for public housing. In addition, the final bill--as well as the Administration proposals--required a recipient to be either 62 years of age or older, physically handicapped, displaced by governmental action (highway construction, etc.) or living in "substandard housing." (See box p. 361)

The Administration agreed to the change in eligibility standards when it appeared that its original proposals were headed for defeat. The supplements concept had encountered immediate and sharp criticism from both Republicans and Democrats. In spite of the changes, a Republican move in the House to kill the supplements section was rejected by a narrow 202-208 roll-call vote. In the Senate, a GOP - sponsored amendment to delete the program was defeated by seven votes. Later in the year, opponents of the program succeeded in blocking a supplemental appropriation to get the supplements program underway, although it was generally believed that the funds would be forthcoming the following year. (See p. 182 and box p. 381)

Housing officials figured that the supplements plan would stimulate the construction of 375,000 units of privately owned housing by 1969. This would compare with only 590,000 units of public housing constructed since that program's enactment in 1937 (HR 7984 authorized construction of an additional 240,000 public housing units during fiscal 1966 to 1969).

The controversy over rent supplements obscured the wide support that much of HR 7984 commanded in Congress. Any large controversies that might have developed over other major programs in the bill were sidetracked by the rent supplements debate.

The bill, in addition to the Administration proposals, embodied several GOP-sponsored programs, including low down-payment federal insurance of home mortgages for veterans, the leasing of existing housing for public housing use, and reduction of interest rates on various housing loan programs from their market-produced level to a flat 3 percent.

One major Administration proposal which was not enacted was federal assistance to promote the development of entire new towns and new communities. The new towns proposal, which had been requested and turned down in 1964, again encountered opposition from many groups and support from virtually none.

SUMMARY OF BILL

The provisions of HR 7984 covered a wide spectrum of housing and urban development programs ranging from rent supplements to rural housing. (For details, see next section.) In its major provisions, HR 7984:

- Established a new program of rent supplements to low-income families who could not obtain standard housing within their own incomes.
- Extended or increased the funding of numerous housing programs, including ones for moderate-income families, low-rent public housing and direct loans for housing for the elderly. Broadened the public housing program to permit increased use of existing housing which, together with new construction, would provide an additional 60,000 units per year over a four-year period.
- Established a new program of Federal Housing Administration insurance of commercial loans for land development in neighborhoods and subdivisions.
- Authorized a new program of FHA insurance of low down-payment mortgages for veterans who had not already received Veterans Administration (VA) benefits.
- Extended existing FHA home mortgage insurance programs for four years, through Oct. 1, 1969.
- Extended the urban renewal program for four years, through Oct. 1, 1969, and provided an additional $2.9 billion authority for grants.
- Authorized expanded urban renewal code enforcement and rehabilitation activities in order to minimize demolition and clearance in these areas.
- Provided grants to low-income homeowners in urban renewal areas to help them repair their homes.
- Established uniform land acquisition procedures to be followed in connection with the acquisition of land by eminent domain under federally assisted urban development programs.
- Increased the authorization for college housing loans by $300 million a year over the following four years.
- Authorized a new program of matching grants to local public bodies for the construction of basic public water and sewer facilities.
- Authorized grants for up to two-thirds of the cost (three-quarters in some cases) of constructing neighborhood facilities, including health, recreational and community centers.
- Increased grants for open-space land acquisition and provided a new program of grants to provide open space for parks and playgrounds in built-up urban areas.
- Authorized grants to local public bodies to provide programs of urban beautification and improvement.
- Established a new program of insured housing loans for rural areas and broadened an existing loan program to allow persons in any age group to buy previously occupied dwellings, farm service buildings and adequate farm land. (Under existing law, such loans could be made only to elderly persons.)

As signed into law, HR 7984, the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, contained the following provisions:

Title I: Special Provisions for Disadvantaged Persons. The first title of the bill provided for rent supplement payments to low-income families, provided a four-year extension -- to Oct. 1, 1969 -- of Federal Housing Administration (FHA) mortgage insurance programs for low- and moderate- income persons, authorized a 3-percent interest rate ceiling on the FHA below-market interest rate insurance program, provided rehabilitation grants for owners of substandard housing in urban renewal areas, authorized special programs to aid persons adversely affected by the closing of federal installations and broadened the scope of certain housing programs.

Rent Supplements. Authorized the Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA) to make rent supplement payments on behalf of individuals or families who were unable to obtain adequate private housing for rents which were equal to or less than one-quarter of their incomes. Authorized the payments for persons who were determined, under procedures established by the HHFA Administrator, to have incomes less than the maximum amount of income that a person may have and still be eligible for public housing in the area in which he lives. In addition, eligibility was limited to persons who were either

'Great Society' Speech

Following is an excerpt from President Johnson's May 22, 1964, "Great Society" speech at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor: (For complete text, see 1964 Almanac p. 874.)

...Many of you will live to see the day, perhaps 50 years from now, when there will be 400 million Americans; four-fifths of them in urban areas. In the remainder of this century urban population will double, city land will double, and we will have to build homes, highways and facilities equal to all those built since this country was first settled. So in the next 40 years we must rebuild the entire urban United States.

Aristotle said, "Men come together in cities in order to live, but they remain together in order to live the good life."

It is harder and harder to live the good life in American cities today. The catalogue of ills is long: There is decay of the centers and the despoiling of the suburbs. There is not enough housing for our people or transportation for our traffic. Open land is vanishing and old landmarks are violated. Worst of all, expansion is eroding the precious and time-honored values of community with neighbors and communion with nature. The loss of these values breeds loneliness and boredom and indifference. Our society will never be great until our cities are great. Today the frontier of imagination and innovation is inside those cities, and not beyond their borders. New experiments are already going on. It will be the task of your generation to make the American city a place where future generations will come, not only to live but to live the good life.

physically handicapped, elderly (62 or older), displaced by Government action, occupying "substandard housing," or occupants or former occupants of housing in a locality determined by the Small Business Administration, subsequent to April 1, 1965, to have been affected by a natural disaster.

Limited the amount of any payment to the difference between 25 percent of the occupant's income and the fair market rental charge for his dwelling. (The payment would be made to the housing owner on behalf of the occupant. As the income of the occupant rose, the supplement payment would decline until he could pay the entire rent; when this occurred, the occupant could continue to live in the same unit without a supplement.)

Stipulated that payments would be made only with respect to housing built by private non-profit or limited-dividend corporations or by cooperatives with the assistance of FHA-insured market interest rate mortgages.

In addition, for the purposes of an experimental program, provided up to 10 percent of total rent supplement funds for payments on behalf of eligible tenants in housing projects financed (1) by FHA-insured, below-market interest rate loans for low- and moderate-income families and displaced families, (2) by FHA-insured loans for housing for the elderly and (3) by FHA direct loans for housing for the elderly. In the case of the FHA direct loans, payments could be made only for persons living in existing housing (future construction would not qualify for the supplements program) and would be limited to 20 percent of the dwelling units in an existing project; no similar restriction was provided for other new or existing housing under the experimental-program section. Earmarked one-half of the funds provided by the 10-percent wording for housing built with below-market interest rate loans and one-half for the other two types of housing.

Prohibited payments with respect to projects whose operating costs were greater than those of similar housing in the community.

Authorized the HHFA Administrator to enter into 40-year contracts with housing owners for the purpose of rent supplement payments.

Authorized project owners to select occupants subject to qualifications established by the HHFA, or a public or private agency designated by HHFA, concerning the criteria for eligibility. Authorized occupants to obtain options to purchase rented housing at specified prices when landlords determined the probability of future increases in occupants' incomes.

Directed the HHFA Administrator to establish criteria for determining the continued eligibility of participants in the program. Specifically required the Administrator to provide for recertification of participants' incomes, with the exception of the elderly, at two-year intervals, or more frequently as the Administrator desired.

Limited rent supplement contracts to $30 million for fiscal 1966, and an additional $35 million in fiscal 1967, $40 million in fiscal 1968, and $45 million in fiscal 1969. (The HHFA program contemplated construction of 375,000 units of privately owned housing by the end of fiscal 1969.)

FHA Loan Programs for Low- and Moderate- income Persons and Displaced Persons. Continued for four years, to Oct. 1, 1969, FHA authority to insure mortgages under these programs.

Established an interest rate ceiling on loan assistance under the FHA below-market interest rate program at the lower of either 3 percent or the existing statutory rate formula, which currently produced a rate of 3-7/8 to 4 percent. (Under this program enacted in 1961, non-profit organizations, cooperatives and public agencies could borrow money from commercial sources, such as banks, at interest rates below those generally prevailing in the housing market. The loans were insured by the FHA. The Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA) then would buy the mortgage from the bank or other lender which normally would agree to the sale in order to avoid tying up funds in low-interest loans. The net effect of the procedure was that FNMA advanced money at low interest rates for construction of housing for this program.)

Pooling of Mortgages for Sale. Amended a section of the Housing Act of 1964 which authorized the FNMA to sell to private investors participations in a trust secured by a pool of mortgage loans held by the FNMA, as follows: in order to encourage inclusion in the pool of mortgages bearing below-market interest rates, the bill authorized appropriations to make up the difference to the FNMA between outlays on participations in a pool and receipts from below-market-rate mortgages. (Appropriations were necessary because mortgage loans that were put into the pool needed to bear interest rates high enough to produce an income that could be used to pay the interest of the participation certificates. As a result, no below-market-rate mortgages had been included in the pool. The sale of participations was designed to draw funds of private investors -- rather than Treasury funds -- to finance Government mortgage holdings.)

Use of Vacant Units. Authorized local housing authorities to lease vacant units in existing private housing for one- to three-year periods for occupancy by low-income families at rents no higher than those that could be charged for newly constructed public housing units. Limited such leasing to 10 percent of the units in any single structure unless HHFA determined that the limit in a given case should not apply. Made the program's application in a given locality contingent upon the approval of local governing bodies.

Public Housing for the Handicapped. Amended existing housing law to provide equal treatment of handicapped families and elderly families for low-rent housing purposes by extending to handicapped families all of the special provisions in the law (such as increased room cost limits and special $120 annual contributions per unit for occupied dwelling units) which were currently available to the elderly.

Housing for the Elderly and Handicapped. Increased to $500 million the existing $350 million appropriations authorization ceiling on the program of direct loans to provide housing for the elderly or handicapped, limited the interest rate on such loans to 3 percent (rather than the 3-3/4 - 4 percent that was currently in effect).

Rehabilitation Grants. Authorized grants of up to $1,500 for costs of repairs and improvements of homes in urban renewal areas; specified that a recipient could earn no more than $3,000 annually. Provided smaller grants for homeowners whose incomes exceeded $3,000.

Controversial Rent Supplements Retained in Bill

The most publicized feature of the 1965 housing bill -- and also the most controversial -- was a modified Administration proposal of rent supplements to individuals and families who could not obtain standard private housing within their own incomes. The following is a description of how the program was intended to operate and a summary of the issues that arose during Congressional consideration of the plan.

OPERATION. Eligibility Requirements. Rent supplement payments were to be made only on behalf of individuals or families whose incomes were low enough to make them eligible for public housing. (The income limit varied throughout the country.) Administrative regulations specified that total assets and net worth had to be under $2,000 (or $5,000 in the case of the elderly). In addition, eligibility under the law was limited to individuals who were either physically handicapped, elderly (62 years of age or older), displaced or expected to be displaced by governmental action (code enforcement, highway construction, etc.), or occupants of housing in an area affected by a natural disaster.

Amount of Payment. The amount of any supplement payment was limited to the difference between 25 percent of the applicant's income (which he would pay for rent) and the fair market rental charge for his dwelling. The actual payment was to be made to the housing owner on behalf of the occupant. As the income of the occupant rose, the supplement payment was to decline until he could pay the entire rent; when this occurred, the occupant could continue to live in the same unit without a supplement.

Project Eligibility. Payments were permitted only with respect to new or extensively rehabilitated housing projects sponsored by private non-profit or limited-dividend corporations or by housing cooperatives. Housing project owners were to obtain private, federally insured loans for construction and were to select the tenants.

Types of Structures. Any type of residential structure was eligible for supplement tenants, but safeguards were provided to insure that they were of "modest design" and cost.

Increase in Income. Required each tenant (except the elderly) to report any increase in income so that there might be a corresponding decrease in the rent supplement payment.

ADMINISTRATION PROPOSAL. In the form originally proposed by the Administration, the rent supplements program provided assistance to persons of moderate and low income, but specifically excluded persons who earned so little that they qualified for public housing. Housing officials said that they hoped to assist what they called "middle-income" families with an "income gap" between public and private housing. By this they meant families or individuals with incomes too high to permit them to live in public housing but too low for them to afford good private housing. Additional eligibility tests were provided, such as age, physical handicap and occupancy of substandard housing. Under the Administration proposal, the occupant was to pay 20 percent of his income for rent (or 25 percent in the case of a lease with option-to-purchase) and the Government was to pay whatever additional amount was required for the dwelling unit.

During Congressional hearings on the bill, it became apparent that the proposal had to be drastically modified if it were to be salvaged at all. The powerful public housing lobby, represented by the National Assn. of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, criticized the plan as "administratively cumbersome and socially indefensible." The goal of providing adequate housing for moderate-income families, the association said, could be achieved at lower cost through combined private and public housing developments, federal financing of rehabilitated housing, and traditional public housing. Numerous other civic, labor and business groups asserted that it would be indefensible to subsidize moderate-income housing while a large backlog of low-income families still sought Government aid.

Changes in Plan. Important modifications were made in the Administration plan (primarily the eligibility requirements) before the proposal became law. First, in the House Banking and Currency Committee, eligibility was extended to cover persons who could not obtain standard private housing at rents equal to or less than one-fourth of their income (and also could meet the age and other qualifications noted above). Later (on the House floor and in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee) the proposal was further modified to permit supplements to be paid only on behalf of persons whose income level qualified them for public housing occupancy (and who met the other qualifications). This requirement was enacted. Thus, the person who was made eligible for rent supplements under the final bill was the same person specifically excluded from the original Administration proposal.

Criticism Continued. Even after the modifications that were included in the final bill, opponents of supplements continued to criticize the "gigantic cost" of the rental payments and charged that the program was designed to disrupt the social patterns of the nation. One critic, Sen. John G. Tower (R Texas), said that a major objective of the program was to create "socio-economic integration" which he said would "get low-income, middle-income and high-income groups all living together." (Tower denied that his statement had racial implications.) Rep. Paul A. Fino (R N. Y.) said the program was "a social planner's dream disguised in housing terminology (by) giving the Housing Administrator a blank check to federalize American residential patterns and subsidize forced economic integration."

Funds Denied. Under renewed criticism, led by Republicans, funds to put the program into operation in fiscal 1966 were denied by Congress at the end of the session. Critics said the Federal Housing Administration, in proposed rent supplement regulations, provided higher income limits for eligibility than was intended by the authorizing legislation. (See p. 182, 381)

Federal Installations Closings. Provided a moratorium of up to one year on payments of principal, and in some cases, interest, on FHA-insured loans when homeowners were unemployed as the result of the closing of a federal installation.

Authorized the Secretary of Defense to acquire properties for FHA disposal when persons unemployed by the closing of federal installations certified that they were unable to sell their homes on reasonable terms.

Title II. FHA Insurance Operations. Extended FHA loan insurance activities for four years, through Oct. 1, 1969, and authorized the following program:

Mortgage Insurance on Land Development Loans. Authorized FHA insurance of private loans for land acquisition and site development. The maximum FHA insured mortgage could (1) cover up to 75 percent of the estimated value of the developed land or (2) 50 percent of the land value before development plus 90 percent of the cost of the site development, whichever was less. Limited the maximum mortgage for a single land undertaking to $10 million. Eligible costs were the acquisition of the land and its improvement with water and sewer facilities, roads, streets, sidewalks, storm drainage facilities and other similar site work.

Permitted either a public sewer system or an adequately regulated private one on land developed under FHA assistance.

Downpayment Requirement. Reduced the downpayment that a person must make on a home valued between $20,000 and $30,000 where the purchase is financed with a mortgage insured under the regular FHA home mortgage insurance program, as follows: required that the payment on that part of the value of insured property which exceeded $20,000 be 20 percent, in place of the existing 25 percent.

Veterans Loans. Established a special FHA home mortgage insurance program for veterans who had not already received benefits under the VA program. Permitted no down payment on the first $15,000 of such insured loan, 10-percent down on the amount between $15,000 and $20,000 and 15 percent on the amount between $20,000 and $30,000, the existing statutory limitation for FHA loan insurance. Limited participation to veterans who had served tours of 90 days or more (or were certified by the Secretary of Defense as having performed extra-hazardous service).

Loans in High-Cost Areas. Authorized the Federal Housing Commissioner to raise the existing ceiling of $10,000 on FHA-insurable home improvement loans by up to 45 percent in high-cost areas.

Mortgages for Servicemen. Increased the maximum amount of a mortgage for a member of the Armed Forces which the FHA would insure from $20,000 to $30,000. Provided for a minimum down payment on such loans as follows: 3 percent on the first $15,000; 10 percent on the amount between $15,000 and $20,000 and 15 percent on the amount between $20,000 and $30,000.

Optional Cash Payment of FHA Insurance Benefits. Authorized the Housing Commissioner at his discretion to pay benefits derived from FHA programs either in cash or in debentures (negotiable, interest-bearing notes) and to borrow from the Treasury for payments as he deemed necessary.

FHA Urban Renewal Housing Programs. Raised the maximum amount of mortgage insurance which a non-occupant mortgagor in an urban renewal area could receive for rehabilitation, purchase or construction for rental purposes of a 1- to 11-family home or other property from 85 percent of the loan amount an owner-occupant could receive to 93 percent of that amount.

Authorized the HHFA Administrator to permit such non-dwelling facilities as he deemed desirable and consistent to be included in FHA-insured multi-family rental housing projects located in urban renewal areas.

Title III. Urban Renewal. Continued the federal urban renewal programs for four years by authorizing an additional $2.9 billion for renewal grants, as follows: $675 million upon enactment, $725 million in fiscal 1967 and $750 million each in fiscal 1968 and fiscal 1969.

Directed the Housing Administrator to study and report to the President and Congress on housing and building laws, codes, standards and regulations, zoning and land-use laws, codes and regulations, and federal, state and local tax policies.

General Neighborhood Renewal Plans. Authorized the inclusion of non-renewal areas with "specially related problems" in community development plans so that renewal programs could deal with unfragmented neighborhoods. Provided that all projects in the plan area be initiated in eight years.

Demolition Grants. Authorized grants of up to two-thirds of cost for demolition of unsafe structures in urban renewal areas or other areas which had workable programs and met specified conditions.

Code Enforcement and Rehabilitation. Stipulated that code enforcement and rehabilitation projects (aimed at minimizing the need for demolition and clearance in urban renewal areas) receive a minimum of 10 percent of the aggregate of (1) the $2.9 billion capital grant authority of HR 7984 and subsequent legislation and (2) the authorization for low-interest-rate rehabilitation loans under the Housing Act of 1964.

Doubled the existing $50 million appropriations authorization ceiling provided in the Housing Act of 1964 for rehabilitation loans. Provided for termination of the program on Oct. 1, 1969.

Authorized grants to cities, other municipalities, and counties for programs of concentrated code enforcement in deteriorated or deteriorating areas (rather than only in urban renewal areas, as provided in existing law); grants could be for up to two-thirds of cost, or three-fourths of cost in the case of cities of less than 50,000 population.

Local Grants-in-Aid. Included numerous provisions relating to specific urban renewal projects in various cities throughout the country.

Historic Structures. Authorized an urban renewal project to include the cost of relocating historic structures within the project area.

Workable Program Requirement. Amended the Housing Act of 1949 to require that each workable program for community improvement be sufficiently extensive and detailed to prove the need for a proposed urban renewal project and to demonstrate that the project was in accord with the workable program.

Stipulated that the workable program requirement would be applicable to an Indian tribe, band or nation only to the extent that it had legal jurisdiction and power to carry out the requirement.

Non-Residential Projects. Stipulated that up to 35 percent of the bill's new capital grant authorization for urban renewal activities could be used for projects which were predominantly non-residential both before and after renewal. Stipulated that the existing 30-percent limitation on such projects would remain in force for amounts previously available for such projects but still unused.

Lease Guarantees for Small Businesses. Amended the Small Business Investment Act to authorize the Small Business Administration (SBA) to guarantee payment of rentals under leases entered into by small business concerns displaced by federal or federally aided urban renewal, highway or other construction projects and concerns eligible for loans under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. Limited the SBA fee for the guarantee to 2-1/2 percent of minimum annual guaranteed rental. Established a revolving fund for this program with initial capital of $5 million from SBA's general fund and increased the authorization to the general fund by a like amount.

Other Provisions. Amended the Housing Act of 1954 to authorize the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency to undertake renewal projects in areas which were not residential or predominantly residential.

Expanded and implemented guidelines of existing law regarding relocation assistance programs for persons displaced by urban renewal.

Made economically depressed areas (designated as urban redevelopment areas under the Area Redevelopment Act or similar legislation subsequently enacted) with populations of 150,000 or more eligible for capital grants of three-fourths of the cost of urban renewal projects. (Existing law provided for grants of up to two-thirds of the cost of projects in such redevelopment areas, but up to three-fourths of the cost if the areas had a population of less than 150,000. The provision applied retroactively to Providence, R.I., and could apply to other areas in the future.)

Title IV. Compensation of Condemnees. Established uniform land acquisition procedures to be followed in connection with the acquisition of land by eminent domain under the following federally assisted urban development programs: urban renewal, public housing, urban mass transportation, public facility loans, open-space land, basic public works, neighborhood facilities and advance acquisition of land. The uniform procedures required an applicant to make every reasonable effort to acquire property by negotiated purchase before resorting to eminent domain and provided safeguards for the owners of real property against unfair treatment under eminent domain proceedings.

Title V. Low-Rent Public Housing. Extended the low-rent public housing program for four years, to Oct. 1, 1969, and increased the authorization for contracts for this program by $47 million annually during fiscal 1966-69 (the existing authorized total was $366,250,000) in order to provide an estimated 60,000 units per year over the four-year period. (Housing officials said they expected the 60,000 total to include about 35,000 units in new construction, 15,000 units from purchase and--if necessary--rehabilitation of existing housing, and 10,000 units leased from owners for low-rent use.)

Greater Use of Existing Housing. Authorized amortization periods of less than 40 years on public housing indebtedness in order to facilitate the purchase or leasing of older housing for use as low-rent public housing.

Reallocation of Units. Authorized the reallocation of housing units not placed under construction within five years from the date they were reserved for a state, without regard to limits on the amount of units which may be placed under contract in any one state.

Sale of Federally Owned Projects. Authorized the Public Housing Administration (PHA) to sell a federally owned public housing project to a non-profit local group, as well as to a local public housing agency, provided that such project would remain in use as low-rent housing.

Per Room Limitations. Increased the limitations on the cost of construction of low-rent public housing from $2,000 to $2,400 for regular units, from $3,000 to $3,500 for units constructed in Alaska or for the elderly and from $3,500 to $4,000 for units in Alaska for the elderly.

Rental Gap. Exempted disaster victims (as defined under the rent supplements program, above) from a requirement that there be a 20-percent gap between upper rental limits for admission to public housing and lowest private rents.

Purchase by Tenants. Permitted tenants to purchase detached, semi-detached or row public housing units.

Title VI. College Housing. Extended the college housing loan program for four years, through fiscal 1969. (The existing authorization for the program totaled $2,875,000,000 and was increased by $300 million annually; the $300 million annual increase was to continue during the four-year extension.)

Established an interest rate ceiling on such loans at the lower of either 3 percent or the existing statutory interest rate formula (which currently provided an actual rate of about 3-3/4 - 4 percent). (This encouraged state universities to use the federal program for the first time, since the 3-percent interest rate was lower than that usually paid on state bond issues.)

Stipulated that new colleges were eligible for loans when they provided assurance that they would offer the baccalaureate degree within a reasonable period of time.

Broadened coverage of the loan program to include vocational and technical institutions administered by fully accredited, degree-granting, four-year universities and colleges.

Title VII. Community Facilities. Authorized the HHFA Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance up to 50 percent of the cost of projects to provide basic water facilities (including storage, purification, treatment and distribution) and sewer facilities (other than for "treatment works" eligible for federal aid under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act) in communities of any size. Authorized grants for 90 percent of the cost for a sewer facility in communities under 10,000 population which had an unemployment rate 100 percent above the national average for the preceding year and in which there was no adequate facility serving "a substantial portion" of the community's inhabitants. Stipulated that before a grant could be approved for a sewer facility, the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare would be required to certify that any waste material carried by such facilities would be "adequately treated" (in accordance with applicable federal, state, interstate and local standards) before it was discharged into any public waterway. (The grants could be used to construct, expand, enlarge and improve basic public water and sewer facilities, but were not intended for ordinary repair and maintenance expenses of existing systems.)

Authorized the HHFA Administrator to make grants to local public bodies and agencies to finance up to two-thirds of the cost of neighborhood health and recreation centers and similar community services (grants could be for up to 75 percent of the cost in the case of a project located in a "redevelopment area" as designated in the Area Redevelopment Act or a supplementary act. Required such a project to: (1) provide health, recreational, social or similar community services (including a community action program under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964), (2) be consistent with community development planning and (3) be located near a "significant portion" of the area's low- or moderate-income residents.

Authorized grants to local public bodies and agencies to assist in the acquisition of land for future construction of public works or facilities; the grant could cover the total amount of reasonable interest charges for five years.

Authorized appropriations for fiscal years 1966-69, as follows: $200 million a year for water and sewer grants; $50 million a year for neighborhood facilities; and $25 million a year for advance acquisition of land.

Title VIII. Federal National Mortgage Assn. Increased by $1,625,000,000 the amount of special assistance the President could authorize the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) to commit for purchases of FHA-insured mortgages financing housing for low- and moderate-income families, for housing activities in urban renewal areas, for housing for the elderly and for other special types of housing, as follows: $100 million in fiscal 1966; $450 million in fiscal 1967; $550 million in fiscal 1968; and $525 million in fiscal 1969.

Provided certain exemptions of FHA below-market interest rate mortgages covering low- or moderate-income housing from the statutory $17,500 limit on the amount of a mortgage that could be purchased by FNMA under its special assistance function.

Authorized FNMA to purchase mortgages covering residential property offered by other federal agencies and other obligations offered by HHFA; provided further authority for FNMA in its fiduciary capacity to deal in any HHFA obligations.

Title IX. Open-Space Land and Urban Beautification and Improvement. Authorized the HHFA Administrator to enter into contracts totaling up to $310 million ($75 million under existing law) for grants to states and localities under Title VII of the 1961 Housing Act to acquire land in and around urban centers to create "open-space" areas for recreational, conservation, scenic and historic purposes. Limited the share of the total amount which could be used for the open-space program in built-up areas (see below) to $64 million and for urban beautification (see below) to $36 million.

Provided that the maximum grant for acquisition of open-space land would be 50 percent of the total cost (existing law allowed up to 20 percent).

Open Space in Built-Up Areas. Authorized the HHFA Administrator to enter into contracts for grants to states and localities to help finance the acquisition of developed land in built-up urban areas which would be cleared and used as permanent open-space land (parks, squares, playgrounds, pedestrian malls, etc.); grants could not exceed 50 percent of the cost of land acquisition and necessary demolition and removal of developments on the sites.

Urban Beautification. Authorized the HHFA Administrator to enter into contracts for grants to states and localities for local landscaping, park improvement and other urban beautification and improvement; grants could not exceed 50 percent of the amount by which the community's activities under the program during any fiscal year exceeded its usual expenditures for comparable activities, except that up to $5 million of the amount authorized for the section (see above) could be used to make grants for up to 90 percent of the cost of demonstration projects of "special value," as determined by the Administrator.

Other Provisions. Limited open-space grants to situations in which they were needed to carry out a unified or officially coordinated program which was part of a comprehensive urban development plan (existing law required that there be comprehensive planning to which the proposed land use is important).

Permitted up to $50,000 of the funds available for grants under the title for undertaking and publishing open-space surveys and other studies in connection with activities under the title.

Title X. Rural Housing. Authorized the Farmers' Home Administration to make loans to persons in any age group to buy previously occupied dwellings, farm service buildings and adequate farm land. (Under existing law, such loans could be made only to elderly persons).

Established a new loan program which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make and to insure loans for rural home improvement with maximum interest rates of: (1) 5 percent to persons of low- and moderate-incomes and (2) a level comparable to the rates and service charges applicable to loans insured by the FHA to persons of higher incomes. Limited the total amount of loans that could be made or insured in the low- and moderate-income bracket to a total of $300 million annually, but placed no limit on the amount of loans or loan insurance for persons of higher income.

Defined a rural area for purposes of the loan program as a place which was not part of or associated with an urban area and which had: (1) a population not in excess of 2,500; or (2) a population between 2,500 and 5,500, if rural in character.

Increased from $10 million to $50 million the authorization for grants to non-profit sponsors to provide low-rent housing for domestic farm labor.

Extended authorizations for rural housing programs for four years, to Oct. 1, 1969.

Title XI. Miscellaneous. Required the Housing Administrator to report to Congress annually on housing programs under the jurisdiction of the HHFA.

Increased appropriations authorizations on the following existing programs: urban planning grants, from $105 million to $230 million; federal-state urban affairs training programs, from $10 million to $30 million; public works planning advances, from $20 million to $70 million; and low-income housing demonstration grants from $10 million to $15 million.

Authorized loans to private non-profit corporations to finance the construction of water purification, storage and distribution systems and sewer systems for rural areas and small communities.

Authorized savings and loan associations to make loans on the security of buildings to be used as college dormitories, fraternity or sorority houses or for residential purposes by the staffs of community hospitals.

Repealed a provision of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964 (PL 88-365) which required that facilities and equipment used under the program be U.S. manufactured.

Directed the HHFA Administrator to study and report to Congress within one year of the bill's enactment on (1) methods of reducing loss to homeowners whose property depreciates because of proximity to airports and (2) methods of housing construction which would diminish the effect of aircraft noise within such homes.

Authorized federal savings and loan associations to make up to 1 percent of their assets available for overseas housing loans guaranteed under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. (Existing law limited participation primarily to national and state banks.)

Modern U. S. housing programs, initiated in the 1930s, had two main purposes, one economic, one social. Home construction was a key factor in the economy of the nation. As World War II drew to a close, economic planners saw the pent-up demand for housing, which had been neglected during the war, as a major means of absorbing the labor force to be released from military service and defense industry. Later, home building was considered an important element in seeking the goal of full employment and in combatting recessions. More recently its use as a weapon against poverty has been stressed. Equally important in recent years has been the emphasis on rehabilitation of urban areas, which have been caught in the pressures of rising population, increased congestion and the flight of the wealthier and better educated groups to the suburbs.

Home construction, including maintenance and repairs, accounts for more than 5 percent of the Gross National Product.

It has been generally agreed, since New Deal days, that the Federal Government has some responsibilities in the housing field -- to stimulate the economy, help communities combat slums and assist special groups, such as veterans, the poor, the elderly, farmers, minority groups, etc., to obtain decent homes in wholesome neighborhoods. (See 1949 housing policy statement box, p. 367.)

But at no time in the postwar years did housing units assisted by the Federal Government through insurance or subsidy amount to more than half of the total number of units constructed. From 1945 through 1962, about 19,991,000 non-farm housing units were started. Of these,

Description of Major Federal Housing Agencies

The Department of Housing and Urban Development was created Sept. 9, 1965, under PL 89-174, with responsibility for the principal housing, home finance and community development functions of the Federal Government. HUD essentially was a transformation of the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA), and its constitutent parts, to a Cabinet-level department. Initially, HUD continued to operate with virtually no change in personnel or organization from the HHFA, pending the appointment of a Secretary in 1966. With the appointment, the only major change expected was the transfer of over-all supervision and coordination of constituent agencies from the Office of the HHFA Administrator to an Office of the Secretary.

HHFA, as created on July 27, 1947, under Reorganization Plan No. 3, consisted of an Office of the Administrator and five operating units or agencies -- the Federal Housing Administration, the Public Housing Administration, the Federal National Mortgage Assn., the Community Facilities Administration and the Urban Renewal Administration. The first three had their own authority in law and the powers of each were invested in a commissioner or, in the case of FNMA, a board of directors. The CFA and the URA, however, were created administratively by the HHFA as part of that agency. The powers of these two units legally were held by the HHFA Administrator.

The divisions carry on the following functions:

- Office of the HHFA Administrator -- Besides supervising and coordinating the constituent parts of the Agency, the Administrator must approve community programs for the prevention and elimination of slums and blight conditions in order to establish a community's eligibility for federal urban renewal assistance, dispose of certain federally owned housing properties and supervise certain disaster and relief activities relating to housing.
- Federal Housing Administration -- The FHA was created by the National Housing Act of 1934 in order to encourage the improvement of housing standards, to provide a system of mortgage insurance and help stabilize the mortgage market. It insures approved private lenders against loss on mortgage loans made for property improvement, land development, cooperative housing projects, one- to four-family sales housing units, rental projects, armed services housing, and the construction or rehabilitation of housing in urban renewal areas.
- Public Housing Administration -- PHA was created July 27, 1947, to administer the low-rent public housing program authorized by the 1937 Housing Act.
- Federal National Mortgage Assn. -- FNMA was originally chartered on Feb. 10, 1938, and is authorized to conduct secondary market operations by buying Government-insured or guaranteed mortgages where and when investment funds are in short supply and by selling such mortgages where and when investment capital is readily available. FNMA also has special assistance functions to support selected types of home mortgages pending establishment of their marketability and in order to prevent a decline in mortgage-lending and home-building activities.
- Community Facilities Administration -- The CFA was established Dec. 23, 1954, and provides technical and financial assistance to public bodies and to non-profit organizations in planning, financing and constructing community facilities, such as college housing; sewer, water and other public works; advance planning for public facilities; housing for the elderly; and certain school construction.
- Urban Renewal Administration -- The URA was established Dec. 23, 1954, and administers the federal program of slum clearance and urban renewal, the urban planning assistance program and the program for developing improved techniques for preventing and eliminating urban blight.
- Other Programs -- Other federal activities in housing include: the Veterans Administration's loan guarantee and direct loan programs, the farm housing programs administered by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Farmers Home Administration of the Department of Agriculture, and the activities of the Federal Savings and Loan System, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. and the Federal Home Loan Bank System.

12,113,000 were conventional, 4,583,000 were insured by the Federal Housing Administration, 2,607,000 were guaranteed by the Veterans Administration, about 70,000 were aided by direct Government loans and 618,000 were public housing.

The postwar landmark in housing legislation was the Housing Act of 1949. It pronounced a national housing policy, provided for an annual housing census, revived and broadened the public housing program, established the controversial urban renewal program and established a large rural housing program. In later years, the 1949 Act was amended to meet new and special needs, such as aid for college housing (1950), sales housing for the elderly (1956) and rental housing for the elderly (1959). Special aid for public works in small communities was provided for in 1955. The 1961 Housing Act initiated programs for aid to middle-income housing, mass transportation and urban "open spaces" and substantially expanded existing programs to reduce urban blight and congestion and to improve housing for low-income groups.

Although the 1964 omnibus housing bill was called "bare-bones" and considered one which merely extended most housing programs into 1965, it included most of the Administration's proposals and a substantial part of the funds requested. It contained four important new programs: $10 million for construction of low-cost rental housing for domestic farm workers; $10 million in 50-50 matching grants to train local urban development administrators; $1.5 million over three years for graduate training fellowships in city planning and $50 million for low-interest loans to property owners in urban renewal areas to help rehabilitate their property and thereby avoid total demolition and reconstruction (a Republican proposal). The 1964 measure also provided for more ready capital by authorizing the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to pool its mortgages and sell interests in the pool to private investors. In addition, the 1964 bill added handicapped persons to the direct-loan, FHA insurance and public housing programs available to the elderly.

HOUSING MESSAGE

President Johnson March 2 sent to Congress his 1965 housing and urban development message -- "Message on the Cities" -- in which he stressed the need to prepare land for new cities and expanding metropolitan areas and to rehabilitate existing urban areas. Observing that the U. S. population would double in the next four decades, the President said "it is as if we had 40 years to rebuild the entire United States." (For text, see p. 1400)

Highlights of the message and the outcome of the requests it embodied:

New Department. The President again asked for creation of a Department of Housing and Urban Development. This had been unsuccessfully sought by Mr. Johnson and President Kennedy since 1961. The proposed new department would "consist of all the present programs of HHFA (Housing and Home Finance Agency). In addition it would be primarily responsible for federal participation in metropolitan area thinking and planning." The Department was authorized under PL 89-174. (See p. 382)

Rent Supplements. In a major departure from previous housing proposals, the President called for a program of rent supplements for low-and moderate-income families and individuals. To be eligible for a rent supplement, the income of the individual (or family) had to be too low to obtain standard private housing, but too high to make him eligible for public housing. In addition, an individual or family had to meet one of the following qualifications: have been displaced by governmental action (such as code enforcement, urban renewal, public housing projects, highway construction); be 62 years of age or older; be physically handicapped; or occupy "substandard housing." The individual or family receiving a supplement was to pay either 20 or 25 percent of his income for rent (20 percent if he was just renting or 25 percent if he was renting with an option to buy the dwelling unit); the Federal Government was to pay whatever additional amount was required to rent the dwelling unit.

Use of the rental subsidy, the President said, "will make it unnecessary for the Government to assist and even require the segregation by income level which detracts from the variety and quality of urban life. In the long run this may prove the most effective instrument of our new housing policy." Should the program work as well as expected, the President added, "it should be possible to phase out most of our existing programs of low-interest loans."

The supplements program, modified to limit payments only to persons whose income was low enough to qualify them for public housing, was included in HR 7984. Operating funds for the program in fiscal 1966, however, were denied.

Urban Sprawl, New Towns, Community Facilities. To prepare for orderly urban growth, the President proposed:

- Federal assistance to promote the development of entire new towns, new communities and new subdivisions. The "new towns" package contained two separate provisions: Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance for loans to private builders to finance acquisition and development of land, and federal loans to states for land development and subsequent sale of the developed land to private builders. The new towns proposals were rejected by House and Senate Committees, but the final bill provided FHA mortgage insurance for private developers of neighborhoods and subdivisions.
- A program of matching grants to local governments for basic water and sewer facilities "contingent on comprehensive areawide planning for future growth." The request was enacted in HR 7984.
- Federal grants to cover interest charges for five years on loans obtained by local public bodies for advance acquisition of land needed for public buildings and facilities. All were included in HR 7984.

Training for Urban Skills. The President proposed establishment of an Institute of Urban Development as part of the new Department of Housing and Urban Development. Presumably the Institute would administer several urban training programs previously instituted by or recommended by the Administration, such as the programs authorized (but never funded) in the 1964 Housing Act providing matching grants to states for special training programs in community development and grants for graduate fellowships in urban planning. (1964 Almanac p. 274) Legislative enactment of the proposal was not needed. It was expected that the Institute would be created during 1966 in the reorganization of agencies comprising the new Department.

Rehabilitation Assistance. In an effort to compensate for some of the criticism of the "federal bulldozer" image of urban renewal and yet press rehabilitation of older parts of cities, the President called

Housing Policy

"The Congress hereby declares that the general welfare and security of the Nation and the health and living standards of its people require housing production and related community development sufficient to remedy the serious housing shortage, the elimination of sub-standard and other inadequate housing through the clearance of slums and blighted areas, and the realization as soon as feasible of the goal of a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family, thus contributing to the development and redevelopment of communities and to the advancement of the growth, wealth and security of the Nation."

for combined use of urban renewal funds and public housing funds to rehabilitate existing housing (rather than tearing it down in urban renewal and public housing programs). The request was included in HR 7984.

Neighborhood Facilities. In a move designed to "meet the individual's most pressing needs and provide places for recreation and for meeting with neighbors," the President recommended a new program of matching grants to help governments build multipurpose neighborhood centers for health, recreation and similar community services. This was included in HR 7984.

Urban Beautification. The President called for a broadening of the open-space land program authorized by the Housing Act of 1961 to provide grants to assist local bodies in acquiring and clearing land in and around urban centers for creation of small parks and squares, malls and playgrounds. (Assistance under the existing open-space program was limited to acquisition of lands that were primarily undeveloped). Mr. Johnson also proposed a new program of special grants to states and localities for local landscaping, park improvement and other urban beautification and improvement. Both proposals were included in HR 7984.

Community Renewal Programs. To encourage cities to develop "long range programs which take into account human as well as construction needs," the President proposed that every city of 50,000 or more develop a "Community Renewal Program" as a condition for federal urban renewal assistance. "These programs," the President said, "will provide an orderly schedule and pattern for development of areas of blight and decay -- combining social and educational services with the planning of physical construction." No action was taken on the request.

Existing Programs. The President also called for extension, and in some cases expansion, of numerous existing housing and urban development programs, including FHA insurance activities, urban renewal, low-rent public housing, below-market interest rate mortgage assistance on housing loans for moderate-income families and other activities. The President did not specify the new operating levels in his message, however, and they were first outlined in the Administration omnibus housing bill, introduced in both the House and Senate March 4. Major proposals included:

Urban Renewal. Authorization of an additional $2.9 billion for urban renewal grants, as follows: $675 million upon enactment, $725 million in fiscal 1967, and $750 million in each of the fiscal years 1968 and 1969. The request was included in HR 7984.

Public Housing. An increase of an annual $47 million over fiscal years 1966-69 in contractual authority for low-rent public housing projects. Housing authorities said the increased ceiling would provide an additional 60,000 units a year, including 35,000 new units and 25,000 units to be purchased from private homeowners for low-income use. This was included in HR 7984.

Moderate-Income Housing. A four-year continuation, at the rate of 40,000 new units per year, of the program of FHA below-market interest rate mortgage insurance on housing loans for moderate-income families. This was included in HR 7984.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 25 - April 7 on HR 5840, the Administration omnibus housing bill (HR 7984, the bill enacted, was a revised bill that was introduced later), and on HR 6501, an omnibus Republican bill.

TESTIMONY -- March 25 -- Robert C. Weaver, Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, presented a detailed description of the Administration bill and outlined Administration views on major proposals.

Rent Supplements. Calling the rent supplements program a "vital part" of the proposed act, Weaver said the supplements would provide "decent" housing for families in the income gap between public housing and adequate private housing. He said about four million families fit this category, of which "almost half are elderly or handicapped, and the others all live in substandard housing. There are also an estimated 300,000 families who will be displaced from their homes by governmental action over the next four years, and many of them will be in this income range."

The Administrator estimated that the supplements would "enable the resources and initiative of private enterprise over the next four years to finance more than 500,000 dwelling units geared to the needs of lower income families."

In the questioning that followed Weaver's prepared testimony, Republican members of the Subcommittee contended that the supplements would be available to numerous people in the $5,000 to $8,000 income range.

Rehabilitation Grants. The success of urban renewal rehabilitation projects, Weaver said, "requires bringing all the property in the area up to standard... Grants to permit the homeowner to do the job himself would help avoid public acquisition and minimize displacement of families." Weaver said the grants would be limited to hardship cases, "generally to avoid displacement of homeowners who have no other means of financing repairs and improvements which must be made to their homes."

New Towns. Weaver said that "the rapid rate at which we are consuming urban land" -- one million acres in 1964 alone--had resulted in "sharply climbing land costs and waste and ugliness from disorderly urban sprawl." He warned that "in the few decades left in this century, we will double our urban population, double our city land, and do as much building as we have done since the first colonists arrived on our shores."

Weaver said that the availability of federal land development mortgage insurance would enable developers "to provide a more steady supply of improved building sites in an orderly and more economical manner. It should also open up cheaper outlying land for well-planned development and help combat the rapid rise of prices for homebuilding sites." The land development area, Weaver noted, could vary in size from a small, well-developed neighborhood to an entire new community. "In the latter case," the Administrator said, "we may expect some additional benefits such as cheaper initial land costs, a better balance of varied housing and other land uses, and reduced traffic."

Weaver said the second feature of the "new towns" package, federal loans to states for land development and subsequent sale of the developed land to private builders, would enable state governments to "become instrumental in fostering comprehensive planning of new areas expected to be populated within the foreseeable future."

Community Renewal Programs. Such programs prepared in the past by planning authorities in larger cities, Weaver said, had "definitely proved their worth, both for urban renewal and other related city functions." The Administrator added that success of local urban renewal efforts was becoming increasingly dependent upon coordination among projects, which he said was one of the central purposes of a community renewal program. Weaver also said that such programs would be "particularly helpful in coordinating urban renewal with residential development, especially where rehabilitation is feasible."

Low-Rent Public Housing. Authority to amortize public housing indebtedness over periods shorter than the present 40 years, Weaver said, "would provide additional flexibility... needed to facilitate the purchase or leasing of older housing" at lower costs than new construction. The use of previously occupied housing, the Administrator said, "would be particularly useful in areas where there are substantial vacancies in privately owned housing, especially for large families."

Water and Sewer Grants. The proposed grants for basic water and sewer facilities, Weaver said, "would stimulate a substantial increase in local expenditures for... facilities needed for growth and would contribute to the development of efficient areawide systems which are consistent with local comprehensive planning."

Neighborhood Centers. "Much of the costs of ill health, juvenile delinquency, dependency, and the problems of old age," Weaver asserted, "can be avoided by preventive measures that could be provided by an adequate program of community services which are urgently needed but are too often unavailable." Priority for grants, he said, would be given to applications for projects that "would benefit members of low-income families or otherwise further the objectives of a 'community action program' approved by the Office of Economic Opportunity."

Advance Acquisition of Land. "Advance acquisition," Weaver declared, "can avoid the waste of demolishing buildings that otherwise might be constructed...and can avoid relocating the occupants from their homes or disrupting their businesses. In addition, knowledge of the location of proposed future works can enable private developers and builders to make adjustments in their construction plans and schedules which lead to more orderly growth and development of the entire area."

Open-Space Land Acquisition. Weaver said the current open-space program was limited to assisting in the acquisition of lands that were primarily underdeveloped, a fact which had "tended to limit....the program to outlying areas of cities and their suburbs." He said less than 15 percent of the lands acquired under the program had been located in built-up parts of metropolitan areas. Weaver said the new authority to acquire developed lands for conversion to parks, squares and malls would "assist in relieving the congestion, noise, drabness and unbroken monotony of asphalt and brick characteristic of the business and midtown sections of so many of our cities."

Urban Beautification and Improvement. Weaver said the new program was "designed to help communities to become more desirable and pleasant places in which to live, work, play and rear a family." The programs, locally planned, would have to "represent significant and effective efforts, involving all available public and private resources, for the beautification and improvement of open-space and other public land in the community" and would have to be important to the community's development plan. He said a community would be able to get federal assistance for a variety of measures, including park development; mall, square and waterfront area improvement; activities "on behalf of the arts," and development of pedestrian malls in streets closed to traffic.

Weaver said a community would be encouraged to undertake other beautification efforts on its own, such as the regulation of signs and utility wires, "zoning to prevent auto graveyards in inappropriate areas, and school programs to foster pride in maintaining and improving the appearance of the community."

Of the proposed demonstration grants, Weaver said they could "play a major role in developing new and imaginative approaches" to urban beautification and "help avoid costly mistakes by other communities."

March 26 -- Dwight D. Townsend, director of the Washington office, Cooperative League of the U.S.A., said that the Administration bill was "important not just for those who will occupy the housing built, but for all who live in cities, as their welfare is affected by the housing... and by the over-all development of the cities."

While endorsing the program of rent subsidies embodied in the bill, Townsend said the existing Federal Housing Administration (FHA) program of below-market interest rate loans to meet the needs of moderate-income families should not "be phased out in favor of the rent supplement program...Instead we recommend that it be expanded and improved. We believe that there is a need for both a below-market interest program and a rent supplement program."

RURAL HOUSING PROGRAM

Howard Bertsch, administrator of the Farmers' Home Administration, U.S. Department of Agriculture, outlined the rural housing provisions of HR 5840 and said their enactment would be "a major step toward helping achieve the goal of giving families in rural America parity of opportunity in housing."

"The most significant new feature" embodied in the rural housing provisions of HR 5840, Bertsch said, was the authorization of insured housing loans to persons wishing to build homes in rural areas. This provision, he said, "would enable funding a rural housing program of reasonable dimensions and accelerating the rate at which the quality of housing on our farms and in our small towns and villages can be improved."

Another "important new authority" provided by HR 5840, Bertsch said, would permit the Farmers Home Administration to make loans to families in any age group to buy previously occupied dwellings, farm service buildings, and adequate farm land. Under existing law, families other than senior citizens could obtain loans only for new construction or repair of buildings they already owned. This, Bertsch said, would enable families in rural areas to acquire homes and essential facilities "at considerably less cost than would be involved if they were to build a new home."

Other rural housing provisions outlined by Bertsch would: (1) authorize sales of insured housing loans at discounts to private investors, if necessary, and require any losses from discount sales to be made up annually by appropriation; (2) amend the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) Charter Act to make insured rural housing loans eligible for purchase by the FNMA under its secondary market operations; (3) authorize the FNMA to buy insured rural housing loans from the Farmers Home Administration as part of that agency's management and liquidation function. Bertsch said the discount sale of loans to private investors was necessary because "insured housing loans under the proposed terms might not always be saleable to private investors at par." The provisions extending FNMA authority, Bertsch said, would improve the "saleability" of insured rural housing loans.

URBAN RENEWAL, PUBLIC HOUSING

March 29 -- Nathaniel S. Keith, president of the National Housing Conference, criticized as inadequate the proposed $2.9 billion increase in urban renewal grants over the next four years provided by HR 5840 and the annual increase of $47 million in obligational authority for new public housing. The urban renewal outlay, Keith said, should be increased to $6 billion and the annual housing grants doubled to provide for 125,000 new units a year rather than the projected 60,000.

John W. Edelman, president of the National Council of Senior Citizens, also urged that a minimum of 125,000 new public housing units be built each year over a four-year period. Edelman also said that the Council considered rent subsidies "a valuable and essential tool and method of meeting current housing needs" for the elderly.

Edelman further asserted that "housing projects for the elderly as far as possible should be built in such a way as not to cause a kind of segregated situation for the older persons living in these accommodations.... Most of the tenants in such projects are still physically and mentally alive and...more frequently need and desire a normal community environment and the possibility of contacts with age groups other than their own."

RENT SUPPLEMENTS, "NEW TOWNS" CRITICIZED

March 30 -- Ira S. Robbins, president of the National Assn. of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, called the rental supplements proposal "administratively cumbersome and socially indefensible." The goal of providing adequate housing for middle-income families, Robbins said, could be achieved at lower cost through combined private and public housing developments and through federal financing of rehabilitated housing.

Robbins also criticized the provisions of the bill which authorized federal assistance to encourage development of new communities and complete "new towns." The new towns, Robbins asserted, would merely create greater problems by luring middle-income families from the central city, allowing it to deteriorate.

April 1 -- Philadelphia Mayor James H. Tate, representing the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said in praising the Administration bill that poor housing had been a cause of the rioting that had broken out in his city during the summer of 1964.

Rent Supplements Positions

During hearings on the President's omnibus housing bill before Housing Subcommittees of the House and Senate, representatives of the following major labor, agricultural, construction, banking and civic organizations testified on the Administration's rental supplements proposal. Among the groups favoring the concept of supplements, few endorsed the original, Administration plan. Some called for a broadening of the provision to cover a wider range of income groups, and others for a restriction of the program to persons whose income was low enough to qualify for public housing.

Groups in favor of supplements:
American Bankers Assn.
AFL - CIO
Apartment Assn. of America
Joint Center for Urban Studies of MIT and Harvard University
Mortgage Bankers Assn. of America
National Assn. of Home Builders
National Conference of Catholic Charities
National Council on the Aging
National Council of Senior Citizens
National Farmers Union
National Federation of Settlements and Neighborhood Centers

Groups opposed:
Chamber of Commerce of the United States
National Assn. of Housing and Redevelopment Officials National Lumber and Building Material Dealers Assn.

In Philadelphia alone, Tate said, there were 100,000 families who qualified for public housing on the basis of income but could not be accommodated because of limited facilities.

Ehney A. Camp Jr., executive vice president and treasurer of Liberty National Life Insurance Co., Birmingham, Ala., testifying on behalf of the American Life Convention and the Life Insurance Association of America, said that the life insurance industry was opposed to the bill's provisions for "new towns" and for Agriculture Department loans and insurance for rural housing.

Insurance men had "grave doubts," Camp said, as to whether the "new towns" provisions would accomplish their professed objective of encouraging "better land use and community planning." Camp contended that there was "too much danger that insured loans for the purchase of land on the scale indicated here would lead to speculation and sharply rising land prices."

April 2 -- S. Ross Greenwood, a spokesman for the American Bankers Association, said the extension of FHA mortgage insurance on private loans to land developers as provided by the Administration bill "would be especially useful to many builders who are willing to undertake the construction of...subdivisions, but who could not do so without an insurance program." Greenwood said, however, the Bankers' Assn. opposed extension of the mortgage insurance for "extensive new developments which alludes to the development of new towns. Although such a development may if properly conceived and executed be in the public interest, the present proposal leaves a great area of major policy to the discretion of the Housing Administration." Greenwood said that HR 5840 did not sufficiently "spell out the dimensions of this program."

Edward W. Kiley, Rural Areas Development Specialist of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, said the rural housing loan program authorized by HR 5840 was necessary to stem the record of "consistent out-migration which has been the pattern (in rural America) for the last 20 years."

Philip C. Jackson, Jr., a spokesman for the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, endorsed "the idea of rent supplements if they are restricted to the low-income group, and if they are paid regardless of whether they cover new or existing units so long as the units are standard and the total rental is a fair market rental." Assistance to the middle-income group, Jackson said, "should be limited to the more effective utilization of the FHA-insured loan programs."

Russell I. Thackrey, a spokesman for the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, called for reduced interest charges on college housing loans in order to keep "college charges from rising so much that students are priced out of higher education unless they receive individual aids of various kinds." The current interest rate of 3.75 percent on such loans, Thackrey said, should be reduced at least to 3 percent, if not lower.

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown, who did not attend the hearings, submitted a statement calling for expansion of the rental subsidy proposal to cover existing housing. "By limiting this rent supplement program to proposed construction," Brown said, "its implementation would be delayed for a minimum period of two to two and one-half years to allow time for FHA processing and the required period of construction. Further, there exists in many of the communities of the nation suitable, vacant, standard housing that could be immediately utilized for the benefit of the vast numbers eligible under this section."

April 5 -- James Q. Wilson, director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University, urged "careful study" of the "new towns" provisions. "If the Congress is satisfied that these new communities will increase opportunities for disadvantaged families," he said, "then a federal subsidy -- and credit assistance is a federal subsidy -- may be appropriate. If Congress is not satisfied on that score, then I see little reason why the subsidy should be given."

April 6 -- Robert P. Gerholz, a spokesman for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, contended that HR 5840 greatly increased "the dependence of local governments on federal subsidies and decisions." Gerholz proposed that the bill be amended "so as to encourage stronger local government and to strengthen rather than weaken the private competitive economic system." The Chamber, Gerholz said, particularly recommended that Congress "carefully examine the findings from some of the significant studies of the impact of the current federal subsidy programs, and then assess the usefulness of these programs for solving problems of community development and renewal."

April 7 -- John E. Krout, chairman of the Mortgage Committee of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, urged a limited experimental approach to the rental supplements program until it had proved itself effective.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The Housing Subcommittee May 7 approved, by a 10-1 vote, a revised version of the Administration's housing bill. The negative vote was cast by James Harvey (R Mich.). Committee Chairman Wright Patman (D Texas) introduced the amended bill as HR 7984. Identical bills (HR 7985, HR 7986) were introduced by Housing Subcommittee Chairman William A. Barrett (D Pa.) and ranking minority member Willam B. Widnall (R N. J.).

The full Banking and Currency Committee May 19 ordered HR 7984 reported by a vote of 26-7. All the negative votes were cast by Republicans. The Committee made no changes in the bill as approved by the Subcommittee.

Changes from Administration Bill. Following are the major changes made by the Subcommittee:

Rent Supplements. The Administration proposal was modified to permit rent supplements to be paid on behalf of a broader group of people than was possible under the Administration's draft bill. Under the committee proposal, an individual or a family was made eligible for a supplement if he or it was unable to obtain standard private housing at a rent which was equal to or less than one-fourth of his or its income. As in the Administration bill, an individual or family also had to be either displaced by governmental action, at least 62 years old, physically handicapped or occupying substandard housing. The primary effect of the committee change was to make low-income persons who were eligible for public housing also eligible for rent supplements. Persons who could obtain public housing were specifically excluded from supplement aid by the Administration's draft bill.

In addition, the Committee required any person receiving supplement aid to pay 25 percent of his income toward the rent of his dwelling unit; the Administration bill set the amount at 20 or 25 percent depending on whether he was just renting or renting with an option to purchase.

New Towns. The proposal for federal loans to states for land development and subsequent sale of the developed land to private builders was dropped. In addition, the Subcommittee limited FHA land development mortgage insurance to neighborhoods and subdivisions, lowered the ceiling on the amount of mortgages that could be insured in any one project from $25 million to $12.5 million and eliminated the proposal for $500 million in authority for the FNMA to purchase land development mortgages secured by new towns and new communities.

Water and Sewer Facilities. The proposal for grants to growing communities to cover 40 percent of projects for basic water and sewer facilities was broadened to cover all communities and the federal share was raised to 50 percent.

The Subcommittee added provisions for:

- Special FHA home mortgage insurance for veterans who had not already received a GI home loan. The single-family residence loans would cover 100 percent (no down-payment) of the first $20,000 and 85 percent of any additional amount up to a total mortgage of $30,000.
- A 3-percent interest rate on three programs -- direct housing loans for the elderly, insured mortgage loans at below-market interest rates for low- and moderate-income families and displaced families, and college housing loans -- providing in effect a 1-percent cut in the interest on these programs.

- Public housing authorities to lease existing private housing and make it available to low-income families at normal public housing charges. This was a modification of a GOP "rent certificate" plan under which families eligible for public housing could rent private housing and pay for it with certificates redeemable from public housing authorities.
- Uniform land acquisition procedures to be followed in connection with the acquisition of land by eminent domain under HHFA development programs.

GOP Proposals. A number of the Subcommittee amendments -- principally the authority to lease existing private housing for public housing use and the veterans' loan program -- were adapted from a Republican housing bill (HR 6501) introduced by Widnall.

Committee Report

The Committee May 21 reported the clean bill (HR 7984 -- H Rept 365).

Majority Views. The report said the provisions of HR 7984, "taken in concert...will make possible an accelerated attack on the problems of urban blight, a substantial improvement in housing conditions, in both urban and rural communities, and more orderly growth of cities and communities of all sizes.

Noting that President Johnson's March 2 Housing Message had emphasized rent supplements as "the most crucial new instrument" in urban development, the report said that the supplements program would provide "decent, safe and sanitary housing" for numerous families otherwise unable to afford it. The bill authorized $50 million for the first year of the program, plus annual step-ups of $50 million in fiscal 1967-1969, when the authorization would total $200 million a year. The rent supplement funds would be used primarily to finance construction of new moderate-income housing, but could be used for rehabilitation of existing housing.

The report said the bill's provisions authorizing public housing authorities to take out one- to three-year leases on existing private housing, for rental on a subsidized basis to low-income families in lieu of public housing, would provide "a very valuable supplement to the basic program of new construction" of public housing. This program would permit the poor -- particularly large families -- to make use of vacant housing rather than "continue to live in slum conditions." (The bill also authorized $47 million a year for four years to provide an estimated 60,000 additional units of public housing a year.)

The bill's authority for housing rehabilitation grants, not in excess of $1,500, to families with incomes of no more than $2,000 who were homeowners in urban renewal areas, would "help reduce the displacement of longtime residents" of the areas whose relocation might present problems of adjustment as well as greater expense to the Government, the report said.

The report said that the "new towns" mortgage insurance provision had been dropped because there was "considerable controversy over the plan and experts differ." The Housing Subcommittee would take up the proposal again later in 1965, it said. (It did not, however.) The report added that elimination of the new towns proposal reduced the cost of HR 7984 by $500 million by eliminating the need for that much additional special assistance authority under the Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA). This left the proposed increase in the FNMA authority at $1,625,000,000, spread out over four years as follows: $100 million on enactment, $450 million on July 1, 1966, $550 million on July 1, 1967, and $525 million on July 1, 1968. The Administration had asked for $2.3 billion.

Minority Views. The report contained a statement of minority views, signed by eight of the Committee's 11 Republicans: Fino (N.Y.), Harvey (Mich.), Brock (Tenn.), Talcott (Calif.), Clawson (Calif.), Johnson (Pa.), Stanton (Ohio) and Mize (Kan.). Fino voted to report the bill, but signed the minority views, because of opposition to the rent subsidy. Dwyer (N.J.), Halpern (N.Y.) and Widnall (N. J.) voted for the bill and did not sign the minority views.

The minority views focused on only one aspect of the omnibus bill -- rent subsidy proposal, which was termed "a wide-open, socialistic subsidy formula" and a threat to "the incentive of the American family to improve its living accommodations by its own effort."

The minority said the lack of firm guidelines in the law meant that many middle-class families would be eligible for supplements. The minority statement contained a table showing income ceilings for eligible families that would set for various cities under the supplements program. The figures ranged from $6,450 to $8,900 annual income and were for residents of cities located primarily in the Eastern part of the nation. (The statement said the table was submitted to the Committee by the Housing and Home Finance Agency, but an HHFA official later denied that the agency had prepared the figures.) The statement said that these ceilings were "purely discretionary" with the administrator of HHFA and "substantially" breached the median national family income ($6,249) in the case of large families.

The statement also contended that the rent supplements, described by Weaver during testimony as an "experimental" program, would actually extend to the year 2008 and cost $8 billion. This, the statement said, was because the bill authorized the housing administrator to enter into 40-year contracts with approved housing owners to pay supplements not exceeding $50 million prior to July 1, 1966, and an additional $50 million on July 1 in each of the next three years. Thus by fiscal 1969, the minority said, 40-year contracts totaling $200 million a year could be outstanding.

The statement also criticized the means test set up by the bill to determine eligibility for supplements. Noting the administrative difficulties of sending official inspectors to check on the means of applicants, the statement said private citizens in the neighborhoods of persons subject to tests would be cast in the role of "informers." In support of its contention, the Committee minority quoted Weaver as telling the Committee that "friends and neighbors" would be "the best investigators that you have in these projects."

Individual Views. Florence P. Dwyer (R N. J.) filed a statement asserting that HR 7984, "in so many ways a model of bipartisan cooperation," had been "seriously marred" by retention of the Administration's plan. "Although we succeeded in lowering the income limits so that truly low-income families might be eligible," she said, "the proposed program continues essentially to be a subsidy for middle-income families including those well above median income level."

W. E. Brock III (R Tenn.) and Albert W. Johnson (R Pa.) criticized the reduction to 3 percent of interest rates on the FHA below-market interest rate loan program and on loans for the elderly and college housing, but noted that their criticism had "nothing to do with the merit of the programs concerned."

Burt L. Talcott (R Calif.) said the rent supplements program would "more nearly and more quickly socialize housing than the King-Anderson bill would socialize medical care." The "primary motivation" for supplements, Talcott contended, had been removed by committee approval of a 4-year extension of the FHA below-market mortgage insurance program at a new, lower rate of 3 percent. This, he indicated, effectively covered the housing needs of moderate-income families. FHA insurance of land development in subdivisions, as provided by the bill, "played into the hands of the land speculator," he said.

Chester L. Mize (R Kan.) said two provisions of the bill, rent supplements and public housing, proposed benefits for only "1-1/2 percent of the country's families," while accounting for "50 to 60 percent of the bill's cost."

Rebuttal of GOP Claims. The Democratic majority on the House Banking and Currency Committee June 11 issued a point-by-point rebuttal to the minority's statement on rent supplements. The committee print, captioned "Correction of Misleading and False Statements..." said the figures supplied in the minority report concerning the income limits for large families under the rent supplement program were not prepared by the HHFA. It said, "In almost every city the present income limit would be $6,000 or less," and noted that large families (seven or more persons) were unusual.

FLOOR ACTION

The House June 30, by a 245-169 roll-call vote, passed HR 7984 with amendments and sent the measure to the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 974)

HR 7984 was passed only after supporters of the bill altered the Administration's rent supplements formula and after a Republican attempt to kill the entire supplements plan was defeated by six votes.

The compromise proposal on the rent section, which was sponsored by Robert G. Stephens Jr. (D Ga.), limited the payment of supplements to persons whose incomes were low enough to make them eligible for public housing. (Public housing eligibility standards varied throughout the nation.) The committee bill covered these persons as well as persons with a somewhat higher income. Stephens' amendment was adopted first by a 190-159 teller vote and later by a 240-179 roll-call vote. Under the provision, an eligible person would pay for rent an amount equal to 25 percent of his income and the government's supplement would cover the remainder.

Although Stephens' amendment carried by large margins, the Republicans tried again just before passage to kill the proposal and nearly succeeded. James Harvey (R Mich.) moved to recommit the bill to the Banking and Currency Committee with instructions to delete the rent supplement section and, in addition, a provision for home improvement grants to homeowners in urban renewal areas. The motion was rejected by a 202-208 roll-call vote.

Voting for passage of the bill were 26 Republicans and 219 Democrats. Opposed were 109 Republicans and 60 Democrats, 52 of them from Southern states. The eight Northern Democrats who voted against the measure were Morris and Walker (N.M.), Hull, Jones and Ichord (Mo.), Baring (Nev.), Pike (N.Y.) and Foley (Wash.).

Voting in favor of recommittal were 130 Republicans and 72 Democrats. Fifty-one of the Democrats favoring recommittal were from Southern states. Opposing the motion were 204 Democrats and four Republicans -- Halpern, Horton, Lindsay and Reid, all from New York.

Retaining the rent supplement provision in the bill -- even in the modified form finally approved -- was one of the most difficult struggles for House Democratic leaders in the 89th Congress. Prior to the voting, there were widespread reports that the supplement program as reported from committee without the public-housing limitation faced certain defeat from a concerted attack by Republicans and numerous Democrats. The likelihood of defeat was the reason that the bill's supporters agreed to modify the controversial rent supplement concept.

However, the narrow six-vote margin by which that provision was retained, and the several days of extremely vigorous and at times acrimonious debate over that and a few other sections, tended to conceal the considerable support the bill in general commanded in the House. An indication of this was seen in Republican voting on the recommittal and passage votes. Even though Republicans led the assault on the rent supplement plan and also voted heavily against passage, a number of GOP members chose to vote for the bill once the supplement issue was disposed of. Thus, in addition to Halpern, Horton, Lindsay and Reid -- who voted for passage but against recommittal -- the following Republicans voted for passage after also voting for recommittal: Ellsworth (Kan.), Mathias (Md.), Bates, Keith and Morse (Mass.), Cleveland (N.H.), Cahill, Dwyer and Widnall (N.J.), Wydler and Fino (N.Y.), Mosher (Ohio), Corbett, Fulton, McDade, Saylor, Schweiker and Watkins (Pa.), Quillen (Tenn.), Stafford (Vt.) and O'Konski (Wis.). One Republican, Kunkel (Pa.), who voted for passage did not vote on the recommittal motion.

DEBATE

A heated three-day debate on HR 7984 began June 28 when Republican opponents of the bill demanded a roll-call vote on the open rule under which the measure was brought to the floor. The rule was adopted by a 230-115 roll-call vote.

Rent Supplements Debate. Opponents of the supplements program criticized the "gigantic cost" of the rental payments and contended that the plan was designed to change social patterns of the nation. Paul Fino (R N.Y.) June 28 said the program sought to "impose federal controls over middle-income housing." Fino said the measure was without "safeguards to prevent the housing administrator from moving the poorest people into the best housing." Harvey June 28 said that no other piece of legislation to come before the 89th Congress was "so regressive in its social impact, for in no other legislation do we authorize the expenditure of so much to help those who truly need it so little." Jackson E. Betts (R Ohio) June 29 called the proposal "one of the most far-reaching and dangerous plans to come before the House in a generation." Betts added that the supplements were "foreign to American concepts" and went "to the root of private ownership -- killing the incentive of the American family to improve its living accommodations by its own efforts."

Proponents of the supplements argued that the program was an important "third alternative" to public housing and slums. Wright Patman (D Texas), chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, June 28 called the bill "landmark legislation" which was closely tied in with the effort to "root out poverty." William A. Barrett (D Pa.), chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, said June 28 that the rent supplements would "greatly increase the supply of standard housing at reasonable rentals by using the initiative and resources of private enterprise." Proponents of the rent supplement proposal said that Bureau of the Census figures showed that more than three-fourths of the nation's lowest income families currently paid 35 percent or more of their incomes for rent. They said that the incomes of public housing occupants average about $4,000.

One of the most vituperative exchanges between Democratic backers and GOP opponents of supplements came June 29 when Republicans attacked the Banking and Currency Committee print rebutting GOP criticisms of the supplements program in the minority report on HR 7984. Leading the assault on the print, which the Committee had never voted to have published, Harvey argued that the document was "unauthorized," "scurrilous," and did nothing to counter the GOP charges. (Housing Subcommittee Chairman Barrett earlier in debate said that he had taken full responsibility for the print.) Patman retorted that the rebuttal was needed to reply to Republicans who claimed that the Democrats "are absurd, that we are ridiculous and that we support and foster socialism."

Republican opponents of the supplements continued to assault the program even after the House accepted the Stephens amendment to make the income eligibility requirements conform with those for public housing. Fino criticized the introduction of the amendment "at the last minute without any consultation with the minority." Fino added that the amendment had been prompted by the "fear of defeat" which had "gripped the majority."

Other Amendments. After voting to alter the rental supplements program, the House adopted numerous other amendments. Most significant among them was a proposal by John C. Kunkel (R Pa.) to aid homeowners who were unemployed by the closing of federal installations. The amendment placed a moratorium on FHA-insured loan payments of such persons and authorized the Secretary of Defense to acquire properties for FHA disposal when such homeowners certified that they were unable to sell their properties on reasonable terms. Many of the other amendments adopted by the House were directed to urban development problems of cities in the districts of the Members who introduced them. Just prior to passage, the House also rejected several amendments.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7984 embodied essentially the same provisions as the original Administration bill. The only major differences were these: federal assistance to developers of "new towns" was deleted; rent supplements were modified to apply only to low-income families; and public housing authorities were authorized to lease existing housing and make it available to low-income families at normal public housing charges. (See committee action, p. 370, and amendments accepted, below.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 30 -- Robert G. Stephens Jr. (D Ga.) -- Limit rent supplement payments under the bill to persons who were eligible under existing income standards for public housing; reduce the appropriations authorized for supplements and provide recipients of supplements with the opportunity to obtain options to purchase their homes. Teller vote, 190-159, roll-call vote, 240-179.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) -- Bring savings and loan associations in the District of Columbia under regulations of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board with regard to establishment of a branch or the movement of an office. Voice vote.

William S. Moorhead (D Pa.) -- Authorize grant-in-aid credit for land acquisition, demolition and relocation expenses for a Wilkes-Barre, Pa. urban renewal project undertaken in conjunction with an expansion of campus facilities at Wilkes College. Voice.

Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) -- Broaden coverage of wage requirements in the bill for projects financed by FHA-insured mortgages to include laborers and mechanics employed by land developers who had received FHA assistance under HR 7984. Voice.

William A. Barrett (D Pa.) -- Broaden prevailing federal wage requirements on FHA-assisted projects to include laborers employed by non-profit corporations in the construction of housing financed by FHA-insured market interest rate loans. Voice.

John J. Flynt Jr. (D Ga.) -- Authorize the housing authority of the city of Macon, Ga., to transfer to the local urban renewal department a tract of land acquired for public housing. Voice.

Joseph M. McDade (R Pa.) -- Authorize assistance to cities which must extract underlying coal deposits from redevelopment areas in order to control underground mine fires. The amendment (designed to aid Carbondale, Pa.) directed renewal projects receiving royalties on the removal and sale of such coal deposits to credit the royalties as a local grant-in-aid made by the city. Voice.

Byron G. Rogers (D Colo.) -- Stipulate that expenses incurred by the city of Denver, Colo., for a proposed cultural and convention center to be built adjacent to an urban renewal project should be counted as a grant-in-aid toward the renewal project. Voice.

John C. Kunkel (R Pa.) -- Provide a moratorium on payments of principal and, in some cases, interest on FHA-insured loans when homeowners were unemployed as the result of the closing of a federal installation; authorize the Secretary of Defense to acquire properties for FHA disposal when persons unemployed because of the closing of federal installations certified that they were unable to sell their homes on reasonable terms. Voice.

G. Elliott Hagan (D Ga.) -- Authorize the housing authority of the city of Savannah, Ga. to donate a parcel of land from an urban renewal project for its private non-profit development as a monument to the service of a Polish count, Count Pulaski, in the American Revolution. Voice.

Harlan Hagen (D Calif.) -- Define the "rural areas" eligible for assistance under the Farmer's Home Administration non-farm rural loan program as any non-urban area having a population of 5,500 or less. Voice.

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- Require public bodies and agencies seeking grants for basic water and sewer facilities provided by the bill to first obtain certification by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare that any waste material carried by such facilities would be "adequately treated" (in accordance with applicable federal, state and local standards) before it was discharged into any public waterway. Voice.

Bert Bandstra (D Iowa) -- Designate local expenditures by the city of Ottumwa, Iowa, in connection with flood control work as a local grant-in-aid to the Marina Gateway urban renewal project. Voice.

Robert B. Duncan (D Ore.) -- Authorize FHA mortgate insurance for refinancing existing housing for the elderly or handicapped when the Federal Housing Commissioner determined that such refinancing was necessary or desirable. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 30 -- Leonard Farbstein (D N.Y.) -- Stipulate that rent supplements could be paid with respect to accommodations for the elderly financed through the use of federal funds. Voice vote.

Farbstein -- Restrict loans and capital grants for rental or cooperative housing in urban renewal projects to occupancy by low- and moderate-income families, as determined by local housing authorities. (The amendment exempted loan and grant applications filed before the bill's enactment). Voice.

Thomas L. Ashley (D Ohio) -- Delete language in the bill establishing an interest rate ceiling on college housing loans at the lower of 3 percent or the existing statutory interest rate formula (which currently provided an actual rate of about 3-3/4 percent). Voice.

Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.) -- Delete language in the bill authorizing the Federal Housing Commissioner to borrow from the Treasury in order to honor FHA insurance obligations in cash. Standing vote, 37-92.

John P. Saylor (R Pa.) -- Add language to the bill to make clear that state-regulated, investor-owned enterprises, as well as public utilities, could be contracted with to provide water and sewer services to land developed under the FHA-insured loan program established by the bill. Voice.

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Prohibit public acquisition of privately owned buildings or structures within an urban renewal area if the owner agreed to make timely improvements or modifications to comply with the approved project plan; authorize reimbursement of full moving costs, and in some cases, additional payments for business loss, to business concerns or non-profit organizations displaced by urban renewal; require local urban renewal agencies to certify to the Federal Housing Administrator that standards used in choosing an urban renewal area were in accordance with local codes and regulations. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 29 - April 9 on the Administration's omnibus housing bill (S 1354), and 15 other bills relating to housing and urban development (S 2213, a clean bill reported to the Senate, was introduced later).

TESTIMONY -- March 30 -- Thomas C. Mann, Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, testified in support of a section of S 1354 to repeal a "buy American" provision of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964. (Section 9 (c) of the 1964 Act required that contractors "shall use only such manufactured articles as have been manufactured in the United States" in performing work for which loans or grants were made under the Act.) Mann said Section 9 (c) conflicted with the Administration's policy of reducing trade barriers.

Sen Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah), a member of the Subcommittee, contended that developers might be able to make disproportionately large profits out of new towns which could be developed as a result of federal assistance authorized by the bill. FHA Commissioner Philip N. Brownstein asserted that detailed cost certification would be required for each development project, ensuring that developers could not make windfall profits.

April 2 -- Boris Shiskin, secretary of the AFL-CIO housing committee, said that the rent supplements program, while an aid to persons caught in the income gap between public housing and decent private accommodations, was not a "complete solution" to the problem of housing the disadvantaged. In addition to supplements, Shiskin called for an expansion of the FHA-insured below-market interest rate loan program (under which housing builders may secure FHA-insured loans from commercial banks and other sources with interest charges lower than rates generally in effect in the housing market) for construction of projects that would house families whose incomes were too high for public housing but too low to provide adequate private housing. Among Shiskin's proposals were: (1) establishment of a maximum interest rate of 3 percent for loans granted under the program (the existing level was about 3-7/8 percent); (2) authority to permit local housing officials to act as sponsors of housing constructed under the program; (3) an extension of eligibility for such housing to persons of all ages (existing law limited eligibility to the elderly and handicapped).

Perry E. Willits, president of the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB), said the rent supplements program would enable private homebuilders to marshal resources "for the first time...on a broad front to build for families of lower income." Willits urged that the supplements be applied to rehabilitated housing as well as new apartments.

The NAHB spokesman said, however, that his organization was "flatly and unalterably opposed" to the "new towns" proposal. This, he said, would "inject Government deeply, irrevocably and inevitably on an expanding scale, into the business of land development", in which he said private industry was functioning effectively.

MAYORS' TESTIMONY

April 5 -- Richard J. Daley, Mayor of Chicago, testifying on behalf of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, contended that some of the bill's provisions "seek highly desirable objectives but are either unnecessary, premature, or...should be conducted on an experimental basis." Rather than provide "a host of new and untried programs," Daley called for "greater assistance in three areas -- more funding for urban renewal, a flexible and wider-spread rehabilitation program, and a balanced program of metropolitan development."

The Chicago mayor proposed that: (1) the bill's provision calling for annual construction of 60,000 new low-rent public housing units be expanded to provide for an annual increase of 125,000 units; (2) the capital grant provided for this purpose be doubled to provide $1.5 billion; (3) the federal share of costs of urban renewal projects be increased from two-thirds to three-fourths; (4) the $2,000 annual income ceiling on families eligible for rehabilitation grants be raised to $3,000.

April 6 -- Baltimore Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin, speaking on behalf of the Conference of Mayors, expressed "enthusiasm" for the Administration housing and urban renewal program but called for enlarged federal grants for urban renewal. Because of inadequate federal financing, McKeldin said, "some cities have not been able to push ahead at a rate consistent with their pressing needs for renewal and their capabilities for doing so." McKeldin suggested that the additional $2.9 billion capital grants authorization for urban renewal over the next four years be expanded to $6 billion.

NAREB, CNTP TESTIMONY

April 7 -- Ed Mendenhall, a spokesman for the National Association of Real Estate Boards, criticized the rent supplements program by contending that its adoption would eventually mean that supplements would have to be extended to "treat equitably all families whose housing costs exceed 20 percent of family income." That, Mendenhall said, "includes at least 40 percent of all families."

Robert E. Scott, a director of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, contended that S 1354 was "silent on the need for reform in the urban renewal program notwithstanding the controversies which have been generated by its critics." "...Where an urban renewal project involves predominantly non-residential or non-public re-use," Scott asserted, "the financial assistance should be on a loan rather than a grant basis. This would redirect the urban renewal program to its basic objective of upgrading the housing standards of the American people." Non-residential or downtown renewal, Scott added, "should be financed ultimately through local revenues which would be available because of increased income from redeveloped areas."

COUNTIES, CITIES, FARMERS

April 8 -- Eugene H. Nickerson said in behalf of the National Assn. of Counties that the bill's unrestricted authorization of urban planning grants provided "the means by which counties can build strong planning departments, which are inevitable requirements for multi-county regional cooperation."

Nickerson also endorsed the measure's provision for additional federal assistance to local governments for water and sewer system construction.

April 9 -- James W. Kelley Jr., Mayor of East Orange, N. J., representing the National League of Cities, said that the increased obligational authority of $2.9 billion for urban renewal grants over the next four years should be raised to $6 billion.

Blue Carstenson, a director of the National Farmers Union, recommended that "a minimum of at least one billion dollars be made available for the next four years as a sort of revolving fund out of which Farmers Home Administration can make direct housing loans when necessary." Repayments, Carstenson said, would make additional appropriations unnecessary by the end of four years.

COMMITTEE ACTION

Subcommittee Action. The Housing Subcommittee June 4 approved by voice vote a draft bill similar in most respects to S 1354. The principal change was the deletion of the Administration's proposal to assist developers of "new towns." In specific actions on the new towns package, the Subcommittee took these actions:

- Dropped the proposal for federal loans to states for land development and subsequent sale of the developed land to private builders.
- Limited FHA land development mortgage insurance to developers of neighborhoods and subdivisions.
- Reduced the ceiling on the amount of mortgages that could be insured in any one project from $25 million to $10 million.
- Eliminated the proposal for $500 million in authority for the Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA) to purchase land development mortgages secured by new towns and communities.

Committee Action, Bill Introduced. The full Banking and Currency Committee June 24 approved the subcommittee bill by a 10-4 vote after making several changes in the measure (see below).

Voting for approval were 9 of the 10 committee Democrats and one Republican, John G. Tower (Texas). Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) joined the other three committee Republicans -- Wallace F. Bennett (Utah), Strom Thurmond (S. C.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa) -- in opposing the bill. The committee bill (S 2213) was introduced June 28 by Housing Subcommittee Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.).

In addition to approving the subcommittee changes on new towns, the full Committee made the following changes in the Administration's housing proposals:

Rent Supplements. The rent supplements program was altered by restricting payments to projects in behalf of persons whose income was low enough to qualify for public housing, as in the House bill. The revised provision retained the categories of eligible persons set by the Administration (physically handicapped, occupying substandard housing, etc.), but added lower-income persons whose homes were destroyed or extensively damaged by a natural disaster. The supplements were to cover the difference between a person's rent and 25 percent of his income. The Committee set aside 10 percent of the appropriations for rent supplements for an experimental program involving rental supplements covering housing built with the aid of the federal below-market interest rate housing loan program and the federal housing-for-the-elderly programs.

Other. The Committee provided the following major additions to the Administration's proposals:

- A 3-percent interest ceiling on direct housing loans for the elderly and handicapped and on FHA-insured below-market interest rate mortgage loans for low- and moderate-income families and displaced families. This provided, in effect, a 1-percent cut in interest charges.
- A moratorium on payments of principal and, in some cases, interest, on FHA-insured loans when homeowners were unemployed as the result of the closing of a federal installation.

● Authority for the Secretary of Defense to acquire properties for FHA disposal when persons unemployed because of the closing of federal installations certified that they were unable to sell their homes on reasonable terms.

Committee Report

The Committee June 28 reported the clean bill (S 2213 -- S Rept 378).

Majority Views. The report said the provisions of S 2213, taken together, signified an "all encompassing effort" to improve the nation's housing conditions and promote urban development.

Noting a "pressing need" for new programs in addition to the "basic tool" of low-rent public housing, the report said the rent supplements program established by the bill constituted a "dynamic and much-needed means of meeting the housing needs of lower-income families."

Eligibility requirements for supplements, the report said, provided "safeguards" which assured that the program would "help only those families truly in need of assistance." Periodic recertifications of income, the report added, assured that "such assistance would be given only so long as the need continued to exist..." In every case, the report asserted, housing provided under the program would be "low in cost" and "modest in design."

The report said the Committee had approved the full increase of $2.9 billion in urban renewal capital grants requested by the Administration because of a "widespread acceptance that the program is an effective tool for the rebuilding and preservation of cities..." The report traced the expansion of federal urban renewal programs from a level of 253 projects in 86 communities during fiscal 1953 to a high of 1,783 projects in 806 localities during fiscal 1965.

The report said that the "new towns" mortgage insurance provision had been rejected "after very careful consideration and deliberation." The remaining authority for land development mortgage insurance for subdivisions would, the report said, "encourage the provision of a large supply of properly planned and improved residential building sites" and "open up cheaper suburban land for planned economic and marketable development... to combat the rapid rise of prices for homebuilding sites."

The report also said that an administrative interpretation of the college housing loan program had made it necessary to add language to the bill "to make it clear" that new colleges were eligible for loans if they provided assurance that they would offer a baccalaureate degree within a reasonable time after completion of projected housing or facilities. Existing law, the report said, had been intended to cover new institutions, but the HHFA had not financed any new colleges in the 15 years that it had held authority to do so.

Minority Views. The report contained a statement of minority views, signed by the four Republican members of the Committee -- Wallace F. Bennett (Utah), John G. Tower (Texas), Strom Thurmond (S. C.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa).

The minority said that the bill embodied "new and enlarged urban programs bulging with money and power, designed to step up the pace of creeping federalism." The statement contended that "in every instance of federal financial participation" in urban activities, the bill gave the federal housing administrator the power to "call the signals ...usurping the previously inherent right, duty and responsibility of the locally elected officials."

The rent supplements program provided by the bill was criticized as a "radical change" from historic public housing which "should move more slowly and be more carefully tested than is possible under this bill...." The minority said they hoped that if the program was approved by the Senate, safeguards would be written in to halt the use of authority to enter into 40-year contracts under the program "in the event there are indications that the program will not produce the intended results."

The minority criticized the urban renewal program for enabling cities to enjoy large tax profits on redeveloped land at federal expense. The statement also asserted that the urban renewal program had failed to provide effective relocation of persons displaced from their homes by renewal projects.

Individual Views. Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) filed a statement opposing the bill's provisions for rent supplements, additional public housing and a 3-percent interest ceiling on direct loans for elderly housing and on FHA-insured below-market interest rate loans. The supplements, Robertson said, would "breed and foster reliance on the Government and discourage private initiative."

Tower, who signed the minority views, filed a statement in which he said that he had voted for approval of the bill "primarily because of several meritorious programs" (such as housing for the elderly and handicapped, urban renewal, public housing and FHA mortgage loan insurance operations) and to give the Senate an opportunity to consider the measure.

Thurmond submitted a statement in which he criticized the bill's provision to require the housing administrator to adopt uniform procedures for acceptance of materials and products found to be "technically suitable" for use in structures approved for FHA-insured mortgages and loans. Thurmond said the provision might "open the door to the FHA accepting substandard items that might be classified as "technically suitable."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate July 15, by a 54-30 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 7984. (For voting, see chart p. 1059)

Prior to passage, the Senate by voice vote substituted the provisions of its own bill, S 2213, for those of HR 7984 as passed by the House. Senate action sent the measure to conference.

As in the House, the central issue in Senate debate on the bill was the rent supplements. An amendment by John G. Tower (R Texas) to delete the program was rejected July 15 by a 40-47 roll-call vote.

The Senate the day before had cleared the way for the vote on rent supplements by rejecting by voice vote an amendment by Jack Miller (R Iowa) to stipulate that income from all sources should be considered in the income eligibility requirements for participation in the program. The supplements plan limited coverage to persons eligible for public housing, as did the House bill.

Following rejection of the Tower amendment, the Senate defeated an attempt to restrict the supplements program by sharply limiting the funds authorized to carry it out. As reported, S 2213 provided that payments could not exceed $50 million a year prior to July 1, 1966 (fiscal 1966), with the ceiling increased by $50 million in each of fiscal 1967, 1968 and 1969. An amendment by Tower would have cut these figures to $10 million in 1966 with a $10 million increase in each of the following three years. It was rejected by a 38-49 roll-call vote. Following that action, Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) proposed an amendment which limited that rent supplements authorization to $30 million in fiscal 1966, with increases of $35 million in fiscal 1967, $40 million in fiscal 1968, and $45 million in fiscal 1969. The amendment was accepted by a 79-6 roll-call. The amounts in Muskie's amendment were the same as those contained in the House bill.

The Senate July 15 also adopted by voice vote a modified amendment by Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) to broaden prevailing federal wage requirements on certain projects assisted by the Federal Housing Administration to cover new programs authorized by S 2213. Kuchel said its intent was the same as a similar provision in the House bill. An attempt the previous day by Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) to confine the scope of the Kuchel amendment to residential dwellings for the use of 12 or more families was rejected by a 35-51 roll-call vote. On July 15, Kuchel revised his own amendment to make it apply only to dwellings for 12 or more families.

Thirty-three amendments to the bill were accepted during the two days of debate.

DEBATE -- Positions voiced by Senators on the rent supplements closely followed party lines. Republican opponents charged that the plan was a step toward socialism. Democratic proponents replied that the supplements were less socialistic than public housing, which enjoyed substantial Republican support. The supplements, proponents said, would cost less than public housing and would enable the Government to collect taxes on homes occupied under the program. They argued that public housing provided no tax revenues.

Tower July 15 said the supplements program was a "powerful incentive for a person to discontinue being a homeowner and become a renter on a public dole." One of the major objectives of the program, Tower contended, was "to create socio-economic integration" which he said would "get low-income, middle-income and high-income groups all living together." Tower denied that his statement had racial implications.

Walter F. Mondale (D Minn.) July 14 called the supplements program a "bold new experiment in providing new housing for poor families." Mondale said that the program was necessary because "obstructionists" who interfered with site development had prevented local housing authorities from building the number of units authorized by previous legislation. Mondale added that "many of these same people are opposing rent supplements."

Opposition to the Kuchel amendment, which broadened prevailing federal wage standards on FHA-assisted projects, centered on a contention that project developers might refuse FHA assistance so as to avoid paying the higher wages. Bennett July 14 said acceptance of the Kuchel proposal might "reduce the use of FHA guarantees to zero." Kuchel replied that the prevailing wage statutes, whose coverage was extended under his amendment, would only "require the payment of wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality." "That," Kuchel said, "...is sound public policy."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7984 embodied the same major provisions as the version approved by the House. For specific differences, see conference action, (p. 379).

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

July 14 -- William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Broaden the definition of "displaced persons" eligible for public housing to include those persons whose homes had been extensively damaged or destroyed as a result of a natural disaster. Voice vote.

John G. Tower (R Texas) -- Require the Federal Housing Administrator to report to Congress on or before Jan. 1, 1968, on operations under the bill's provision for Federal Housing Administration (FHA) mortgage insurance for loans to private subdivision developers. Voice.

Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Stipulate that expenses incurred by the city of Denver, Colo., for a proposed cultural and convention center to be built adjacent to an urban renewal project would be counted as a local contribution toward the renewal project. Voice.

Tower -- Require the Housing Administrator to report to Congress on or before Jan. 1, 1968, on operations under the bill's programs of federal grants for basic water and sewer facilities, neighborhood facilities and advance acquisition of land. Voice.

Claiborne Pell (D R.I.) -- John O. Pastore (D R.I.)-- Provide that advance federal payments under specified laws for planning of public works projects would not have to be repaid if construction of a project was undertaken with money from the Public Works Acceleration Act of 1962. Voice.

Pell-Pastore -- Make depressed areas with populations greater than 150,000 eligible for capital grants of three-fourths the cost of urban renewal projects. (Existing law provided for grants of two-thirds the cost of projects.) Voice.

Fred R. Harris (D Okla.) - A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) -- Authorize the Housing Administrator to exempt certain Indian housing authorities from the preparation of workable programs for community development which are required in conjunction with requests for federal aid for urban renewal projects. Voice.

Alan Bible (D Nev.)-Howard W. Cannon (D Nev.) -- Make funds expended by the city of Reno, Nev., for certain school construction eligible for credit as a local grant-in-aid to an urban renewal project disrupted by the rerouting or federally aided highway. Voice.

Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) -- Exempt FHA below-market interest rate mortgages covering low- or moderate-income housing from the statutory $17,500 limit on the amount of a mortgage that could be purchased by the Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) under its special assistance function. Voice.

Kennedy -- Authorize the Federal Housing Commissioner to raise the current ceiling of $10,000 on FHA-insurable home improvement loans and rehabilitation loans by up to 45 percent in high cost areas. Voice.

Kennedy -- Include in a locality's share of the project cost for an urban renewal or public housing development, any payments required by state or local law for relocation of families displaced by the project. Voice.

Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Stipulate that rent supplements could not be paid with respect to housing whose operation costs were greater than those of similar housing in the community. Voice.

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Add language to ensure that certain student cooperative associations were able to obtain college housing loans. Voice.

Kuchel -- Permit urban renewal assistance under certain circumstances even though cities had previously received federal loans, grants or assistance for renewal of the same area. (The wording of the amendment limited its effect to the city of San Francisco, which had been unable to receive renewal assistance for a blighted, wartime housing area because the city's purchase of the area from the Federal Government at cost had been considered a grant). Voice.

Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- Make certain expenditures for the purchase of land and buildings by a hospital foundation in Michigan City, Ind., eligible for consideration as a local grant-in-aid to a community facilities project. Voice.

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Authorize cities which must extract underground coal deposits from redevelopment areas in order to control underground mine fires to use the value of the coal in connection with the project. The amendment (designed to aid Carbondale, Pa.) specified that renewal projects receiving royalties on the removal and sale of such coal deposits could credit the royalties as a local grant-in-aid made by the city. Voice.

J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- Add language resolving a legal technicality delaying the Hobo Jungle Urban Renewal project in Texarkana, Ark. Voice.

Tower -- Direct the Housing Administrator to undertake a study of the existing low-rent public housing program with a view to strengthening the program or establishing an alternative approach stressing an increased role for private enterprise; authorize necessary funds and direct the Housing Administrator to report his findings and recommendations to the President for submission to Congress within two years of the appropriation. Voice.

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) -- Authorize federal savings and loan associations to make up to 1 percent of their assets available for overseas housing loans guaranteed under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961. (Existing law limited participation essentially to national and state banks.) Voice.

Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) -- Daniel B. Brewster (D Md.) -- Permit cities which elect to receive three-fourths of the direct urban renewal project expenses (rather than two-thirds of the total cost of a project) to include in their reimbursable expenses the costs of certain planning staff services. (The amendment was intended to assist the city of Baltimore, one of the few cities which used the three-fourths formula.) Voice.

Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Provide financial assistance to assure preservation of historical structures through relocation of the structure in an urban renewal area. Voice.

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.)-Tower -- Correct a technical error in existing law by stipulating that federal credit unions could participate in the home improvement loan program established by the National Housing Act. Voice.

July 15 -- Harris -- Extend the college housing loan program to cover residential vocational schools which were publicly supported and administered by a fully accredited, degree-granting, four-year college or university. Voice.

Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) -- Reduce the authorization for rent supplements from $50 million in fiscal 1966 and an additional $50 million in each of the next three fiscal years to $30 million in fiscal 1966, and additional amounts as follows: $35 million in fiscal 1967, $40 million in fiscal 1968, and $45 million in fiscal 1969. Roll-call, 79-6.

Hugh Scott (R Pa.) -- Count certain school expenditures made by the city of Chester, Pa., as local grants-in-aid for federally assisted urban renewal projects. Voice.

Kuchel -- Broaden prevailing federal wage requirements on FHA-assisted projects to cover programs established by S 2213. Voice.

Tower -- Require the Housing Administrator to report to Congress on or before Jan. 1 of each year on operations under the bill's rent supplements program. (The amendment deleted a provision requiring the Housing Administrator to submit only one report -- by Jan. 1, 1968.) Voice.

Tower -- as modified by Sparkman -- Establish a special FHA home mortgage insurance program for veterans who had not already received a GI loan; stipulate that the single-family residence loans were to cover 100 percent (no down payment) of the first $15,000 and 90 percent of any additional amount up to existing FHA maximum of $30,000; limit eligibility to veterans who had served for 90 days or more after Sept. 16, 1940. (The original Tower amendment provided for FHA coverage of 100 percent of the first $20,000 and 85 percent of any additional amount. Also, under the original amendment, pre-World War II veterans were eligible for the loan program). Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Amend the Housing Act of 1964 to increase from a flat $50 million to $100 million per fiscal year the authorization for housing rehabilitation grants in urban renewal areas. Voice.

Javits -- Direct the Housing Administrator to study and report to Congress within one year of the bill's enactment on: (1) methods of reducing loss to homeowners whose property depreciates because of proximity to airports and (2) methods of housing construction which would diminish the effect of aircraft noise within such homes. Voice.

Muskie -- Reduce the downpayment that a person must make on a home valued between $20,000 and $30,000 (where the purchase was financed under a regular FHA insured mortgage) from 25 to 15 percent of the excess of the property's value over $20,000. Voice.

Miller-Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Preclude federal urban renewal assistance for acquisition, disposition or demolition of buildings other than ones of substandard quality. The amendment defined "substandard" as any building which can not be improved or modified for integration into the local renewal plan or whose owner is not financially able to make timely improvements or modifications. Voice.

John J. Williams (R Del.) -- Direct the Housing Commissioner to study possible means of improving the FHA program for the insurance of mortgages on multi-family housing and report his findings and recommendations to Congress on or before Jan. 1, 1966. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

July 14 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Stipulate that income from all sources should be included in the income eligibility requirements for participation in the rent supplements program established by the bill. Voice vote.

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) -- Modify an amendment by Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- see above -- broadening the prevailing federal wage requirements on projects assisted by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) to cover programs established by the bill. The modification confined the scope of the Kuchel amendment to residential dwellings for the use of 12 or more families. Roll-call vote, 35-51.

July 15 -- John G. Tower (R Texas) -- Delete language in the bill providing a program of rent supplements to low-income families. Roll-call 40-47.

Tower -- Reduce the authorization for rent supplements from $50 million in fiscal 1966, and an additional $50 million in each of the next three fiscal years to $10 million in fiscal 1966 and an additional $10 million in each of the following three years. Roll-call, 38-49.

Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- Limit federal urban renewal assistance for construction of parking lots in certain cities to the amount that cannot be recovered through parking fees. Voice.

Conference

The Senate July 26 by voice vote and the House July 27 by a 251-168 roll call approved the conference report (H Rept 679) on HR 7984 and cleared the measure for the President's signature. (For voting, see chart p. 982).

Cost of the bill, to be allocated over a four-year period, was estimated at $7.8 billion by housing officials. The officials said that approximately 60 percent of the funds authorized for the measure represented outright grants, while the remaining 40 percent was earmarked for interest-bearing loans.

Prior to Senate approval of the conference report, John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), floor manager of the bill, called HR 7984 "one of the most comprehensive housing bills ever written by the Congress." In the House, William A. Barrett (D Pa.), chief sponsor of the bill, said the measure "should help us reach the goal of decent housing for every American family." In both House and Senate, the only significant opposition to the conference report was directed to the rent supplements plan.

The Senate version of HR 7984 carried an authorization of $7.5 billion for housing programs, while the House bill authorized $6 billion. The wide difference in authorization between the two bills was attributable to two factors:

A number of new programs and a broadening of existing ones provided under the Senate bill but not under the House measure;

Certain dollar ceilings that were placed on authorizations for programs by the Senate bill but were left open-ended by the House measure and were consequently not counted in the cost estimate of the House version.

The conference committee agreed to virtually all the new programs established by the Senate, with only a few minor modifications, and to several other new programs authorized only under the House measure. These actions increased the cost of the final bill to approximately $300 million more than under the Senate version.

The conference report was filed July 23. On major differences between the House and Senate versions of HR 7984, conferees took the following actions:

RENT SUPPLEMENTS

Experimental Program. Accepted the Senate's experimental program to provide up to 10 percent of total rent supplement funds for payments for eligible tenants in housing projects financed (1) by Federal Housing Administration (FHA) insured, below-market interest rate mortgage loans for low- and moderate-income families and displaced families, (2) by FHA-insured mortgage loans for housing for the elderly and (3) by FHA direct loans for housing for the elderly. Confined the scope of the program to existing housing units and earmarked one-half of the funds provided by the 10-percent wording for housing built with below-market interest rate loans and one-half for the other two types of housing. The conference report said the earmarking was done to ensure equitable allocation of funds between projects.

Operating Costs Limit. Agreed to a Senate provision, not in the House bill, which barred the payment of rent supplements for housing which had operating costs greater than those of similar housing in the community.

Extension of Eligibility. Accepted Senate language, not contained in the House bill, broadening the definition of "displaced persons" eligible for rent supplements to include persons whose homes had been extensively damaged or destroyed in a disaster area after April 1, 1965.

FHA PROGRAMS

Mortgage Insurance on Land Development Loans. Agreed to the Senate's $10 million ceiling on the aggregate amount of outstanding mortgages for a single land undertaking assisted by FHA under the provision. The House measure authorized a ceiling of $12.5 billion.

Water and Sewer Facilities. Agreed to Senate language permitting either a public sewer system or an adequately regulated private one on land developed under FHA assistance. The House bill required a public water and sewer system, but allowed for a private system under highly restricted conditions.

Home Improvement Loans in High-Cost Areas. Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, authorizing the Federal Housing Commissioner to raise the current ceiling of $10,000 on FHA-insured home improvement loans by up to 45 percent in high-cost areas.

Optional Cash Payment of FHA Benefits. Agreed to a House provision authorizing the Housing Commissioner in his discretion to pay benefits derived under FHA insurance programs either in cash or in debentures (a negotiable interest-bearing note) and to borrow from the Treasury for the cash payments as he deemed necessary. The Senate bill authorized cash payments of benefits but did not provide for Treasury borrowing.

Veterans Loans. Agreed to a Senate provision stipulating the following down payments on a special FHA mortgage insurance program established under both bills for veterans who had served for 90 days or more: no down payment on the first $15,000; 10 percent between $15,000 and $20,000; and 15 percent between $20,000 and the ceiling of $30,000. Deleted Senate language, however, limiting participation to veterans whose tours of duty had ended on or after Sept. 16, 1940.

Refinancing of Housing for the Elderly. Rejected a House provision authorizing FHA mortgage insurance for refinancing existing housing for the elderly or handicapped. The Senate bill did not contain the provision.

Downpayment Requirement. Modified Senate language that reduced the downpayment that a person must make on a home valued between $20,000 and $30,000 where the purchase was financed under a regular FHA-insured mortgage. The conferees cut the downpayment on the value of the home above $20,000 from 25 percent to 20 percent. The Senate had cut the downpayment to 15 percent. The House bill did not contain the provision.

Mortgage Moratorium. Accepted Senate language limiting to one year a moratorium period on payments under FHA or Veterans Administration mortgages in the case of a mortgagor who is unemployed by the closing of a federal installation. The House bill provided a moratorium period of up to three years.

URBAN RENEWAL

Community Development Plans. Agreed to a Senate provision permitting inclusion of non-renewal areas in community development plans when such areas had "specially related problems" and stipulating that all projects in the area should be initiated within an eight-year period of the plan's formulation. The House provision permitted the plans to cover any adjoining area and stipulated that all projects in the plan area should be completed in 10 years.

Demolition Costs. Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, to authorize grants to local authorities of up to two-thirds the cost of demolition of unsafe structures in urban renewal areas or other areas which had workable programs and met specified conditions.

Code Enforcement. Adopted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, authorizing grants for housing code enforcement by local governments for use in deteriorating or deteriorated neighborhoods (existing law provided grants for this purpose in urban renewal project areas).

Rehabilitation Loans. Accepted Senate language doubling the $50,000,000-per-year ceiling on rehabilitation loans and terminating the program on Oct. 1, 1969. The House bill provided the same termination date, but removed the ceiling on the loans.

Parking Facilities. Rejected a House provision, not in the Senate bill, which limited federal urban renewal assistance for construction of parking lots in certain cities to the amount that could not be recovered through parking fees.

Local Grants-in-Aid. Agreed to Senate provisions, not in the House bill, relating to specific urban renewal projects in numerous cities throughout the country.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Sale of Projects. Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, permitting the Public Housing Administration (PHA) to sell a federally owned public housing project to a non-profit local group (as well as a local public housing agency) and requiring that the sale be for continued use as low-rent housing.

Rental Gap. Adopted Senate language exempting displaced families from the requirement of a 20-percent gap between the upper rental units for public housing and lowest private rents. A similar House provision eliminated the 20-percent gap altogether.

Purchase by Tenants. Accepted Senate language, not in the House bill, permitting tenants to purchase certain public housing units under specified terms and conditions. The original provision applied to detached, semi-detached or row-housing units, but was confined to the first two types under the conference substitute.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Compensation of Condemnees. Agreed, with minor modifications, to House provisions, not in the Senate bill, establishing uniform procedures to be followed in connection with acquisition of land by eminent domain under certain federally sponsored development programs.

College Housing. Accepted Senate provisions, not in the House bill (1) to make clear that new colleges were eligible for loans when they provided the assurance that they would offer the baccalaureate degree within a reasonable period of time and (2) to extend eligibility to technical and vocational institutions which were operated by fully accredited, degree granting, four-year colleges or institutions and provided housing for all or part of their students.

Agreed to a House provision, not in the Senate bill, establishing an interest rate ceiling on college housing loans at the lower of either 3 percent or the existing statutory interest rate formula (which at the time of conference provided an actual rate of about 3 3/4 percent).

Rehabilitation Grants on Deteriorated Housing. Agreed to a Senate provision establishing an income ceiling of $3,000 for eligibility for a program authorizing grants of up to $1,500 for costs of repairs and improvement of homes in urban renewal areas. Smaller grants were permitted for persons with incomes above $3,000. The House bill authorized grants up to $1,500 for homeowners with incomes of $2,000 or less and provided for smaller grants to homeowners whose incomes exceeded $2,000.

Use of Vacant Housing. Adopted a House provision to lease up to 10 percent of vacant units in an existing private structure for one-to three-year occupancy by low-income families at normal public housing charges. Made the program contingent, however, upon the approval of local governing bodies.

Community Facilities. Agreed to Senate provisions, not in the House bill (1) authorizing grants of up to 90 percent of the cost for sewer facilities in small communities where no such facility existed and where unemployment was high; (2) specifying that grants for sewers could not include treatment facilities which were eligible for assistance under the Federal Water Pollution Control Act; (3) and authorizing grants to local public bodies and agencies to assist in the acquisition of land for future construction of public works and facilities.

Also agreed to a Senate provision fixing dollar amounts on authorizations for water and sewer grant programs provided by the Senate bill (including the sewer provision above and other provisions which were the same in Senate and House bills). Modified the provision, however, to increase the fiscal 1966 authorization from $100 million to $200 million -- the same ceiling as provided over each of the three fiscal years 1967-69. The House bill did not fix a dollar amount on the water and sewer grant programs.

Open-Space Land and Urban Beautification. Agreed to Senate provisions which authorized grants providing higher percentages of the costs of open-space projects and urban beautification programs than authorized under the House bill.

In other conference action, the managers of the bill:

Adopted numerous Senate amendments, some with minor modifications, establishing new housing and urban development programs, broadening the scope of existing ones and placing a dollar ceiling on programs that had been given open-ended authorizations under the House bill.

Rejected certain House provisions, primarily relating to rural housing.

PRESIDENT SIGNS BILL

In signing the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (PL 89-117), President Johnson Aug. 10 called the bill a housing "breakthrough" paralleled in recent years only by the Housing Act of 1949. "And in years to come," the President added, "I believe this Act will become known as the most valuable housing legislation in our history.... There is embodied in this legislation that generosity of vision, that breadth of approach, that magnitude of effort, with which we must meet all of our challenges here in America."

APPROPRIATIONS

Housing and Home Finance Agency funds approved during the first session of the 89th Congress were appropriated in three bills.

- The second supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1965 (HR 7091 - PL 89-16) provided $48.5 million to finance various programs. The appropriation included $30 million for urban renewal, $10,180,000 for rehabilitation loans for homeowners in urban renewal areas and $8,320,000 for public housing. Administration-requested funds for a new training program in community development and for urban planning fellowships were not appropriated. (See p. 227)
- The independent offices appropriations bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 7997 - PL 89-128) provided $1,038,861,200 in funds for the HHFA. Major appropriations provided by the bill were $438,675,000 for urban renewal, $260 million for urban mass transportation grants, and $220 million for public housing. Denied again were Administration-requested funds for the training program in community development and for urban planning fellowships. (See p. 154)
- The general supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 11588 - PL 89-309) provided the first major funding of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965 (PL 89-117). Major outlays provided by the bill included $1.4 billion for urban renewal, $100 million for grants for construction or improvement of basic water and sewer facilities, $50 million for direct housing loans for the elderly and handicapped, $26,975,000 for open-space land grants, $12 million for grants to assist local public bodies and agencies in financing neighborhood facilities and $8,162,000 for urban planning grants. Administration-requested contract authority and operating funds for the rent supplements program were not provided. (See box and story p. 182)

Rent Supplement Funds Denied

Under a renewed assault on rent supplements by Republicans and dissident Democrats, operating funds to get the program underway during fiscal 1966 were denied during consideration of a supplemental appropriations bill (HR 11588 -- PL 89-309) approved on the eve of adjournment. (See p. 182)

Objections to funding the program were based on a contention that draft regulations prepared by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) overstepped the bounds of the original provision by increasing income limits for eligibility.

The appropriation for the program first came under fire in the House Oct. 14, when James Harvey (R Mich.) contended that the regulations would permit families with assets of as much as $25,000 to be eligible for subsidized housing. Supporters of the program vigorously disputed Harvey's calculations, but were unprepared for a statistical rebuttal. The House subsequently, by a 185-162 roll-call vote, approved a Harvey amendment to delete the $6 million in contractual authority for supplements and $180,000 in supplement payments approved by the Appropriations Committee. (The authorization level for fiscal 1966 was $30 million in contractual authority and $900,000 in payments.)

Following the House defeat on supplements, Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver said the maximum amount of permissible assets that could be calculated under the regulations was in the range of $15,000 to $16,000, and this only in the case of large or elderly families in high-cost areas of the nation. In any event, Weaver said, the regulations would be rewritten and lower asset limitations would be formulated.

Although the Senate later restored $12 million in contractual authority for supplements and $360,000 for supplement payments, House-Senate conferees on the measure dropped the entire provision. Conferees, in their report (H Rept 1198), said their action would provide more time "to develop sound plans and criteria which can be reviewed when funds are sought early in 1966."

LBJ, GOP ON RENT SUPPLEMENTS

President Johnson Oct. 23, in a message accompanying the annual HHFA report to Congress, said he would resubmit his request for rent supplement funds and contractual authority in 1966. Mr. Johnson criticized "the old voices of doubt and misunderstanding" which he said were responsible for preventing the appropriation of funds in 1965.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.) Oct. 25 said that when Mr. Johnson "charged that false allegations defeated his rent subsidy program, he pointed his finger of accusation at one of his own--the federal housing agency." Ford said the HHFA issued regulations which "ripped away the false label of so-called low-income housing" placed on the program. The House GOP leader added that the rent supplement proposal would be "the major 1966 issue" and that "Republicans welcome the opportunity to debate this issue in every precinct of the nation."

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING APPROVED

HR 6927 -- Reported, amended, by House Government Operations Committee (H Rept 337) May 11, 1965.

● Passed, amended, by the House by a 217-184 roll-call vote June 16. (See p. 970)

S 1599 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Government Operations Committee (S Rept 536) Aug. 2.

HR 6927 -- Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 57-33 roll-call vote Aug. 11. (See p. 1064)

● Conference report (H Rept 884) agreed to by voice votes of the Senate Aug. 30 and the House Aug. 31.

PL 89-174 -- Signed into law Sept. 9.

Congress in 1965 enacted legislation requested by President Johnson creating a Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). It was the first Cabinet-level department established since the Department of Health, Education and Welfare was created in 1953.

Both President Kennedy and President Johnson each year from 1961 to 1964 unsuccessfully proposed creation of a housing department. HUD as established by PL 89-174 was essentially the same as the departments proposed earlier by Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Johnson.

The bill was opposed by a majority of Republicans and Southern Democrats on both Senate and House roll calls. It was supported by numerous housing organizations.

PL 89-174 provided for the establishment of HUD under a Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, appointed by the President with Senate confirmation. The Secretary was given all the powers, functions and duties of the Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA) and its components. The HHFA consisted of an Office of the Administrator and five operating units: the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), the Public Housing Administration (PHA), the Federal National Mortgage Assn. (FNMA) -- all three of which had specific authorization in law -- and the Community Facilities Administration and the Urban Renewal Administration -- both of which were administratively created within the HHFA without specific legal authorization. (For a description of the activities of each unit, see p. 365) PL 89-174 transferred the FHA as an entity to HUD.

The legislation basically upgraded the existing HHFA (established in 1947) to Cabinet-level status. The new agency was not to administer all federal programs relating to cities and urban problems, although one section of PL 89-174 required a study of the functions of other agencies to determine if any should be transferred to HUD. Supporters of the legislation said PL 89-174 did not change in any substantive way the existing functions and powers of federal housing officials. Opponents said this was only technically true; they argued that a new Cabinet-level department was bound to seek new powers.

PL 89-174 did not attempt to define an urban area or to place a limitation on the size of communities which could benefit from any program handled by HUD, thus bringing both small towns and villages as well as large cities within the agency's scope.

HUD became the 11th Cabinet-level department at midnight Nov. 8, under a provision of the bill ordering it created no later than 60 days following the President's approval of the legislation. President Johnson, however, postponed HUD's actual establishment until a special study group completed a report on the Government's role in solving urban problems. On Jan. 13, 1966, he appointed HHFA Administrator Robert C. Weaver as Secretary of HUD.

There was one major difference between the House and Senate versions of the bill. The House version transferred the functions of the FHA to the Secretary and designated an Assistant Secretary to administer programs relating to the private mortgage market. The Senate version allowed the FHA to retain its separate identity in HUD under a commissioner appointed by the President and functioning under the supervision of the Secretary. Like the House version, the Senate bill also designated an Assistant Secretary to handle private mortgage market programs. The final bill retained the FHA as a separate entity in HUD under a Federal Housing Commissioner who also was designated an Assistant Secretary.

As signed by the President, HR 6927, the Department of Housing and Urban Development Act:

Declared that the welfare of the nation required, as a matter of national purpose, sound development of its communities and metropolitan areas. Found that establishment of an executive department was desirable to carry out such a purpose. Said such a department should assist the President in achieving maximum coordination and the best administration of federal programs affecting urban communities; encourage the solution of problems of housing, urban development and mass transportation through state, local and private action; encourage "maximum contributions that may be made by vigorous private home building and mortgage lending institutions" to housing and urban development; and provide for full and appropriate consideration of the needs and interests of the nation's communities.

Established a Department of Housing and Urban Development, and provided that it would be headed by a Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, appointed by the President with Senate confirmation.

Defined the Secretary's capacity as an adviser to the President with respect to federal programs and activities relating to housing and urban development.

Authorized an Under Secretary, four Assistant Secretaries and a General Counsel, all of whom would be appointed by the President with Senate confirmation; also authorized an Assistant Secretary for Administration, who would be appointed by the Secretary with approval of the President.

Transferred to the Secretary all the functions, powers and duties of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, Federal Housing Administration, Public Housing Administration and the Federal National Mortgage Assn.

Provided for retention of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) as a separate entity within the new Department. Provided that the FHA would be headed by a Federal Housing Commissioner who would also be an Assistant Secretary. Designated the Commissioner, in addition to his duties as Assistant Secretary and head of the FHA, to administer all other departmental programs relating to the private mortgage market.

Authorized a Director of Urban Program Coordination, designated by the Secretary, to coordinate programs of various agencies of the Government which have "a major impact on community development." Stipulated that the Director, subject to the direction of the Secretary, would establish and maintain close liaison with the federal departments and agencies concerned and would consult with state, local and regional officials and consider their recommendations with respect to such programs.

Authorized the Secretary to provide technical assistance and information to aid state and local governments and to encourage coordinated planning by state and local governments. Authorized him to hold informal public hearings on federal and state development programs.

Directed the Secretary to encourage private enterprise to assume a maximum role in housing and urban development and to achieve the "fullest cooperation" with private enterprise in meeting departmental objectives.

Required the President to undertake a study of functions in other federal agencies that might be transferred to the new Department and to make recommendations to Congress. Stipulated that the outdoor recreation functions of the Department of the Interior could not be transferred or geographically limited without Congressional approval.

Authorized the Secretary to establish a working capital fund for operating various common administrative services in the Department. Provided that the fund would be financed through appropriations and charges against the agencies and offices in the Department for which services were performed.

Stipulated that the act would take effect 60 days from the date of enactment unless the President chose to put it into effect earlier by executive order.

In 1961, President Kennedy proposed legislation to create a Department of Urban Affairs and Housing. He promised to make HHFA Administrator Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, Secretary of the new Department. The bill was reported in both the House and the Senate, but in the Senate a leadership headcount found almost solid Southern Democratic and Republican opposition, ensuring defeat; as a result, the bill was not brought to a vote. In the House, the Rules Committee delayed the bill and in January 1962 -- by a 6-9 vote -- refused to grant a rule for floor action, thus in effect killing the bill.

In response, President Kennedy, using his authority under the Reorganization Act of 1949, submitted Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1962, proposing to create the Department. The Reorganization Act provided that the plan would take effect in 60 days unless opposed by a majority vote of either the House or the Senate. The House Feb. 21, 1962, rejected the reorganization plan when it adopted a resolution of disapproval by a 264-150 roll-call vote.

(The Reorganization Act of 1949 expired on June 1, 1963. In 1964, Congress extended the Act through June 1, 1965, but only after amending it to prohibit the President from creating a new executive department through use of a reorganization plan. The addition of the provision generally was believed to be a reaction to Mr. Kennedy's 1962 use of the law. In 1965, Congress again extended the 1949 Act, along with the restrictive 1964 provision, through Dec. 31, 1968. (See p. 657)

President Kennedy in his 1963 Budget Message and President Johnson in his 1964 omnibus housing and Budget Messages called for legislation to create a new department of housing, but their requests received no action.

In a "Message on the Cities," President Johnson March 2, 1965, called for a Department of Housing and Urban Development "to give greater force and effectiveness to our effort in the cities." (See text p. 1400)

He said, "This new Department will provide a focal point for thought and innovation and imagination about the problems of our cities...it will work to strengthen the constructive relationships between nation, state and city -- the creative federalism -- which is essential to progress. This partnership will demand the leadership of mayors, Governors and state legislatures."

Overwhelming pressures are being "visited upon cities already in distress," President Johnson said. "We have over nine million homes, most of them in cities, which are run down or deteriorating; over four million do not have running water or even plumbing. Many of our central cities are in need of major surgery to overcome decay. New suburban sprawl reaches out into the countryside, as the process of urbanization consumes a million acres a year. The old, the poor, the discriminated against are increasingly concentrated in central city ghettos, while others move to the suburbs, leaving the central city to battle against immense odds.

"Physical decay, from obsolescent schools to polluted water and air, helps breed social decay. It casts a pall of ugliness and despair on the spirits of the people. And this is reflected in rising crime rates, school dropouts, delinquency and social disorganization."

Bills Introduced. The Administration's draft bill was introduced in the House (HR 6654) March 23 by Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.). An identical bill (HR 6927), which was the measure considered by the House, was introduced March 30 by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D Fla.). In the Senate, the draft legislation was introduced (S 1599) on March 25 by Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.).

The draft bill was identical in major respects to legislation submitted by the Administration in the 87th and 88th Congresses.

Except for the few provisions added by the Senate or the House, the Administration bill was essentially the same as the final bill (above). It provided for a Cabinet-level Department of Housing and Urban Development headed by a Secretary appointed by the President with Senate confirmation. The HHFA and its components were transferred to the new agency. However, the Administration draft bill did not transfer the FHA as an entity to HUD or specifically designate an official to head FHA. The draft bill transferred the functions of the FHA to the Secretary and the Secretary would have provided administration of its functions as he wished.

House

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations, Subcommittee on Executive and Legislative Reorganization.

HELD HEARINGS -- April 5 and 6 on HR 6654, HR 6927 and related bills. (Continued on next page)

TESTIMONY -- During the hearings (and in statements submitted to the Subcommittee), various organizations favored enactment of legislation to establish a housing department, including the following: the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the National League of Cities, the National Assn. of Counties, the National Assn. of Home Builders, the National Housing Conference, the American Institute of Planners, the American Institute of Architects, the AFL-CIO and the National Assn. of Mutual Savings Banks. Among the organizations opposing enactment were the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the National Assn. of Manufacturers and the Mortgage Bankers Assn. (The Mortgage Bankers organization was primarily concerned about the future status of the FHA. See Senate testimony, p. 386.)

April 5 -- Bernard L. Boutin, executive vice president of the National Assn. of Home Builders said his organization was "in hearty accord" with the proposal. Boutin recommended, however, that the bill be amended to provide that an Assistant Secretary be designated to administer, "under the supervision of the Secretary, programs of the Department which deal with the private mortgage market."

Elmer B. Staats, Deputy Director of the Budget Bureau, said the reorganization of existing agencies "would in no way alter or modify the basic laws applicable to the programs administered by them, nor would there be any break in the continuity of these programs."

Staats said there were three principal advantages to be gained from establishing a Department:

1) It would give "long overdue recognition to the importance of these governmental functions to the nation's economy and the welfare of its people."

2) It would provide "maximum assistance" to the President in coordinating federal housing activities and would provide a federal "focal point" for assistance to state and local governments and to business.

3) It would "provide authority for the more effective direction and coordination of the closely interrelated programs of the HHFA."

April 6 -- John C. Williamson, representing the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, contended that "a Cabinet-rank department...would at best generate a cold war among the departments of the Executive Branch as it sought to envelop within its jurisdiction all the programs geared to the needs and aspirations of the urban community."

BILL REPORTED

The House Government Operations Committee May 11 favorably reported HR 6927 by a vote of 20-8 (H Rept 337).

The Committee adopted only one amendment to the bill. It designated one of the four Assistant Secretaries of the new Department to administer, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary, department programs relating to the private mortgage market.

Majority Views. The report said the time was "ripe" for establishment of the Department, because 70 percent of U.S. population now lived in urban centers. It quoted with approval President Johnson's statement, in his request for a Department of Housing and Urban Development, that urban problems were "already in the front rank of national concern and interest. They deserve to be in the front rank of Government as well."

The report said the bill did not "put into the new Department any agencies or existing programs not already in the Housing and Home Finance Agency." However, it said, "Departmental status would make possible a coordination of these programs which does not now exist. It would clarify jumbled lines of authority within the Housing and Home Finance Agency, knitting together its programs with better cohesion and giving the whole a better unity of purpose and objectives."

The report said the current magnitude of HHFA's financial transactions was "comparable to that of any of the existing departments of Government (except Defense)," providing "further justification for raising the status of the agency" to Cabinet level.

Minority Views. A Committee minority of seven Republicans filed a statement opposing creation of the new Department. Signing the statement were Clarence J. Brown (Ohio), Robert P. Griffin (Mich.), Delbert L. Latta (Ohio), William L. Dickinson (Ala.), John N. Erlenborn (Ill.), Howard H. Callaway (Ga.), and Edward J. Gurney (Fla.).

Noting that the Committee during the 85th through 89th Congresses had been submitted "scores of bills to create 22 separate Cabinet level Departments," the statement called HR 6927 "another manifestation of the perennial urge to classify problems as having outstripped the capacity of state and local governments and to create new federal Departments to solve them." The statement added that there was "no magic in the establishment of a new bureaucracy...that will in itself help anybody solve local problems."

The statement contended that: (1) the proposed act provided no new functions; (2) the bill should have provided for the continuation of the FHA; (3) a mere "one-third of the Federal Government's housing activities" were covered by the new Department under the bill; (4) it would be "difficult to prove" that independent agencies such as the Central Intelligence Agency and HHFA had been "unable to discharge their important functions simply because the heads of those agencies did not enjoy Cabinet rank"; (5) housing programs were not a federal activity of "indefinite duration" and should not be "frozen into the governmental structure" by the creation of a Cabinet-level department; (6) enactment of the bill would be the first time that a Cabinet post had been established "to serve people on the basis of where they live." The President and his Cabinet, the statement asserted, "serve all the people -- urban and rural.... All of our executive departments are created on a functional basis and are concerned with all the people."

Separate Views. Four Committee Republicans outlined in separate views an approach which provided for the establishment of an Office of Community Development in the Executive Office of the President, in lieu of the creation of a new department as provided by HR 6927. The statement was signed by Florence P. Dwyer (N.J.), Robert P. Griffin (Mich.), Frank J. Horton (N.Y.) and Donald Rumsfeld (Ill.).

FLOOR ACTION

The House June 16 passed HR 6927 by a 217-184 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 970)

Prior to passage, the House rejected, by a 141-259 roll-call vote, a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Government Operations with instructions to report back a Republican substitute (HR 8822). The substitute measure would have established an Office of Urban Affairs and Community Development in the Executive Office of the President.

At a news conference the next day, President Johnson said that he was especially gratified by House approval of HR 6927. He said, "The vote in the House was impressive and decisive, and exceeded our expectations. I believe it reflects the realization throughout the land that our cities constitute the decisive challenge of these last decades of the 20th century."

The passage vote on HR 6927 was largely along party lines. Voting in favor of HUD were 208 Democrats and 9 Republicans: Cahill (N.J.), Fino (N.Y.), Halpern (N.Y.), Horton (N.Y.), Lindsay (N.Y.), Minshall (Ohio), O'Konski (Wis.), Reid (N.Y.) and Tupper (Maine). Opposing the measure were 118 Republicans and 66 Democrats -- 56 of them from Southern states.

Democratic Members from Southern states voted 38-56 against the bill. But in 1962, Southern Democrats in the House opposed President Kennedy's proposed Department by an even larger majority, 13-93.

All of the 181 Northern Democrats voting on the recommittal were opposed to the motion. They were joined by 73 Southern Democrats and 5 Republicans: Halpern, Lindsay, Reid (N.Y.), O'Konski and Roudebush (Ind.). Voting in favor of recommittal were 122 Republicans and 19 Democrats.

In 1962, Mr. Kennedy's proposed department was disapproved by the House on a roll-call vote. One Republican, Minshall (Ohio) and 21 Democrats changed their votes from opposition to the 1962 proposal to support for HR 6927. The Democrats shifting positions were Udall (Ariz.), Mills (Ark.), Trimble (Ark.), Morrison (La.), Thompson (La.), Willis (La.), Jones (Mo.), Jarman (Okla.), Steed (Okla.), Everett (Tenn.), Evins (Tenn.), Beckworth (Texas), Brooks (Texas), Patman (Texas), Purcell (Texas), Thompson (Texas), Young (Texas), Downing (Va.), Hardy (Va.), Jennings (Va.) and Kastenmeier (Wis.). However, the following Members voted for the 1962 proposal and against the 1965 bill: Baldwin (R Calif.), Mailliard (R Calif.), Shipley (D Ill.), Mathias (R Md.), Randall (D Mo.) and Dwyer (R N.J.).

Prior to passage, the House by voice vote adopted an amendment by the Committee on Government Operations to designate an Assistant Secretary to administer departmental programs relating to the private mortgage market.

Rejected, by a 65-91 standing vote, was a Republican amendment, sponsored by Florence P. Dwyer (N.J.), to replace HR 6927 with HR 8822. The amendment was the same as the recommittal motion which followed later. A Republican-sponsored amendment to establish a Department of the Federal Housing Administration under a Presidentially appointed Federal Housing Commissioner responsible to the new Housing Secretary was defeated by standing vote, 74-99, and teller vote, 101-153. Also defeated, by voice vote, was an amendment to change the name of the proposed Department to the Department of Urban and Suburban Development.

DEBATE -- Democratic proponents of HR 6927 argued that the new Department was needed to "give proper recognition to the importance of urban problems in the social and economic advancement of our nation." A Cabinet-level authority for urban affairs would be increasingly important, they said, because population specialists were predicting that the present urban concentration of 70 percent of U.S. population would rise to 80 percent by the year 2000.

Republican opponents of the bill argued that the new Department would only give "status to the new Secretary and bureaucracy to be created," but not service, economy, or efficiency.

The thrust of debate on the measure, however, came on the Republican attempt to substitute HR 8822 for the Administration bill. Republicans asserted that the substitute would promote "economy and usefulness" by providing coordination of all Government programs having an impact on urban areas, regardless of the department or agency which administered a particular program. Democratic opponents of the GOP substitute replied that under HR 8822 the "overburdened" local official seeking aid or advice of urban authorities in Washington "would have to make the rounds...he already makes plus one additional, unnecessary and superfluous stop at the White House."

John N. Erlenborn (R Ill.), sponsor of the amendment to place FHA under a Presidentially appointed Federal Housing Commissioner responsible to the new Housing Secretary, asserted that transfer of the agency to the new Department should be made in an "independent way in order to protect the integrity of the FHA."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 6927 was basically the same as the provisions of the final bill (above) except for the provision retaining the FHA as a separate entity within the new Department, which was added in the Senate. The House bill also did not contain several less important provisions, added later by the Senate, dealing with coordinating machinery, transfer of functions, designation of community and private enterprise. (See Senate and Conference, below)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 16 -- Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.) -- Substitute for HR 6927 a Republican-supported bill (HR 8822) providing for the establishment of an Office of Urban Affairs and Community Development in the Executive Office of the President rather than the Cabinet-level Department of Housing and Urban Development provided in HR 6927. Standing vote, 65-91.

John N. Erlenborn (R Ill.) -- Delete language transferring the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) to the new Department and substitute new language establishing a Department of FHA and vesting the functions, duties and powers of the FHA with a Presidentially appointed Federal Housing Commissioner under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. Standing vote, 74-99, and teller vote, 101-153.

John W. Wydler (R N.Y.) -- Change the title of the proposed Department to the Department of Urban and Suburban Development. Voice vote.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations, Executive Reorganization Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 31, April 1 and 2, May 19 on S 1599 and companion bills. Testimony was similar to that presented before the House subcommittee.

TESTIMONY -- March 31 -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) contended that "city people too, need an advocate in Washington." Pointing out that farmers, who now constitute only 7 percent of the population, have had a Cabinet-level department for 100 years, Clark said "it is not right that 150 million urban residents of the country are denied at least equal representation."

Robert F. Wagner, mayor of New York City, said in a prepared statement that he found no validity in the argument that creation of the new Department would result in a loss of states' rights and local prerogatives.

April 1 -- Boston Mayor John F. Collins said he hoped the new department would be created "this year." Collins said he did not want to see the new Department delayed while Congress studied possible creation of a department which would include more agencies than specified under the bill.

April 2 -- Matt Trigg, a spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation, contended that "the secretary of the new department would become in effect Mr. Mayor of all the municipalities of the United States." Planning, financing, and development of municipalities, Trigg said, was "primarily a private and local responsibility."

Nathaniel S. Keith, president of the National Housing Conference, said the bill would provide the framework for efficient administration of a number of broad new programs to be required for the future.

May 19 -- C.C. Cameron, president of the Mortgage Bankers Assn. of America, said that although his organization doubted the need for HUD, the association was primarily concerned about the future independence of the FHA. It urged that the Administration bill be amended to retain the FHA as a separate entity within the new Department and to have the FHA headed by a commissioner appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate.

BILL REPORTED

The full Committee Aug. 2 reported S 1599 with amendments (S Rept 536). The only significant difference in S 1599 and HR 6927 was that the House version did not contain language directing the President to undertake a study of functions in other agencies which might be transferred to the new Department.

S 1599 was approved by the Committee July 30 by a vote of 9-4. Voting against approval were the Committee's Chairman, John L. McClellan (D Ark.), and three Republicans -- Carl T. Curtis (Neb.), Karl E. Mundt (S.D.) and Milward L. Simpson (Wyo.).

The Committee adopted a number of amendments to the Administration bill, including:

- One, by Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), to require that an Assistant Secretary in the new Department be designated to administer departmental programs relating to the private mortgage market.
- One, by Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.), to require the President to undertake a study of functions in other federal agencies that might be transferred to the new Department, and make recommendations to Congress. (The amendment stipulated, however, that the outdoor recreation functions of the Department of the Interior could not be transferred or geographically limited without Congressional approval.)
- Amendments setting up machinery to coordinate federal-state community development programs and machinery to coordinate programs of the various federal agencies which have a major impact on community development.

Majority Views. The report said that administration "at the highest levels of Government" was necessary to solve the "enormous and complex problems" that would arise under the impact of a projected doubling of U.S. urban population by the year 2000.

Cabinet status, the report said, was necessary to give "proper weight" to housing and urban development interests among the over-all interests of the Federal Government. The report asserted that Cabinet rank would give the new Secretary "powerful influence" enabling him "to exercise leadership at the direction of the President in coordinating federal activities affecting housing and urban development."

Designation of one of the four Assistant Secretaries to administer current FHA and FNMA programs, the report added, was necessary to ensure that these "extremely important programs" were administered "at an appropriately high level."

The report said the Budget Bureau had concluded that the new Department should be limited to the functions currently associated with HHFA because, while there were other Government agencies and functions related to urban development, the relationship was not clear enough to justify their transfer or the urban and non-urban functions could not be separated. The report said, however, that the Committee was interested in seeing the transfer to the new Department of functions dealing with the improvement of the physical environment of urban areas.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Aug. 11 by a 57-33 roll-call vote passed an amended version of HR 6927. (For voting, see chart p. 1064)

Prior to passage, the Senate substituted the provisions of its own bill (S 1599) for those of HR 6927 as passed by the House June 16.

President Johnson later in the day praised the bipartisan support given the bill. The President said that he intended to "see that this Department serves all the people of our nation" and promised it would be "administered for the benefit of all the people

The House and Senate versions of the measure differed in several respects, but there was only one major variation. The Senate bill allowed the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) to retain its separate identity in the new Department under a commissioner appointed by the President and functioning "under the supervision and direction" of the Secretary of the Department. This provision was a floor amendment proposed by John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) and accepted by the Senate Aug. 10 by voice vote. (The House, before it passed the bill in June, rejected a similar provision by a 74-99 standing vote and 101-153 teller vote. The House bill contained language providing for the designation of one of the Department's assistant secretaries to administer departmental programs relating to the private mortgage market. An identical provision was in S 1599 and remained in the bill as it passed the Senate despite the acceptance of Sparkman's amendment.)

The Sparkman amendment was strongly supported by homebuilders and mortgage bankers, who reportedly feared that the role of the FHA might be downgraded in a large new Cabinet-level department.

Voting for passage of HR 6927 were 10 Republicans and 47 Democrats. Opposing passage were 19 Republicans and 14 Democrats, 12 of them from Southern states. The only Northern Democrats opposing the bill were Alan Bible (Nev.) and Frank J. Lausche (Ohio).

A perfunctory two-day debate on the measure centered on a contention by opponents of the bill that establishment of the Department would mean an upward spiraling of costs on housing and urban development programs and an "encroachment" on state and local powers. Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) Aug. 10 contended that establishment of the proposed Department was a further step in the "proliferation" of federal agencies and employees and predicted that "escalation" of its duties would follow its establishment. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), the bill's sponsor, said Aug. 10 that the measure would not provide for any new federal programs and might actually diminish expenditures through "better coordination and tighter executive control." Ribicoff added that department-level administration was necessary to solve complex problems which would arise under a projected doubling of U.S. urban population by the year 2000.

Bills Compared. In addition to the FHA provision, the Senate version differed from the House bill in these primary respects:

Established within the Department an Office of Urban Program Coordination to coordinate programs of various agencies of the Government which have "a major impact on community development." Stipulated that the office would be headed by a director appointed by the Secretary.

Required the President to undertake a study of functions in other federal agencies that might be transferred to the new Department and to make recommendations to Congress. Stipulated that the outdoor recreation functions of the Department of the Interior could not be transferred or geographically limited without Congressional approval.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug. 10 -- Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Direct the Secretary, at a state Governor's request, to hold an informal public hearing in any community within the state in which any departmental assistance programs were proposed to be or were being administered. Voice vote.

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- Add language to the bill specifically providing for the retention of the FHA in the new Department and providing that the FHA would be headed by a Federal Housing Commissioner, appointed by the President with Senate confirmation and functioning under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Department. Voice.

Aug. 11 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Substitute the term "community" for certain references in the bill to "urban" development programs. Voice.

Conference Report

House and Senate conferees filed a report (H Rept 884) Aug. 11. On variations between the House and Senate versions of the bill, conferees took the following actions:

Federal Housing Administration. Agreed to compromise language retaining the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) as a separate entity in the new Department under a Federal Housing Commissioner who was also an Assistant Secretary. The compromise provision designated the Commissioner, in addition to his duties as an Assistant Secretary and head of the FHA, to administer, under supervision and direction of the Secretary, all other department programs relating to the private mortgage market. A spokesman for the conference committee told CQ Aug. 30 that the thrust of the compromise was to give the FHA a higher status than was provided by either the House or Senate. The Senate bill designated an Assistant Secretary to administer departmental programs relating to the private mortgage market but vested direction of the FHA in a lower-ranking official -- a Federal Housing Commissioner appointed by the President with Senate confirmation. The House had originally rejected wording similar to the Senate's.

Coordinating Machinery. Agreed to a compromise provision requiring the Secretary to consult and cooperate with state governors and state agencies and to hold, at his discretion, informal public hearings regarding federal and state urban development programs. A Senate floor amendment had required the Secretary, at a state governor's request, to hold hearings in any community in the state in which any departmental assistance programs were proposed to be or were being administered. The House bill did not contain a similar provision.

Agreed to compromise language establishing within the Department the position of Director of Urban Program Coordination. Provided that the Director would coordinate programs of various agencies of the Government which have a "major impact on community development." In agreeing to the compromise, the conferees dropped a Senate provision establishing an Office of Urban Program Coordination with the same responsibilities as vested in the Director under the compromise language. The House bill made no similar provision.

Further Transfer of Functions. Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, requiring the President to undertake a study of functions in other federal agencies that might be transferred to the new Department and to make recommendations to Congress.

Designation of Community. Agreed to a Senate floor amendment inserting the word "community" or substituting it for "urban" at various points in the House bill.

Private Enterprise. Agreed to a Senate provision, not in the House bill, directing the Secretary to encourage private enterprise to assume a maximum role in housing and urban development and to develop the "fullest cooperation" with private enterprise in achieving departmental objectives. Also accepted Senate language including similar wording in the statement of purpose.

FINAL ACTION

The Senate Aug. 30 and the House Aug. 31 by voice votes and without debate adopted the conference report (H Rept 884). The actions cleared the measure for the President's signature.

Bill Signed. President Johnson signed HR 6927 on Sept. 9. He said, "In the next 35 years, we must literally build a second America -- putting in place as many houses, schools, apartments, parks and offices as we have built through all the time since the Pilgrims arrived on these shores.... It is not enough for us to erect towers of stone and glass, or to lay out vast suburbs of order and conformity. We must seek, and we must find the ways to preserve and to perpetuate in the city the individuality, the human dignity, the respect for individual rights, the devotion for individual responsibility that has been part of the American character and the strength of the American system.... Unless we seize the opportunities available now, the fears some have of a nightmare society could materialize. Unless we match our imagination and our courage to our affluence, we could fail both our past and our posterity."

HOUSE PASSES SMALL COAL MINE SAFETY BILL

HR 3584 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 181) March 17, 1965.
● Passed, amended, by the House June 1 by a 336-42 roll-call vote. (See p. 964)

Congress in 1965 again failed to enact legislation which would extend the mandatory federal inspection and safety requirements of the 1952 Federal Coal Mine Safety Act to previously exempt small coal mines (mines regularly employing 14 or fewer persons underground). The bill (HR 3584), which was the major legislative goal of the United Mine Workers of America, was passed by the House June 1, but was still pending before the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee when the session ended.

Although similar bills had been reported in the past, none was granted a rule for consideration on the House floor. When efforts were made to bring them up under suspension of the rules, a procedure requiring a two-thirds majority for passage, they were defeated. The House Education and Labor Committee reported HR 3584 March 17. On April 15 Chairman Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) introduced a rule (H Res 341) providing for House debate. Under the "21-day" rule adopted by the House Jan. 4, if the Rules Committee failed to act favorably on Powell's resolution, or a similar one, the Speaker could recognize a motion to call up the bill for debate if he wished. (See story, p. 585)

On May 19 the Rules Committee granted a rule for House debate on HR 3584. (Informed sources said that the legislation's difficulties in the Rules Committee stemmed from the opposition of Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.) and small coal mine operators in his state. In floor debate June 1, Smith said he opposed the bill but "I believe the time has come when it is healthy to have a vote" on it.)

Background

The 1952 Federal Coal Mine Safety Act authorized federal inspectors to close mines employing more than 14 workers underground in which there was imminent danger of explosion, fire, inundation or accidents on the lifts. Where violations of safety regulations for matters such as roof supports, permissible equipment and ventilation were found, the inspector was authorized to direct the mine operator to correct the deficiency within a certain period of time and to close the mine if this was not done.

A 1961 mine safety measure (HR 5741) similar to the 1965 bill was reported by the House Education and Labor Committee, but the Rules Committee refused to grant it a rule for House debate. (1961 Almanac p. 206)

In 1963, following two serious mine disasters, similar legislation (HR 9000) was reported by the Committee, but again failed to receive a rule. (1963 Almanac p. 241) An attempt Aug. 17, 1964, to circumvent the Rules Committee by passing the bill under the suspension-of-rules procedure failed to get the two-thirds majority vote necessary for passage under this procedure. It received a majority vote on a 202-151 roll call. (1964 Almanac p. 287)

Opposition to the legislation stemmed from two sources: (1) conservative Congressmen who believed that state inspection laws were adequate; and (2) small mine operators who contended that federal controls would force them to buy new equipment whose expense would put them out of business. Small mine operators, largely non-union, also argued that the low number of accidents in small mines made federal controls unnecessary.

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor, General Subcommittee on Labor.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 10 on coal mine safety bills. Although they contended that extensive hearings held in 1963 provided all the data needed to justify Committee action, Chairman Powell and Rep. John H. Dent (D Pa.), the sponsor of HR 3584, agreed to hold hearings requested by Committee Republicans Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.), Dave Martin (Neb.), and Alphonzo Bell (Calif.) to consider new testimony.

Witnesses representing small mine lessors, operators and the state of Virginia testified, as well as Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) and Rep. W. Pat Jennings (D Va.). Jennings was sponsor of a bill (HR 317) to remove the 14-employee exemption only if a federal district court decided that the state safety law was not a "substantially equivalent law." His bill was supported by the National Independent Coal Operators Assn.

ACTION -- The Committee March 17 reported HR 3584 (H Rept 181), amended. The report said the primary purpose of the bill was to "reduce casualties in all coal mines to the maximum extent feasible" and to attain this goal by augmenting, rather than duplicating, state efforts, with a "minimum burden" upon operators.

Supplemental Views. Reps. Goodell, Martin and Bell said Committee amendments which recognized the differing operations of small and large mines produced a bill "which is far better designed to achieve the primary goal of mine safety" than any previous measure. They referred to the requirement that small mine operators and workers be represented on the Coal Mine Safety Board of Review and to an amendment to be offered on the floor by Rep. Jennings, requiring the Secretary of Interior to hold conferences to inform small mine operators of the enforcement provisions of the Act.

FLOOR ACTION

The House June 1 passed HR 3584 by a roll-call vote of 336-42 and sent the bill to the Senate with amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 964)

Supporters of HR 3584 estimated that the bill would extend coverage of the 1952 Act to about 7,000 small mines employing about 35,000 miners. Estimates of the costs of compliance by the small miners varied. Dave Martin (R Neb.), an opponent of the bill, said that "some of the cost of the mechanical equipment that would be required by the small operators...would be as much as $40,000 to $50,000."

James Roosevelt (D Calif.), a supporter and the floor manager of the bill, said that "in nearly every instance" the "cost of these improvements to save life would...be minimal, and by minimal we mean a couple of hundred dollars." Under the bill, the small mines were given a six-month grace period before they became subject to compliance with safety factors not involving an immediate threat of an accident.

Figures on the number of actual coal mine deaths in recent years were also the subject of controversy, with opponents suggesting that the number of small-mine deaths did not warrant extension of the safety legislation to those mines. James G. Fulton (R Pa.) cited figures showing that the number of deaths in all mines had fallen from "five figures" before enactment of safety legislation to a preliminary figure of 240 in 1964. Roosevelt added, however, that the fatality rate in small mines was still higher than that in large mines covered under the existing Act.

Before passage the House accepted by voice vote an amendment by W. Pat Jennings (D Va.) requiring that after enactment of the bill the Secretary of Interior must take specified steps to familiarize those affected with its provisions.

During debate, bill supporters pointed to what they called the inconsistency of the existing exemption of small mines from safety requirements. Melvin Price (D Ill.) asked, "By what stretch of the imagination can we say that it is illegal to kill or maim men in mines employing more than 14 men by passing laws to protect them and yet, at the same time, legalize killing and maiming men in small mines by denying them the same protection accorded to their more fortunate fellow miners employed in the...large mines?" John H. Dent (D Pa.) said that in 1964, "imminent danger was reported in 23 percent" of the small mines, but "less than 2 percent of the reported dangers were corrected -- because there was no federal law that would enforce the correction." Urging enactment of uniform safety requirements for all mines, Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) said, "I know that the competition in the coal industry is savage and without compassion. Every conceivable means of reducing costs is practiced, and the first place where the cost of mining is cut is in safety practices."

In opposition, Alphonzo Bell (R Calif.) said there were three reasons for retaining the small-mine exemption: (1) small mines "were never intended to be reached by this Act," (2) there was "no indication that the safety record of (small) mines would be improved by the removal of the exemption," and (3) there was "strong evidence that an unqualified extension of the Act to cover (small) mines would only serve to increase the economic burden on an already marginally profitable industry." Martin said "the only segment of our economy directly interested in coal mining who want this legislation passed are the United Coal Miners.... Most of the (small) mines and the small operators are not unionized. Their production is a sizable percentage of the total production of coal in the United States. It is quite easy to see why the United Coal Miners would like to see these (small) mines closed down. It would, therefore, increase the production of the (large) mines, most of which are organized by the United Coal Miners." (He was referring to the United Mine Workers union.)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 3584:

Extended the mandatory federal inspection and safety requirements of the Federal Coal Mine Safety Act to previously exempt small mines -- those regularly employing less than 15 persons underground. The authority to close mines where accidents were imminent was to take effect upon enactment of the bill but on safety violations not involving immediate danger, the small mines were given six months to meet federal standards.

In provisions affecting all mines, HR 3584:

Permitted closing of mines when inspectors found an "unwarrantable failure" by operators to comply within 90 days with orders to remedy safety violations that could lead to accidents.

Authorized federal grants of $500,000 annually, to be matched by the states, for coal mine safety education programs.

Strengthened provisions for federal-state cooperation on safety enforcement.

Ordered an Interior Department study of the sufficiency of federal coal mine safety standards and a report to Congress within one year.

Raised the membership of the Coal Mine Safety Board of Review from three to five members, with representatives of large and small mine operators and workers as members and, as before, a mining engineer as chairman.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 1 -- W. Pat Jennings (D Va.) -- Require the Secretary of Interior to hold conferences to inform small mine operators and workers, as well as other interested parties, of the enforcement provisions of the Act and the safety code. Voice vote.

John H. Dent (D Pa.) -- Specify that attendance by representatives of the owners and operators would meet the requirements under the Jennings amendment. Voice.

Votes by Coal District Representatives

Passage of the mine safety bill was one of two major legislative goals of the United Mine Workers in 1965. The other was the deletion of the Dickey-Lincoln School hydroelectric project from the omnibus Flood Control, River and Harbor Act (S 2300). On the latter issue the UMW, which opposes hydroelectric power projects such as Dickey-Lincoln for fear of reduced use of coal in power generation, won a temporary victory in the House Sept. 22, but lost when the project was put back into the final bill. (See story p. 751)

The UMW strongly favored the mine safety bill. Since passage of the Federal Coal Mine Safety Act in 1952, the union had exerted extensive legislative effort to amend the law to remove the exemption of small mines. It argued that the Act discriminated against employees in small mines, and that state mining departments were frequently "reluctant" to enforce state safety laws, because their jobs depend on political appointments.

As an indication of the union's pressures for the bill, a staff member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee reported that the Committee had received "thousands of letters, possibly," from members of the UMW in support of HR 3584.

Industry spokesmen referred to HR 3584 as "selfish legislation" in that it would benefit the UMW and a few large coal companies but would put small mines out of business. They asserted that since all mines are subject to inspection by state mining authorities, federal inspection would result in a duplication of effort. Moreover, they contended that the federal Bureau of Mines was dominated and influenced by the UMW.

The votes of Representatives from what the UMW Journal identified as the 76 House districts where coal is mined or important are given below:

1. S 2300. Flood Control, River and Harbor Act of 1965. Frank M. Clark (D Pa.) amendment to delete the $227 million Dickey-Lincoln School project on the St. John River in Maine and instead authorize a survey of alternative methods of providing power. Adopted Sept. 22, 207-185. Coal district Representatives voted 44-26 (D 20-25; R 24-1) to accept the amendment. A "yea" was a vote supporting the United Mine Workers position, but opposing the position of President Johnson. (See chart p. 1006)

2. HR 3584. Coal Mine Safety Bill. Passed June 1, 336-42. Coal district Representatives voted 60-10 (D 42-5; R 18-5) for passage. A "yea" was a vote supporting the United Mine Workers position. The President did not take a position on the bill.

Senate

The Senate Subcommittee on Labor of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee held hearings June 14 and 21 on HR 3584.

Those testifying in favor of HR 3584 included Sens. Frank E. Moss (D Utah) and Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), as well as representatives from the Interior Department's Bureau of Mines, and the Mine Workers union.

Presenting testimony against HR 3584 were Sens. John Sherman Cooper and Thruston B. Morton (both R Ky.) and representatives of independent mine operators and state inspection agencies.

The Subcommittee sent HR 3584 to the full Committee Sept. 21 but no further action was taken on it before Congress adjourned for the year.

METALLIC MINE SAFETY ACT

HR 8989 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 606) July 8, 1965.

● Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote Sept. 2.

An Administration-backed bill (HR 8989), extending federal health and safety regulations to include mining and milling operations in the metal and nonmetallic mineral industries failed of enactment in 1965. The bill passed the House Sept. 2 and was sent to the Senate, where it remained in committee at the end of the session.

The bill excepted from its coverage coal and lignite mining (most of which was already covered under existing law) and petroleum and other materials extracted in liquid form unless extraction required employment of workers underground. Enforcement was left to the Secretary of the Interior, but he could delegate enforcement powers to any state which submitted an acceptable mine safety plan.

The bill was a major legislative goal of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (Ind.). The union was unsuccessful in seeking inclusion of smelters and refineries in the bill.

Background

Existing mine safety legislation applied only to coal (and lignite) mines employing more than 14 workers underground. (See preceding story)

In 1961 Congress passed legislation (PL 87-300) directing the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study and report to Congress on existing health and safety standards in metal and nonmetallic (other than coal and lignite) mines. (1961 Almanac p. 206)

A special Mine Safety Board Nov. 13, 1963, submitted a report which concluded that "in the face of 10,000 lost-time injuries and more than 200 deaths in a single year (1962), it would be difficult to ignore the need for positive action.... The present structure of state-laws coverage and enforcement is clearly inadequate...."

The Interior Department March 29, 1965, submitted a draft bill based on the Board's recommendations, which was introduced March 31 (HR 6961) by Rep. James G.

O'Hara (D Mich.). HR 8989 was a clean bill embodying amendments recommended by the House Select Labor Subcommittee.

House

During May 3-7 hearings by the House Education and Labor Select Subcommittee on Labor, Administration and union representatives testified in favor of extending federal health and safety standards to include metal and nonmetallic mining. Those opposed included representatives of employer's associations, the American Mining Congress and state mine safety directors, who took the position that state laws were adequate and additional federal controls unnecessary.

Bill Reported. The Committee July 8 reported HR 8989 (H Rept 606) as a clean bill replacing the Administration bill. The major change was to permit states to enforce the safety standards, providing they submitted and properly administered plans approved by the Secretary of Interior. The report said the Committee made this change in enforcement at the request of mine operators. It said the bill invited "every state to examine its present mine health and safety program, if any, and then act in a responsible fashion to remedy deficiencies in it."

FLOOR ACTION

The House Sept. 2 passed HR 8989, amended, by voice vote and sent the bill to the Senate. The amendments, accepted en bloc, reinforced state powers under the bill. They were worked out by the bill's sponsor, Rep. O'Hara, and Chairman Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, which has jurisdiction over mining matters. The most important amendment permitted judicial review of the Secretary's decision denying or withdrawing his approval of a state plan.

O'Hara said the sponsors anticipated "that most, if not all -- and probably all -- of the states will avail themselves of the option of presenting a state plan that provides comparable safeguards in operating their own mining safety program."

James G. Fulton (R Pa.), supporting the bill, said he was "at a loss to understand why" the mine operators and American Mining Congress were "so unalterably opposed to this legislation."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 8989:

Directed the Secretary of Interior to develop and enforce health and safety standards for mining of metal and nonmetallic substances, in consultation with advisory committees composed of representatives of mine workers, operators, state officials and the public. The regulations would also cover milling operations.

Permitted the Secretary to allow enforcement and inspection by a state if it provided for: statewide administration by a single state agency, standards which would be "substantially as effective" as the federal standards, annual inspection and protection of the public from abandoned mines.

In states without an approved plan, empowered the Secretary to issue an order closing a mine, except to persons repairing it, if inspection revealed conditions that could cause death or injury before they could be eliminated. For less crucial dangers, a reasonable time to remedy them could be set.

Granted judicial review to state appeals from an order by the Secretary denying or withdrawing approval of a state safety and inspection plan.

Required all mine operators to submit to the Secretary reports of accidents, injuries, occupational diseases and related data at least annually.

Directed the Secretary to expand mine safety education and training programs for operators and workers.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Sept. 2 -- James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) -- Provide for judicial review of the Secretary's decision to deny or withdraw approval of a state plan; set standards for employment of federal mine inspectors; and make certain sections of the bill relating to state plans effective one year after publication of safety standards by the Secretary or 90 days following a regular session of a state legislature, if it came later. Voice vote.

AUTOMOBILE SAFETY

Congress in 1965 showed increasing interest in the subject of traffic safety.

The Senate Commerce Committee held hearings on a bill (S 1643) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to require tire manufacturers to follow certain safety and performance standards in the manufacture of tires, and the Senate Government Operations Executive Reorganization Subcommittee held hearings on the Federal Government's role in promoting greater traffic safety. Subcommittee Chairman Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) unsuccessfully attempted to amend the excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371) to make repeal of the 4-percent automobile excise tax contingent upon the installation in all automobiles of the safety and pollution control equipment specified by the General Services Administration (GSA). (See story, p. 965)

The GSA Jan. 16, 1965, published in the Federal Register a list of 16 safety features which would be required on all 1967 model motor vehicles purchased by the Government, plus a requirement for pollution control of exhausts from these cars. The devices included front and rear seat belts, padded dash panels and sunvisors, recessed instrument panels, impact-absorbing steering wheels, back-up lights, safety glass, dual brake systems and automotive exhaust controls. (1964 Almanac p. 273) The regulations were revised in June 1965.

Congress in 1965 also enacted a bill (S 306 -- PL 89-272) amending the Clean Air Act of 1963 to direct the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to prescribe standards limiting the emission of air pollutants from new motor vehicles. California in July 1965 adopted its own set of restrictions under a law similar to PL 89-272 but covering old as well as new cars. (See story, p. 780)

Tire Safety Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Commerce.

HELD HEARINGS -- May 27, June 7 on a bill (S 1643) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to require tire manufacturers to follow certain safety and performance standards in the manufacture of tires.

S 1643 was introduced April 1 by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D Wis.). In introducing the bill Nelson warned that the "tire manufacturing and marketing industries today contain the seeds of a national scandal." He said no "accurate information" on tire safety existed and the consumer "has no way of appraising existing hazy and contradictory information." Nelson asserted that "tire production was dominated by the automobile industry, which has a great incentive to reduce unit costs in every possible way." This, he said, "discourages both the production and the purchase of really high quality tires, which many motorists should be using."

S 1643 authorized the Secretary of Commerce to establish "regulations prescribing minimum safety and performance standards and a grading and labeling system for motor vehicle tires." Violators of these regulations would be subject to fine and/or imprisonment.

The Committee also had under consideration two other bills. One (S 2231) was introduced June 30 by Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), chairman of the Executive Reorganization Subcommittee of the Government Operations Committee. The bill proposed a National Highway Traffic Safety Center in the Department of Commerce to conduct research into highway traffic safety, to provide grants to public and private agencies for similar research, and to make grants to the states to help them carry out programs to improve highway safety and to educate drivers.

The second bill (S 1251), introduced Feb. 23 by Nelson, authorized the Secretary of Commerce to prescribe safety standards for all automobiles sold in interstate commerce. The standards would cover the same features already required by the GSA for all motor vehicles purchased by the Government beginning with the 1967 models (see above).

TESTIMONY -- May 27 -- Dewitt Whitman of the Vehicle Equipment Safety Commission, testified that, "Traditionally, states have had the primary responsibility" for regulating the use of highways. He said that 38 states had adopted "Vehicle Equipment Safety Compact" legislation to "ensure adoption of uniform standards for new or improved automotive safety equipment." Whitman asserted that in these states "uniform regulation of tires, and eventually of all items of vehicle safety equipment, is in sight." (After enactment in 1958 of a law (PL 85-684) permitting state compacts on highway traffic safety, the Western Interstate Committee on Highway Policy Problems and the Western Governors' Conference took the lead in sponsoring the Safety Compact. The Vehicle Equipment Safety Commission by the end of 1965 had 44 states and the District of Columbia as members and had promulgated tire safety standards which four states had adopted.)

Allan Bratman, president of the Market Tire Co., said the marketing of automobile tires in the "Washington metropolitan area and throughout the nation represents a pattern of abuses which is unparalleled." He asserted that "minimum safety standards alone will not terminate deception in the retail marketing of tires," and that the provision in S 1643 directing the Secretary of Commerce to promulgate a grading and labeling system was "clearly in the public interest."

Winston W. Marsh, executive vice president of the National Tire Dealers and Retreaders Assn., Inc., admitted the need for "minimum performance standards" in the manufacture of tires but said that "grade labeling" would be an "impairment" to "free enterprise."

June 7 -- Heinz A. Abersfeller, commissioner of the Federal Supply Service in the General Services Administration (GSA), endorsed the grading and labeling proposals, saying that under current conditions, the consumer had no way of knowing exactly what he was buying.

Henry H. Wakeland, an automotive consultant, criticized the Equipment Safety Compact which Dewitt Whitman had supported (see above). He said that the Compact had "been used to confuse and impede" legislation in New York and legislation in other states; and concluded that, "In the long run we believe the Compact will tend to dampen state legislative initiative."

Harry C. McCreary, chairman of the McCreary Tire and Rubber Co., stressed the need for compulsory periodic vehicle inspection (including tires) in all 50 states. He said "thousands of tires are running right at this moment which are not only a menace to their owners, but which are also a menace to every other driver traveling the same highway."

Ross R. Ormsby, president of the Rubber Manufacturers Assn., also emphasized the importance of state tire inspection laws but added that "an oversimplified system of grading and labeling would...encourage manufacturers to conform closely to the established grades by eliminating product differences." This, he said, "would rob the consumer of his wide range of choice, and... would tend to stultify the industry's initiative in research and its spirit of innovation and product improvement, which have brought tires to their present high level of safe, dependable service for every type of need and for every pocketbook."

New Bill Presented

Commerce Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) Oct. 19 introduced a revised version of S 1643. The new measure (S 2669), known as the Tire Safety Act of 1966, took into consideration the testimony given on S 1643. Magnuson said the hearings and letters received by the Committee on the subject presented evidence that an "unusual number of tires" appeared to be failing at low mileages, and that "consumer and dealer confusion abounds" because "no comprehensive basic standard existed."

Magnuson said S 2669 provided for the immediate adoption of the minimum tire safety standards promulgated Oct. 10 by the Vehicle Equipment Safety Commission. The bill also authorized a five-year research and development program to develop more comprehensive safety standards, retreading standards, and a grading system for tires.

Car Manufacturers Reply to Nelson

In June Sen. Nelson wrote to the four major automobile manufacturers (General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, American Motors) questioning them on tire safety. Discussing the replies to his letter, Nelson said July 13 that the manufacturers stated that tires on new cars were designed to carry "average or typical loads," but that in the case of a fully loaded vehicle, the motorist was expected to "overinflate his tires to increase the carrying capacity." Nelson said this was a "shocking situation" which warranted immediate correction by the automobile manufacturers.

Traffic Safety Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Government Operations, Executive Reorganization Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 13, 14, 15 and 21 to hear automobile manufacturers testify on traffic safety. The Subcommittee, chaired by Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), had under consideration a bill (S 2162), introduced June 21 by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D Wis.), to authorize the GSA to spend $5 million to design, build and test prototype automobiles incorporating safety features.

At preliminary hearings March 22-26 on the efforts of federal agencies in promoting and improving highway traffic safety, witnesses included representatives from GSA, HEW, the Post Office Department and the President's Committee on Traffic, which was established in 1960 to promote local and state safety programs and was headed by William Randolph Hearst Jr.

TESTIMONY -- July 13 -- Ribicoff, in an opening statement, said "Public interest in traffic safety...is at a new all-time peak." He said that during 1965, in addition to the promulgation of GSA standards for federal automobiles beginning with the 1967 model year, New York had established an Automotive Safety Board with authority to build a prototype safe car; the Illinois House of Representatives had approved a bill requiring the GSA safety standards for all state-owned cars; and Maryland had promulgated tire safety standards. But, Ribicoff said, "It is apparent that we have little if any national policy regarding traffic safety -- especially as it relates to the private automobile. All other forms of passenger-carrying vehicles must satisfy certain federal safety requirements, except the private auto." He cited the need for driver performance standards, safer highways and a better "idea of exactly how safe or dangerous our cars really are." He said, "It is absurd and tragic when you consider that special messages calling for the expenditure of billions of dollars are sent to Congress to fight the three leading causes of death -- heart attack, cancer, and stroke -- but a report on the fourth leading cause of death, traffic accidents, still has not been made public" by the Government.

General Motors Testimony

Frederic G. Donner, chairman of the board of General Motors Corp., told the Subcommittee that in the engineering, development, and testing of GM automobiles, the most important consideration was safety and that General Motors was "moving ahead" in this area. He disclosed that the corporation was making a $1,000,000 grant to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (M.I.T.) over the next four years for a "long-range, in-depth analysis of all facets of the safety problem -- the car, the road, the driver and their various interactions." He went on to say that the current lack of uniformity in reporting accidents and the tendency to combine accident records into "gross averages" made it difficult to analyze the cause of accidents, and that the M.I.T. study would constitute a badly needed "systems engineering approach" to the highway safety problem.

Donner, however, asserted that the installment of safety features as standard equipment depended to a large degree on public acceptance. He said: "If we were to force on people the things they are not prepared to buy, we would face a customer revolt." "For these reasons," he stated, "the improvement of our automobiles -- in the safety as well as in other areas -- has been evolutionary."

James Roche, president of General Motors, said the 1966 models of GM cars would have as standard equipment 13 of the 16 safety items specified by the General Services Administration for Government vehicles. As to mandatory exhaust control (also specified by the GSA), he said the "economic advisability" of such an expensive program on a national basis was questionable since it had not been proven that such a system was needed in many areas of the country.

Roche stated that safer automobiles alone could "not be viewed as a panacea" for the highway safety problem. He said, "It is vital that extensive efforts be concentrated on the correction of road, driver, and vehicle maintenance deficiencies. The state and local governments have the major responsibility in this area, particularly with respect to sound traffic laws and their enforcement, mandatory motor vehicle safety inspection, improved standards of driver licensing, expanded driver education programs, and the provision of good roads and streets."

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) criticized the GM officials for lack of concern with the problem of automobile safety. Citing a Cornell University study indicating that the doors of GM cars were more prone to come off during a collision than the doors of competitive makes, Kennedy said he was "shocked" that the GM officials were not familiar with the study, adding that their lack of familiarity didn't indicate "a very high priority for traffic safety."

Kennedy also ridiculed as inadequate the proposed $1,000,000 grant to M.I.T. to study the problems of traffic safety in view of GM's profit margin, which Donner said was about $1.7 billion annually. Kennedy suggested that if the company spent just one percent of this on traffic safety it would mean an expenditure of $17 million. (GM July 17 issued a statement estimating that the company spent $193 million in 1964 on programs related to safety, durability, and reliability of their cars. Of this total, the company estimated that $124 million was spent on safety alone.)

July 14 -- Harry E. Chesebrough, representing the Chrysler Corporation, proposed that the Government establish and finance a center for intensive study of causes of traffic accidents. He said that such a center could be a great help in the effort to determine the effectiveness of proposed injury-reducing features of cars.

Ribicoff brought out the fact that certain 1965 Chryslers, Dodges and Plymouth Furys had been sold with steering mechanisms that could break away from their moorings unless rewelded.

Chesebrough asserted that Chrysler had immediately taken corrective action and had notified its dealers, but he admitted that owners of the defective cars had not been notified, although the company had the serial numbers of the suspect cars.

Kennedy said he was "shocked" that Chrysler had not notified the owners of the defective cars, adding that the company could have no knowledge of how many accidents the cars in question may have caused. Kennedy also said he could not understand why the idea of a collapsible steering column, recommended by the Cornell Crash Injury Research Program a decade ago, had not been implemented.

Drivers Blamed for Most Accidents

July 15 -- Roy Abernethy, president of American Motors Corp., stressed the role of the driver in traffic accidents. Referring to a recent statement of the National Safety Council which said that nine out of ten accidents were due to improper driving, Abernethy said, "All indications point to driver attitude as the most significant factor in accidents."

Abernethy also mentioned the lack of uniformity in traffic laws and the "laxity" in licensing procedures as factors in accidents. He said accidents could be reduced through more effective enforcement of existing laws and that the laws themselves needed "further study and improvement."

As to the proposed safety features specified by GSA, Abernethy expressed doubt over the effectiveness of shoulder belts and said it was dubious whether a collapsible steering column would be "beneficial in a collision involving a car traveling at 60 miles an hour."

July 21 -- Arjay Miller, president of the Ford Motor Co., said that the company's 1966 models would include 14 of the 16 safety items required by GSA but that exhaust control, GSA's 17th requirement, would be installed only on cars sold in California. He said it was the company's belief that "safety sells cars."

Miller estimated that Ford was spending about $138 million annually on automotive safety and said the company in 1965 would spend an additional $2 million on "service campaigns" to make improvements with possible safety implications on cars already built.

The Ford president called for the use of computers to attack traffic safety problems. He said computers could help in obtaining a "multi-objective analysis" of all the factors involved in highway and traffic transportation.

Miller pointed out, as had other witnesses, that the driver, the highway, and the extent of law enforcement were factors, as well as the car, in traffic safety.

In an additional statement, Miller said, among other things, that Ford was "doubling" its financial commitment to its Automotive Safety Center to expand its work in safety and was proposing to the Automobile Manufacturers Association "increased industry cooperation on safety research," with particular emphasis on mitigating the severity of injuries suffered in crashes.

MEDICAL LIBRARIES

S 597 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 756) Sept. 20, 1965.

HR 3142 -- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 1026) Sept. 20.

S 597 -- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 22.

● Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote Oct. 1 after HR 3142 was passed by a 296-3 roll-call vote. (See p. 1014)

● House amendments agreed to by voice vote of the Senate Oct. 12.

PL 89-291 -- Signed into law Oct. 22.

Congress in 1965 enacted a bill (S 597) authorizing $105 million for a four-year program of federal matching grants to build medical library facilities and a five-year program of grants to expand medical library services, establish regional medical libraries and provide other assistance.

The Administration-backed legislation, which met with almost no opposition in Congress, provided funds for the matching grant program over the fiscal 1966-70 period to cope with the tremendous expansion of knowledge in the field of medical science. The legislation was designed to furnish space, facilities and trained personnel to deal with the massive body of published information and to advance new methods of collecting and disseminating material needed by health professionals.

S 597, as enacted, contained the provisions of a substituted House bill (HR 3142) which differed from the original Senate bill mainly in the amounts authorized. Instead of the Senate's $117.5 million total, the House and the final bill authorized $105 million, cutting the Senate's library construction grants by $10 million and other programs by $2.5 million. The only votes against the bill were cast by Reps. Paul Findley (R Ill.), Charles M. Teague (R Calif.) and John Bell Williams (D Miss.).

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, the Medical Library Assistance Act (S 597):

Required the Board of Regents of the National Library of Medicine (which is part of the Public Health Service) to advise the Surgeon General in preparing regulations and in policy matters arising in administration of the Act. Required Board approval of an application for a grant for construction of a medical library facility before the grant could be made.

Defined "sciences related to health" to include medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, and fundamental and applied sciences related to these fields.

Construction of Facilities. Authorized $40 million -- $10 million annually in fiscal 1967-70 -- for grants to aid construction or improvement of non-profit medical library facilities. Authorized the Surgeon General to award grants for up to 75 percent of the construction costs. Required that the library be intended for use as a medical library facility for at least 20 years, that sufficient matching funds be available for construction and operating costs, and that contractors pay prevailing wages as determined by the Davis-Bacon Act.

Training in Medical Library Sciences. Authorized $5 million -- $1 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for grants to individuals and non-profit institutions for training and retraining in medical library science and in the field of communication of information.

Special Scientific Projects. Authorized $2.5 million -- $500,000 annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for assistance, through fellowships to physicians and scientists, in the compilation of existing and the creation of original contributions relating to advancements in sciences related to health.

Research and Development. Authorized $15 million -- $3 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for grants or contracts for research and investigations in medical library science and related activities, and for the development of new techniques, systems and equipment for processing, storing, retrieving and distributing information pertaining to health sciences.

Improving and Expanding Basic Resources. Authorized $15 million -- $3 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for grants of money and materials to non-profit medical libraries and related scientific communication organizations to expand and improve their basic medical library or related resources (books, catalogues, duplicating equipment, film projectors, etc.). Provided that no grant in a single year could exceed $200,000.

Establishment of Regional Medical Libraries. Authorized $12.5 million -- $2.5 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for grants to enable existing non-profit medical libraries to serve as regional medical libraries for the geographic areas in which they are located.

National Library of Medicine Regional Branches. Authorized $10 million -- $2 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for the establishment, as a branch of the National Library, of a regional medical library in locations where no existing library could be feasibly developed into a regional library.

Support of Biomedical Scientific Publications. Authorized $5 million -- $1 million annually in fiscal 1966-70 -- for grants or contracts for up to three years to non-profit institutions of higher education or individual scientists to support non-profit biomedical scientific publications and the compilation of reviews, abstracts, handbooks, indexes and related matter pertaining to scientific works and development.

Background

The National Library of Medicine, at Bethesda, Md., is the nation's largest medical library. It began as an Army medical library in 1836, became the Armed Forces Medical Library in 1952, and was transferred in 1956 to the Public Health Service as the National Library of Medicine. It serves the needs of other libraries, usually with photo-duplicated copies of documents, and generally collects, disseminates, and exchanges information important to medicine and public health.

Support for the Bill

Legislation to expand the resources and authorities of the National Library of Medicine was recommended by the President's Commission on Heart Disease, Cancer and Stroke in December 1964.

At House and Senate hearings in 1965 the legislation was supported by the American Medical and Dental Assns., the Assn. of American Medical Colleges, medical and other library associations and numerous universities and other groups.

In an April 21 letter to Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.), sponsor of S 597 and chairman of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, Anthony J. Celebrezze, then Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, "strongly" recommended enactment of the bill. "The plight of the nation's medical libraries is critical," Celebrezze wrote. Citing increased demands for medical information, he said, "Medical libraries are cramped for space, critically deficient in trained manpower, deplorably inadequate in resources and desperately in need of new methods for handling the growing medical literature."

The Budget Bureau, however, in a May 21 letter to Sen. Hill, raised some objections to the bill, particularly questioning the need for regional branches of the National Library of Medicine. The letter said the Office of Science and Technology (attached to the Executive Office of the President) was making a study of new techniques to improve the handling of scientific information and for this reason the Bureau recommended that the construction grants not begin until fiscal 1967. Both the Senate and House Committees, accordingly, amended the original bills to defer authorization of the construction grants until fiscal 1967.

In signing the bill into law (PL 89-291) Oct. 22 President Johnson said, "The nation's medical libraries are a vital link between medical education, practice and research. Yet in past years we have given too little attention to the problems of collecting and sharing scientific knowledge. This measure provides long-needed support for our medical libraries.... Its results, ultimately, will be not only an increase in the growth and spread of scientific knowledge, but a gain in health and well-being of the American people."

HOSPITAL CLOSINGS

Congress in 1965 forced the Johnson Administration to reduce the scope of proposed shutdowns of Public Health Service hospitals and of Veterans Administration hospitals and related veterans' facilities.

The Administration claimed that the planned closings were not intended to reduce the level of services provided by the Government, but simply to consolidate services and thus bring about savings of money. But Congressional protests eventually led the Administration to compromise. Where it had originally proposed closing 11 VA hospitals, 4 domiciliary homes (old soldiers' homes) and 16 VA regional benefit offices, the Administration finally agreed to close only 6 of the 11 hospitals, only 2 of the 4 domiciliaries and only 9 of the 16 regional benefit offices. Where it had originally proposed to close 7 (out of a total of 12) PHS general hospitals, the Administration finally agreed to close only 2 of the 7 immediately, leaving 2 for restudy and the other 3 open.

Despite the closings, both the VA and PHS retained substantial hospital capacity. On June 30, 1965, before any of the VA installations were closed, there were 168 VA hospitals with 118,896 beds available for use. Six months later, on Dec. 31, 1965, after the closings had been made and other changes had taken place, there were 165 VA hospitals with 116,857 beds available for use. Over the same six-month period, as a result of the closings, the number of VA domiciliaries dropped from 18 to 16, and the number of VA regional benefit offices from 66 to 57. The total of PHS general hospitals dropped from 12 to 10 as a result of the closings.

In a related action later in 1965, Congress in the disability compensation bill (HR 168) gave statutory authority to a 125,000 limit -- set by President Eisenhower administratively in 1959 -- on the number of beds in VA hospitals, and specified that the 125,000 hospital beds should be in addition to 4,000 nursing-care beds authorized in 1964. Some supporters of this provision interpreted it as intended to push the Administration into constructing enough new hospital facilities to increase its total beds to 125,000 in the very near future. But the House Veterans' Affairs Committee said the objective was not to force any immediate increase in the number of beds to 125,000, but rather to make clear by statute that the 4,000 nursing-care beds authorized in 1964 were not intended to be included in the 125,000 hospital bed limitation, and that the latter applied to hospital beds only, not nursing-care beds -- in case the matter should arise in the future. The Committee said the Budget Bureau had contended that the 125,000 limit included both hospital and nursing beds. The HR 168 provision made clear that this was not so.

Details of the major actions:

VA Closings

Closings Announced. The VA Jan. 12 announced that it planned to close 11 VA hospitals, 4 domiciliaries, and 16 regional offices throughout the country, with all the closings completed by June 30, in a move to save an estimated $23.5 million a year.

The VA said the hospitals to be closed were selected on the basis of low patient demand, staffing problems, and outmoded structures. It said the functions of the regional offices would be transferred to the nearest VA facility, and all hospital employees would be offered jobs elsewhere.

VA Administrator William J. Driver (whose nomination had then not yet been confirmed) said the order was in keeping with the "time-tested policy of locating and operating hospitals in close proximity and association with medical schools." (None of the facilities to be closed was adjacent to a medical school.)

He said that the medical program of the VA employed approximately 4 percent of the nation's physicians and 15,000 of the nation's nurses. In addition, he said it was the largest single employer of persons in several medically oriented professions, and contained almost 8 percent of the nation's hospital beds.

Driver said the closings would actually provide better medical care for veterans on a national basis by relocating beds from areas where they were not being used to areas which had insufficient beds.

Closings Criticized. The VA announcement brought vigorous protests from Members of Congress. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) Jan. 13 called the plan to close the facilities "an appalling, backward and insensitive act," and received support in these views from Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.). Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) Jan. 15 said the closings would "leave a hiatus in large areas where sick or impaired veterans will have to be transported a considerable distance."

Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) Jan. 22 introduced a resolution (S Res 38) urging the President to postpone closing of the VA hospitals (which were the major focus of Congressional protest; the domiciliary and regional benefit office closings received much less attention) until Congress had studied the matter. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) Jan. 26 introduced a resolution (S Con Res 13) calling upon the Administration, in effect, to increase the ceiling upon the total number of veterans' hospital beds -- set at 125,000 by President Eisenhower in 1959 by administrative action -- to 130,000 beds. (For action, see below)

The VA closing proposals were defended by some Congressmen. Rep. W. R. Poage (D Texas), for example, said in a Feb. 1 floor speech that much of the criticism of the VA closure move was "unjust" and based on "unsound or inaccurate information." Poage said he had "first-hand knowledge" of benefits gained from the December 1963 consolidation of the VA's Dallas regional office with the regional office in Waco, Texas.

Hearings Held. The Senate Labor and Public Welfare Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee held hearings on the closing proposals Jan. 22-28. Registering strong protests to Congress were representatives of the National Commanders of the American Legion, AMVETS, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Veterans of World War I, U.S.A., Inc., Disabled American Veterans, and the American Federation of Federal Employees (AFL-CIO).

Hearings were also held Feb. 18-23 by the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. Reps. Joseph Y. Resnick (D N.Y.) and Ray Roberts (D Texas) criticized the proposed closings as discriminating against rural areas.

The Budget Bureau and VA defended the proposals, saying they would improve rather than diminish veterans' care.

Driver Confirmation Delayed. One result of the dispute over the VA closings was a brief delay in the confirmation of William J. Driver as VA Administrator. President Johnson Dec. 26, 1964, had announced he would nominate Driver to the job, making him the first VA career official (he was then Deputy Administrator) to be named to the post on a regular, long-term basis (a few had served on an interim basis).

As a result of the VA closing controversy, Senate action on the nomination, initially scheduled for Jan. 15, 1965, was deferred. However, on Jan. 26 Sen. Lee Metcalf (D Mont.) withdrew his announced intention to oppose confirmation, (but later changed his mind and voted against Driver), and Mansfield said he was "not opposed to this nomination." Their move was reportedly prompted by Driver's announcement, the day before, that emergency and hardship cases would be accepted in VA hospitals until the final closing date.

Driver Confirmed -- The Senate Feb. 2 confirmed Driver as VA Administrator by a 75-7 roll-call vote. Before approving Driver, the Senate rejected, by a 23-58 roll call, a motion by Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) to postpone consideration of Driver until March 1. (For voting, see chart p. 1025)

Voting against confirmation were Sens. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), Norris Cotton (R N.H.), Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), Metcalf, Joseph M. Montoya (D N.M.), Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and Prouty.

The action followed two days of heated criticism of the VA's closing plans. Majority Leader Mansfield, one of the most outspoken critics of the VA closings, drew a distinction between the issues of closing hospitals and confirming Driver. Mansfield Feb. 1 called Driver an "able and conscientious public servant" and said he would vote for confirmation "without reservation." Many other opponents of the closings made similar remarks.

Mansfield and other critics of the closings Feb. 2 said their opposition to the VA plans would continue. Mansfield said that "one of the avenues open" was action by the Senate Appropriations Committee to prevent the closings. He said that he had discussed the problem "informally" with Sen. Warren Magnuson (D Wash.), chairman of the appropriations subcommittee handling VA appropriations.

Blocking Actions Taken. Mansfield's Feb. 2 remarks were followed, over the next several months, by a series of legislative actions. Details:

CCC Funds Bill Provision -- The Senate Feb. 3, by a standing vote, added to an agricultural funds bill (H J Res 234) an amendment by Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) which prohibited the VA from going ahead with the proposed closings. Mundt said his aim was to delay the closings until Congress could review the situation. Mansfield supported the amendment. No one spoke in opposition. However, Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) said the amendment was out of order because it was legislation on a subject not covered in the appropriations bill. Mundt made a motion that the rules be suspended so that the amendment could be considered. The Senate, by a standing vote, approved the motion, which required a two-thirds majority.

The House-Senate conferees Feb. 9 deleted the Senate amendment after some Administration officials told conference leaders that action on closing the facilities would be held up until July 1, 1965, to give Congress time to study the proposed changes.

The conference agreement collapsed after the President, learning of the matter, rejected the move to delay the closings. Mr. Johnson Feb. 10 told conference leaders that to delay the closings until July 1 would be too late for him to make plans for the next fiscal year. However, he agreed to delay the closings until May 1, a proposal which the conferees accepted and made a provision of the final bill.

During consideration of the conference report on H J Res 234 Feb. 10, both chambers took separate votes on the May 1 deadline provision, the House approving it by a 157-72 standing vote and the Senate approving it by a 62-9 (D 52-0; R 10-9) roll call. (See story, p. 190, and roll call, p. 1027.)

Two Actions Dropped -- One result of the complaints and actions described above was an April 3 decision by the President to appoint a special study group to re-examine the proposed closing. As a result, the House Veterans' Affairs Committee April 6 put aside consideration of proposals to order the closings delayed until June 30, and while the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee unanimously approved a similar proposal April 7, it went no further.

VA Funds Bill Provision -- The House May 11 by voice vote adopted an amendment to the Independent Offices Appropriations bill (HR 7997) which added $23.5 million to the total of VA funds for fiscal 1966 already in the bill. The additional $23.5 million, which had not been requested by the Administration or recommended by the Appropriations Committee, was the amount needed to operate the disputed VA hospitals, domiciliaries and regional benefit offices in fiscal 1966. House Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Olin E. Teague (D Texas), who sponsored the amendment, said that the funds should be made available pending the final decision as to whether to close all or some of the facilities. Teague said that without the added $23.5 million, there would be no money to keep the disputed facilities open beyond June 30 (the end of the current fiscal year), even if the Administration changed its mind. (By the time HR 7997 reached the Senate floor in July, the controversy over the VA facilities had been ended by a decision to keep about half of them open. The Senate therefore reduced the $23.5 million to the amount needed to keep open only those agreed to by the compromise -- approximately $14.6 million for the hospitals and domiciliaries, and $2.6 million for VA regional benefit offices. The Senate's figures were retained in the final version of the bill as signed into law Aug. 16. (See story, p. 154.)

Senate Adopts Resolution -- The Senate June 4 by voice vote adopted Sen. Clinton P. Anderson's (D N.M.) resolution (S Con Res 13) expressing the sense of Congress that the ceiling on total beds in veterans' hospitals, administratively set at 125,000 by President Eisenhower in 1959, be raised to 130,000. The resolution had been reported unanimously (S Rept 270) June 1 by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee and was approved by the Senate "in view of the present need for additional bed capacity."

In debate, Anderson said the Jan. 12 closure order necessitated an increase in the bed limitation because the 125,000 limit prevented construction of new hospitals and beds before the old ones were vacated. In addition, he said, the limitation should be raised because needs for VA beds were always increasing, and the VA had had a waiting list of 12,558 on Dec. 31, 1964. (The total waiting lists for all hospitals on Nov. 30, 1965, was 10,281.)

Joseph M. Montoya (D N.M.) said, "To be perfectly frank about it, the chief purpose of this bill is to make sure that all areas of this nation which are now served by (VA) hospitals will continue to be so served in the future." Anderson said the facilities singled out Jan. 12 for closings were "selected more or less on a computer basis instead of taking into consideration the human element." He said Senators "especially objected to the fact that Members of Congress were not consulted and given an opportunity to discuss these closings and make some presentation to the Department before the order went out." (One of the hospitals scheduled for closing and ultimately closed was in Anderson's state -- at Fort Bayard, N.M.)

House Disapproval Bill Reported -- The House Veterans' Affairs Committee June 8 reported a bill (HR 202 -- H Rept 450) affecting both the closings of VA facilities and the limitation on VA hospital beds. It provided that (1) the Committee must give specific prior approval to VA construction or acquisition of a hospital or old soldiers home costing over $100,000 and to VA alteration of existing facilities costing over $500,000; (2) the VA could alter an existing facility costing between $200,000 and $500,000 after filing a prospectus with the Committee if the Committee did not disapprove within 60 days; (3) no existing VA hospital or old soldiers home could be closed without specific Committee approval. In addition, HR 202 authorized the VA Administrator to establish and operate at least 125,000 beds in VA hospitals and 17,000 in old soldiers homes, in addition to 4,000 already authorized for nursing care for veterans -- for a total statutory authorization of 146,000 beds. (The only existing statutory authority was for the 4,000 nursing-care beds. See 1964 Almanac p. 284)

In a March 31 letter to the Committee, the VA recommended "strongly against" the bill and said the Budget Bureau had advised that it would not be in accord with the President's program. Its comments concerned only the closing and alteration requirements and did not mention the bed limitations. The letter said the Justice Department had advised that the closure prohibition would be "an invasion of the constitutional principle of separation of Executive and Legislative powers," and that other provisions would "seriously impair" systematic long-range planning which the VA found necessary if it was to operate effectively.

The bill never reached the House floor.

Study Group Named. The Congressional criticism described above led President Johnson April 3 to announce appointment of a special advisory committee to study the VA closure proposals and report to him by June 1 "on the merits of continuing these facilities in full operation or closing them." At an April 1 press conference, he said that the hearings and some of the testimony of representatives of the areas where hospitals were closed "raised doubts in my mind whether we were 100 percent right."

Closing Order Revised. In a partial concession to Congressional opposition, President Johnson June 8 followed recommendations of the special advisory committee and ordered the VA to close only 6 of the 11 hospitals, 2 of the 4 domiciliary homes, and only 9 of the 16 regional benefit offices. (These closings were actually completed by the end of August.) (Continued on next page)

Hospitals, Domiciliaries Affected. Following is a list of the hospitals and old soldiers homes affected by the June 8 order, followed by the name and party of the Representatives and Senators from the areas affected.

Hospitals closed: Sunmount, Tupper Lake, N.Y. -- Rep. McEwen (R), Sens. Javits (R) and Kennedy (D); Dwight, Ill. -- Rep. Arends (R), Sens. Dirksen (R) and Douglas (D); Rutland Heights, Mass. -- Rep. Philbin (D), Sens. Kennedy (D) and Saltonstall (R); Fort Bayard, N.M. -- Reps. Morris and Walker (both D, elected at large), Sens. Anderson (D) and Montoya (D); Broadview Heights, Ohio -- Rep. Minshall (R), Sens. Lausche (D) and Young (D); McKinney, Texas -- Rep. Roberts (D), Sens. Yarborough (D) and Tower (R).

Old soldiers homes closed: Thomasville, Ga. -- Rep. O'Neal (D), Sens. Russell (D) and Talmadge (D); Clinton, Iowa -- Rep. Culver (D), Sens. Hickenlooper (R) and Miller (R).

Hospitals remaining open: Lincoln, Neb. -- Rep. Callan (D), Sens. Curtis (R) and Hruska (R); Grand Junction, Colo. -- Rep. Aspinall (D), Sens. Allott (R) and Dominick (R); Miles City, Mont. -- Rep. Battin (R), Sens. Mansfield (D) and Metcalf (D); Castle Point, N.Y. -- Rep. Resnick (D), Sens. Javits (R) and Kennedy (D); Bath, N.Y. -- Rep. Goodell (R), Sens. Javits (R) and Kennedy (D).

Old soldiers homes remaining open: White City, Ore. -- Rep. Duncan (D), Sens. Morse (D) and Neuberger (D); and Bath, N.Y., Rep. Goodell (R) and Sens. Kennedy (D) and Javits (R).

Of the eight facilities closed, six were authorized by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to be transferred to the individual states for use as state hospitals. The Broadview Heights hospital in Cleveland was to be used as a diagnostic, training and educational facility for the mentally retarded. The Dwight, Ill. hospital became a facility for the mentally retarded also. The Fort Bayard hospital in New Mexico was designated as a home for the indigent aged. The hospital in Sunmount, N.Y., and the domiciliary home in Thomasville, Ga., both became state mental hospitals, and the Rutland Heights, Mass. hospital was to be used for patients with chronic and other diseases.

The other two facilities were retained for federal use: the McKinney, Texas, hospital became an Office of Economic Opportunity Job Corps site, and the domiciliary home in Clinton, Iowa, was awaiting clearance from HEW for Job Corps usage.

Note: Although six VA hospitals were shut down in 1965, as described above, construction was completed in 1965 on two wholly new VA hospitals (not replacements) -- in Atlanta, Ga., and Charleston, S.C. In addition, locations were approved for eventual construction of three wholly new hospitals -- Columbia, Mo.; Long Island N.Y.; and Chicago (South-side), Ill. All were scheduled for completion in fiscal 1966. Several replacement hospitals were also completed.

Regional Offices Closed. Following is a list of the nine VA regional benefit offices closed Aug. 31, 1965, followed by the location of the office to which the work of the shutdown office was transferred: Albany, N.Y. - Brooklyn, N.Y.; Syracuse, N.Y. - Buffalo, N.Y.; Manhattan and Brooklyn, N.Y., consolidated: Wilkes-Barre, Pa. - Philadelphia, Pa.; Cincinnati, Ohio - Cleveland, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo., - St. Louis, Mo.; Shreveport, La. - New Orleans, La.; Lubbock, Texas - Waco, Texas; San Antonio, Texas - Houston, Texas.

PHS Closings

Closings Proposed. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare Jan. 19, 1965, announced that seven of the 12 existing Public Health Service general hospitals -- in Chicago, Memphis, Savannah, Boston, Galveston, Norfolk and Detroit -- would be closed by 1969 for economy reasons. The remaining five PHS general hospitals would be kept open and enlarged. The plan for closing the hospitals called for transferring care of merchant seamen (the main group served by PHS general hospitals) to Veterans Administration hospitals. Merchant seamen were to be given priority in VA hospitals over veterans with non-service-connected disabilities and the VA would be granted authority to build additional facilities earmarked for the care of merchant seamen.

Protests. The proposed PHS general hospital closings brought protests from various sources.

Comptroller General Joseph Campbell June 7, in a written opinion to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, said that any action "which would subordinate statutory beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration to beneficiaries of other agencies and constitute a relinquishment of the Veterans' Administration's primary responsibility" would not be proper under existing legislation.

In other actions, the House Government Operations Committee June 23 and the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee July 12 issued reports (H Rept 544, H Rept 610) criticizing the planned closings of the seven PHS general hospitals. The Government Operations Committee report (H Rept 544) stated that HEW had initially opposed the closing of the seven hospitals (advocated since the late 1950s by the Budget Bureau) but had been forced to back down when President Johnson agreed with the Budget Bureau. The report was critical of both HEW and the Budget Bureau for alleged lack of objectivity in studies they had made into the PHS hospital situation. It recommended that the hospital closings be reconsidered, with "particular attention being given to the situations in Boston, Galveston and Norfolk."

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee report (H Rept 610) said the plans to close the PHS hospitals were made without "adequate study" of the impact. It said, "The Committee is firmly of the opinion that the quality and level of care to be rendered to PHS beneficiaries must not be diminished or demeaned by budgetary privation."

In a related development, the Senate Commerce Merchant Marine and Fisheries Subcommittee June 11 held hearings on a bill (S 1917) to prohibit the transfer of responsibility for care of merchant seamen from the PHS to any other governmental agency such as the VA and to prohibit the closing of any PHS hospital without consent of the "appropriate" Congressional committees. The full Committee took no action on the bill.

Plan Revised. HEW Secretary Anthony J. Celebrezze July 6 announced that instead of being closed, the Boston, Norfolk and Galveston PHS general hospitals would be kept open. He said the Detroit and Savannah hospitals' status would be restudied. (No decision on whether to close these hospitals had been made as of Feb. 1, 1966.) However, the Chicago and Memphis PHS general hospitals were officially closed July 1, as previously planned.

VETERANS' COMPENSATION

HR 168 -- Reported, amended, by House Veterans' Affairs Committee (H Rept 782) Aug. 12, 1965.
- Passed by the House on a 348-0 roll-call vote Sept. 7. (See p. 996)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 861) Oct. 11.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Oct. 15.
- Conference report (H Rept 1201) agreed to Oct. 21 by voice votes of the House and Senate.

PL 89-311 -- Signed into law Oct. 31.

Congress in 1965 provided "cost-of-living" increases averaging 10 percent in the rates of monthly compensation payable by the Veterans' Administration to veterans with service-connected disabilities and their dependents. The bill also eased eligibility requirements for monthly payments for certain categories of veterans' children attending school after the age of 18, and raised the monthly payment amount for one group of such children.

The first-year cost of all the increases in monthly benefits in HR 168 was estimated at $176 million. Of the total, approximately $136 million was for the increases in basic monthly compensation, which were payable to 1.8 million veterans with wartime service-connected disabilities and 145,000 veterans with peacetime service-connected disabilities; $11.5 million was for the increases in monthly dependents' benefits, which would be received by approximately 300,000 of the above veterans to help support their dependents; and $28.5 million was for the cost of the provisions relating to children over 18 attending school. The Administration supported the benefit increases, but sought a less costly package.

Hospital Bed Dispute. The final bill also contained several minor provisions (see below for details), one of which caused the only major controversy on the bill. The provision, inserted by the House Veterans' Affairs Committee and opposed by the Administration, gave statutory authority to a 125,000-bed limit -- set by President Eisenhower administratively in 1959 -- on the number of beds in VA hospitals. It also specified that the 125,000-bed limit did not include 4,000 veterans' nursing-care beds authorized by Congress in 1964. (The actual number of beds available for use in VA hospitals was 116,857 as of Dec. 31, 1965; the 125,000 figure was merely a ceiling.)

It was the contention of the Budget Bureau prior to passage of HR 168 that the 4,000 nursing-care beds were intended to be included within the 125,000-bed ceiling set in 1959. The House Veterans' Affairs Committee, to correct this "erroneous" interpretation, decided to add to HR 168 a provision stating explicitly that the 125,000-bed ceiling was sanctioned by law, and that the 4,000 nursing-care beds were not to be included in the 125,000 ceiling.

The Budget Bureau, arguing against this provision, appeared to take the view that it really was designed to pressure the Administration to increase the actual number of operable beds in VA hospitals from the current level of approximately 116,000 to the 125,000 ceiling figure as rapidly as possible. Some supporters of the provision also gave it that interpretation, prompted, in part, by a related dispute over Administration proposals to close certain little-used VA hospitals and shift the patients to the remaining hospitals. (See story p. 395) The Bureau said that any such rapid increase in the number of VA hospital beds was "neither necessary or desirable." It said a ceiling of 125,000 beds, including the 4,000 nursing beds, would be adequate to take care of current needs. The major problem, the Bureau said, was not insufficient beds, but maldistribution.

The Bureau added that the medical care provisions for the aged in the Social Security amendments of 1965 (see p. 236) would reduce applications for VA hospital care, since some needy veterans would be able to receive their hospital care elsewhere under the Social Security provisions.

The House Veterans' Affairs Committee claimed, however, that the purpose of the hospital bed provision had never really been to force any immediate increase in VA hospital beds to 125,000 over the wishes of the President. It pointed out that the provision authorized the VA Administrator to have in operation 125,000 hospital beds "subject to the approval of the President." The objective, the Committee said, was simply to make clear by statute that the 4,000 nursing-care beds were not to be included in the 125,000 hospital-bed limitation, in case the question arose at some future time when the VA was nearly reaching the limit.

Dropped in the Senate, the hospital bed provision was restored in conference. Referring to this provision, President Johnson, in signing the bill, said rapid increases in the number of beds were not "practical" but the Administration would continue its program of hospital modernization. The VA subsequently said that, of the 4,000 nursing-care beds authorized in 1964, 1,559 had been activated; the figure would reach 2,000 by June 30, 1966, and the entire 4,000 would be activated by June 30, 1967.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 168:

Authorized increases averaging 10 percent in the rates of monthly compensation payable to veterans with service-connected disabilities. (Although the increases made by this provision averaged 10 percent, they actually ranged from 5 percent for the least disabled to 20 percent for the most disabled, with the greatest increases for those who were 50-percent or more disabled. In dollar terms, the increases ranged from $1 a month for a service-disabled veteran whose disability was rated as 10-percent disabling for work purposes, to $50 for one whose disability was rated as 100 percent for work purposes and $75 or $85 for one who, in addition to having disabilities rated as 100 percent, also had suffered specified anatomical losses or combinations of disabilities. Under the new benefit scale set by HR 168, total monthly compensation would range from $21 for a veteran rated 10-percent disabled to $300 for one rated 100-percent disabled and up to $600 for those with additional specified anatomical losses and combinations of disabilities. Corresponding figures under the old scale were $20, $250 and $525. Payments for dependents and for aid-and-attendance would be in addition to the above basic rates.)

Authorized a flat 10-percent, across-the-board increase in the rates of monthly compensation payable for dependents of veterans with service-connected disabilities. (Note: Under an existing provision of law which was not changed by HR 168, a service-disabled veteran was eligible for the monthly compensation for his dependents only if he were rated 50-percent disabled or more.)

Increased the disability compensation rates for blind veterans also suffering from total deafness.

Provided that a veteran with total service-connected deafness of one ear, who also suffered from total deafness of the other ear from non-service-connected causes, should be paid compensation at the same rate as applicable in cases where deafness in both ears was service-connected. (This meant a higher rate.)

Provided that monthly benefits for a dependent child attending school would continue until the child reached his 23rd birthday, instead of stopping when the child reached his 21st. Applied this change in the age limit to all categories of children for whom such benefits were paid -- whether under the service-connected disability compensation system, the Dependency and Indemnity Compensation (DIC) System, the death compensation system, the pension system or the death pension system. (Note: Under existing law, the VA made monthly support payments for a minor unmarried child of a living veteran who was receiving service-connected disability compensation or non-service-connected pension, or of a deceased veteran whose family was eligible for DIC, death compensation or death pension. The payments normally ceased when the child reached his 18th birthday but could continue to the 21st birthday if the child were attending school; the age limit was now increased to the 23rd birthday.

For one category of children attending school described in the above paragraph -- namely, the child of a living service-disabled veteran -- increased the basic monthly dependent child's payment from $16 a month to $40 a month during the period while the child was attending school between his 18th and 23rd birthdays.

Permitted all holders of the Congressional Medal of Honor to receive the $100 monthly pension currently awarded only to medal holders who were at least 40 years old.

Extended the provisions of the 1944 Veterans Preference Act (giving preference in federal employment to veterans) to persons who were injured or became ill when reporting for military service.

Authorized the U.S. Attorney General to defend any malpractice suit brought against a physician, dentist, nurse, pharmacist, paramedical (for example, medical and dental technicians, nursing assistants and therapists) or other supporting personnel in the VA Department of Medicine and Surgery as a result of carrying out their duties for the VA. Provided that the Government would pay the cost of such a claim if the case were lost in court.

Repealed an existing law which prohibited more than 10 percent of federal grants appropriated for construction of state nursing-care beds for veterans from going to any one state.

Provided that funds would be allocated to states to construct nursing-care beds on a ratio of one-and-a-half beds for each 1,000 veterans residing in the state, instead of the existing ratio of one-half bed per 1,000 veterans.

Authorized the VA Administrator, subject to the approval of the President, to establish and operate 125,000 hospital beds in VA hospitals. Specified that the construction of 4,000 nursing-care beds authorized in 1964 would be in addition to these hospital beds.

BACKGROUND. Monthly compensation rates for all categories of veterans with service-connected disabilities (disabilities suffered while in service) were last increased in 1962; rates for their dependents, in 1957. (For stories on these and other veterans' bills, see 1957 Almanac p. 669; 1962 Almanac p. 218; 1963 Almanac p. 244-46; 1964 Almanac p. 284-85; "Congress and the Nation," p. 1335.)

The Veterans Administration in 1965 favored disability compensation and dependents' benefit increases, but preferred a bill (HR 171), which was not acted upon, that gave proportionately greater increases to veterans with severe disabilities than did HR 168. The VA said HR 171 would better take into account the fact that totally disabled veterans had few work opportunities, whereas those with 10-90 percent disabilities were finding progressively greater work opportunities. The cost of increases for service-disabled veterans alone (not including dependents' increases) under HR 171 was $91 million the first year, compared with $136 million for the same group under HR 168.

HOUSE COMMITTEE. The House Veterans' Affairs Committee Aug. 12 reported HR 168 (H Rept 782) with substantially the same provisions as ultimately enacted into law, but containing two provisions later dropped in conference. One made it easier for the parent of a veteran who died of service-connected causes to receive monthly Dependency and Indemnity Compensation payments, by easing the income (need) test for such parents. The other gave the head of the VA office in Europe the diplomatic status of attache, and broadened the office's authority and functions.

HOUSE FLOOR ACTION. The House passed HR 168, without floor amendments, Sept. 7 by a 348-0 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 996)

SENATE COMMITTEE. The Senate Finance Committee Oct. 11 reported HR 168 (S Rept 861). The only Committee changes deleted House provisions relating to: the DIC income test for parents (deferred for further study); extension of the Veterans' Preference Act to those injured while reporting for service; the VA European office (the State Department said it preferred to make the office head an attache by administrative designation); malpractice suits against VA medical personnel (deferred for further study); the 125,000-bed ceiling (deleted at the request of Sen. Ralph Yarborough, D Texas, because the "apparently mandatory language" might be interpreted as requiring an increase in the actual number of hospital beds.) The Committee added a Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) amendment to exclude increases in Social Security payments under 1965 legislation (see p. 236) from being counted as income in determining a veteran's need for a non-service-connected pension. Otherwise, the Committee said, some veterans might lose their pensions or have them reduced. Similar amendments were offered unsuccessfully by Jack Miller (R Iowa) during debate on the Social Security bill and on a war orphans' education bill (HR 227). The Curtis amendment was dropped in conference on HR 168. It was not enacted elsewhere.

SENATE FLOOR ACTION. The Senate passed HR 168 Oct. 15 by voice vote, without floor amendments.

CONFERENCE. The conference report, filed Oct. 21 (H Rept 1201), restored the House provisions on the Veterans' Preference Act, malpractice suits, the 125,000-hospital bed limitation, but not the House provisions on parents' income limitations for DIC eligibility or on the VA European office. It dropped the Curtis amendment. The conference report was agreed to Oct. 21 by voice votes of the House and Senate.

COLD WAR VETERANS' BILL PASSED BY SENATE

S 9 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 269) June 1, 1965.
● Passed by a 69-17 roll-call vote of the Senate July 19. (See p. 1060)

The Senate in 1965, for the second time since 1959, passed a "Cold War GI Bill" opposed by the incumbent Administration. The House Veterans' Affairs Committee held hearings on the measure (S 9) and, when the session adjourned, enactment of the bill seemed likely in 1966 in view of the growing U.S. involvement in the war in Viet Nam.

S 9 authorized educational, vocational training and housing assistance to veterans who served in the armed forces between Jan. 31, 1955, when the Korean War GI Bill benefits expired, and July 1, 1967, the date of expiration of the current draft law. Because officially the United States was not at war during this period, those serving were dubbed "Cold War GIs." An estimated 5.5 million such veterans were to be covered by S 9 at a cost of between $325 and $400 million annually. The bill, sponsored by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), was supported by most veterans' lobbies. It was similar to measures passed by the Senate in 1959 and reported to the Senate in 1961 and 1963.

The Johnson Administration, as had all Administrations since the Korean War era, opposed the bill in 1965, citing as reasons for its opposition the cost of the program and the fact that readjustment benefits were traditionally reserved for those who were subject to combat situations. The Administration also said S 9's benefits would overlap those made available to veterans, as well as to nonveterans, under such programs as the 1965 Housing Act (HR 7984 -- PL 89-117) and the 1965 Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329). (See stories p. 358, 294) The Defense Department opposed the education sections of S 9 on the grounds that they would discourage servicemen from re-enlisting.

President Johnson Jan. 12, 1966, in his State of the Union Message, however, departed from the traditional Administration opposition to such legislation when he said, "Let us fulfill and improve the great health and education programs of last year, extending special opportunities to those who risk their lives in our armed forces." The President's endorsement, however, did not cover as broad a range of benefits as S 9 provided.

In 1965, most of the controversy over readjustment benefits centered on the proposal to extend such benefits to veterans who served in peacetime. Republicans, both in committee and on the floor of the Senate, attempted to limit the bill to combat veterans. An amendment by Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), which would have broadened the benefits provided in S 9 but limited them to persons serving in areas of hostilities, was rejected on a 26-52 roll-call vote. Roughly similar proposals by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), in committee, and Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.), on the floor, also were defeated.

The rationale behind the extension of benefits to peacetime veterans, as stated by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee in reporting S 9, was that "never before in our history has the United States had such a continued period of compulsory military service during an era of relative peace."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, the Cold War Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act (S 9) contained the following major provisions:

Made eligible for benefits under the Act any veteran who served on active duty in the armed forces between Jan. 31, 1955, and July 1, 1967, for more than 180 days and was not dishonorably discharged, or for less than 180 days if he was discharged for a service-connected disability.

Entitled each eligible veteran to education or training for a period of 1-1/2 times the duration of his service between Jan. 31, 1955, and July 1, 1967, up to a maximum of 36 months. Provided that a veteran on active duty beyond July 1, 1967, would have his benefits calculated to the date of his discharge. Required that education and training begin within three years after discharge or enactment of the bill, whichever was later, and end within eight years after discharge or enactment of the bill, whichever was later.

Authorized the Veterans Administration to make monthly payments to eligible veterans for education or vocational training. Authorized maximum payments to those enrolled in full-time education programs of $110 a month if single and $135-$160 a month if they had dependents. Reduced the allowances for less than full-time courses and for on-the-job, on-the-farm and apprenticeship training.

Included as eligible educational institutions public and private elementary, secondary, vocational and business schools, including correspondence schools, and colleges, universities and professional schools.

Made veterans meeting the above requirements for educational benefits also eligible for VA guaranteed and direct loans for purchase of homes, farmlands, livestock and farm machinery, but not businesses.

Authorized the VA to guarantee 60 percent, up to a limit of $7,500, on home loans made by private lenders and 50 percent, up to a limit of $4,000, on non-residential real estate loans. Interest rates would correspond to those on Korean War veterans' loans (maximum rate of 5.25 percent annually) and the maximum maturity would be 30 years (farm real estate, 40 years).

Provided for direct loans of up to $15,000 for veterans in small towns and rural areas where loans from private lenders were not available.

Required payment to the VA of a fee of not more than one-half of 1 percent of the total loan amount by those receiving loan guarantees and direct loans.

Set June 30, 1977, as the cutoff date for loan guarantees and direct loans.

Background

REFERENCES -- "Cold War GI Bill" (1963 Almanac p. 213; 1961 Almanac p. 207); Veterans' Benefits, 1945-64 (Congress and the Nation, p. 1335).

The Second World War began a new era in federal benefits for veterans. Both the scope and the volume of benefits expanded enormously, and the Veterans Administration was, throughout most of the postwar era, the second or third highest spending federal agency.

The expansion resulted in part from the fact that there were so many World War II veterans. Some 16,535,000 persons were in the armed forces during World War II, more than in all other U.S. wars combined, including Korea, and the number of in-service deaths in World War II, 406,000, was the highest of any war.

In a series of laws passed from 1940-1944, Congress extended to World War II veterans the traditional, basic veterans' benefits to which veterans of previous wars, and in some cases peacetime veterans, were already entitled.

The four most important of these benefits were (1) monthly disability compensation payments for veterans who had suffered disabilities in service (service-connected disabilities), and death compensation for the survivors of persons who had died in service or later of service-connected causes; (2) free hospital, medical and domiciliary care for veterans with service-connected disabilities; (3) pensions for war veterans who, although not injured in service, subsequently became needy and incapable of work, and for needy survivors of war veterans who had died of causes not related to their service; and (4) low-cost Government life insurance (National Service Life Insurance).

The extension of the traditional, basic benefits to the huge World War II veteran-population (and later, in 1951, to Korean War veterans) was enough in itself to enlarge greatly the federal veterans' programs. Thus, appropriations for compensation and pensions in 1940, the last prewar year, were $429 million. In 1946, the first postwar year, the figure had risen to over $1.2 billion; and by 1964 (when Korean War veterans also were receiving benefits) the amount was in the neighborhood of $4 billion. Similarly, medical-hospital expenditures and facilities had to be substantially increased. In 1940, an average daily patient load in VA hospitals was 52,409. By 1945, when there were 97 VA hospitals, the load had risen to 64,317. By 1964, the number of hospitals had risen to 168 and the average daily patient load to 110,159. (For 1965 developments, see story p. 395)

Earlier Readjustments Benefits

Another factor that brought about expansion of VA activities and expenditures was the initiation of a wholly new (or almost wholly new) type of benefits -- "readjustment benefits."

The purpose of readjustment benefits was to help the veteran, even if he was not disabled or destitute, to make an easy and successful transition back to civilian life, and to make up for education, business and other opportunities lost while in service. The idea of readjustment assistance had limited precedents in the vocational rehabilitation program in the 1920s for service-disabled World War I veterans, in various veterans' preference laws or regulations relating to federal employment, and in bonus payments made in the past to war veterans.

But it was not until the Second World War period that Congress, at the urging of President Roosevelt (and with the strong endorsement of the veterans' organizations), created a substantial system of readjustment benefits. Like the basic, traditional benefits, most of the readjustment benefits were later extended to veterans of the Korean War as well as the Second World War, and a few (but only a few) were extended to peacetime veterans as well.

The first readjustment benefit was contained in the Selective Service Act of 1940, which required draftees to be given their old jobs back again after discharge. In 1943 Congress provided free vocational rehabilitation, with generous living allowances for the trainee, for service-disabled World War II veterans. In 1944 there were three important enactments -- the Veterans' Preference Act (preferred status for veterans in civil service employment), the Mustering-Out Pay Act (up to $300 mustering-out pay for World War II veterans), and the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, popularly known as the "GI Bill of Rights."

World War II, Korean War Benefits. The GI Bill was by far the most important readjustment benefit law. It provided the World War II veteran with a battery of readjustment aids, most of which, it should be noted, also helped to stimulate the economy against a possible postwar slump and served useful social purposes like improving the nation's educational level and providing better housing.

The GI Bill contained four major benefits for World War II veterans: (1) the right to special job-placement services from the United States Employment Service; (2) the right to up to four years of college training (or similar training) at Government expense, with the Government paying for living allowances as well as costs of tuition, books and fees; (3) the right to up to 52 weeks of unemployment insurance at a maximum of $20 a week; (4) the right to obtain VA-guaranteed loans for the purpose of buying a home, farm or business.

Millions of World War II veterans took advantage of the GI Bill and other readjustment benefits available to them. Despite some difficulties in administration of some of the programs, readjustment benefits proved so popular, and were considered so successful by Congress, that similar benefits were provided for Korean War veterans. A 1950 law made Korean War veterans eligible for vocational rehabilitation benefits, and the 1952 Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act ("Korean GI Bill of Rights") provided job-placement, education, unemployment insurance, home-loan and mustering-out-pay benefits similar to those voted in 1944 for World II veterans.

Indeed, the readjustment benefits were so popular that some of them were extended to veterans of peacetime service. After a few early amendments, the re-employment rights granted in the 1940 Selective Service Act applied to all persons who served in the armed services in wartime or peacetime. The veterans' civil service preference from its inception applied to war veterans generally and also to peacetime veterans who had service-connected disabilities. Unemployment benefits were extended to peacetime veterans in 1958 and vocational

Educational Training by War Veterans

According to VA figures, of 15,432,000 World War II veterans, 7,800,000 took training under the GI Bill, or just over 50 percent. Of 5,714,000 Korean War veterans, 2,390,700 took training (42 percent). Of the World War II training group, 29 percent took college-level courses. For Korean veterans, the college percentage increased to 51 percent.

	World War II	Korean War
College level	2,200,000	1,213,400
High school level	3,500,000	860,300
On-farm training	700,000	94,500
On-the-job training	1,400,000	222,500

rehabilitation rights to peacetime service-disabled veterans in 1962.

In short, by the 1960s peacetime veterans were eligible for the major benefits accorded to World War II and Korean War veterans except for educational training and home, farm and business loans. In 1959 the Senate passed a bill, opposed by the Eisenhower Administration, to grant such benefits to Cold War GIs. The House did not act on it. A similar bill was reported to the Senate in 1961 and debated in 1962 but laid aside. Again in 1963 a peacetime veterans' bill was reported but received no floor action.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate Labor and Public Welfare.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 8 - March 9 on S 9, a bill introduced by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), authorizing readjustment benefits to veterans who served in the armed forces between Jan. 31, 1955, and July 1, 1967.

TESTIMONY -- S 9 was opposed by the Veterans Administration, the Department of Defense and the Bureau of the Budget. In a Feb. 26 letter to the Committee, the VA said veterans education benefits should be "limited to situations where wartime service sharply disrupted career planning and called for special Government aid to ease the transition from wartime service back to civilian life." The VA also said that enactment of the President's higher education legislation would benefit all veterans as well as nonveterans. The Defense Department, also in a Feb. 26 letter, opposed the education sections of the bill because "programs of education and vocational assistance encourage personnel to leave military service immediately after accruing the maximum benefits which can be gained. This results in a serious handicap to the armed forces in their efforts to attract and retain qualified personnel on a career basis."

Organizations which gave S 9 general support during Senate hearings included the American Legion, American Veterans Committee, AFL-CIO, National Assn. of Homebuilders, Fleet Reserve Assn., National Farmers Union, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, Catholic War Veterans, Jewish War Veterans, AMVETS, National Education Assn. and the Reserve Officers Assn. of the U.S.

BILL REPORTED

Committee Views. The Committee report said young people entering the armed services since the Korean War "have been called upon to make the personal sacrifices associated with military service; yet they have been denied the readjustment aids so vitally needed to help them catch up with those of their contemporaries who were not asked to serve but who instead continued the more lucrative and comfortable pursuits of civil life." It said events "during the past four years have increased markedly the need for a readjustment program for cold war veterans.... The Veterans Administration estimates that by 1970, there will be almost 6 million persons who will have served on active duty in the military for an extended period of time after Jan. 31, 1955." In the event of "a worsening situation in Viet Nam or another crisis such as occurred over Cuba, or a prolonged period of active military engagement in the Dominican Republic, we can expect that number to be even greater, with a stepped-up draft or necessarily extended tours of active duty for reservists," the report said.

The Committee noted that S 9 was less liberal than the programs for war veterans in that it required more than 180 days' active service, instead of 90 days, did not provide business loans, and set a fee on other loans so that cold war veterans "themselves would pay for losses under their program."

Minority Views. All five Republican members of the Committee signed minority views opposing the bill. They supported instead an amendment offered by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), to limit benefits to veterans who had served in areas of hostilities. "The facts of a consistent opposition by both Democratic and Republican Administrations and the demonstrated reluctance of the Congress to act can only impel the conclusion that if a grateful nation is to extend veterans benefits to the post-Korean conflict GI, such legislation should not include literally peacetime service," the Republican Committee members said. "It should...only encompass those who have been subjected to the hazards of war...." Pointing out that the Javits substitute "would cost only a fraction" of what S 9 would cost, they stressed that "our opposition is not founded on this high cost alone, but we do emphasize that this money could better be expended in the national interest in furthering higher education opportunities." The Republicans said they supported "equal inclusion of peacetime veterans" in any higher education legislation that might be reported.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate July 19 passed S 9 by a 69-17 roll-call vote and sent it to the House (For voting, see chart p. 1060)

The educational benefits in the bill were estimated by the Veterans Administration to cost about $1.9 billion in the first five years. Costs of the home and farm loans were considered minimal because S 9 required the veterans to pay a loan guarantee fee, thereby making that program nearly self-financing.

Throughout debate July 16 and 19, Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), the floor manager, emphasized that S 9 was not "a bonus bill" for veterans who had served in particularly dangerous areas, but a "readjustment" bill "to help the veteran of military service readjust to civilian life." He pointed out that the costs of providing similar benefits to veterans of World War II and the Korean War had been more than recouped in the form of increased tax collections because they had increased the employability and earnings of the veterans who received the benefits.

Yarborough and other proponents contended that to distinguish between wartime and peacetime service could not be justified because veterans of either type of service had made sacrifices not made by their nonveteran contemporaries.

Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) said that despite the compulsory draft law, "barely half our young men serve as much as a day." He said draft law standards guaranteed that those who did serve were "in the upper half of the nation physically and mentally" and yet they served "because they have less money than others" who could afford to go to college and obtain a deferment which often became permanent. On top of this discriminatory draft law, he said, the men who did serve were allowed "to suffer greater unemployment and work at lower-paying jobs than those who do not serve." (Continued on next page)

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) said the White House told him that "it strongly supported" the opposition to S 9 voiced by Administration officials.

GOP Amendments Opposed. Before passing the bill, the Senate rejected three amendments designed to earmark assistance to more specific groups. Yarborough strongly opposed all three.

The first was offered by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and was rejected by a 36-52 roll call. It would have made benefits applicable only to those who had served in areas of hostilities designated by the President and would have added most of the benefits provided in the earlier GI bills such as pensions, life insurance policies, business loans and mustering-out pay. The second, proposed by Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.), was rejected by a 31-53 roll call. It would have provided readjustment benefits only to veterans on active duty in Southeast Asia between Jan. 1, 1961, and a termination date set by the President or Congress. The third amendment was offered by John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) and was rejected by a roll-call vote of 20-66. It would have substituted for S 9's education and training grants a system of low-interest loans repayable over 12 years.

Saltonstall said his amendment would "grant benefits to those to whom they are due -- that is, to those serving in areas of hostilities." Yarborough said those voting for the amendment would be saying to non-combat veterans that "they did not do enough for their country because they were not shot at." Kennedy (N.Y.) suggested that the fact that the President would have to designate "areas of danger raises all kinds of serious foreign policy implications."

Dominick suggested that his amendment applying the benefits only to those serving in Southeast Asia would avoid these implications. Yarborough objected that the Dominick proposal would be "much more restrictive" and would "apply to less than 10 percent of those who were in the armed services."

Cooper, in arguing for his amendment, said that loans would "demand a greater incentive on the part of the veteran." Yarborough retorted that even with the grants, a veteran would have to raise additional money on his own to put himself through college, and "if a man had sufficient credit on which he can borrow money to go to college, he would not have to go to Viet Nam."

House

COMMITTEE -- Veterans' Affairs.

HELD HEARINGS -- Aug. 31 - Sept. 15 on S 9 and a variety of other Cold War GI bills. With minor variations, the same arguments advanced during Senate hearings were given.

The Committee took no action on S 9 in 1965.

On Oct. 2, Veterans Administrator William J. Driver said that the VA in 1966 would probably recommend "that cold war veterans be given benefits comparable to World War II and Korean veterans." Rep. Olin E. Teague (D Texas), chairman of the House Committee, Dec. 14 predicted that a Cold War GI bill would pass the House by the end of February 1966.

Other Housing and Educational Benefits

Housing. The 1965 Housing and Urban Development Act (PL 89-117) contained a provision which established a special FHA home mortgage insurance program for veterans who had not already received benefits under the VA programs. The Act required no down payment on the first $15,000 of an insured loan, 10 percent down on the amount between $15,000 and $20,000 and 15 percent down on the amount between $20,000 and $30,000, the existing statutory limitation of FHA loan insurance. It limited participation to veterans who had served on active duty 90 days or more or were certified by the Secretary of Defense as having performed extra-hazardous service. (See story p. 358)

Although the Housing Act permitted larger amounts to be covered by mortgage insurance than S 9 provided for either guaranteed or direct home loans, it made no provision for the purchase of farmlands, livestock, and farm machinery.

Higher Education. Veterans, as well as nonveterans, were eligible to compete for federal scholarships under the 1965 Higher Education Act (PL 89-329). The Act provided undergraduate "educational opportunity grants" for students of "exceptional financial need" and granted interest subsidies on college loans to students from middle-income families. Unlike S 9, the Act required that scholarship recipients show a need for aid and it did not provide grants for apprenticeship, on-the-job and on-the-farm training programs. (See story p. 294)

Vocational Rehabilitation. The President in August signed an Administration-backed bill (HR 208 --PL 89-138) extending the period during which seriously disabled World War II and Korean War veterans were eligible for vocational rehabilitation training and education. The bill was designed to afford seriously disabled veterans whose progressing diseases or illnesses prevented adequate rehabilitation within the general period allowed for training (nine years from date of discharge) an additional 10 years, until June 30, 1975, to continue their training. A similar exception currently existed for blinded veterans. Under the veterans' vocational rehabilitation program enacted in 1943 (PL 78-16) as amended, disabled World War II and Korean War veterans were required to complete their vocational training by June 30, 1965. HR 208 was estimated to cost $1.4 million in fiscal 1966 and about $16 million for the first five fiscal years.

HR 208 was passed by voice votes of the House June 14 and the Senate Aug. 12.

Also signed by the President Aug. 26 was a bill (HR 206 -- PL 89-137) to provide a cost-of-living increase in subsistence allowances for disabled veterans receiving vocational rehabilitation training. The increase was designed to reflect a 30-percent increase in the cost of living since subsistence allowances were last fixed April 1, 1948. HR 206 raised allowances from a range of $75 - $102 a month to $95 - $175. The VA had recommended only a 20-percent increase because other veterans' benefits, also received by vocational trainees, were increased during recent years. HR 206 was estimated to cost $2.2 million in fiscal 1966 and about $8.1 million in the first five fiscal years.

It was passed by voice votes of the House June 14 and the Senate Aug. 12.

ANTIPOVERTY PROGRAM FUNDS DOUBLED

HR 8283 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 428) May 27, 1965.

- Passed by the House on a 245-158 roll-call vote July 22. (See p. 980)
- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 599) Aug. 13.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, on a 61-29 roll-call vote Aug. 19. (See p. 1067)
- Conference report (H Rept 1001) recommitted by the House on a 209-180 roll-call vote Sept. 15. (See p. 1002)
- Conference report (H Rept 1061) agreed to by voice vote of the House Sept. 23 and by a 46-22 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 24. (See p. 1076)

PL 89-253 -- Signed into law Oct. 9.

The "war on poverty" that President Johnson launched in 1964 suffered from guerilla counter-warfare, divided political leadership and administrative confusion typical of military campaigns, yet received a doubled appropriation from Congress in 1965 -- $1.5 billion.

Thanks largely to Northern Democratic gains in the 1964 elections, the Economic Opportunity Amendments of 1965 (HR 8283 -- PL 89-253) passed the House by twice the margin by which the original Economic Opportunity Act was approved in 1964: votes of 245-158 in 1965, compared to 226-185 the year before. Republicans remained bitterly opposed to the program; fewer than 25 GOP House Members voted for either the 1964 or 1965 bill. Southern Democrats were cool toward the program, claiming that it benefitted mostly Northern urban areas.

The 1964 Act passed the House, most observers believed, mainly because it made concessions to the Southern, conservative, states' rights viewpoint. In 1965 Northerners had enough votes to whittle down the chief concession made to Southerners in 1964 -- the veto right given Governors who disapproved of proposed Job Corps, community action, work-training, adult basic education and volunteer (VISTA) programs in their states. The House version of HR 8283 permitted the poverty program director to overrule a Governor's veto of projects in three of the five programs: community action, work-training and adult education. The Senate, by a one-vote margin, voted to repeal the veto entirely on these programs, though, like the House, it left untouched the veto power on Job Corps and volunteer projects. Although House-Senate conferees on the bill accepted the Senate's repeal, House Republicans and Southern Democrats overturned that decision and sent the bill back to conference with instructions to reinsert the House's limited veto provisions. In that form the bill was enacted. The veto had been used by several Southern Governors and one Western Republican to kill proposed community action or work-training programs. (See next page)

Another Southern proposal accepted by the program's sponsors in 1964 was repealed in 1965. This was a requirement that Job Corps enrollees and any individuals receiving antipoverty payments sign an affidavit disclaiming support of any organization favoring violent overthrow of the Government. An effort to retain this requirement in the antipoverty law lost on the House floor in 1965 on a 79-113 teller vote.

Funds Authorized. Both the House and Senate versions of HR 8283 authorized more than the President had requested for the fiscal 1966 antipoverty program. The final, compromise figure of $1,785,000,000 authorized $285 million more than the requests for Title I and II programs, but the sum ultimately appropriated was exactly the $1.5 billion sought by the Administration. As requested by the President, HR 8283 extended by one year the date on which financing by the Federal Government was due to drop from 90 percent to 50 percent of most projects' costs, with the states or localities assuming the other 50 percent. The bill moved the deadline to Aug. 20, 1967 -- three years from the date the antipoverty law was first enacted.

The amount of antipoverty funds obligated in fiscal 1965 and the appropriations recommended by President Johnson in his Budget for fiscal 1966, and subsequently appropriated in HR 11588 -- PL 89-309, are shown below in millions of dollars:

Program	Fiscal 1965 Obligations	Fiscal 1966 Funds
Title I:
Job Corps	$183.0	$ 235.0
Work-Training	132.1	255.0
Work-Study	55.1	60.0

Criticisms Voiced. While HR 8283 was under attack in Congress by conservatives, Republicans and Governors anxious to retain their veto power, administration of the program by R. Sargent Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, was under equally bitter attack by militant urban groups and the mayors of a number of cities. Early in the year Chairman Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) of the House Education and Labor Committee sided with the militant groups in protesting that Shriver was not doing enough to get representatives of the poor on antipoverty planning boards. Taking the opposite tack, some mayors contended he was encouraging militants to "fight City Hall." (See summary of criticisms of the program, p. 408.)

Acknowledging that a program of such scope was bound to have "difficulties," President Johnson said at an April 27 news conference, "I don't know of any national program in peacetime that has reached so many people so fast and so effectively." While Shriver was criticized for remaining as head of both the poverty office and the Peace Corps, President Johnson kept him on in both jobs through 1965. (For Shriver's comments, see p. 491) Early in 1966 Shriver resigned as director of the Peace Corps.

Controversy on Governors' Veto

The Governor's veto power was exercised five times in 1965. Gov. Donald S. Russell (D S.C.), later to become a U.S. Senator, vetoed a community action program because he did not want South Carolina to participate in a nine-state program of the Council of the Southern Mountains. Gov. John B. Connally (D Texas) vetoed a proposed Neighborhood Youth Corps (work-training) grant to the Texas Farmers Union amounting to about $400,000. Gov. Tim R. Babcock (R Mont.) vetoed a $550,000 work-training program for rural youths sponsored by the Montana Farmers Union. Gov. Haydon Burns (D Fla.) vetoed an application for Operation Head Start funds (under the community action program) by the Florida Council on Human Relations. And Gov. George C. Wallace (D Ala.) vetoed an OEO grant of $66,349 to the biracial Birmingham Area Committee for Development to set up an office and hire a staff for a community action program. The Birmingham Committee was headed by C.H. Erskine Smith, who termed the Governor's veto a "political" reaction to events in 1963, when Smith and others had organized a successful campaign to change Birmingham's form of government. Wallace asserted his veto was based on the Birmingham Committee not being broadly representative of Jefferson County, of which the city is a part.

A majority of Governors from both parties showed support for retaining the veto power in the law. Over 30 Governors protested the House Education and Labor Committee's tentative decision May 13 to repeal the veto power over community action and Neighborhood Youth Corps programs. (See p. 413) Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) May 17 called the veto curb "unwise" and said it would "open up another serious avenue through which federal and local officials can bypass state governments." Gov. Grant Sawyer (D Nev.), chairman of the 1965 Governors Conference, said July 25 that the antipoverty program "could be the greatest boondoggle" in history without proper administration. He strongly opposed House limitation of the veto power.

The controversy over the gubernatorial veto power took on added political significance when Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) Aug. 3 charged Gov. Connally with trying to "defeat and destroy" the antipoverty program in Texas. Yarborough accused Connally of deliberately delaying and in certain cases vetoing Texas Neighborhood Youth Corps projects where enrollees were to be paid $1.25 an hour, while rushing through projects that paid only $1 an hour. "This abuse of power must stop," Yarborough said. Connally Aug. 4 said, "No Governor in any state in this nation has spent as much time as I have on this program trying to assure its success. I have no apologies to make." Connally said he had vetoed a project sponsored by the state Farmers Union because the union was "quasi-political." The farm organization denied this.

In the Senate, Yarborough worked vigorously to repeal the veto power. He was supported by the National Farmers Union and Americans for Democratic Action. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and Whip Russell B. Long (D La.) supported Yarborough's efforts although the Administration did not take a public stand on the issue. The Administration's antipoverty bill (HR 7048) submitted in April retained the veto as authorized in the 1964 Act.

As signed by the President, HR 8283 amended the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 as follows (titles in bold face refer to the titles of the 1964 Act):

Extended the antipoverty program through fiscal 1968, authorized fiscal 1966 appropriations on a title-by-title basis (with amounts for 1967 and 1968 to be authorized later) and made the following changes in the program:

Title I. Job Corps. Required the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) Director to issue regulations to prevent Job Corps programs which would displace employed workers or interfere with existing contracts for services.

Prohibited payments to any individual or organization "solely" as compensation for referring to the OEO any candidates for Job Corps enrollment.

Authorized enrollment of Cuban refugees in Job Corps programs.

Deleted a provision of the 1964 Act which required Job Corps enrollees to sign an affidavit saying they did not believe in or support any organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Government. Retained a requirement that Job Corps enrollees take an oath of allegiance to the United States, and exempted Cuban refugees who were Job Corps enrollees from taking the oath.

Provided that, retroactive to January 1, 1965, Job Corps enrollees who were absent from their assigned post but were taking part in activities authorized or supervised by the Job Corps could receive the benefits of the Federal Employees Compensation Act in case of injury or death.

Limited to male enrollees the requirement that 40 percent of Job Corps enrollees be assigned to Youth Conservation Corps camps for work in conserving natural resources and developing recreational areas.

Work-Training Programs. Authorized enrollment of Cuban refugees in work-training (called Neighborhood Youth Corps) programs.

Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of work-training programs instead of 50 percent federal-50 percent state sharing of costs; required the 50 percent state contribution thereafter.

Authorized the OEO director to override a Governor's veto of proposed work-training programs.

Work-study Programs. Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of college work-study programs instead of 75-percent federal, 25-percent state sharing of costs; required the 25-percent state contribution thereafter.

Authorized appropriations of $700 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title I.

(The Higher Education Act (HR 9567 -- PL 89-329), enacted Nov. 8, transferred the work-study program from OEO to the U.S. Commissioner of Education and also transferred $60 million of the fiscal 1966 authorization for Title I of the Economic Opportunity Act to the Office of Education. The President had requested transfer of the work-study program. For story on the Higher Education Act, see p. 294.)

Title II. Urban and Rural Community Action Programs. Required "reasonable" public access to information about community action programs, including "reasonable" provision for public hearings, and "reasonable" public access to the books and records of agencies administering community action programs.

Provided that community action programs could include but were "not limited to" the activities specifically listed in the 1964 Act.

Authorized federal grants for community action projects to assist chronically unemployed poor adults through participation in community betterment, beautification or conservation, development and similar programs on federal, state and local lands.

Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of a community action program instead of 50 percent federal-50 percent state sharing of costs; required the 50 percent state contribution thereafter.

Authorized federal officials to permit certain poor communities -- such as those in rural areas -- to reduce their local poverty efforts in situations where maintenance of these efforts, as required under the 1964 Act, would result in "unnecessary hardship...."

Required the OEO director to consult with state agencies on the development, conduct and administration of community action programs.

Authorized the OEO director to override a Governor's veto of a proposed community action program.

Required that the OEO notify the official community action agency in a locality and the Governor of the state of any application for community action funds which the OEO received from a private, nonprofit agency in the locality; required the notification to be made within five days of receipt of the application.

Authorized the OEO to make community action grants to or contracts directly with a private nonprofit agency if "good cause" had been shown for doing so. (This provision entitled private, nonprofit agencies not participating in an official, "umbrella" community action program to receive federal funds separately from the official program.)

Adult Basic Education. Extended for one year -- through fiscal 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of adult basic education programs instead of 50 percent federal-50 percent state sharing of costs; required the 50 percent state contribution in fiscal 1968.

Authorized the OEO director to override a Governor's veto of proposed adult basic education programs.

Authorized use of up to 5 percent of the funds appropriated or allocated to the adult basic education program for training teachers to participate in the program.

Needy Children. Deleted from existing law language which required welfare agencies to provide information about needy children in connection with the OEO-administered, nationwide voluntary assistance program for needy children. (This provision recognized that, in some states, the distribution to the public by welfare agencies of names and other information about welfare recipients and needy persons was contrary to established legal or policy restrictions.)

Authorized appropriations of $850 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title II.

Title III. Farmers and Migrant Workers Programs. Authorized the OEO to make loans to cooperatives serving low-income, rural families in processing and marketing dairy or edible farm products. (The bill thus made clear that "processing" was not "manufacturing"; loans to cooperatives for the latter activity were prohibited under the 1964 Act.)

Authorized the OEO to make grants, loans and loan guarantees for programs assisting the special needs of migrant and seasonally employed agricultural workers in housing, education, sanitation and child day-care.

Limited such federal grants, loans and guarantees to programs undertaken by states or local public agencies, private nonprofit organizations and cooperatives (thus excluding programs undertaken by an individual or growers' association).

Extended the program of indemnity payments to dairy farmers from Jan. 31, 1965, through June 30, 1966.

Authorized appropriations of $55 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title III.

Title IV. No changes were made in this title of the 1964 Act.

Title V. Work Experience Programs. Provided that farm workers with less than $1,200 net annual family income would be considered "unemployed" and thus eligible to participate in the pilot work-experience programs to help unemployed fathers obtain employment.

Authorized appropriations of $150 million in fiscal 1966 for Title V programs.

Title VI. Volunteers in Service of America (VISTA). Authorized assignment of VISTA volunteers generally to any local program or activity which received, or was authorized to receive, federal assistance under the 1964 Act. (Existing law limited VISTA assignments to programs under Titles I and II.)

Required that VISTA volunteers take an oath of allegiance to the United States, identical to the oath required of Job Corps enrollees.

Increased the wage base for VISTA volunteers so that death or disability benefits would be determined on the basis of a GS-7, rather than the lower GS-2, salary (in order to provide for the needs of adult volunteers who had family obligations).

Authorized appropriations of $30 million in fiscal 1966 for Title VI programs (VISTA).

Administration and Coordination. Increased the National Advisory Council membership from 14 to 20 members, plus the OEO director.

Expressed the "intent of Congress" that wherever feasible the special problems of the elderly poor should be considered in the federal antipoverty program.

Deleted a provision of the 1964 Act which required any individual receiving a payment under any section of the Act to sign an affidavit saying he did not believe in or support any organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Government.

Stipulated that not more than 10 percent of the funds allocated to one title of the Act could be transferred to another title, and that such a transfer could not result in more than a 10-percent increase in the funds originally allocated to the recipient title.

Required that the benefits of the Act be distributed "equitably" between residents of rural and urban areas.

Amended the National Defense Education Act of 1958 to authorize a moratorium of up to three years on the repayment of student loans granted under the 1958 Act to persons who were serving as VISTA volunteers; provided that in the case of loans outstanding on the date of enactment of HR 8283, the institution providing the loan would have to give its approval of a moratorium.

Charges Against Antipoverty Program Range From Paternalism...

Following were the major criticisms directed at the Administration's war on poverty program.

Community Action Programs. One of the principal aims of the 1964 law was to stimulate "urban and rural communities to mobilize their resources to combat poverty through community action programs." The law directed that a community action program must be conducted or coordinated "by a public or private non-profit agency (other than a political party) or a combination thereof"; must provide services or assistance of sufficient scope "to give promise of progress toward elimination of poverty...."; and must be "developed, conducted and administered with the maximum feasible participation of residents of the areas and members of the groups served."

The phrase "maximum feasible participation" of persons from poverty areas led to a number of criticisms of community action organizations from spokesmen of the poor (their right to speak for the poor often was challenged by other groups).

In a number of cities, social action agencies and neighborhood coordinating groups claimed that city community action boards excluded representatives of the poor, and, particularly in the South, excluded Negroes from taking part in community action planning. The groups charged that community action agencies were controlled by city hall officials who feared that the poor and Negro groups would challenge the established political leadership. Some critics contended that the planning boards were controlled by established, long ineffective, welfare agencies not interested in giving the poor a political voice, and by "ward heelers" and social workers primarily interested in prospects of higher salaries through federally financed programs.

Herbert Hill, NAACP labor director, June 28 called the Administration's antipoverty program inadequate -- "an extension of white welfare paternalism." "We must rescue the antipoverty program from the social work profession and from the politicians who want merely a sterile and ineffective program that will mean little or nothing for the Negro community," Hill said. "We must shed the illusion that this is a war on poverty -- it is merely a BB shot against it. A real war on poverty would require fundamental alterations in our national economy and the mobilization of a significant portion of the national income for this purpose. NAACP favors a real war on poverty, not a symbolic encounter."

However, during its convention June 28-July 3, the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People supported the antipoverty program in general and called for appropriation in fiscal 1966 of at least the amount of funds requested by President Johnson.

Opponents replying to charges of racial discrimination contended "militant" Negro groups were attempting to "take over" antipoverty programs to gain political power.

City officials claimed militant action groups were trying to "blackjack" their way into city antipoverty programs. They contended the poor were adequately represented on community action planning boards through welfare agencies who understood the needs of the poor and through city hall officials supposedly elected by the poor, and that the poor themselves were too inarticulate and inexperienced in administrative matters to be effective board members.

Critics of local activist groups also charged the groups with "viciously" competing among each other and city hall to gain control of federal antipoverty funds. Los Angeles Mayor Samuel W. Yorty, a conservative Democrat, May 29 charged that "mayors all over the United States are being harassed by agitation promoted by Sargent Shriver's speeches urging those he calls 'poor' to insist upon control of local poverty programs."

Conference of Mayors. At the annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, May 29-June 2 in St. Louis, Mo., Yorty and San Francisco Mayor John F. Shelley (both former Democratic Members of Congress) presented a draft resolution highly critical of OEO. They accused the OEO of "fostering class struggle" and "creating tensions" among the poor by insisting on greater participation of the poor in planning community action programs. This policy, they said, failed "to recognize the legal and moral responsibilities of local officials who are accountable to the taxpayers for expenditures of local funds."

In the resolutions committee of the Conference, the Shelley-Yorty statement was supported by Syracuse, N.Y., Mayor William F. Walsh (R), St. Petersburg, Fla., Mayor Herman W. Goldner (R) and Ogden, Utah, Mayor Merle E. Allen (D). Walsh said the poor in Syracuse were "being urged to storm City Hall" by militant antipoverty leaders.

The Shelley-Yorty resolution was tabled in committee in favor of a meeting between a group of mayors and Vice President Humphrey, the Administration's top liaison man with the country's mayors.

Troubles In Los Angeles. The recriminations between Shriver and Yorty for lack of progress in setting up an antipoverty program in Los Angeles came to a head in August after the riots in the Watts section of the city. (See p. 566)

Yorty Aug. 17 charged, in a telegram to Sen. George Murphy (R Calif.), that OEO's objections to the local antipoverty program in Los Angeles constituted "a reckless effort to incite the poor for political reasons" and was a factor in precipitating the Watts riot. The Mayor said the delay in approving funds resulted from "strong-arm tactics" and pressures from the Los Angeles Democratic delegation in the House of Representatives. (Yorty defeated Rep. James Roosevelt (D Calif.) in the April 1965 mayoralty race and was reportedly interested in running against Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) in 1966.)

At a news conference Aug. 18, Shriver called Yorty's allegations "intemperate and unfortunate" and "untrue." Shriver said that Los Angeles was the "only major city in the United States" which had failed to organize an acceptable central antipoverty organization. He charged that in Los Angeles "a few local officials have made it extremely difficult for the private agencies, minority groups and the poor to join in the war on poverty."

. . . To Political Pork Barrel and Undermining City Hall

Chicago, New York Programs. Other cities which had trouble meeting OEO prerequisites for federal anti-poverty funds were New York and Chicago. In Chicago, Mayor Richard J. Daley's (D) community action agency clashed head-on with privately sponsored welfare organizations who claimed the Chicago antipoverty roster read "like a fund-raising committee for the Democratic party." In New York City, Rep. Powell charged, Mayor Robert F. Wagner's (D) community action agency was "in violation of the law" because it did not fairly represent the poor or independent welfare groups.

A Harlem antipoverty program called HARYOU-ACT, which operated independently of New York's official, community-wide antipoverty agency and was administered by former Powell aide Livingston Wingate, was dogged by controversy. The OEO in October held up funds to HARYOU-ACT because of "deficiencies in record-keeping." Wingate Oct. 6 conceded that OEO funds to HARYOU-ACT had been commingled with other funds received by the Harlem program but defended the commingling as necessary to get emergency crash programs off the ground. He denied any fiscal mismanagement in the organization.

Salaries. Powell spearheaded criticism of salary levels of officials in local community action organizations, calling them "excessively high." Shriver contended that administrative salaries reflected the complexity of the job, quality of the man employed and the local pay level. Shriver May 1 submitted a report to Congress giving a tabulation of local directors' salaries, which averaged $16,325 annually. Shriver said, "The record is clear. In fact...reports from the four (House Education and Labor) Committee task forces uniformly stated that they discovered no indications of excessive salaries." Earlier, Shriver cited an instance where a community had raised $6,000 to add to a program director's salary.

Job Corps Centers. Local objections to Job Corps centers also presented problems. There were riots among enrollees at several camps, and friction in some instances between Job Corps members and townspeople of the communities in which the centers were located. Private contractors running Job Corps vocational centers were charged with poor administration. Critics also pointed to the difficulties of placing Job Corps "graduates" in jobs. Shriver Aug. 7 said, "We never guaranteed people a job on graduation from this program. But we will do everything we can to help them." Sloppy and politically motivated recruiting and screening methods were held responsible by critics for a 13 percent Job Corps drop-out rate.

Other Changes. Other major criticisms were leveled against the alleged "urban bias" of federal anti-poverty funding, the "slow flow" of funds from OEO, the complicated and "frustrating" applications for funds, the "splintered" and "conflicting" directives by various departments administering antipoverty programs under the Act and "incorrect" or lack of statistics about poverty standards and other matters relating to poverty.

REPUBLICAN CRITICISM

In minority views included in the House Education and Labor Committee report on the 1965 bill, seven Republican members of the Committee roundly criticized the poverty program. They asserted:

"The community action program..,has been turned into a political pork barrel by big city machines whose only interest in the poor is to exploit them.

"The entire Act is the least coordinated, most confused tangle in recent memory, and this has been made even worse by removing the last vestige of state authority -- giving the Director of OEO the power to override the Governor's veto.

"The Office of Economic Opportunity, under a part-time poverty czar (Shriver), is an administrative shambles in which a fantastic number of highly paid, casually selected amateurs frantically attempt to patch together programs that will reflect a favorable image to Congress and the public."

Under the Heading, "The Chairman's View -- 'Great Fiestas of Political Patronage'," the minority quoted excerpts from Chairman Adam C. Powell's (D N.Y.) opening statement at hearings on the program:

"In far too many communities, giant fiestas of political patronage have been encouraged....

"Compounding this political felony has been a debilitating friction between the state and local poverty programs with resulting tug-of-wars over who is going to control what. ...

"Salaries are excessively high and in some instances unreasonable and wildly unrealistic. ...

"There has been an obvious failure to carry out a most important objective -- that of involving the poor in the war on poverty. ...

"There has been an overemphasis on planning and a dismal deemphasis of action programs."

Three Republican Senators on the Labor and Public Welfare Committee charged that the poverty program was "mired in trouble." OEO's administrative structure, they said, "is a nightmare of bureaucratic bungling. It runs from a part-time Director at the top to an extravagant oversupply of highly paid administrators and finally to a vast muddle of poorly organized fieldworkers."

In their minority views the three Senators said there was a "failure to coordinate federal actions with state, local and private programs" and many reports that OEO was "bypassing either local governments or the poor in establishing local programs."

"Governors have stated on many occasions," the minority report said, "that threatened use of the veto power is their only means of getting the poverty czars to consult with state antipoverty agencies before going ahead with programs." They said the Democratic-inspired effort to remove the Governors' veto power was "one more slash at the authority" of state governments.

Background on Poverty Program

REFERENCE -- President's "War on Poverty" Approved. (1964 Almanac p. 208)

The Economic Opportunity Act was enacted Aug. 20, 1964 (PL 88-452). The Act authorized, for fiscal 1965 through 1967, 10 separate programs under the supervision of the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

Key sections of the Act authorized the OEO to operate (1) a Job Corps to provide work experience and training to youths in conservation camps and urban and rural residential training centers; (2) a community action program under which the Federal Government would financially and technically assist a variety of "human development" efforts drawn up at the local level; and (3) a program similar to the Peace Corps, called Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA).

The OEO also was directed to distribute funds to federal agencies to operate a variety of programs authorized under the Act: work-training programs administered through the Labor Department to employ youths locally; work-study programs through the Health, Education and Welfare Department to employ college students; adult basic education through the HEW Department; special rural antipoverty programs through the Agriculture Department; migrant labor programs through the HEW and Agriculture Departments; small business loans for job training and employment through the Small Business Administration; and community work and training projects for welfare recipients through the HEW Department.

The Act authorized appropriations of $947.5 million for fiscal 1965. It permitted federal aid under the community action program to private, nonprofit antipoverty organizations, whether or not they participated in a general communitywide poverty program; permitted Governors to veto proposed Job Corps centers, worktraining projects, community action programs, adult basic education programs and assignment of VISTA volunteers to their states; and authorized 90 percent federal financing of work-training, work-study, community action and adult education programs through mid-1966 and 50 percent participation thereafter, except for work-study programs which would be on a 75-percent federal, 25-percent local cost sharing basis after mid-1966.

Status of Program

An OEO summary, released Jan. 25, 1966, gave the status of OEO-administered antipoverty programs 16 months after enactment of the "war on poverty," as follows:

Title I. Job Corps. Eighty-nine Job Corps centers were in operation, including 73 conservation centers and eight men's and six women's urban training centers. The centers included 17,669 enrollees. The OEO spent $174,818,555 in fiscal 1965 for Job Corps programs and had obligated $74,190,289 for fiscal 1966. Total cost to the OEO was $251,008,844.

Work-Training Programs. There were 642 work-training programs (designated Neighborhood Youth Corps programs) approved in fiscal 1965 for 278,426 participants at a cost of $127,742,109. For fiscal 1966, 823 projects had been approved for 239,442 participants at a cost of $161,542,267.

Work-Study Programs. The OEO spent $56,569,690 for college work-study programs. In the spring of 1965, OEO granted $12 million to 648 institutions to assist 38,015 students. During the summer, $20 million went to 783 institutions for 40,761 students. In the fall, $24,569,690 went to 1,120 institutions to help 107,525 students.

Title II. Urban and Rural Community Action Programs. A total of 1,914 community action program grants had been made at a cost of $335,197,035. There were 902 grantees, who reached 1,035 of 3,315 counties in the United States. The grantees included 644 active community action agencies, plus 130 state-level and 125 university recipients.

The Administration announced March 27, 1965, that the Federal Government would pay up to 100 percent of the cost of setting up community action programs in the nation's 182 poorest communities. The 182 counties (including Indian reservations) had an average annual per capita income of less than $750.

Twenty-one Special Programs grants were made under the community action program to public and private groups to assist migratory workers. These grants totaled $11,171,992.

The following new programs were set up in 1965 under the community action phase of the antipoverty program:

Project Head Start. A nationwide effort, called Project Head Start, was launched in July and August to assist pre-school children from deprived families to enter kindergarten or first grade in September 1965. Project Head Start offered health services, social services (i.e., child-care counseling for parents) and prelearning experiences to enrollees. Community action agencies, colleges, schools and other local government or private, nonprofit organizations ran the local Head Start programs, on a 90-percent federal, 10-percent local cost-sharing basis.

Originally aimed at enrolling 100,000 needy children from 300 communities at a cost of $17 million, Project Head Start went far beyond its goals. The summer program enrolled 561,359 children in 11,068 centers at a cost of $85,446,976 to OEO. Some 53,269 professional persons, plus 186,431 volunteers, including parents of enrolled children, participated.

President Johnson Aug. 31 announced a three-part extension of Project Head Start. Under the expanded program, year-round centers were to be established for children three years old and older; summer classes would be continued for those not participating in the year-round sessions; and "follow-through programs," including special classes, field trips and home visits, would be included for children limited to summer sessions.

Upward Bound. Project "Upward Bound" was launched June 16 to prepare talented, poverty-stricken youths for college. The program gave youths who were unable to qualify for college because of psychological, physical and social conditions of poverty special training which qualified them for a higher education. During the summer of 1965, 18 colleges participated in the program, assisting 2,061 students. A fall program was established with 9 colleges and 1,636 students participating. Total OEO cost of Upward Bound amounted to $3,301,044.

Legal Services. In the spring of 1965, the OEO began a program of federally financed Neighborhood Legal Service centers to provide free legal counsel on civil matters in the nation's slum areas. According to the January OEO program summary, there were 29 legal aid projects established in 23 communities at a cost to OEO of $3,127,217. Legal aid services were established in cities including Washington, D.C., Syracuse, N.Y., Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Oakland, Calif., St. Louis, Buffalo, N.Y., and also in a western Kansas rural area.

Under the legal services program, community action agencies employed lawyers to work in slum neighborhoods. The neighborhood lawyers generally used antipoverty social workers to reach clients.

During the National Conference on Law and Poverty held, under OEO and Justice Department sponsorship, in Washington, D.C., June 23-25, Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach suggested revisions in the legal profession's code of ethics to provide equal justice to the poor. Despite the historic precept against lawyers' seeking out clients, the Attorney General said, the profession had a responsibility to seek out people in need of legal services. He also proposed "a system of legal first-aid, a new, broad involvement of lay advocates for the poor -- human beings from all professions, committed to helping the poor stand up for themselves."

Lewis F. Powell Jr., president of the American Bar Assn., June 25 endorsed the Government's legal aid program: "Our profession, long committed to working with local governments in providing legal aid, must extend a like cooperation to the Federal Government." He noted that the impact on professional canons and on established legal procedures of OEO plans to reach the poor with legal advice remained to be worked out. The National Aid and Defenders Assn. also agreed to cooperate with OEO-financed legal aid services.

Foster Grandparents. Twenty-two Foster Grandparent projects had been approved at a cost to OEO of $2.8 million. President Johnson Aug. 28 announced the new Foster Grandparent program, for which he said $41 million would be allocated to employ and train 18,200 elderly poor persons in work caring for neglected and mentally retarded children and bedridden sick persons. The programs were operated by community agencies and institutions, in cooperation with the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Criticism grew in 1965 that the Government's antipoverty program was too "youth-oriented" and neglectful of the elderly poor. The Senate Special Committee on Aging held hearings beginning June 15 on the charges. Committee Chairman George A. Smathers (D Fla.) June 16 claimed that the nation's older citizens were a "forgotten front" on the Administration's war on poverty.

Shriver June 14 announced creation in the OEO of a 19-member Task Force on Programs for the Older Poor. The task force was to "study ways in which 5.2 million Americans over 65 can be helped by the war on poverty." "We have made a good start on major programs for youth," Shriver said, "but we will not win the war on poverty until we advance on all fronts, including the broad front that includes the elderly." One of every three persons 65 or older was poor, Shriver said.

Adult Basic Education. Forty-three state adult basic education plans were approved under Title II at a cost of $18,299,061.

Title III. Farmers and Migrant Workers Programs. Approximately 18,475 rural loans to individuals had been granted, totaling $31,230,965. Rural loans to cooperatives totaled 277, at a cost of $4,206,241.

Title IV. Employment and Investment Incentives. The Small Business Administration had granted 908 loans to needy small businessmen, mostly in retail and service establishments. Loans totaled $10,933,919. Loans had also been made to 25 states and the District of Columbia to set up 36 Small Business Development Centers in 35 communities. The SBDCs operated to screen and process all applications for SBA loans under the antipoverty program.

Title V. Work Experience Programs. Work experience programs providing training for unemployed heads of family included 164 fiscal 1965 projects approved for 88,700 participants and 55 fiscal 1966 projects for 19,962 participants. The total cost was $151,085,000.

Title VI. Volunteers in Service to America. A total of 1,661 VISTA volunteers were in the field and 413 in training. The OEO had obligated $8,913,051 to the program. Among the VISTA volunteers in the field were 328 serving in migrants' programs; 215 on Indian reservations; 212 in rural community development projects; 261 in Appalachian rural community development projects; 110 in mental health and retardation programs; 47 in Job Corps programs; and 486 in urban community development projects.

Information Center. Shriver Sept. 23 announced creation of an OEO Information Center to collect and compute all data about -- and necessary for coordinating -- the antipoverty program. The Center included a computer complex, a communications center, a library and a reference and inquiry section. Establishment of the Information Center was specifically authorized under Title VI of the 1964 Act.

President's Request for Funds

President Johnson Feb. 17 sent letters to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House asking that Congress appropriate $1.5 billion for the Administration's antipoverty program for fiscal 1966. The request was almost double the $800 million that Congress appropriated for the program for fiscal 1965.

The President also requested Congress to extend for 10 months, to June 30, 1967, the period during which the Federal Government could provide up to 90-percent matching funds for poverty projects. "If we do not do this," the President said, "then many communities, especially those in rural or isolated areas and which lack the resources to get underway quickly, will be unable to qualify before the cutoff date." Under provisions of the 1964 Economic Opportunity Act, the federal matching ratio was scheduled to drop to 50 percent for most of the programs.

Mr. Johnson also asked that administration of the work-study program be transferred from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Office of Education in the Health, Education and Welfare Department. This same request had been made in the President's education message Jan. 12. (For text, see p. 1374)

The President's letter reviewed the program's accomplishments and outlook and said the nation could not afford "to waste the valuable resources of human skill and energy which we are now beginning to tap."

Mr. Johnson did not detail how the $1.5 billion would be spent. (For his Budget requests, see p. 405)

The Administration's antipoverty bill (HR 7048) was introduced April 1 in the House by Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.), chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee and the Committee's Ad Hoc Subcommittee on the Poverty War Program. An identical bill (S 1759) was introduced in the Senate April 19 by Pat McNamara (D Mich.), chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Poverty of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

House Hearings on Poverty

The Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Poverty War Program, a special unit of the House Education and Labor Committee, held hearings on HR 7048 April 12-15, 29 and 30. Members of the Subcommittee were Democrats Powell (Subcommittee chairman), John Brademas (Ind.), Hugh L. Carey (N.Y.), Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.), Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.) and William D. Ford (Mich.), and Republicans Albert H. Quie (Minn.), Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.) and Alphonzo Bell (Calif.).

TESTIMONY -- April 12 -- Powell said that the "war on poverty" administered through the OEO had degenerated in many cities into "giant fiestas of political patronage." He said reports by four study groups sent by the Subcommittee to 11 cities indicated that the following problems existed: local political infighting to control antipoverty funds, "excessively high" salaries for program officials, "dismal de-emphasis" on action programs, exclusion in the South of Negroes from program boards and failure to involve poor persons in the planning stages of projects.

Powell said he would seek to double the $1.5 billion authorization sought by the President.

R. Sargent Shriver Jr., Director of OEO, answered Powell's charges by saying that the antipoverty programs were "prudent, practical, focused and patriotic." Shriver conceded that in many communities "poverty has become popular politics" but "if the fight for control reflects the views of the poor themselves or of representative community groups, it responds to the intent of Congress." Shriver stated that administrative salaries reflected complexity of the job, quality of the man and the local pay level. He cited an instance where a community had raised $6,000 to add to a program director's salary.

April 13 -- Rev. Lynward Stevenson, director of the privately sponsored social service Woodlawn Organization of Chicago, stated that in Chicago, "There is no war on poverty...there is only more of the ancient, galling war against the poor." Stevenson charged that the Chicago antipoverty council roster read like a "fund-raising committee for the Democratic party."

Dr. Denton J. Brooks Jr., director of the federally financed Chicago Committee on Urban Opportunity, said that the Woodlawn Organization had tried to "blackjack its way" into the Chicago program.

April 14 -- Dr. Brooks termed Rev. Stevenson's charges "irresponsible, without proof or fact...an attempt to get national publicity."

Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) defended Brooks but added that the poverty program "has never been in greater danger with Congress...if this kind of struggle continues."

Rev. Paul Younger, director of the Protestant Ministry to Poverty of Cleveland, charged that Cleveland's official antipoverty committee had overlooked the poor in making up its membership. His statement was echoed by three persons from poor areas of Cleveland who accompanied him.

C.O. Emmerich, executive director of the Atlanta-Fulton County (Ga.) Economic Opportunity Authority, said the poor as well as the well-to-do had been enlisted in planning antipoverty work in his area. He added there had been no trouble with integrated programs.

New York City Situation

April 15 -- New York City Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D), defending his appointed Antipoverty Operations Board, said "not a single member" of the Board or staff had "been named to his or her position on the basis of any political consideration." Wagner said the city, and not the Federal Government, should run the city's program, though the Government should "lay down standards of performance."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- May 6 -- Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), ranking minority member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, released a minority staff report on New York City's antipoverty program. In an accompanying letter to Sen. McNamara, Javits said he requested the inquiry because of the concern over the "political wrangles...(which) could demean and undermine the whole antipoverty program." The report focused on New York City's alleged failure to utilize and give a primary role to local, neighborhood coordinating groups. The report cited as the cause for this failure "the cloak of secrecy which the Antipoverty Operations Board has thrown around the development of its program application under the Act." The "abrupt repudiation" by the Board of an "indigenous planning group" had created a "climate of distrust," according to the report.

The report recommended that OEO expand its guidelines for community action programs so that the roles of neighborhood and private social welfare organizations were precisely defined "in order to achieve the self-help goal of the Act." The report also recommended that OEO provide a direct channel of appeal for aggrieved local groups that city authorities refused to deal with.

May 11 -- Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, called for establishment of a "special, impartial, select committee" of Congress to "explore" the antipoverty program on a federal, state and local level. He said the program was "too vital and valuable to become a football of political animosity and personal pique."

Powell May 12 criticized Celler's proposal, saying the two programs Celler signaled out as needing investigation -- in Harlem and Bedford-Stuyvesant in New York City -- were "being run by and for black people." Powell said, "It comes at a very untimely moment, when Congress, particularly Rep. Celler's own Judiciary Committee, is considering extending voting rights for Negroes in the South, that (Celler) would lead an attack on Negroes in the North."

Powell Drops Amendments

At a May 12 news conference, Powell said a May 12 letter to him from Shriver was a "satisfactory" answer to Powell's charges that the poor were being excluded from community action planning boards. Powell said he would drop his demands for amendments to the 1964 Act requiring 30-percent participation of the poor on local planning boards and administration of 40 percent of antipoverty projects by private agencies. (Powell was reported as unlikely to get support from his Committee for his proposed ratios.)

Answering Powell, Shriver May 17 said the policies outlined in his May 12 letter to Powell had always been OEO policies. The letter stated that local community agencies were required to have a "substantial and effective representation" of the residents of the areas and members of the groups to be served. The letter also stated that OEO would make grants directly to independent, single-purpose agencies under certain conditions and that OEO would not permit community action agencies to develop into "bureaucratic monopolies."

HOUSE COMMITTEE ACTION

The House Committee May 13 agreed on an amended version of HR 7048 by a 21-10 party-line vote, with Ogden R. Reid (R N.Y.) the single Republican voting in favor of the bill. A major amendment, offered by John Brademas (D Ind.), repealed entirely the state Governor's power to veto proposed Neighborhood Youth Corps, community action and adult basic education programs. The Committee agreed to Brademas' amendment the day after Alabama Gov. Wallace vetoed an OEO grant to a Birmingham antipoverty committee. (See p. 406) A House Committee member May 13 said there "hadn't been much interest in changing the veto provision until...(Wallace) used it."

However, the Committee May 20 restored a limited gubernatorial veto power after numerous Governors from both parties protested repeal of the veto. The new Committee amendment allowed the OEO director, after reconsidering a project, to override a Governor's veto. (A Governor was still allowed absolute veto power over establishment of Job Corps centers and assignment of VISTA volunteers to his state.) The Committee did not write guidelines into the bill for the director to use in reviewing a veto. However, the Committee said in a news release that the intention of the amendment was to nullify vetoes that were "arbitrary, influenced by political considerations or based on racial prejudice."

A clean bill (HR 8283) embodying the Committee's changes was introduced May 20 by Committee member Sam M. Gibbons (D Fla.). The Committee bill was similar to the Administration bill in most respects, but differed in the following major provisions:

- HR 8283 authorized fiscal 1966 title-by-title appropriations totaling $1,895,000,000 -- almost $400 million more than the Administration request. Increases were $275 million for youth projects, $150 million for adult work-experience programs and $15 million for rural programs; cuts of $35 million for community action programs and $13 million from VISTA were made.
- HR 8283 also provided that farm workers with less than $1,200 net annual family income would be considered "unemployed," and thus eligible for pilot work-experience programs; made a Governor's veto subject to review by the OEO director; and extended the antipoverty program an additional year, through fiscal 1968 (funds, however, were authorized only through fiscal 1966).

The Committee May 27 reported HR 8283 (H Rept 428) with minority views by Republicans Ayres (Ohio), Griffin (Mich.), Quie (Minn.), Goodell (N.Y.), Bell (Calif.), Andrews (Ala.) and Gurney (Fla.).

The majority report on HR 8283 said, "The program as a whole appears to be soundly conceived and...the administration of it is being well and faithfully carried out." The war on poverty, "scarcely 10 months old, has been well begun.... Surely never in peacetime history has such a large and complex program gotten underway in such a short period of time."

The minority report, signed by 7 of the 10 Republican Committee members, said, "The entire Act is the least coordinated, most confused tangle in recent memory. It is our considered judgment that the entire poverty program (or those parts of it administered directly by OEO) is in danger of collapse...."

Additional views were submitted by James H. Scheuer (D N.Y.), who said, "Unemployment...is surely the prime threat to the integrity of the war on poverty." Scheuer urged a combined federal welfare and tax reform program and the establishment of a Presidential Commission on National Goals to ascertain national economic goals.

The majority and minority reports differed on these specific parts of the antipoverty program:

Community Action. The majority report said the program was making "substantial progress" but the Committee was "concerned" with charges that areas and groups to be served by community action were not being represented in the planning stages. "It is indeed vital," the report said, "that the persons who are the objects of this program be treated less as clients or cases and more as partners."

The minority report said the program had been turned into a "political pork barrel by big city machines whose only interest in the poor is to exploit them." The report, noting that Powell gave up his demand for amending the Act after receiving Shriver's May 12 letter, commented, "Presto chango -- no changes need be made now in the Act; we have encountered the newest wrinkle in Great Society Government: legislation by letter."

Job Corps. The majority report said the Job Corps program had made "an impressive beginning," but cautioned against too much reliance on establishment of camps and not enough on preparing the corpsmen for jobs. The report also said failure to establish Job Corps centers for women was a "great disappointment."

The minority report charged that Shriver, by initiating a Job Corps recruiting campaign before sufficient camps were in operation, had caused a rush of applicants that had to be turned down, "further battering the shattered self-image of often-rejected youth." The report added, "It is a thoughtless act to commit 54,000 more of these vulnerable young people to camps and centers until the results of this experiment can be analyzed." The minority report also said that because there had been no evaluation of the over-all antipoverty program, "there is no evidence to justify the doubling -- or any increase at all -- of existing authorizations."

Veto Power. The majority opinion called the proposed review of Governors' vetoes by the OEO director an "apt compromise. It permits the legitimate exercise of power by the Governor with respect to programs going on within his state." The report said, "The veto power can, and is, being used coercively" and said an absolute veto power gave Governors "more power of control over a federally assisted program than the Governors enjoy with respect to state action of their own governments."

The minority report said, "This nonsense fools no one.... The power of the Governors has diminished...so that now it is near the vanishing point." The Republicans called the proposal a "shortsighted action on behalf of naked federal power." Their report also urged that local antipoverty plans be submitted to the state for approval before submission to the Federal Government.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 28 -- Rep. Gibbons said the Republicans were "irresponsible" in their report. "That was no legislative report," he said. "It was political press agentry at the taxpayers' expense." Gibbons said three Republicans had not signed the GOP report, "apparently because they were repulsed by it."

GOP Probe

A Repubiican Task Force on Economic Opportunity, led by Rep. Peter H.B. Frelinghuysen (R N.J.), held hearings June 8-10, 15-17 on the antipoverty program. Frelinghuysen June 8 said Republicans had set up their own inquiry because of a "truly lamentable lack of information about the billion-dollar" program. Frelinghuysen charged that the House Committee's majority had "abruptly" terminated hearings on HR 8283 after an "inadequate" consideration of the program.

At the conclusion of the task force hearings June 17, Frelinghuysen called for a "full-scale budgetary analysis" of the war on poverty. He stated the program was an "administrative shambles" and "is in deep trouble in many areas."

House Floor Action

The House July 22, by a 245-158 roll-call vote, passed HR 8283 with amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 980) As sent to the Senate, the bill authorized title-by-title appropriations of $1,895,000,000 in fiscal 1966, almost $400 million more than the Administration request for $1.5 billion and more than double the $800 million appropriated in fiscal 1965 for war on poverty activities.

The bill passed over strong opposition from Republicans, while Southern Democrats divided almost evenly: R 24-110; D 221-48 (ND 176-2; SD 45-46).

During the three days of debate preceding passage, Republicans attempted unsuccessfully to retain Governors' absolute power to veto work-training, community action and adult education projects. The House July 22 defeated two Republican amendments to retain the absolute veto privilege: an amendment by William H. Ayres (R Ohio) to delete the section of HR 8283 which allowed the OEO director to override a Governor's veto was initially adopted by a standing vote of 110-97 and then rejected by a 150-155 teller vote; later, a motion by Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) to recommit the bill to the Committee with instructions to delete the section eliminating the absolute veto and to reduce the fiscal 1966 authorization to $947.5 million, the same amount authorized in fiscal 1965, was defeated by a 178-227 roll-call vote.

The House rejected numerous other amendments. One which provoked particularly acrimonious exchanges was proposed by John Bell Williams (D Miss.). It would have retained in the law a requirement that individuals receiving federal payments under the Act sign an affidavit saying they did not believe in or support any organization advocating the overthrow of the Government. The amendment was rejected by a 79-113 teller vote. In 1964 Williams had successfully put the affidavit provision into the Act by a 144-112 teller vote.

An amendment by Quie, which was rejected by voice vote, would have prohibited the OEO director from holding another Government position. The amendment was designed to prevent Shriver from also heading the Peace Corps.

The House also rejected numerous Republican attempts to reduce the fiscal 1966 appropriations authorization to the fiscal 1965 level and to transfer certain programs under the Act from the OEO to the federal agencies administering the programs. (See Amendments Rejected, below)

The House accepted with no debate three amendments to HR 8283, two of which were designed to keep the public and local antipoverty officials, respectively, informed on the community action phase of the program. (See Amendments Accepted, below)

Debate on Poverty Program

The three-day debate on the legislation opened with Republican denunciation of the administration and operation, at national and local levels, of the antipoverty program. Quie called the program a "mess" and an "administrative shambles" which, he said, the bill did "nothing to clean up." The "main point" of the bill, Quie charged, was to double the money available for OEO, thus allowing "twice the money with which to make mistakes."

Ayres called the program "an attempt to romance the poor" and a "conglomeration of old ideas wrapped together with a bright antipoverty label" whose enactment into law had been a "great aid to the Administration" during the 1964 election campaign. Much of the Republican attack also dealt with reported dropouts from the Job Corps and reports of fighting, drinking and other abuses by Job Corps enrollees.

Democratic proponents, however, stressed what Sam M. Gibbons (D Fla.), floor manager of the bill, called the "sound, constructive" basis of the program and the "real miracles" which he said had been accomplished in the program's first nine months.

Carl D. Perkins (D Ky.), one of the chief supporters of the 1964 Act, said that achievements to date were "nothing but encouraging."

Hugh L. Carey (D N.Y.) said that the "few isolated defects are miniscule in proportion to the magnitude of our undertaking." John S. Monagan (D Conn.) contended the program was "necessarily...tentative and experimental.... We must be tolerant...."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 8283:

Extended the antipoverty program through fiscal 1968, amended the program and authorized fiscal 1966 title-by-title appropriations, as follows:

Title I. Job Corps. Deleted a provision of the 1964 Act which required Job Corps enrollees to sign an affidavit saying they did not believe in or support any organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Government. (The bill retained a provision of the Act requiring Job Corps enrollees to take an oath of allegiance to the United States.)

Limited to male enrollees the requirement that 40 percent of Job Corps enrollees be assigned to Youth Conservation Corps camps for work in conserving natural resources and developing recreational areas.

Authorized participation of Cuban refugees in Job Corps programs.

Work-Training. Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of work-training programs instead of requiring 50 percent state contributions; required the higher state contributions thereafter.

Authorized participation of Cuban refugees in work-training programs.

Authorized the director of the OEO to override a Governor's veto of proposed work-training programs.

Work-Study Programs. Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of college work-study programs instead of requiring 75 percent state contributions; required the higher state contribution thereafter.

Authorized appropriations of $825 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs authorized under Title I.

Title II. Urban and Rural Community Action Programs.

Required "reasonable" public access to the books and records of agencies administering a community action program.

Authorized the OEO director to override a Governor's veto of a proposed community action program.

Authorized federal officials to permit certain poor communities -- such as those in rural areas -- to reduce their local poverty efforts in situations where the maintenance of these efforts, as required under the 1964 Act, would result in "unnecessary hardship...."

Extended for one year -- through Aug. 20, 1967 -- existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of a community action program instead of requiring 50 percent state contributions; required the larger state contribution thereafter.

Required that the OEO inform local community action agencies of applications it received for Title II funds from private nonprofit agencies in the locality.

Adult Basic Education. Authorized use of up to 5 percent of the funds appropriated or allocated to the adult basic education program for training teachers to participate in the program.

Extended for one year -- through fiscal 1967 -- the existing authority for 90 percent federal financing of the adult basic education program instead of requiring 50 percent state contributions; required the higher state contribution in fiscal 1968.

Authorized the OEO director to override a Governor's veto of proposed adult basic education programs.

Voluntary Assistance for Needy Children. Deleted the voluntary assistance program for needy children. (The program was designed to provide a national information and coordination center through which persons could obtain information on needy children whom they wanted to help through gifts and donations. An April 1965 OEO report said no method had been found to establish such a program on a national scale and that legal policy often prohibited releasing information concerning particular relief recipients.)

Authorized appropriations of $680 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs authorized under Title II.

Title III. Farmer and Migrant Workers Programs. Authorized the Government to make loans to cooperatives serving low-income rural families in processing and marketing dairy or edible farm products. (The bill thus made clear that "processing" was not "manufacturing"; loans to cooperatives for the latter activity were prohibited under the 1964 Act.)

Authorized the OEO to make federal grants, loans and loan guarantees for programs assisting the special needs of migrant and seasonally employed agricultural workers in housing, education, sanitation and child care.

Limited such federal grants, guarantees and loans to programs undertaken by a state or local public agencies, private nonprofit organizations and cooperatives (thus excluding programs undertaken by an individual or a growers' association).

Authorized appropriations of $70 million in fiscal 1966 for programs authorized under Title III.

Title V. Work Experience Programs. Provided that farm workers with less than $1,200 net annual family income would be considered "unemployed" and thus eligible to participate in the pilot work-experience programs to help unemployed fathers obtain employment.

Authorized appropriations of $300 million for programs authorized under Title V.

Title VI. Volunteers in Service to America. Authorized assignment of VISTA volunteers generally to any local program or activity which received, or was authorized to receive, federal assistance under the 1964 Act (existing law limited assignment to programs under Titles I and II).

Required that VISTA volunteers take an oath of allegiance to the United States, identical to the oath required of Job Corps enrollees.

Increased the wage base for VISTA volunteers so that death or disability benefits would be determined on the basis of a GS-7, rather than the lower GS-2, salary (in order to provide for the needs of adult volunteers who had family obligations).

Amended the National Defense Education Act of 1958 to authorize a moratorium of up to three years on the repayment of student loans granted under the 1958 Act to persons who served as VISTA volunteers.

Increased the National Advisory Council membership from 14 to 20 members, plus the OEO Director.

Authorized appropriations of $20 million in fiscal 1966 for the programs in Title VI.

Deleted a provision of the 1964 Act which required any individual receiving a payment under any section of the Act to sign an affidavit saying he did not believe in or support any organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Government.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

July 21 -- Sam. M. Gibbons (D Fla.) -- Allow Cuban refugees who entered the United States as non-immigrants or parolees to participate in Job Corps and neighborhood youth programs. Standing vote, 89-28.

Odgen R. Reid (R N.Y.) -- Provide for "reasonable" public access to the books and records of agencies administering community action programs. Voice vote.

July 22 -- Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) -- Require the Office of Economic Opportunity to inform local community action agencies of applications for federal aid which the OEO receives from private nonprofit agencies in the area of the local agencies. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

July 21 -- Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) -- Provide for (1) local establishment of community action boards; and (2) designation by a state of a community action agency to approve local community action programs before the program was granted federal funds. Voice.

William F. Ryan (D N.Y.) -- Provide for selecting members to policy-making community action boards through elections. Voice.

John H. Buchanan (R Ala.) -- Prohibit federal grants to churches or other religious organizations for community action programs. Voice.

July 22 -- William H. Ayres (R Ohio) -- Delete a section which allowed the OEO director to override a state Governor's veto of certain federally aided antipoverty projects. First adopted by a 110-97 standing vote; then defeated on a 150-155 teller vote.

Peter H. B. Frelinghuysen (R N.J.) -- Permit Governors to veto proposed federal contracts, loans, agreements, grants or other assistance to colleges and universities under the Act. Voice.

Glenn Andrews (R Ala.) -- Prohibit allocation of federal funds to any community action program in which persons were questioned about their political affiliation or there was use of the funds for other political activities. Voice.

Frelinghuysen -- Permit Governors to veto a part of a proposed community action program without disapproving the whole program. Voice.

Quie -- Authorize federally financed education programs for pre-school children in state education agencies. Voice.

Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) -- Prohibit the use of Armed Forces personnel in the antipoverty program. Voice.

Quie -- Prohibit the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity from holding any other Government post. Voice.

Richard L. Roudebush (R Ind.) -- Prohibit use of Veterans Administration hospitals and facilities to treat Job Corps enrollees. Standing, 43-71; teller, 61-113.

Gubser -- Provide that military departments be reimbursed for the entire cost of making its personnel available to the antipoverty program, including the cost of medical care and retirement benefits. Voice.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) -- Delete a section which eliminated a requirement in the 1964 Act that individuals receiving federal payments under the antipoverty program sign an affidavit saying they did not believe in or support an organization advocating the violent overthrow of the Government. Standing, 54-77; teller, 79-113.

Edward J. Gurney (R Fla.) -- Authorize appropriations of $412.5 million in fiscal 1966 for Job Corps, work-study and work-training programs under Title I, the same amount authorized for fiscal 1965. Voice.

Alphonzo Bell (R Calif.) -- Authorize appropriations of $340 million in fiscal 1966 for community action programs under Title II, the same amount authorized for fiscal 1965. Voice.

James Roosevelt (D Calif.) -- Amend Ichord amendment (below) to specify that the statutory minimum wage standard would be either the national law or the state law, whichever was higher. Voice.

Richard H. Ichord (D Mo.) -- Limit the wages of enrollees in work-training programs to the locally prevailing or statutory minimum wage rates. Voice.

Mark Andrews (R N.D.) -- Limit administrative and salary expenditures for the antipoverty program to 10 percent of the program's appropriations. Voice.

Charles E. Goodell (R N.Y.) -- Authorize appropriations of $150 million in fiscal 1966 for work-experience programs, the same amount authorized for fiscal 1965. Voice.

Goodell -- Authorize appropriations of $10 million in fiscal 1966 for VISTA and administrative expenses, the same amount authorized for fiscal 1965. Voice.

Quie -- Authorize appropriations of $35 million in fiscal 1966 for rural antipoverty programs, the same amount authorized for fiscal 1965. Voice.

Quie -- Transfer college work-study programs under Title I from the OEO to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Voice. (This was done later in the Higher Education Act (PL 89-329).

Quie -- Transfer work-training programs under Title I from the OEO to the Department of Labor. Voice.

Quie -- Transfer rural antipoverty programs under Title III from the OEO to the Department of Agriculture. Voice.

Goodell -- Transfer the adult work-experience programs under Title V to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Voice.

Goodell -- Transfer employment and investment incentive programs under Title IV to the Small Business Administration. Voice.

Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) -- Prohibit use of funds authorized for Job Corps programs for wages higher than locally prevailing wage rates. Standing, 76-119.

Senate Committee Action

A Select Subcommittee on Poverty of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee June 28-29 held hearings on the Administration bill (S 1759), introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Pat McNamara (D Mich.). Testimony was given by representatives of independent neighborhood and community organizations combatting poverty, all of whom claimed the poor were being excluded from official community action planning boards. The Subcommittee included all members of the full Committee except Lister Hill (D Ala.), the Committee Chairman.

The full Committee "marked up" the bill and Aug. 6 ordered it reported. The vote was 13-2, with Republicans Peter H. Dominick (Colo.) and Paul J. Fannin (Ariz.) opposed. The bill was reported to the Senate Aug. 13 (S Rept 599) with minority, additional and individual views.

The Senate Committee bill differed from the House-approved bill in the following respects:

Governor's Veto. The Committee adopted an amendment, sponsored by Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), to repeal entirely a state Governor's veto power over locally proposed work-training programs (otherwise called Neighborhood Youth Corps programs), community action programs and adult basic education programs. The House version of the bill retained the gubernatorial veto power over these programs but permitted the OEO director to override the veto. Both the House and the Senate Committee bills retained a Governor's absolute veto power over establishment of Job Corps programs and assignment of VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) volunteers in their state.

Community Action Programs. The Committee adopted numerous amendments relating to the community action phase of the antipoverty program. The Committee authorized a new program of federal grants for projects employing chronically unemployed poor adults in community betterment or conservation programs, and adopted an amendment by Fannin to specify that consumer education, debt counseling and family planning could be included in federally aided community action programs. The Committee also authorized community action projects designed, through self-help, to rehabilitate substandard housing and provide the skills needed for housing rehabilitation. Three amendments proposed by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) were adopted to: (1) reaffirm an OEO policy which allowed neighborhood community action groups or private nonprofit agencies not participating in citywide "umbrella" organizations to apply directly to the OEO for funds; (2) require "feasible" public access to information, including "reasonable" opportunity for public hearings at the request of local community groups; and (3) require "continuous consultation" by federal officials with state antipoverty authorities to ensure state participation in the planning and administration of community action programs.

Advisory Council. The Committee adopted an amendment by Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) to reconstitute the existing National Advisory Council as an organization separate from the OEO. The proposed new agency, called the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity, was authorized to review and recommend changes for the antipoverty program and was required to report directly to the President, rather than to the OEO director.

Funds. The Committee authorized appropriations of $1.65 billion in fiscal 1966 for the antipoverty program -- a reduction of $245 million in House-approved funds and an increase of $150 million over the Administration request for $1.5 billion. The extra $150 million was earmarked for community action projects employing unemployed poor adults (see above).

Other Changes. The Committee bill also: (1) extended the provisions of the 1939 Hatch Act (restricting political activities by federal employees) to cover employees of private community action agencies receiving federally funded salaries, and VISTA volunteers (employees of public agencies were already under the Hatch Act); (2) provided an intent-of-Congress that the special problems of the elderly poor be considered in the development, conduct and administration of antipoverty programs; (3) exempted Cuban refugees enrolled in Job Corps programs from taking the oath of allegiance to the United States required under HR 8283 of all other Job Corps enrollees; (4) extended the dairy farmers indemnity payments program from Jan. 31, 1965, through June 30, 1966; and (5) stipulated that no more than 10 percent of the funds allocated to one title of the Act could be transferred to another title.

Majority Views. The majority report said that nine months (since the beginning of the antipoverty program in October 1964) was "hardly sufficient to permit meaningful evaluation of...any major new federal program, least of all one which directly embraces nearly a dozen distinct component programs, which contemplates an unusual measure of coordination among federal departments...having historically, and sometimes jealously guarded, missions, and which is directed at improving the capacity of some 35 million people to help themselves...."

Minority Views. Minority views signed by Dominick, George Murphy (R Calif.) and Fannin said the bill could "only serve to increase the existing weaknesses" of the war on poverty, which they called a "nightmare of bureaucratic bungling."

The minority stated the Economic Opportunity Act would "continue to be a political and administrative monstrosity" unless the program was "exposed to the light of day," was "better coordinated with the multi-billion dollar efforts against poverty by other federal, state, local and private organizations," and unless the Governor's veto was reinstated.

Additional Views. Additional views signed by Javits, Prouty, Dominick, Murphy and Fannin urged the Administration "to meet the challenge of fighting poverty with its full resources by relieving the present director of one of his two important full-time directorships, that of the Peace Corps."

Individual Views. Individual views filed by Prouty charged that the war on poverty had exhibited "classic examples of administrative bungling, haphazard waste, shoddy coordination, bureaucratic secrecy, excessively high salaries, heavy handled dictation, ugly politics and - worst of all - botched opportunity."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Aug. 19, by a 61-29 roll-call vote, passed HR 8283 with a few major changes. (For voting, see charts p. 1066, 1067) As sent to conference with the House, HR 8283 authorized appropriations of $1,650,000,000 in fiscal 1966 -- $150 million more than the Administration request and $245 million less than the amount approved by the House.

The bill passed over strong Republican opposition and considerable opposition from Southern Democrats: R 9-20; D 52-9 (ND 41-1; SD 11-8).

During four days of heated debate preceding passage, Republicans made seven unsuccessful attempts to retain all or part of the Governor's veto power. Their efforts were defeated by narrow margins, in two cases on a tie vote. Most Southern Democrats supported the GOP amendments, reviving the once-powerful conservative coalition in which the two groups voted together against a majority of Northern Democrats. However, the coalition could not muster enough votes for victory on the veto issue.

On Aug. 17 and 18, the Senate rejected the following amendments dealing with a Governor's veto:

- By a 23-67 roll-call vote, an amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) to permit a Governor to veto certain antipoverty programs, but to allow the OEO director to override the veto if there first were public hearings on the issue. The amendment was similar to the House language, with an additional provision for public hearings. Javits said the hearings would ensure "that the matter will be put in the public domain." The bill's floor manager, Pat McNamara (D Mich.), argued that public hearings would add "further delay and confusion" to a situation in which Governors could use "the threat of veto and delaying tactics" to obstruct the antipoverty program.
- By a 45-45 roll-call vote, an amendment by Paul J. Fannin (R Ariz.) to delete the section of the bill which removed from the 1964 Act the language authorizing the Governor's veto, thereby retaining the veto in the law. Following this vote, the Senate took two close procedural votes on the Fannin amendment, one of which produced the first vote cast by Hubert H. Humphrey as Vice President. By a 44-45 roll-call vote, the Senate rejected a motion by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) to table a motion by Russell B. Long (D La.) to reconsider the vote rejecting Fannin's amendment. The Senate then rejected Long's motion by a 45-45 roll call. On this, Humphrey cast a negative vote, making the outcome 45-46; his vote, however, was not needed for defeat of the motion. John O. Pastore (D R.I.) asked why "did the President (of the Senate) vote when it was not necessary?" Humphrey replied, "The chair just wanted to vote." (The Fannin amendment to reinstate the veto would have carried, 46-45, except that Sen. B. Everett Jordan (D N.C.) withheld his "yea" vote and agreed to pair with Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho), who was absent and opposed the veto power.)

● By a 44-47 roll-call vote, an amendment by Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) which allowed a state legislature to divest a Governor of any future veto power. Prouty contended that such a provision would set "an important safeguard" against the abuse of veto power. Javits claimed Prouty's amendment lacked "flexibility" and could result in a "monumental struggle" between state legislatures and Governors.

● By a 43-44 roll-call vote, an amendment by Prouty retaining the language of the 1964 Act authorizing a Governor's veto power, but limiting to 20 days the time allowed for a Governor to veto a proposed program. (Under existing law, a Governor had 30 days in which to veto a program.)

● By a 43-43 roll-call vote, an amendment by Prouty retaining a Governor's veto power until the end of fiscal 1966, when it would be repealed. Prouty said his amendment would permit a Governor "a brief grace period to exert some influence in shaping the untested and potentially explosive" programs proposed by the OEO, until the OEO had gained "extensive experience" with the programs.

● By a 42-43 roll-call vote, an amendment by Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) retaining a Governor's veto over proposed community action programs. Dominick said these programs were "the focus of infection" in the antipoverty activities.

On Aug. 19, after another Prouty veto amendment was defeated, the Senate rejected, by a 42-49 roll-call vote, an amendment by Dominick which would have allowed Governors to veto an antipoverty program sponsored by a private individual or organization. Dominick claimed there would "not only be scandals, but also chaos in administering a program" which was privately sponsored but not coordinated with other state efforts.

Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), sponsor of the committee amendment that removed the gubernatorial veto power, said Dominick's amendment was unnecessary because the bill provided "plenty of protection" and "safeguards" to avoid conflict. Yarborough said reinstatement of the gubernatorial veto would put "politics back in the bill" and lead to a "stripped" and "emasculated" program.

However, the Senate Aug. 19 accepted one Republican compromise effort to give Governors a voice in local antipoverty affairs. The Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by Javits providing for OEO hearings on a Governor's objection to a proposed work-training or community action program in his state. Javits said his amendment would "lend dignity and respect to deeply held objections to denying the Governors veto power." Yarborough supported Javits' amendment, which he said would "cause more cooperation and less friction between public officials at all levels."

In debate on the veto power Aug. 17, Sen. McNamara said the "arbitrary" use of the veto could "kill meritorious programs," the mere "threat" of a veto could be used "to alter programs to suit the taste of the state Governor," and the veto power over locally initiated programs was "without precedent in any federal program where federal assistance is given to a local community."

Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.) charged that gubernatorial use of the veto could put incompetent people into power, that Governors "could conceivably sabotage a program and then point to it as a failure of the Administration" and that since funds for local programs were on a 10-percent local, 90-percent federal basis it was "none of the Governor's business how the program should be administered."

Before the passage vote, Minority Leader Dirksen called the antipoverty program the "greatest boondoggle since bread and circuses in the days of the ancient Roman Empire, when the republic fell." Dirksen described the program as "the very acme of waste and extravagance and unorganization and disorganization...a colossal disgrace, and, in some cases, an absolute fraud upon the taxpayers of this country." "We are on a binge," Dirksen said, "It can't last."

PROVISIONS -- Following are the major provisions of the Senate bill which either were not in the House-passed bill or were included in different form. (Unless otherwise noted, the House bill contained no similar provision.)

Title I. Job Corps. Exempted Cuban refugees enrolled in Job Corps programs from taking the oath of allegiance to the United States required under HR 8283 of all other Job Corps enrollees.

Prohibited Job Corps programs which would displace employed workers or interfere with existing contracts for services.

Prohibited payments to any individual or organization for referring to the OEO any candidates for Job Corps enrollment.

Work Training. Repealed the existing authority of state Governors to veto work-training (Neighborhood Youth Corps) programs. (The House version of HR 8283 permitted the director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to override a Governor's veto of these programs.)

Required the OEO director to make "reasonable" provision for informal hearings concerning a Governor's objection to a proposed work-training program.

Authorized $535 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title I -- a cut of $290 million in House-approved funds.

Title II. Urban and Rural Community Action Programs. Provided that consumer credit education, debt counseling and family planning could be included in community action programs.

Authorized federal grants for community action projects to assist chronically unemployed poor adults through participation in community betterment or conservation programs on federal, state and local lands.

Authorized federal grants for community action projects designed, through self-help, to rehabilitate substandard housing and provide the skills needed for housing rehabilitation.

Required "feasible" public access to information on community action programs, including "reasonable" opportunity for public hearings at the request of community groups. (This provision modified and expanded a House requirement that community action agencies allow "reasonable" public access to their books and records.)

Required the OEO director to make "reasonable" provision for informal hearings concerning a state Governor's objection to any proposed community action programs, except programs involving contracts, loans or grants to institutions of higher education. (Existing law already prohibited a Governor from vetoing those community action programs involving contracts or grants to universities and colleges.)

Repealed a state Governor's veto over proposed community action programs.

Required the OEO to notify a state's Governor and the official community action agency in a locality of any application for community action funds which the OEO received from a private nonprofit agency in the locality; required the notification to be made within five days of receipt of the application. (The House bill required such a notification be made only to the official agency.)

Provided that procedures for state participation in community action programs include "continuing consultation" with appropriate states on the development, conduct and administration of all such programs.

Authorized the OEO director to make community action grants or contracts directly to (or with) a private nonprofit agency. (This provision was intended to allow private nonprofit agencies not participating in a local "umbrella" community action program to receive grants separately from the local program.)

Extended the provisions of the 1939 Hatch Act (restricting political activities by federal employees) to cover employees of private community action agencies receiving federally funded salaries.

Retained language provided in existing law (which was eliminated in the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee) which authorized a nationwide voluntary assistance program for needy children; did not retain the existing-law language which required that social welfare agencies provide information about such children. (The House bill eliminated the whole program, in part because the distribution to the public by welfare agencies of names and other information about needy children was contrary, in some states, to established legal or policy restrictions.)

Adult Basic Education. Repealed a state Governor's veto power, provided in existing law, over adult basic education programs.

Required the OEO director to make "reasonable" provision for informal hearings concerning a Governor's objection to a proposed adult basic education program.

Authorized appropriations of $880 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title II -- an increase of $200 million in House-approved funds. Earmarked $150 million for projects to benefit chronically unemployed poor adults.

Title III. Farmers and Migrant Workers Programs. Extended the program of indemnity payments to dairy farmers from Jan. 31, 1965, through June 30, 1966. (The House bill allowed the program to expire Jan. 31, 1965.)

Authorized appropriations of $55 million for programs under Title III -- a $15 million cut in House-approved funds.

Title V. Work Experience Programs. Authorized appropriations of $150 million in fiscal 1966 for programs under Title V -- $150 million less than the amount approved in the House.

Title VI. Administration and Coordination. Extended the provisions of the 1939 Hatch Act (restricting political activities by federal employees) to VISTA volunteers.

Provided for establishment of a National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity composed of 21 members appointed by the President with the OEO director serving as an ex officio member. Required the Council to review the administration and operation of the anti-poverty program and make an annual report to the President of its findings and recommendations for change. (This provision would replace the existing National Advisory Council which was established within the OEO with the OEO director serving as chairman.)

Stipulated the intent of Congress that wherever "feasible" the special problems of the elderly poor would be considered in the development, conduct and administration of antipoverty programs.

Provided for establishment in the OEO of a Task Force on Programs for the Elderly Poor, composed of 19 members appointed by and reporting to the OEO director, to study the needs of the elderly poor and possible programs to assist them.

Stipulated that no more than 10 percent of the funds allocated to one title of the Act could be transferred to another title, and that such a transfer of funds could result in no more than a 10-percent increase in the funds originally allocated to the recipient title.

Required that the benefits under the Act be distributed "equitably" between residents of rural and urban areas.

Authorized appropriations of $30 million in fiscal 1966 for all programs under Title VI -- an increase of $10 million in House-approved funds.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug. 17 -- Milward L. Simpson (R Wyo.) -- Prohibit any Job Corps program which would displace employed workers or interfere with existing contracts for services. Voice vote.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Require the Office of Economic Opportunity to notify a Governor of any application for community action funds which the OEO received from a private nonprofit agency in a community in which there already existed a community action agency; required the notification to be made within five days of receipt of the application. Standing.

Aug. 19 -- Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) -- Prohibit payments to an individual or organization for referring candidates for Job Corps enrollment to the OEO. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Retain in existing law a voluntary assistance program for needy children, but without the existing requirement that social welfare agencies provide information about such children (which they frequently are prohibited from disclosing by laws or policy restrictions). Roll call, 49-40.

George McGovern (D S.D.) -- Require that benefits of the 1964 Economic Opportunity Act be distributed equitably between residents of rural and urban areas. Voice.

Javits -- Require that reasonable provision be made by the OEO for informal hearings on a state Governor's objection to proposed work-training and community action programs. Voice.

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- Provide for establishment in the OEO of a Task Force on Programs for the Elderly Poor to study the needs of and programs for the aging poor. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Aug. 17 -- Dominick -- Reduce the fiscal 1966 appropriations authorization of $1.65 billion to $1,097,500,000. Roll call, 40-51.

Paul J. Fannin (R Ariz.) -- (Proposed as a substitute for pending Javits amendment, below) Delete from the bill the section which eliminated the Governors' veto power over certain federal anti-poverty programs. Roll call, 45-45.

Prouty -- (Substitute for pending Javits amendment, below) Permit a state legislature to divest a Governor of his veto power over certain anti-poverty programs. Roll call, 44-47.

Javits -- Allow federal officials to override a Governor's veto of certain federal anti-poverty activities if there was an opportunity for public hearings first. Roll call, 23-67.

Aug. 18 -- Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Reduce the fiscal 1966 appropriations authorization of $1.65 billion to the fiscal 1965 level of $947.5 million, and establish a joint Congressional committee to study the federal anti-poverty program. Roll call, 39-48.

Javits -- Prohibit the OEO director from holding another Government position of equivalent rank. Roll call, 30-59.

Prouty -- Allow a Governor 20 days in which to veto a proposed anti-poverty program (instead of the 30 days allowed under existing law). Roll call, 43-44.

Prouty -- Retain a Governor's veto power over certain programs until the end of fiscal 1966. Roll call, 43-43.

Dominick -- Retain the Governor's veto power over community action programs. Roll call, 42-43.

Aug. 19 -- Prouty -- Allow a Governor to veto certain anti-poverty projects which would: (1) pay salaries larger than the annual salary of the highest state welfare official; (2) permit "political exploitation of the poor"; (3) deny the poor "adequate participation" in project planning; (4) deny the poor effective representation on community advisory or governing boards; (5) permit a person convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude to be employed by an agency administering a community action program; and (6) create "great social unrest or disturbances of the peace." Roll call, 44-48.

Dominick -- Allow a Governor to veto proposed community action programs sponsored by private organizations. Roll call, 42-49.

Prouty -- Transfer six programs under the 1964 Economic Opportunity Act from the OEO to the federal agencies currently administering the six programs. Roll call, 35-58.

Prouty -- Eliminate language in the bill and a $150 million authorization providing special programs for the chronically unemployed poor. Roll call, 41-47.

Conference

House and Senate conferees Sept. 14 filed a report on HR 8283 (H Rept 1001) authorizing appropriations of $1,785,000,000 to finance federal antipoverty activities in fiscal 1966. This was $285 million over the President's request.

Conferees accepted the Senate language which repealed entirely a Governor's veto power over Neighborhood Youth Corps, community action and adult basic education programs.

In other major decisions, conferees dropped Senate language which: specifically authorized grants for family planning, consumer credit education, debt counseling and housing rehabilitation; which extended provisions of the 1939 Hatch Act to cover employees of private community action agencies and VISTA volunteers (the Civil Service Commission said the provision would cover too many persons in private life); and the provision for an OEO Task Force on Programs for the Elderly Poor. Conferees accepted a House provision increasing the existing National Advisory Council membership, instead of a Senate provision establishing an advisory council independent of the OEO.

Conferees agreed on compromise figures for fiscal 1966 authorizations for Titles I and II (exceeding the Budget requests by $150 million and $135 million, respectively) and accepted Senate-approved authorization figures for Titles III, V and VI. (See final provisions, p. 406)

HOUSE RECOMMITTAL

The House Sept. 15 by a 209-180 roll-call vote sent HR 8283 back to the conference committee with instructions that House conferees insist on the House provision which allowed a limited gubernatorial veto power over Neighborhood Youth Corps, community action and adult basic education programs. Other parts of the bill were not in dispute.

The recommittal motion was offered by William H. Ayres (R Ohio). He said that 37 Governors had contacted Gov. William W. Scranton (R Pa.) who was coordinating efforts to reinstate the Governor's veto power, to assure him of their support for retaining the power.

Adoption of the recommittal motion was a victory for Republicans, who voted unanimously in favor of it and were supported by a majority of Southern Democrats (R 127-0; ND 17-160; SD 65-20). (See chart p. 1002)

House and Senate conferees Sept. 22 met and approved the House version of the veto in place of the Senate's outright ban. In H Rept 1061, conferees said they expected the OEO director to establish procedures to bring about state participation in community action programs which would include provision for informal hearings requested by a Governor or "other interested parties."

FINAL ACTION

The poverty bill was cleared for President Johnson's signature when the House Sept. 23 by voice vote, and the Senate Sept. 24 by a 46-22 roll-call vote, adopted the revised conference report. Before Senate adoption of the report, Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) called the veto provision so limited as to be "almost meaningless." Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) said it provided a "completely anomalous situation" in which "an executive, appointive official can overrule the elected Governor of a state on activities within that Governor's state." (For voting, see chart p. 1076)

However, Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said he "honestly" believed that "we have come as close to a consensus as is possible. The Governor is entitled to such opportunity and such authority (to veto) and, I think, within reason, we have retained it."

APPROPRIATIONS VOTED

Congress Oct. 21 cleared a supplemental appropriations bill (HR 11588 -- PL 89-309) appropriating $1.5 billion in fiscal 1966 for the antipoverty program. The House had appropriated $1.5 billion and the Senate $1,510 billion. (See breakdown of figures, p. 405)

In its report on HR 11588, the House Appropriations Committee commended the OEO for its "remarkable ability" to get the "complex, multifaceted program moving expeditiously and in an efficient manner."

The final appropriations bill retained Senate language which (1) extended the availability of funds for certain antipoverty projects from the one-year period provided in the House-approved bill to two years and (2) stipulated that none of the antipoverty funds appropriated by HR 11588 could be made available for any grant until the OEO director had certified the recipient's ability to administer the proposed program and the recipient had agreed that the General Accounting Office should have access to records which pertained exclusively to the grant.

MAJOR REVISION OF AID PROGRAM REJECTED

S 1837 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 170) April 28, 1965.

HR 7750 -- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 321) May 7.

- Passed by a 249-148 roll-call vote of the House May 25. (See p. 962)
- Passed, amended, by a 68-20 roll-call vote of the Senate June 14. (See p. 1047)
- Conference report (H Rept 811) agreed to by a 244-150 roll-call vote of the House Aug. 19 (see p. 990) and by a 67-27 roll-call vote of the Senate Aug. 24 (see p. 1068).

PL 89-171 -- Signed into law Sept. 6.

A major dispute over the future and the structure of U.S. foreign aid developed during Congressional consideration in 1965 of the annual aid authorization legislation. Reflecting increasing dissatisfaction with the program, the Senate bill required major restructuring of foreign aid by 1968. The House, however, balked at this directive. The result was a postponement of the issue; no basic changes in foreign aid were made in 1965.

All the fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation -- both authorization and appropriations -- also was unique because, for the second consecutive year, Congress made small reductions in the Administration's requests following years of annual major surgery on the Executive's proposals. As enacted, HR 7750 authorized appropriations of $3,360,000,000 in fiscal 1966, just $99,470,000 less than the total appropriations requested by President Johnson. Although this cut was somewhat larger than the reduction made the previous year, it still was extraordinarily small compared to most of the aid program's history.

The reduction in the actual appropriations also was small. The total appropriation enacted was 6.9 percent under the President's requests. Previously, the smallest cut was a 7.6 percent reduction in the fiscal 1965 bill passed in 1964. (For appropriations action, see p. 441)

The central foreign aid issue in 1965 was not the size of the program but whether or not Congress should take definite steps in the authorization legislation to force a major reworking of U.S. aid.

Enactment of the authorization bill was delayed for two months by the basic disagreement between the Senate and the House over the future of the progam. The dispute was over whether -- as in the Senate bill -- to authorize funds for two years and require an end to the foreign aid program as currently constituted, or whether -- as in the House version -- to authorize a one-year program without reference to possible changes in foreign aid. But both bills continued the basic existing foreign aid program through fiscal 1966 (and through 1967 in the case of the Senate). The big difference was that the Senate wanted to find a new approach beginning in fiscal 1968 and, in effect, proposed a first step by putting the entire aid authorization on a two-year basis. Although the House prevailed (through the adamant insistence of its conferees), Senate backers of aid reform believed that groundwork had been laid for serious consideration of a new program and hoped that the Administration would recommend a revamping in 1966. President Johnson in 1965 sought only a normal one-year extension of the program.

The reform issue did not emerge unannounced in 1965. Suggestions to revamp the aid program were made on and off over the previous decade (and many changes were made), but in 1965 the issue focused sufficiently to have explicit expression in a bill that passed a chamber of Congress. But the issue was focused only to the extent that many people believed that after two decades of foreign aid, the time to make far-reaching changes had arrived. The Senate bill specified simply that the current program had to conclude at the end of fiscal 1967. It requested the President to submit new proposals in 1966 and suggested guidelines for him to consider in preparing his recommendations. The bill also created a Foreign Aid Planning Committee to advise the President and to make its own independent study with recommendations to follow. All of these provisions were dropped from the final bill. Debate on the issue did not indicate that the backers of reform had a clear idea of how the new aid program should be constructed after the old one was ended, although some ideas -- such as the multiyear authorization of the Senate bill -- did emerge. However, there were some basically differing opinions.

Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, was a principal figure in the group urging aid reforms. He sought to separate economic and military aid into individual bills, to have multiyear authorizations and to channel more aid through international organizations. Fulbright at first said he would not manage the bill in 1965 unless the Administration revised the aid program, but later changed his mind, in part, he said, because no one else wanted the job either. Another outspoken critic was Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) who had taken the aid program to task in previous years. Morse sponsored the section in the bill terminating the program in two years, but he strongly disagreed with proposals on multiyear authorization and increased use of multilateral aid. Morse argued that these proposals would abdicate Congressional responsibility over continuing review of the aid program.

Provisions

As signed into law, PL 89-171, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1965, amended the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) as follows (for summary of authorization figures, see box on next page):

Expressed the sense of Congress that in furnishing economic assistance, excess personal property should be used wherever practicable in place of purchase of new items. Also expressed the sense of Congress that economic assistance should be complemented by furnishing, under other Acts, of surplus agricultural commodities and by disposal of excess property.

Also expressed the sense of Congress that assistance under this or any other Act to any foreign country which permitted, or failed to take adequate measures to prevent, the damage or destruction by mob action of U.S. property within that country, should be terminated and not resumed until the President had determined that appropriate measures had been taken by such country to prevent a recurrence of such damage or destruction.

Development Assistance. Authorized $210 million for development grants.

Authorized the President, after consideration of the extent of additional participation by other countries, to make available, on such terms and conditions as he determined, up to 15 percent of development loan funds to the International Development Assn., the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or the International Finance Corp.

Requested the President to seek and take appropriate action, in cooperation and consultation with African and other interested nations and with international development organizations, to further and assist in the advancement of African regional development institutions, including the African Development Bank, to promote economic development.

Authorized $7 million for American schools and hospitals abroad during fiscal 1966.

Restricted assistance to American hospitals abroad to those serving as centers of medical education and research (but not of treatment, as under previous law).

Investment Guarantees. Raised the limit on the total face amount of specific risk guarantees that could be outstanding at any one time from $2.5 billion to $5 billion.

Extended authority to issue extended risk guarantees from June 30, 1966, to June 30, 1967, and removed the existing limits of $25 million on the size of loan investment guarantees and $10 million on other guarantees (equity investments) which could be issued.

Removed the 20-year limit on U.S. guarantees of loan investments abroad by Americans (the existing limit of 20-year guarantees for equity investments was not changed).

Limited to $175 million the amount of extended risk guarantees that could be used for purposes other than housing (thereby assuring at least $125 million for housing).

Authorized the use of fee income from investment guarantees to pay the costs of investigating and adjusting claims under guarantees.

Broadened the definition of U.S. investors eligible to receive guarantees to include foreign corporations, partnerships or other associations owned by more than one U.S. citizen, corporation, partnership or other association.

Broadened a sense-of-Congress provision on Latin American housing projects. Specified that in order to stimulate private home ownership and to assist in development of stable economies in Latin America, the President should use the existing housing guarantee authority to assist: in the development of self-liquidating pilot housing projects (the same as in existing law); in the development of institutions engaged in Alliance for Progress programs including cooperatives, free labor unions, savings and loan-type institutions and other private enterprise programs engaged directly or indirectly in Latin America in the financing of home mortgages; the construction of homes for lower-income persons and families; the increased mobilization of savings; and the improvement of housing conditions in Latin America. To accomplish these purposes, authorized the President to issue guarantees to eligible U.S. investors, assuring against loss of loan investments in: (1) pilot or demonstration private housing projects in Latin America of types similar to those insured by the Federal Housing Administration (as authorized under existing law); (2) Latin American credit institutions which financed home mortgages; (3) Latin American housing projects for lower-income families and persons; (4) projects which would promote the development of institutions important to the success of the Alliance for Progress, such as free labor unions, cooperatives and other private enterprise programs; or (5) housing projects for which at least 25 percent of the financing was made available within Latin America and which, to the maximum extent practicable, had a maximum unit cost of $6,500.

Increased from $250 million to $400 million the total face amount of Latin American housing guarantees that could be outstanding at any one time, and extended the authority to issue such guarantees to June 30, 1967.

Alliance for Progress. (Congress in 1962 authorized $600 million for each of fiscal years 1963-66.)

Earmarked $75 million of the Alliance funds for grants in fiscal 1966.

International Organizations and Programs. Authorized $144,755,000 for international organizations and programs in fiscal 1966.

Limited U.S. contributions during fiscal 1966 to the United Nations Works and Relief Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to $15.2 million.

Supporting Assistance. Authorized an appropriation of $369,200,000 for fiscal 1966.

Contingency Fund. Authorized $50 million for the President's contingency fund for fiscal 1966.

In addition to the regular contingency fund authorization, authorized for use in Southeast Asia such sums

1 In thousands of dollars.
2 Congress in 1961 authorized $1.5 billion for each of fiscal years 1963-66. Of this amount, an appropriation of $780,250,000 was requested for 1966.
3 Congress in 1962 authorized $600 million for each of fiscal years 1963-66.
4 Special authorization under the Contingency Fund for aid to Southeast Asia, requested by the President June1. Of the total $89 million requested and authorized, $80 million was for supporting assistance and $9 million technical cooperation and development grants.
5 Funds already authorized under continuing authorizations.
6 The amounts enclosed in parentheses are authorizations enacted by Congress in previous years. See footnotes 2, 3 and 5.
7 Total does not equal sum of figures because of provision in bill arbitrarily limiting total fiscal 1966 appropriations authorization to $3.36 billion. The sum of the figures is $3,457,670,000.
8 This is the total amount (also given in the first column, but as two figures) requested for appropriation. The $75,000,000 figure, in italics, is a limitation on the amount of the Alliance for Progress appropriation that may be used for grants; it is part of the $580,125,000 authorization and is not added separately into the totals at the bottom of the column.

as were necessary in fiscal 1966, not to exceed $89 million, for economic and military assistance.

Military Assistance. Authorized appropriations of $1,170,000,000 for military assistance in fiscal 1966.

Permitted the United States to contribute to multilateral programs for the acquisition or construction of international facilities in the United States, as well as in foreign countries.

Specified that the establishment of civic action programs was an objective of military assistance (in addition to other objectives already specified by law). Permitted assistance to be furnished for the purpose of aiding foreign military forces (or the voluntary efforts of U.S. forces) in constructing public works and in engaging in other activities helpful to the economic and social development of friendly nations.

Expressed the sense of Congress that foreign military forces should not be established or maintained solely for civic action activities, that civic action activities should not detract significantly from the primary military mission of the military forces and that such activities should be coordinated with and form part of a nation's total economic development effort.

Provided that nonexcess defense articles could be sold at the standard price in effect at the time they were offered for sale (rather than at the time of delivery).

Authorized the President, in entering into sales agreements with foreign countries and international organizations, to fix prices to be paid by the purchasers when he determined such action to be in the national interest. Stipulated that, to the maximum extent possible, prices fixed under any such sales agreements should be sufficient to reimburse the United States for the cost of the defense articles or services ordered.

Specified that funds available under the military assistance program for financing military sales should be used to reimburse the Defense Department in the amount by which the price paid by the United States to the supplier exceeded the sales price, unless the President determined that the continued production of the article sold was advantageous to the U.S. armed forces. (The purpose of this section and the immediately preceding provision was to enable both the United States and the purchasing country or international organization to know the price of defense articles or services when a sales agreement is signed.)

Directed the President to submit to Congress a detailed report concerning any fixed-price sales agreement under which the aggregate cost to the United States exceeded the amount required to be paid by the purchaser.

Provided that U.S. dollar repayments of funds made available for military assistance -- including dollar proceeds derived from the sale of foreign currency, repayments to any U.S. agency or program, receipts from the disposition of evidences of indebtedness, charges or interest collected, and payments by purchasers which exceeded the amounts required by fixed-price contracts -- would be credited to a separate fund account (instead of to the current applicable appropriation, as previously provided) and made available until expended solely for financing sales and guarantees, including the overhead costs.

Extended through fiscal 1966 the special authority of the President, if he determined it to be vital to the security of the United States, to order defense articles from the stocks of the Defense Department and defense services for use in providing military assistance, subject to subsequent reimbursement therefor. Extended through fiscal 1966 the existing $300 million limitation on the value of such orders.

Authorized the use of $25 million of military aid funds for assistance on a cost-sharing basis to an inter-American military force under control of the Organization of American States. (The funds were subject to an existing limitation of $55 million in each fiscal year on the value of grant programs of defense articles for the American Republics. The provision replaced existing language permitting "a part" of the funds to be used "for assistance in implementing a feasible plan for regional defense.") Provided that the cost of defense articles supplied for use of the Inter-American Peace Force in the Dominican Republic should not be charged against the existing $55 million limitation.

Provided that to the maximum extent feasible, military assistance should be furnished to American Republics in accordance with joint plans (including those related to internal security problems) approved by the OAS. Directed the President to submit semi-annual reports to the Speaker of the House and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the implementation of this provision.

Continued through fiscal 1966 the existing limitation of $25 million on the value of military grant assistance to African countries.

General Provisions. Stipulated that funds realized as a result of any failure of a transaction financed under authority of the economic assistance portion of the program to conform to the requirements of the Act, or to any applicable rules, regulations or contracts, should revert to the respective appropriation, fund or account used to finance such transaction or currently available for the same general purpose.

Stipulated that funds realized by the United States Government from the sale, transfer or disposal of defense articles returned to the Government by a recipient country or international organization as no longer required should be credited to the respective appropriation, fund or account used to procure such articles, or to the appropriation, fund or account currently available for the same general purpose.

Deleted the provision in existing law that any act of Congress appropriating funds to carry out U.S. operations abroad automatically permitted the utilization of U.S.-owned excess foreign currencies. Instead, directed the President to take all appropriate steps to assure that, to the maximum extent possible, U.S.-owned foreign currencies were utilized in lieu of dollars. Provided that dollar funds made available pursuant to the Act should not be expended for goods and services when U.S.-owned foreign currencies were available, unless the administrative official approving the voucher certified as to the reason for the use of dollars in each case.

Stipulated that where assistance was to be furnished to a recipient country on a basis which would result in the accrual of foreign currency proceeds to the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury should issue regulations requiring that agreements relating to such assistance include provisions for the receipt of interest income on the foreign currency proceeds deposited in authorized depositories. Authorized the Secretary to waive the requirement for receipt of interest income whenever he determined receipt of such income not to be in the national interest, provided that he or his delegate promptly reported to Congress on each such determination and the reasons therefor.

Amended as follows the existing provision that no U.S. court should decline, because of the "act of state" doctrine, to make a determination on the merits of, or to apply principles of international law in, a case in which an act of a foreign state was alleged to be contrary to international law: (1) made clear that the provision did not prevent banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions from using the "act of state" doctrine as a defense to multiple liability upon any contract, deposit or insurance policy in any case where such liability had been taken over or expropriated by a foreign state and (2) deleted the provision in existing law limiting application of the provision to cases begun prior to Jan. 1, 1966, in effect making it permanent law.

Extended from Dec. 31, 1965, to Dec. 31, 1966, the deadline for ending assistance to any less-developed country which had failed to enter an agreement with the President to institute an investment guarantee program against inconvertibility, expropriation or confiscation.

Stipulated that "in view of the aggression of North Viet Nam," the President "shall consider" denying assistance under the Act to any country which had failed to take appropriate steps, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1965, (1) to prevent ships or aircraft under its registry from transporting to North Viet Nam (a) any items of economic assistance, (b) any items defined by the Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951 as arms, ammunition and implements of war, atomic energy materials, petroleum, transportation materials of strategic value or items of primary strategic significance used in the production of arms, ammunition and implements of war or (c) any other equipment, materials or commodities; and (2) to prevent ships or aircraft under its registry from transporting any equipment, materials or commodities from North Viet Nam.

Stipulated that in determining whether or not to furnish assistance under the Act, consideration shall be given to excluding assistance to any country which seized or imposed any penalty or sanction against a U.S. fishing vessel on account of its fishing activities in international waters. Provided that this provision should not apply in any case governed by international agreement to which the United States was a party.

Administrative Provisions. Stipulated that wherever practicable, especially in the case of smaller programs, assistance under the Act should be administered, under the direction of the chief of the U.S. diplomatic mission, by the principal economic officer of the mission in the case of economic assistance and the senior military officer in the case of military assistance.

Stipulated that except as provided under the provisions for military assistance, no provision of the Act should be construed to prohibit the sale, exchange or guarantee of a sale of defense articles or defense services to any friendly country or international organization if the President had found that assisting such country or organization would strengthen the security of the United States and promote world peace.

Authorized $54,240,000 for AID's administrative expenses in fiscal 1966.

Miscellaneous Provisions. Stipulated that the aggregate of the amounts authorized for fiscal 1966 should not exceed $3,360,000,000.

In addition, the bill amended the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 83-480) to stipulate that no sales of surplus U.S. agricultural commodities for foreign currency (Title I sales) could be made to the United Arab Republic unless the President determined such sales to be essential to the national interest of the United States, and that no such sale should be based on the requirements of the UAR for more than one fiscal year. Also directed the President to keep the Senate Foreign Relations and Appropriations Committees and the Speaker of the House fully and currently informed with respect to Title I sales to the UAR.

President Johnson Jan. 14, 1965, sent to Congress his foreign aid message for fiscal 1966, accompanied by a draft bill. The President requested $3,380,370,000, the lowest initial request since the foreign aid program began. The total included $2,210,370,000 for economic assistance and $1,170,000,000 for military aid. On April 22, Mr. Johnson reduced his request for authorization of funds for international organizations and programs by $9.9 million, to $145,555,000. On June 1, the President requested authorization of an additional $89 million for use in Southeast Asia -- $80 million for supporting assistance and $9 million for technical cooperation and development grants -- bringing his final total request to $3,459,470,000. (For texts of the messages, see p. 1397, 1425)

The final request was $57,230,000 less than had been asked by President Johnson for fiscal 1965, a figure that had been described by the President as a "barebones" request. The 7.6 percent cut made in the fiscal 1965 authorization request had been the lowest percentage cut to date.

HIGHLIGHTS OF MESSAGES

In opening his Jan. 14 message, President Johnson said the United States "must do more than meet the immediate threat to free world security" represented by the "allies" of Communism: "tyranny, poverty, ignorance and disease."

Mr. Johnson said, "Foreign assistance programs reach beyond today's crisis, to offer:

"Strength to those who would be free;

"Hope for those who would otherwise despair;

"Progress for those who would help themselves."

The President said the program he was requesting "is selective and concentrated; emphasizes self-help and the fastest possible termination of dependence on aid; provides an increasing role for private enterprise; improves multilateral coordination of development aid; reflects continuing improvement in management."

Mr. Johnson said, "This is a minimum request, the smallest in the history of the foreign aid program." However, he asked special standby authority "for use if necessary in Viet Nam only," and added, "If, during the year, situations should arise which require additional amounts of U.S. assistance to advance vital U.S. interests,

I shall not hesitate to inform the Congress and request additional funds."

Mr. Johnson said that the Agency for International Development (AID) had made "great progress in reducing the effect of economic assistance on our balance of payments. The bulk of our assistance -- well over 80 percent -- now takes the form of U.S. goods and services, not dollars. Dollar payments abroad have sharply declined. In 1960, the dollar drain to other countries which resulted from the aid program measured over $1 billion. This year and next the drain is expected to be less than $500 million. Moreover, a significant part of this is offset by interest and repayment of past United States loan assistance."

In his June 1 message requesting an additional $89 million for Southeast Asian development, Mr. Johnson said that "we are offering our hand and our abundance to those who seek to build a brighter future. The effort to create more progressive societies cannot wait for an ideal moment. It cannot wait until peace has been finally secured. We must move ahead now. I know of no more urgent task ahead."

The President said the additional money sought would be used to accelerate development of the Mekong River basin; to provide power lines, some electrification projects, various types of studies (such as flood control) and improved medical services; to train people for the construction of roads, dams and other small-scale village projects; to finance increasing imports in iron and steel, cement, chemicals, drugs and other items; and to supplement an existing agricultural development program.

Legislation Submitted

The draft bill submitted to Congress by President Johnson included requests for funds for specific programs which were in most instances lower than those made the previous year.

Among the President's requests were $780 million for development loans, down from the $922 million requested, but higher than the $773.7 million provided in 1964; $369.2 million for supporting assistance (budget support), down from the $405 million requested and the $401 million provided in 1964; $50 million for the contingency fund, down from the $150 million requested and the $99.2 million provided in 1964; $7 million for American schools and hospitals abroad, down from the $18 million requested and the $16.8 million provided in 1964. The $210 million requested for technical cooperation (grants) was close to the 1964 figure. For military assistance, the President requested $1,170,000,000. He had asked for, and received, $1,055,000,000 in 1964. (See box for total requests, p. 423)

In addition to the requests for definite funds, the President requested a standby authority for appropriation of further funds if needed in Viet Nam. The funds would be for military assistance or supporting assistance. The President requested an open-ended authority — with no ceiling on the appropriation that might be requested later.

The President also asked Congress to raise the ceilings on the amounts of obligations that might be outstanding under the various investment guarantee programs: specific risks — war, expropriation, inconvertibility of funds, extended risks — various commercial risks; and Latin American housing projects. Further, he said that he would request a special tax credit for companies investing in underdeveloped areas. (The tax credit was to be formulated by the Treasury Department and introduced as a separate bill, but was never submitted to Congress. Congress failed to act on similar requests in 1963 and 1964.) Also, as a separate measure, the President urged authorization of $750 million over three years for a U.S. contribution to a new special operations fund of the Inter-American Development Bank. The new fund would largely replace the Social Progress Trust Fund which had been included in the aid bill in previous years. This was approved. (See story p. 492)

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 4-April 7 on the Administration draft bill to authorize foreign assistance funds for fiscal 1966.

Opening the hearings, Committee Chairman Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) said the bill was a revision prepared by the Administration at his request. He said the original draft bill had provided for separation of the economic and military programs. Morgan said the two programs should not be separated because they had the same basic objective -- "to prevent war and to maintain our security" -- and that Congress should look at the foreign aid program "as a whole in order to know its cost and judge its accomplishments." Morgan said the revised draft bill provided for amendment of existing law "without disturbing its structure."

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 4 -- David E. Bell, administrator of the Agency for International Development (AID), testified that "for the immediate years ahead, the United States faces a world that is shifting, restless, turbulent, uncertain and, on some occasions and in some instances, painfully hostile. There is now, perhaps, somewhat less likelihood of a direct military confrontation of the two big powers, but there is an increasing, and no less dangerous, threat to the security and freedom of the new and less-developed countries from the Communist world." Since this indirect threat affected U.S. security, Bell continued, the nation's "fundamental interests" are "engaged and involved in what happens in Asia, Africa and Latin America. Our own national security requires us to contribute to the strength and independence of the peoples of the less-developed areas. It is important to our own economic progress to help expand the economies of the developing countries, thus opening opportunities for larger trade and productive investment. Our own self-respect requires us...to devote some portion of our wealth to the less fortunate elsewhere."

Bell said the total request of $3,380,370,000 for fiscal 1966 was "the smallest request in the history of the aid program." He said that "almost three-fourths" of the $1,170,000,000 for military assistance would be used to provide military equipment and training for "the 11 countries in the arc stretching from Greece and Turkey to Taiwan and Korea," which maintained 3.5 million men in arms and constituted "a major share of the defenses of the Free World against aggression and subversion."

Bell said the funds for supporting assistance ($369 million) and the Contingency Fund ($50 million) were used "primarily in countries where security considerations predominate." He said that nearly 90 percent of these funds were earmarked for Viet Nam, Laos, Korea and Jordan. Bell noted that in 1960 over $1 billion was used for supporting assistance. He said, "Supporting assistance has been ended altogether in some 13 countries where sufficient progress has been made" to permit the shift to long-term development assistance.

Bell said $1.67 billion was requested for development loans and grants for technical assistance. He said about two-thirds of this development aid would go to seven countries -- India, Pakistan, Turkey, Nigeria, Tunisia, Brazil and Chile -- which had major self-help programs underway. He stressed that "development assistance leads to permanent progress...and the earliest possible termination of economic assistance." Bell observed that U.S. economic assistance had been ended in 26 countries.

Bell emphasized the extent to which U.S. foreign aid was part of "a broad international effort." He said that in calendar 1963, U.S. bilateral aid "was for the first time slightly less than half of the assistance received by less-developed countries. Bilateral aid from other advanced countries was about one third of the total, and aid through multilateral agencies, of which the U.S. share is normally less than half, represented 17 percent of the total." Bell said U.S. policy was to "support the channeling of more aid through multilateral agencies, as rapidly as other advanced countries will do so on an equitable basis of cost-sharing."

Feb. 10 -- G. Mennen Williams, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, said that Africa was "a continent whose difficulties are making it vulnerable to Communist subversion, a continent urgently in need of support from its friends." He said that despite "the many and sometimes excruciating problems Africa is experiencing," most African countries were advancing in the areas of production, health and education.

Feb. 16 -- Thomas C. Mann, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, said that the "notable gains" made in recent years under the Alliance for Progress "are beginnings. Problems remain." He listed population growth, "galloping inflation," increased food production and greater private investment as among the major problems.

March 11 -- Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara testified in executive session on the military foreign aid program. An unclassified version of his testimony was released to the public. McNamara said $50 million previously allocated for economic aid to South Viet Nam would be transferred to the military aid program in that country due to increased costs of the war. McNamara said that during fiscal 1965, U.S. aid to South Viet Nam was about $700 million, divided evenly between economic and military aid and the expenses of the U.S. security forces. He said that in the new budget, the Administration was requesting an additional $170 million "for the special combat needs in Viet Nam and Laos," above amounts previously allocated to those countries for military assistance. The totals for military assistance to Viet Nam and Laos were not given. McNamara warned that additional assistance for the two countries might become necessary. (See defense appropriations bill, p. 168)

McNamara said military assistance to Latin America would contribute to the Alliance for Progress "by helping create an environment free from fear of lawlessness, banditry and insurgency. Such freedom is a prerequisite to economic and social progress. It is also our purpose to provide only that amount and kind of military assistance which will exert a desirable influence on the Latin American military and contribute to the stability of constitutional governments."

COMMITTEE ACTION

The House Foreign Affairs Committee May 7 reported a clean bill (HR 7750 -- H Rept 321) authorizing appropriation of $2,004,195,000 for foreign aid in fiscal 1966. Together with previously authorized sums for development loans and the Alliance for Progress, the bill permitted a total appropriation of $3,367,670,000 for fiscal 1966. This was only $12.7 million less than President Johnson's original request, with cuts made in funds for international organizations and programs (reduced $10.7 million to $144,755,000) and for AID administrative expenses (reduced $2 million to $53,240,000).

In addition, the bill included the "blank-check" authorization sought by the President for military and economic aid to Viet Nam, permitting appropriation "for use in Southeast Asia (of) such sums as may be necessary" if the President "determines such use to be important to the national interest." The bill also prohibited aid to any countries failing to prevent ships or aircraft under their registry from transporting goods to or from North Viet Nam.

Majority Views. The Committee made clear its whole-hearted disagreement with proposals for terminating the aid program in two years and naming a commission to recommend a new approach. "We cannot agree that it would be desirable, or possible, to terminate the program in the near future. Nor do we believe that it is advisable to establish a commission, no matter how distinguished its membership, to undertake still another survey of foreign aid.... That no new approach has been developed as the result of any of these (earlier) inquiries indicates the complexity of the problems faced rather than a lack of perception or analytical ability. The Committee believes, therefore, that the basic structure of our foreign aid program is sound and should not be drastically revised....

"It has concluded that the military supporting assistance and economic portions of the program are interdependent.... They cannot be divided without the prospect of some harm being done the over-all program and our foreign policy."

The majority report also undertook to answer charges leveled against the aid program by the minority (see below) and disseminated by the Citizens Foreign Aid Committee and other critics. The size of the "pipeline" of unspent funds (estimated as $6.2 billion on June 30) "is not unreasonable," the majority said; the great bulk of this money was already obligated and would be spent in due course when deliveries were made. The majority also concluded that "foreign aid is not a significant factor either in our balance-of-payments difficulties or in the decline in our gold supply," since more than 80 percent of the funds were spent in the United States; the net effect of economic aid alone was estimated at $250 million on the debit side.

Minority Views. Five Republicans -- Reps. E. Ross Adair (Ind.), H.R. Gross (Iowa), E.Y. Berry (S.D.), Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.) and Vernon W. Thomson (Wis.) -- signed a lengthy critique in which they asserted that "a crescendo of protest" by the American public had reached such proportions that "the end of foreign aid in its present form is plainly in sight." Among their points were these: the President's "barebones" request of $3.4 billion misrepresented the full extent of foreign aid, since another $2.5 billion was proposed for the "Food for Peace" and other assistance programs; in agreeing to the standby authorization for Viet Nam, the Committee "has abdicated its responsibility in the most critical area of the world today"; by revising the definition of "civic action projects" under the military aid programs, the Committee had given the military "the green light to engage in its own economic assistance programs." The minority asserted that foreign aid "has not halted either the expansion of Communism or the drift of many aid recipient nations toward Communist ideologies,...has not improved the image of America in the eyes of the aid recipient nations,...(and) has not improved the stability of government."

FLOOR ACTION

The House May 25, by a 249-148 roll-call vote, passed the fiscal 1966 foreign aid authorization bill (HR 7750) authorizing $2,004,195,000 in new obligational authority. This sum, coupled with carry-over foreign aid authority, permitted a total appropriation of $3,367,-670,000 for fiscal 1966. (For voting, see chart p. 962)

Before passage, the House by a 178-219 roll-call vote defeated a recommittal motion designed to cut the authorization and rejected eight amendments to the bill. The recommittal motion was supported by 62 Democrats and 116 Republicans, and opposed by 205 Democrats and 14 Republicans. On the final vote, the bill was supported by 205 Democrats and 44 Republicans, and opposed by 62 Democrats and 86 Republicans. A majority of Southern Democrats voted against the bill.

The action marked the first time in the history of the foreign aid program that the House had passed the authorization bill virtually without amendment. One technical amendment was adopted to correct a clerical drafting error.

Debate on HR 7750 was mild compared with that on foreign aid authorization bills in recent years. The House consumed only about 3½ hours of the four hours permitted for debate under the rule on the measure. The maximum four hours was less than permitted in previous years.

The recommittal motion, made by E. Ross Adair (R Ind.), would have reduced funds for development loans by $130,958,000, to $649,292,000. It also would have stipulated that labor unions participating in Latin American housing programs had to be "non-Communist dominated" as well as "free."

These proposed changes had been included in separate amendments to the bill which had been rejected by earlier votes. The reduction in development loan funds, proposed as an amendment by Adair, had been rejected by voice vote. Adair said the $130,958,000 figure represented the amount of funds expected to be in the "pipeline" as of June 30, 1965, for the United Arab Republic, Haiti, Cambodia, Indonesia, Algeria, Ghana and the Congo (Brazzaville). He said "if we are to make any reduction in the dollar value of this bill, if we are to say to certain countries which have repeatedly flaunted us and our assistance, that we resent their attitudes, then here is the way to do it." Adair said adoption of his amendment would "indicate our strong feelings with respect to those nations that turn from us and in the direction of Communism, or turn from us and in the direction of other great powers."

Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said adoption of Adair's amendment "would be a very severe cut. It would damage the program." Morgan said development loans were "a program that is paid back in hard dollars," and that most of the money went to "countries around the world who are making real progress...." He said the amendment would "penalize countries with whom we have firm loan agreements, with whom we have signed contracts...."

The amendment to require that labor unions participating in Latin American housing projects be non-Communist, offered by William C. Cramer (R Fla.), was rejected by a 52-80 standing vote, then by a 72-122 teller vote. Under the provision in the bill, unions in the United States could participate in such projects by, among other things, lending money, under Government guarantees against default, to affiliated unions in Latin America which could, in turn, finance housing projects for their members and other purchasers. (While such arrangements were permitted under existing law, the provision was intended to encourage these programs.) Cramer said "the record is replete with evidence of Communist attempts to infiltrate, to take charge of, to take over certain labor union movements in Latin America." He said "we certainly should not permit funds to be made available to any union that is dominated by the Communists," and that his amendment would make the law clear "so there would be no question about it."

The amendment was opposed by Cornelius E. Gallagher (D N.J.). He said the bill already required that labor unions be "free," and that "if a union is Communist-dominated it cannot possibly be a free labor union. The language of the amendment is redundant, it is surplusage, and it is not necessary."

The House rejected two other amendments to reduce the funds authorization. One, by H.R. Gross (R Iowa), would have reduced the over-all authorization for economic assistance by $1 billion. It was rejected by voice vote. Gross said there were "so many faucets in this program of foreign aid that...we must go to the main stem, to the main valve and twist that down a little bit if we are ever going to phase out this program." He said, "If we phase this program out," other countries could "take over and establish foreign aid monopolies. Let them take over the business of dishing out their cash to foreigners all over the world."

In reply, Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.) said that if the aid program were sick, "we should try to cure (it)." He said that Gross appeared to be suggesting "not to operate on the patient but to shoot him."

The other amendment dealing with funds, proposed by Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.), was also rejected by voice vote. It would have reduced from $450 million to $425 million the authorization limitation for guarantees for Latin American housing projects. Fino said the $25 million "could be used to support the veterans' facilities that the President wants to close, as he says, for reasons of economy."

Dante B. Fascell (D Fla.) replied that Fino's amendment "would not do what he believes it would do, because under this particular section, what we are talking about is a limit or ceiling on the issuance of guarantees, and this has nothing to do with the appropriation of money."

The House also rejected, by a 58-133 teller vote, an amendment by Cramer expressing the sense of Congress that so long as Cuba was "exporting Communism to any other country," it was against the national interest of the United States to furnish assistance to Cuba or to any other country which furnished assistance to Cuba. Cramer asked, "Is there any question about the evidence that Communism is being exported from Cuba today and that American boys are dying as a result of it?" He said there were "all sorts of loopholes in the present trade policy," and that his amendment would "put the Congress on record as saying we want no more Dominican Republics emanating from Castro's Cuban Communist headquarters."

Gallagher opposed the amendment as "completely unnecessary." He said the law "already prohibits aid to the government of Cuba or to any country that is aiding Cuba," and that the sense of Congress amendment "is indeed far weaker than the present law...." Gallagher said the law "is adequately administered," and that the only countries that had "supplied Castro were Yugoslavia to some extent, and Canada to some extent, France and the United Kingdom.... They do not get aid from the United States."

DEBATE -- May 24 -- Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) -- "We must face the fact that any new, all-purpose, waste-proof, foolproof and low-cost model of a foreign aid program is not yet on the drawing boards.... I am not ready to concede that the foreign aid program as now organized and operated is obsolete and ready for the junkyard.... Let us not concentrate so hard on the deficiencies of foreign aid that we overlook what it is doing for us."

Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio) -- "Once again we are engaged in our annual 'minuet on foreign aid.'... When it is all over, we will have voted for another year of an international Appalachia program.... Those of us who over the years have fought for foreign aid are suffering from combat fatigue...because the program has grown confused and disordered. First things seem to come first except in foreign aid where first things come second or third, or maybe not at all."

Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D N.Y.) -- "Among other things, foreign aid is the mechanism by which this country seeks to guide...revolutionary movements in what we believe to be a democratic direction...nothing less than the extensive commitment I suggest -- $6, $7, or $8 billion a year -- seems to me to have any real chance of yielding the peaceful progress we seek. The minimum program currently before the House...is a holding operation at best."

Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.) -- "...some Members close their minds to obvious deficiencies in this program and very blindly support all sections of it...this year's foreign aid bill is a greater insult to the intelligence of the American public than any one of its predecessors. The public is not being told the truth about the philosophical inconsistencies or administrative defects of the program."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7750:

Expressed the sense of Congress that any assistance to a foreign country that permitted or failed to take adequate measures to prevent damage or destruction by mob action of U.S. property in that country should be terminated and not resumed until the President determined that appropriate measures had been taken to prevent further damage or destruction.

Development Assistance. Authorized $210 million for development grants.

Supporting Assistance. Authorized appropriation of $369.2 million in fiscal 1966.

Contingency Funds. Authorized $50 million for the President's contingency fund in fiscal 1966.

Also authorized appropriation for use in Southeast Asia of "such sums as may be necessary" in fiscal 1966 for programs authorized under the economic and military aid programs.

International Organizations and Programs. Authorized $144,755,000 for contributions to 11 international programs.

Limited fiscal 1966 U.S. contributions to the United Nations Works and Relief Agency for Palestine Refugees to $15.2 million.

American Schools and Hospitals Abroad. Authorized appropriation of $7 million in fiscal 1966.

Restricted assistance to American hospitals abroad to those serving as centers of medical education and research (and not of treatment, as previously provided).

Investment Guarantees. Raised the limit on the volume of specific risk guarantees that could be issued from $2.5 billion to $5 billion.

Earmarked $150 million of the $300 million previously authorized for extended risk guarantees for use solely for housing projects.

Extended authority to issue extended risk guarantees from June 30, 1966, to June 30, 1967, and removed the existing limit of $25 million on the size of loan investment guarantees and $10 million on other guarantees (equity investments) which may be issued.

Removed the 20-year limit on U.S.guarantees of loan investments abroad by Americans (the existing limit of 20-year guarantees for equity investments was not changed).

Authorized the use of fee income from investment guarantees to pay the costs of investigating and adjusting claims under guarantees.

Broadened a provision of existing law intended to promote private home ownership and stable economies in Latin America through U.S. guarantees of investments in housing projects in nations of that region.

Broadened the definition of U.S. investors eligible to receive guarantees to include foreign corporations, partnerships or other associations owned by more than one U.S. citizen, corporation, partnership or other association.

Increased from $250 million to $450 million the total face amount of guarantees that may be issued for Latin American housing investment and continued the authority to issue such guarantees through June 30, 1967.

Administrative Expenses. Authorized $54,240,000 for AID administrative expenses in fiscal 1966.

Military Assistance. Authorized appropriations of $1,170,000,000 for military assistance in fiscal 1966.

Permitted the United States to contribute to multilateral programs for the acquisition or construction of facilities in the United States, as well as in foreign countries.

Specified that the establishment of civic action programs was an objective of military assistance (added to other objectives already in law). Restricted U.S. assistance in civic action objectives to the military forces of less-developed, friendly countries or to the voluntary efforts of U.S. military personnel stationed in such countries, and limited participation in the construction of public works and other activities helpful to economic development.

Expressed the sense of Congress that foreign military forces should not be maintained solely for civic action activities, that civic action activities should not detract significantly from the primary military mission of the military forces and that civic action programs should be coordinated with and form part of a nation's total economic development effort.

Provided that nonexcess defense articles could be sold at the standard price in effect at the time they were offered for sale (rather than at the time of delivery).

Authorized the President, in entering into sales agreements with foreign countries and international organizations, to fix prices to be paid by the purchasers. Specified that, with certain exceptions, funds available under the military assistance program for financing military sales should be used to reimburse the Defense Department in the amount by which the price paid by the United States to the supplier exceeded the sale price.

Provided authority for establishment of a separate fund account, composed of certain specified reimbursements, which could be used to finance military sales and guarantees.

Continued through fiscal 1966 the existing limitation of $25 million on the value of military grant assistance to Africa.

General Provisions. Extended for one year a provision of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1964 which provided that no U.S. court should refuse, on the ground of the "act of state" doctrine, to examine the validity of acts of foreign states occurring after Jan. 1, 1959, which were alleged to be contrary to international law. (The amendment extended from Jan. 1, 1966, to Jan. 1, 1967, the date before which proceedings had to begin in order to be affected by the 1964 provision. 1964 Almanac p. 296)

Extended from Dec. 31, 1965, to Dec. 31, 1966, the date by which countries receiving assistance had to enter into guarantee agreements with the President for investment guarantees covering the risks of inconvertibility, expropriation or confiscation or face a cutoff of aid.

Stipulated that until the President had determined that North Viet Nam had ceased all efforts to overthrow the government of South Viet Nam, no funds authorized under the Act should be used to furnish assistance to any country which had failed within 60 days of enactment of the bill to take appropriate steps to prevent ships or aircraft under its registry from transporting to or from North Viet Nam any equipment, materials or commodities.

Prohibited sales of surplus agricultural products under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) to the United Arab Republic unless the President determined such sales to be essential to the national interest of the United States. Stipulated that no sale should be based on the requirements of the UAR for more than one fiscal year, and directed the President to keep the Senate Foreign Relations and Appropriations Committees and the Speaker of the House fully informed with respect to sales made to the UAR under the Act.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

May 25 -- James G. Fulton (R Pa.) -- Express the sense of Congress that no aid should be granted any country which permits, or fails to attempt to prevent, personal injury to, unlawful imprisonment or detention or loss of life of U.S. citizens (as well as damage to U.S. property, which was already specified in the bill). Voice vote.

E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) -- Reduce the authorization for development loan fund appropriations by $130,958,000. Voice.

William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Stipulate that labor unions participating in Latin American housing programs had to be "non-Communist dominated" as well as "free." Standing, 52-80; teller, 72-122.

Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) -- Reduce from $450 million to $425 million the authorization limitation for guarantees for Latin American housing projects. Voice.

Cramer -- Express the sense of Congress that so long as Cuba was "exporting Communism to any other country," it was against the national interest of the United States to furnish assistance to Cuba or to any other country which furnished assistance to Cuba. Teller, 58-133.

Vernon W. Thomson (R Wis.) -- Place foreign aid end-use inspectors and investigators under the direction and control of the Inspector General rather than the mission chief in each country. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Reduce the over-all authorization for economic assistance by $1 billion. Voice.

Lester L. Wolff (D N.Y.) -- Prohibit sales to the United Arab Republic under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) unless the President determined a sale to be essential to the "national security," rather than "national interest," (as provided in existing law) of the United States. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 9-April 7 on bills to authorize foreign aid funds for fiscal 1966. On March 4, Fulbright had introduced a bill (S 1367) to authorize $846 million for foreign economic aid alone. On March 15, Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) introduced a bill (S 1524), drafted by the Administration, which combined military and economic aid. Noting that the Committee already was considering Fulbright's bill, Morse said, "In my judgment, from the standpoint of foreign policy, President Johnson cannot justify the separation of economic aid from military aid. We are entitled to look at the totality of the package...." Morse, a critic of Administration foreign aid policy, said he would subsequently make known his own proposals for the aid program.

TESTIMONY -- March 9 -- Secretary of State Dean Rusk said foreign aid continued to be "an indispensable arm of our foreign policy in building a society of free nations in a stable world.... It is in our most elementary national self-interest to do what we can in strengthening the prospects for peaceful progress in Asia, Africa and Latin America." Rusk said, "It would be dangerous for our security and tragic for the future of the world if, out of frustration or fatigue, the United States were to turn back when we have come so far down the road."

He praised the Alliance for Progress program and cited Brazil, Chile, Tunisia, Nigeria, India, Taiwan, South Korea, Pakistan and Turkey as examples of countries where U.S. foreign aid had helped bring about "encouraging" developments and "substantial progress."

He stressed the importance of continuing aid to the Congo and South Viet Nam.

Rusk said that recent anti-American actions by the United Arab Republic (Egypt) were "naturally a matter of great concern." He said U.S. economic aid to Egypt was small but that "the troubled state of our relations with the UAR makes even that small program loom large." However, he said that the United States would continue to seek "a basis for continuing a cooperative relationship with the UAR."

Turning to Indonesia, another country with strained relations with the United States, Rusk said that aid to that nation "had dwindled" during the previous two years and that it was "questionable that a basis will exist for further technical assistance in fiscal year 1966."

Rusk said the developing nations had a total external public debt of about $30 billion and that it was "imperative" for the United States to maintain low interest rates on development loans for these countries.

Rusk said foreign aid was "a minor adverse factor" in the balance-of-payments program. He said 85 percent of the economic-aid funds requested for fiscal 1966 would be spent for U.S. goods and services. The net drain from economic aid in fiscal 1964 was about $300 million, compared with almost $1 billion in fiscal 1961, he said.

Rusk agreed with proposals for distributing more aid through multilateral development agreements but said that it was "not necessary to derogate or eliminate our bilateral aid programs." He said bilateral relationships were "excellent" in most cases and that the difficulties with some countries did "not revolve around aid but about far broader and deeper political issues." He said the United States should proceed with a strong bilateral aid program as well as increase aid funds to international agencies and groups where appropriate.

On Fulbright's proposal that the military and economic assistance programs be considered separately, Rusk said that was a matter for Congress to decide.

March 19 -- Joseph Campbell, Comptroller General of the United States, said that during the past year the General Accounting Office had submitted to Congress 26 reports on foreign aid matters, including 13 related to economic assistance. Campbell listed five "problem areas" in which there was "room for substantial improvement in the operation and management of the economic assistance program..." He said they were: "(1) More effective use of U.S.-owned foreign currencies; (2) improved fiscal management of our foreign currencies to obtain interest on the large accumulations; (3) clarification of purpose in relation to country capability to utilize economic assistance furnished; (4) greater use of excess property in lieu of dollar expenditures; and (5) emphasis on individual responsibility and accountability in the management and administration of the program." Campbell said that while "most of these (improvements) could be accomplished within the Executive Branch, we believe that they are matters which the Committee might wish to consider for clarification or reiteration of Congressional intent and purpose...."

COMMITTEE ACTION

In its consideration of the fiscal 1966 foreign aid authorization bill during and following public hearings, the Committee took these actions:

March 30 -- By a 9-to-4 vote, the Committee agreed to retain the one-package approach, on the motion of Morse, thereby rejecting Fulbright's position. Voting with Fulbright against Morse's motion were Sens. George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and Russell B. Long (D La.). Next day, Fulbright announced that Sens. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and Stuart Symington (D Mo.), who had been absent when the vote was taken, also supported his position.

March 31 -- The Committee agreed to cut the $369.2 million requested for supporting assistance to $350 million and to authorize the President to channel up to 20 percent of development loan funds through the World Bank and its affiliates -- a move toward putting economic assistance on a multilateral rather than bilateral basis, as Fulbright had proposed but the Administration had ignored. Morse announced that he would offer an amendment to terminate the aid program by June 30, 1967, to create a commission to recommend a new program by mid-1966, and to limit the recipients of aid under any new program to 50 countries.

April 1 -- The Committee voted down the President's request for an open-end authorization for additional military aid to Viet Nam, in addition to the amounts included in the fiscal 1966 request of $1,170,000,000 for all military assistance, and agreed to cut that amount by $115 million. At the same time the Committee doubled the $50 million request for contingencies.

April 7 -- Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, Under Secretary of State George Ball and the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, David E.

Alliance for Progress

President Johnson Aug. 17, commemorating the fourth anniversary of the Alliance for Progress, laid out the "new directions" he said the Alliance should follow. Mr. Johnson called for efforts to:

- Prevent "disastrous changes in the prices of those basic commodities which are the lifeblood of so many of our economies," such as coffee, cocoa and sugar.
- "Draw the economies of Latin America much closer together." Mr. Johnson urged a "breakdown of tariff barriers" and said other barriers between nations could be removed by "building area wide road systems, by developing river basins which cross boundaries, by improving communications...." The President also said he hoped the American nations would consider establishment of a program, "patterned after the European Coal and Steel Community, for the production and trade, on a continual basis, of fertilizer, pesticides and other products that are needed to increase agricultural production."
- Emphasizing "the needs of rural Latin America," Mr. Johnson urged efforts to diversify crops and increase food production and farm income. He said more effort should be directed "toward those things which directly touch the lives of individual human beings -- housing, education, health and food."

The President said a "common thread...runs through the Great Society in my country and the Alliance for Progress in all countries. These are a few -- and only a few -- of the many tasks which lie before us as we...labor to complete the second revolution of the Americas."

Bell, appeared before the Committee to urge reversal of its April 1 actions. Fulbright said their testimony was "very persuasive," while Aiken complained about Administration "pressure tactics."

April 8 -- On the motion of Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.), the Committee voted 10-8 to restore the $115 million cut in the military aid authorization. Voting with Smathers were Sens. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), Mansfield, Long, Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), Symington, Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), and Clifford P. Case (R N.J.). Opposed were Sens. Fulbright, Morse, Clark, Aiken, Frank Church (D Idaho), Albert Gore (D Tenn.), Claiborne Pell (D R.I.) and Frank Carlson (R Kan.). Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) was not recorded. Later the Committee also voted, 14-4, to rescind the $50 million increase in contingency funds, which had been linked to the military aid cut. But no move was made to insert the open-end authorization for Viet Nam sought by the President.

April 13 -- The Committee tentatively agreed to Morse's proposals for terminating the aid program in two years and naming a commission to recommend a new approach, and to Fulbright's proposal for a two-year authorization to permit Congress to give fuller attention to the requirements of a successor program. Morse, Fulbright and Hickenlooper were named to draft the exact language.

April 14 -- The Committee completed action on the bill by rejecting Morse's amendment to make an over-all cut of $250 million in the bill, 3-10; agreeing to his amendment to terminate the program in two years and name a study commission, 14-0; and agreeing to Fulbright's amendment (on which he had insisted as a condition for supporting the Morse amendment), 13-2. Mundt and Williams were opposed. The completed bill was then approved, 14-1, with Morse opposed because of the two-year authorization.

The Committee April 28 reported a clean bill (S 1837 -- S Rept 170) authorizing appropriation of $1,988,695,000 for foreign aid in fiscal 1966. Together with previously authorized funds requested by the Administration, this permitted a total appropriation of $3,352,170,000, which was $28.2 million less than the President's original request, and $18.3 million below the request as amended by the President's April 22 reduction of funds for international organizations.

Majority Views. The Committee explained its actions as follows: "There is general agreement that small adjustments in the Administration's proposals could not result in a program which would secure broad public and Congressional support. Moreover, some members feel that the Congress increasingly in recent years has seen its constitutional role in the formulation of U.S. foreign policy relinquished to or usurped by the Executive Branch of the Government, regardless of which political party held power. This trend has resulted in a situation in which support or rejection of Administration policy have seemed the sole alternatives....

"Accompanying and intertwined with this attitude is the feeling among members that the Committee on Foreign Relations increasingly is being forced into the role of a Committee on Foreign Aid...So long as there is so much criticism of the aid program -- whether valid or not -- the Committee is unable to sponsor or approve a long-term authorization for this program, and is unable to break the dreary cycle of full-scale and time-consuming annual reviews..."

For these reasons, the report said, the provisions for terminating the program after two years, providing for a Foreign Aid Planning Committee to recommend a new program, and authorizing funds "during the interim period in which the whole issue is exhaustively studied," were "almost indissolubly connected with respect to the Committee's heavy vote in favor of the bill."

Stating its "emphatic" view that no further aid should go to Indonesia and the United Arab Republic, the Committee added that it "is certainly not prepared to see the United States regarded abroad as a muscle-bound giant unable to act in defense of its citizens, property and national interests." A number of the less-developed nations, the report said, "need to be informed that they have no inherent 'right' to assistance from the United States, and that such aid depends in part on the maintenance of a climate of mutual cooperation and civilized behavior; mob action directed against the United States and condoned by a foreign government obviously disrupts, if it does not completely dispel, such an atmosphere."

Minority Views. In a lengthy dissent, Morse attacked the two-year authorization as an abdication of Congressional responsibility for continuing review of the aid program; challenged the provisions for increased use of multilateral aid channels on similar grounds; scored the military aid program as one that depended "very largely on an obsolescent theory developed a dozen years ago," and deplored "the prospect of my country flooding the world with surplus military equipment" through arms sales approaching $1 billion annually. Morse also appended references to a number of reports by the General Accounting Office to the Committee, alleging instances of waste in the foreign aid program. He concluded: "Because the authorization continues for two years aid programs for an excessive number of countries, because it increases military aid to countries where it will do American interests more harm than good, and because it promotes an increase in funds for international lending agencies sight unseen by Congress, I believe at least half a billion dollars should be cut from this bill for each of the two years."

Provisions. As reported to the Senate, S 1837 authorized appropriation of the following identical sums for fiscal 1966 and 1967: technical cooperation and development grants, $210 million; American schools and hospitals abroad, $7 million; international organizations and programs, $146,455,000; supporting assistance, $350 million; contingency fund, $50 million; military assistance, $1,170,000,000; and AID administrative expenses, $55,240,000. In addition, the bill authorized $600 million in fiscal 1967 funds for the Alliance for Progress -- the same amount already authorized for fiscal 1966 -- and $2.1 million in fiscal 1967 for surveys of investment opportunities for which prior funding remained available in fiscal 1966.

No additional authorization was provided for AID's Development Loan Fund. The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 had included a five-year authorization for development loans, ending with $1.5 billion in fiscal 1966. Of that amount, the President requested appropriation of only $780,250,000. As for fiscal 1967, the report noted that unappropriated authorizations totaled almost $1.6 billion and that "it is likely that at least $700 million of the 1966 authorization will not be appropriated," leaving ample authorization for loan funds.

In addition, the bill:

Added a new title declaring that "no assistance shall be furnished...to any country or area" after June 30, 1967, under terms of the Foreign Assistance Act or Title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480); inviting the President to submit proposals by mid-1966 "for such future foreign assistance programs as may be necessary"; asking him to consider four separate categories of aid -- for humanitarian purposes, for development purposes, for political or contingency purposes, and for purposes "that serve the military defense of the United States; establishing a Foreign Aid Planning Committee to consist of four Presidential appointees, four members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and four members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, to come up with a final report before Jan. 3, 1967; and authorizing $400,000 for the Committee's expenses.

Added to the policy declaration of the 1961 law a statement urging the U.S. and other free world nations to "place an increasing portion of their assistance programs on a multilateral basis," and another to the effect that aid should be cut off to any country that "permits, or fails to take adequate measures to prevent, the damage or destruction by mob action of United States property within such country..."

Authorized the President to make up to 20 percent of development loan funds available to the World Bank and its related agencies, the International Development Assn. and the International Finance Corp., for use on their own terms.

Increased from $2.5 billion to $5 billion the limit on outstanding guaranties to U.S. investors abroad against loss through inconvertibility, expropriation, war, revolution, or insurrection.

Continued, for fiscal 1966 and 1967, the President's authority to draw upon Defense Department stocks for military aid, up to $300 million worth per year, with reimbursement to be made in later years.

ADDITIONAL REQUEST

President Johnson June 1 asked Congress to authorize appropriation of an additional $89 million "for expanded programs of economic and social development in Southeast Asia." The President said the funds would be part of the money "needed to harness the resources of the entire Southeast Asia region for the benefit of all its people." He said, "This must be an international venture. That is why I have asked Mr. Eugene Black to consult with the United Nations Secretary General and the leaders of the poor and advanced nations. Our role will be vital, but we hope that all other industrialized nations, including the Soviet Union, will participate."

Mr. Johnson said the $89 million he was requesting -- $9 million in technical cooperation and development grants and $80 million for supporting assistance -- would be used in South Viet Nam, Thailand and Laos for power projects, improved medical services, road and dam construction, agricultural development and increased imports of "essential goods necessary for a growing civilian economy." (For text of message, see p. 1425)

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 14, by a 68-20 roll-call vote, passed and sent to conference with the House an amended version of HR 7750, the Foreign Assistance Act of 1965, authorizing appropriations of $3,243,000,000 for foreign aid in each of fiscal years 1966-67. The total amount included the additional $89 million requested by President Johnson June 1 for use in Southeast Asia. (For voting, see charts p. 1045-1048)

The bill also provided for an end of the foreign aid program as currently constituted by June 30, 1967, and requested the President to submit to Congress by July 1, 1966, his recommendations and legislative proposals for a new program. It also established a special committee, composed of Members of Congress and other persons, to advise and assist the President and to make its own recommendations on revision of the aid program.

The Senate began consideration of its own bill (S 1837) June 4 and by June 9 had adopted two amendments and rejected several others.

The Senate June 10, 11 and 14 adopted 11 other amendments to the bill. Then, before passage, the Senate substituted the language of its bill for that of the House-passed measure (HR 7750) and sent that bill to conference.

As passed by the Senate, HR 7750 differed drastically from the House-passed version. The House bill entailed a one-year authorization for fiscal 1966 of $2,004,195,000, which together with sums previously authorized permitted a total appropriation of $3,367,670,000. It contained no authorization for 1967 and no provision to revamp the aid program.

In addition to an amendment adopted by the Senate June 7, which increased the fiscal 1966 authorization by $89 million for use in economic development programs in Southeast Asia, the Senate June 10 adopted an amendment by Claiborne Pell (D R.I.) increasing from $7 million to $9 million the annual authorizations for fiscal 1966-67 for certain American schools abroad. Then, the Senate June 11 adopted an amendment by Wayne Morse (D Ore.), the major critic of the bill, limiting the total authorizations for fiscal 1966 and 1967 to $3,243,000,000. The Senate June 10, 11 and 14 rejected 10 other amendments, nine by Morse and one by Frank Church (D Idaho), to reduce authorizations under the bill.

S 1837 was managed on the floor by Fulbright, despite his previous announcements that he would not serve as floor manager. Fulbright, in a letter to Secretary of State Dean Rusk Oct. 6, 1964, had warned that he would not be floor manager of the foreign aid bill unless the Administration incorporated his ideas for restructuring the aid program. In a Jan. 27, 1965, statement, Fulbright announced his decision not to manage the bill because of the Administration's refusal to submit separate authorization bills for the economic and military aid programs, and to seek other changes which he favored. Fulbright explained his position in a March 4 speech on the Senate floor, in which he said it was "confusing to the Congress, to the American people and to our friends overseas to continue to mix military and economic assistance together." He called the foreign aid program "a hodge podge" and "a conglomeration" of diverse activities, and asked, "How is a Senator or anybody else to know what he is voting for or what he is voting against?"

However, in spite of his announced position, Fulbright June 2 revealed that he had "reluctantly" agreed to manage the bill, in part because he "just couldn't find a substitute on the (Foreign Relations) Committee to take my place." He said he still believed that the economic and military aid programs should be considered separately, but that because of certain changes in the bill made by the Committee -- such as the two-year deadline for the foreign aid program -- the measure was "a lot better bill now than it was when it came before the Committee."

The Senate took the following actions on amendments to the bill:

Southeast Asia Aid. The additional $89 million requested by President Johnson for Southeast Asia was authorized in an amendment by Fulbright, which was adopted June 7 -- three days after the Senate took up the bill -- by a 42-26 roll-call vote. Fulbright said Mr. Johnson displayed "wisdom and vision" in asking expanded economic aid for South Viet Nam, Thailand and Laos, and that Congress "can demonstrate its own wisdom by providing the additional $89 million requested by the President for social and economic development in Southeast Asia as promptly and enthusiastically as it recently provided an additional $700 million for the conduct of the war in Viet Nam." (See story p. 180)

Fulbright's amendment was opposed by Norris Cotton (R N.H.) because "the appropriation is tied to the foreign aid bill." Cotton said, "If the Administration requires money for the emergency...I wish the request would come separately, because I cannot resist the suspicion that the proposal is buried in the bill as a whip to make us vote for the whole package."

Before adopting Fulbright's amendment, the Senate June 7, by a 22-45 roll call, rejected an amendment by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) to transfer $89 million from funds authorized by the bill for military assistance to those for technical cooperation and development grants and supporting assistance. Morse said he had offered the amendment that morning when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee considered the President's supplementary request, but it had been voted down, "although four members voted for it." This apparently referred to a 4-13 vote by which the Committee rejected Morse's motion to postpone indefinitely a decision on the President's request before it rejected, 3-11, his amendment to transfer the funds from the military aid authorization.

Morse said the bill already included "millions of dollars more than should be in it," and that he saw "no justification for the President's using the Viet Nam war as a vehicle for having the bill include an additional $89 million."

Inter-American Military Force. An amendment by Fulbright, earmarking $25 million for assistance to an inter-American military force, was adopted June 8 by a 91-0 roll call. It was similar to a provision adopted by the Senate in 1963 but deleted by Senate-House conferees. (1963 Almanac p. 284)

The amendment authorized the use of $25 million of military aid funds annually for assistance to an inter-American force under OAS control, and stipulated that to the extent feasible, military aid should be furnished to the American republics "only in accordance with joint plans ...approved by the Organization of American States." Before its adoption, Fulbright accepted a modification of the amendment, suggested by Allen J. Ellender (D La.), calling for the assistance to be put "on a cost sharing basis" with other nations.

Fulbright said his amendment would "encourage joint military planning by the OAS, not only in connection with an inter-American force but also in connection with all security problems." He said such planning would "go beyond plans to deal with international subversion and would embrace all kinds of internal security problems -- for example, the banditry problem in Colombia, the mineworkers problem in Bolivia, and so forth."

Petroleum Products, Barter. An amendment proposed by William Proxmire (D Wis.) was rejected June 8 by a 29-60 roll-call vote. It would have prohibited the Agency for International Development from purchasing petroleum products for use in its programs at higher than world competitive prices. It also would have forbid the use of Government funds for the payment of barter agents' commissions in cases in which commodities or defense articles furnished to a recipient country were obtained through the barter of other commodities. Proxmire said the first part of his amendment would "end the international bromide that only fools, affiliates and AID pay posted prices." ("Posted" prices -- so-called because they are posted at oil wells -- are artificially established prices paid between affiliated oil companies. Proxmire said that if the amendment had been in effect in 1964, "AID could have passed a $16.5 million savings along to the hard-pressed American taxpayer."

Explaining the second part of his amendment, Proxmire said there was "a unique situation in relation to paying barter commissions in the AID program." He said the custom was for the seller, not the buyer, to pay barter commissions, and that under the existing situation at AID, "there is every reason to expect and predict that the bartering agents get double commissions this way. They get one from the buyer and one from the seller."

Opposing the first part of the amendment, Russell B. Long (D La.) said AID officials had indicated that the Agency was purchasing oil on a competitive basis in every country except Laos and Viet Nam, where there were "only about three major companies which supply oil in that area." Long said adoption of the amendment would "determine that the price of 99 percent of the oil ought to be based upon the price of 1 percent of it."

Speaking against the second part of the amendment, John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) said AID had stated "that the proposal might completely end barter purchases, barter sales (in which) surplus commodities are used in lieu of dollars to buy the products, the commodities that are needed in the AID program...." This, Sparkman said, "would affect our balance of payments disadvantageously."

United Nations Dues. The Senate June 9 rejected by a 27-59 roll call an amendment by Jack Miller (R Iowa) which would have prohibited aid to any country which was more than one year behind in payment of an assessment by the United Nations for regular dues or for peace and security operations, unless the President determined and notified Congress that aid should nevertheless be furnished. Miller said that as a result of the failure of most UN members to pay their dues and assessments, "the United Nations is virtually bankrupt." He said that of 114 UN members, "the United States during fiscal year 1964 furnished aid to 94. Fifty of these nations are delinquent in one or more of their assessments to the United Nations."

Opposing the amendment, Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) said similar proposals had been rejected by the Senate in 1963 and 1964, and that there were "no more compelling arguments for the adoption of the amendment this year...." He said the amendment would "have the United States unilaterally apply sanctions to countries for nonpayment of United Nations assessments" for one year, while under the UN charter, they were not subject to disciplinary action until after dues were two years overdue. McCarthy said that only one country receiving U.S. aid -- Yemen -- was more than two years behind in paying its UN dues and assessments.

Authorization Limitation. The Senate June 9 also rejected by a 26-63 roll call a group of amendments, which were considered together, by Ernest Gruening (D Alaska). They would have deleted the fiscal 1967 authorizations in the bill, making it conform in that respect to the one-year authorization provided by the House. Gruening said he could not agree "that Congress is performing its duty by admitting that the foreign aid program needs 'policy guidance' from the Congress, while at the same time freeing the foreign aid program from Congressional review for two years." He said his amendment would continue the practice, "heretofore unbroken, of annual reviews of the program and of annual authorizations...."

Morse June 11 proposed authorization cuts. The Senate rejected, on a 26-54 roll call, his amendment to limit the total annual fiscal 1966-67 authorizations to $3 billion. However, soon after the vote, the Senate by a 40-35 roll call accepted another Morse amendment limiting the authorization total for each year to $3,243,000,000, a reduction of $18 million in the amount authorized by the bill for 1966 as it had been amended up to that time. Morse said that he proposed a flat appropriations limitation, with the decision on which programs to cut left to AID officials. On the vote, 16 Republicans joined 24 Democrats in favor and 10 Republicans and 25 Democrats voted in opposition.

Arguing for a reduction in the total authorization, Morse cited reports of the Comptroller General on the foreign aid program which Morse said showed "the shocking waste, inefficiency and the cause of corruption of American foreign aid around the globe," and indicated "that the administration of foreign aid is honeycombed with wastrels." Morse said he was "for good foreign aid, not corrupt foreign aid."

Opposing Morse's efforts to reduce authorizations, Fulbright said that not only did he oppose the reduction itself but that Morse's approach was "a very poor way to attempt to deal with a bill as complex as this one." Fulbright said Morse's amendments would "turn over to the Executive a free rein to cut the program anywhere he wishes to cut it." He said this was a "meat-ax approach," and that if Morse wished to reach a certain total, he should "take so much out of each item."

Development Loans, Multilateral Aid. A proposed amendment by Gruening, rejected June 10 by a 40-46 roll-call vote, would have deleted a provision of the bill broadening the existing authorization for the President to use up to 10 percent of development loan funds for loans to the International Development Assn. (IDA). The provision which would have been deleted by the amendment permitted the use of up to 20 percent of such funds for loans and grants to the IDA, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Finance Corp. The amendment also would have deleted a provision urging that the United States and other free world nations place an increasing portion of their aid programs on a multilateral basis.

However, on June 11 the Senate adopted an amendment by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) reducing the proposed 20-percent figure contained in the committee bill to 15 percent. The amendment was adopted by a 42-39 roll call.

Gruening said the provision in S 1837 relating to development loan funds was "a clear-cut attempt to turn over the entire development loan fund -- now under the control of the Congress, loose as that control may be -- to the International Development Assn." He said the provision would allow the transfer of $1.5 billion in five years "away from Congressional control and into international control."

In response, Fulbright replied that Gruening's amendments dealt with "one of the most fundamental policy questions in the entire foreign aid program." He said the real issue was "whether development loans can contribute more effectively to the long-term, broad political purposes of the United States if they are administered bilaterally or multilaterally." Fulbright said the economic development funds went mainly to Africa and Asia, where people were particularly sensitive to nationalism. "When aid is extended on a multilateral basis, these manifestations are muted and diluted," he said. However, Fulbright pointed out that the question might be meaningless because even the existing 10-percent authorization had been "effectively nullified" in the past by Congressional appropriations committees, and "has never been used."

Military Aid. The Senate June 11 rejected an amendment by Frank Church (D Idaho) to reduce the authorization for military aid by $115 million, to $1,055,000,000, which was the amount appropriated for military assistance in fiscal 1965. Church said his amendment was intended to help stop the trend "toward an ever-larger foreign aid expenditure by the United States" and to "avoid new increases in routine military assistance to countries where the existing programs are subject to serious question." For example, he said he opposed increased military assistance to Greece and Turkey, which "have been on the verge of going to war with each other for the past year in the crisis over Cyprus," and to India and Pakistan, which "are now engaged in border skirmishes against each other, and the problem of a serious war between them is very imminent and real." Church said his amendment had been accepted when the bill was being considered by the Foreign Relations Committee, but that "after considerable pressure" from the Johnson Administration, it had been reconsidered and rejected by an 8-10 vote.

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) agreed that the Committee had initially accepted the amendment, but said it had later been rejected after testimony by Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara and Under Secretary of State George Ball. Smathers said they had told the Committee that such a reduction in military aid would force the United States "to increase our own military effort sooner or later." Smathers said, "Certainly this is no time for us to say that the world is quieting down.... This is no time for us to say logically that we should decrease our own military forces or the forces of any other friendly nation."

Country-by-Country Reductions. The Senate June 14, by roll-call votes, rejected five amendments by Morse providing percentage reductions in fiscal 1966 in military and economic aid to specific countries. Morse proposed reducing aid to India and Pakistan, and to Greece and Turkey, first by 75, and then by 90, percent of the amounts specified for each country in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He also proposed reducing aid to Iran, Ethiopia and Jordan by 90 percent of the proposed amounts.

A sixth Morse amendment, also rejected, would have cut the existing limitation on military aid to Latin American nations in fiscal 1966 from $55 to $40 million.

Morse explained that his amendments called for percentage reductions because the specific amounts expected to be extended to individual countries was secret information which could not be publicly revealed. He proposed the reductions for India and Pakistan because U.S. aid "was being undermined by a war effort that threatens and endangers American security interests in that part of the world," and to Greece and Turkey because they "are using our military aid to threaten each other over the Cyprus issue." Morse said his proposed reductions in aid to Iran, Ethiopia and Jordan were "by way of a warning" because of "great waste (which) has existed" in the expenditure of U.S. aid funds in those countries.

Morse's amendments were opposed in debate by John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) and Fulbright, who argued that it would set a bad precedent to name specific countries. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) also opposed the amendments, saying that while he strongly supported economy in Government, "there comes a time when the reductions reach a point which endangers the very security of our country." He said that nations "on the perimeter of Russia," including India, Pakistan, Greece and Turkey, "must be strong so as to prevent the absorption of those countries by either Russia or Red China."

Alliance for Progress. The Senate June 14, by an 8-78 roll-call vote, rejected a Morse amendment to reduce the annual fiscal 1966-67 authorizations for the Alliance for Progress by $100 million, to $500 million. Morse said he had "great hopes" for the Alliance, but that it "needs appraisal on the part of our Latin American allies themselves." He said, "They have a tendency to feel that the Alliance for Progress appropriations are 'in the bag'...irrespective of what they do or do not do."

Fulbright replied that he agreed "to some of the general statements...about people believing they have a right to this money." However, he said "on the whole, (Morse) has downgraded the performance of Latin American countries far more than they deserve." Fulbright said it was true "that among the 19 or 20 countries there are spots that do not look favorable, but looking at Latin America as a whole, the situation is favorable and improving."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7750 contained the following major provisions:

Limited the total authorization for each of fiscal years 1966-67 under the Act to $3,243,000,000.

Included a sense of Congress provision which strengthened the existing stipulation that assistance "should be complemented" by the use of surplus agricultural commodities and excess Government property, and stated that excess personal property should be used "wherever practicable" in place of newly procured items.

Urged that the United States and other free world nations place an increasing portion of their assistance programs on a multilateral basis.

Expressed the sense of Congress that assistance to any foreign country which permitted, or failed to take adequate measures to prevent damage or destruction by mob action of U.S. property within that country be terminated and not be resumed until the President determined that appropriate measures had been taken to prevent a recurrence.

Development Assistance. For development loans, authorized appropriation in fiscal 1967 of unappropriated portions of amounts authorized for fiscal years 1962-66.

For development grants, authorized appropriation of $219 million in fiscal 1966 and $210 million in fiscal 1967.

Extended to June 30, 1967, the existing requirement that at least 50 percent of development loan funds be available for loans made to encourage economic development through private enterprise.

Broadened the existing provision which authorized the President to use up to 10 percent of development loan funds for loans to the International Development Assn. so as to permit the use of up to 15 percent of such funds for loans and grants to the IDA, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Finance Corp. Stipulated that such loans or grants could be made only after consideration by the President of the extent of additional participation by other countries.

Stipulated that the voting power of the United States would be exercised to disapprove any proposed loan by the International Development Assn. to any country to which the United States had suspended aid because of a finding by the President that that nation had expropriated U.S.-owned property and had not taken steps to provide compensation.

Requested the President to take appropriate action, in cooperation with African and other interested nations and with international development organizations, to assist in the development of African regional development institutions.

Required annual progress reports by the Development Loan Fund on progress being made under self-help programs.

Supporting Assistance. Authorized appropriations of $430 million in fiscal 1966 and $350 million in fiscal 1967.

Contingency Fund. Authorized $50 million for the President's contingency fund in each of fiscal years 1966-67.

Alliance for Progress. Authorized $600 million in fiscal 1967. Also authorized use for grants, within the total $600 million authorizations for fiscal years 1966-67, of $70 million.

Extended through June 30, 1967, the existing requirement that at least 50 percent of Alliance funds be available for loans to encourage economic development through private enterprise.

Required periodic reports on Alliance "self-help" projects.

International Organizations and Programs. Authorized $146,455,000 in each of fiscal years 1966-67.

American Schools and Hospitals Abroad. Authorized appropriation of $9 million in each of fiscal years 1966-67.

Repealed, effective July 1, 1967, the authority for assistance to American-sponsored hospitals abroad.

Investment Guarantees. Broadened the definition of U.S. investors eligible to receive guarantees to include foreign corporations, partnerships or other associations owned by more than one U.S. citizen, corporation, partnership or other association.

Extended the authority to issue extended risk guarantees from June 30, 1966, to June 30, 1968 (instead of to June 30, 1967, as provided by the House).

Broadened a provision of existing law intended to promote private home ownership and stable economies in Latin America through U.S. guarantees of investments in housing projects in nations of that region.

Increased the limit on the total face amount of Latin American housing guarantees which could be outstanding at any one time from $250 million to $350 million, and extended the period during which they could be issued to June 30, 1968.

Surveys of Investment Opportunities. Authorized $2.1 million in fiscal 1967.

Administrative Expenses. Authorized appropriation of $55,240,000 for AID administrative expenses in each of fiscal years 1966-67, and $3,100,000 for State Department administrative expenses in each of fiscal years 1966-67.

Military Assistance. Authorized appropriation of $1,170,000,000 in each of fiscal years 1966-67.

Specified civic action as one of the purposes for which military assistance could be furnished to Latin America.

Provided that nonexcess defense articles could be sold at the standard price in effect at the time they were offered for sale (rather than at the time of delivery).

Stipulated that provisions relating to the administration of military assistance guarantees did not require one U.S. Government agency to pay to another the fees and premiums charged in connection with the issuance of guarantee contracts.

Extended for two years, through June 30, 1967, the existing special authority granted the President to furnish up to $300 million a year in defense articles from Defense Department stocks, as well as defense services, for military assistance purposes, without charge to the current military assistance appropriation, when he determined it to be vital to U.S. security.

Permitted military aid to Africa to be furnished not only for internal security, as provided under existing law, but also for "civic action requirements."

Extended for fiscal years 1966-67 the annual $25 million ceiling on grants of defense articles to African countries.

Authorized the use of $25 million of military aid funds for assistance to an inter-American military force under control of the Organization of American States, and stipulated that to the extent feasible, military aid should be furnished to the American republics "only in accordance with joint plans...approved by the Organization of American States."

General Provisions. Provided that funds realized as the result of the failure of certain transactions to conform to law or to AID regulations, or from the disposal of certain defense articles, should be deposited in the U.S. Treasury as miscellaneous receipts instead of being reused or reprogrammed.

Added to the existing requirements preceding an agreement or grant for economic assistance in excess of $100,000, the requirement that within six months prior to the agreement or grant, the chief of the economic assistance mission in the recipient country must certify that the country had the capability to utilize the assistance effectively. Further provided that if the certification could not be made, the assistance could be furnished only upon specific advance approval by the Secretary of State, an undersecretary or an assistant secretary.

Required AID officials, on approving dollar payment vouchers, to certify the reasons for use of dollars rather than local currencies whenever U.S.-owned local currencies were available.

Amended as follows the existing provision that no U.S. court shall decline because of the "act of state" doctrine to make a determination on the merits or to apply principles of international law in a case in which an act of a foreign state was alleged to be contrary to international law: (1) made clear that the provision did not prevent banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions from using the "act of state" doctrine as a defense to multiple liability upon any contract or deposit or insurance policy in any case where such liability had been taken over or expropriated by a foreign state; and (2) deleted the provision in existing law limiting its application to cases begun prior to Jan. 1, 1966, in effect making the provision permanent law.

Extended to June 30, 1967, the date for ending aid to any less-developed country which had failed to enter an agreement with the President to institute an investment guarantee program against incontrovertibility, expropriation or confiscation.

Provided that assistance not exceeding $1 million to any country would be administered, under direction of the Chief of the U.S. diplomatic mission, by the principal economic officer in the case of economic assistance, and by the senior military officer of the mission in the case of military assistance.

Broadened the existing exemption of famine and disaster relief to permit the United States to do whatever was necessary to meet the needs of famine or natural disaster victims during the initial emergency period, including dealing directly with the government involved and furnishing items of more lasting benefit to the country than food, clothing and temporary shelter.

Prohibited aid under the Act, and sales under Title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, to Indonesia or the United Arab Republic whenever the President determined that either country was engaging in or preparing for military action against the United States or any country receiving U.S. aid.

Prohibited aid to any country which extended its jurisdiction for fishing purposes over any area of the high seas beyond that recognized by the United States and which imposed a penalty or sanction against any U.S. fishing vessel in international waters.

Barred aid, including issuance of new investment guarantees, in connection with any project in which U.S. public or private property rights were previously expropriated until the U.S. claims are settled pursuant to a judgment or award.

Future Program. Stipulated that all assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, and under Title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, as amended, terminate as of June 30, 1967.

Requested the President to submit to Congress by July 1, 1966, his recommendations and legislative proposals for future foreign aid programs, including and divided into the following separate categories: (1) humanitarian assistance, including grants, loans, contributions and other aid for relief purposes through international organizations or relief agencies or otherwise; (2) development assistance, to be extended only to countries in which progress was being made toward respect for the rule of law, freedom of expression and the press, and recognition of the importance of individual freedom, initiative and private enterprise, and to be used for economic and social growth to make the recipient countries self-sufficient at the earliest possible date; (3) political or contingency assistance, primarily to advance or protect the mutual interests of the United States and other countries or areas; (4) military assistance, intended to serve the military defense of the United States; and (5) assistance of the type carried out under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) through the use of surplus agricultural commodities.

Stipulated that such proposals should be based on an analysis and estimate of the funds required by the developing nations of the world to close the gap between the economically privileged nations and those striving to achieve a developed economy, including an assessment of the role of economic assistance by the United States and other developed nations.

Stipulated that administration of non-military assistance should be unified, insofar as practicable, under a single agency.

Stipulated that future foreign aid proposals should include recommendations as to the extent to which assistance should be furnished multilaterally or bilaterally and the extent to which it should be extended on a program or project basis.

Created a 16-member Foreign Aid Planning Committee -- with four members appointed by the President, six designated by the Vice President from among Members of the Senate and six designated by the Speaker of the House from among Members of the House -- to advise and assist the President and to make its own independent studies with a view to submitting recommendations to Congress, including a final report due Jan. 3, 1967. Authorized the use of not more than $400,000 of foreign assistance funds by the Committee.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 7 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- Increase the fiscal 1966 authorization for technical cooperation and development grants by $9 million and for supporting assistance by $80 million, for use in Southeast Asia. Roll-call vote, 42-26.

June 8 -- Fulbright -- Authorize the use of $25 million of military aid funds for assistance to an inter-American military force under control of the Organization of American States, and stipulate that to the extent feasible, military aid should be furnished to the American republics "only in accordance with joint plans... approved" by the OAS. Roll call, 91-0.

June 10 -- Fred R. Harris (D Okla.) -- Prohibit aid under the Act, and sales under Title I of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480), to Indonesia or the United Arab Republic whenever the President determined that either country was engaging in or preparing for aggressive military action against the United States or any country receiving U.S. aid. Roll call, 73-13.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Request the President to take appropriate action, in cooperation with African and other interested nations and with international development organizations, to assist in the creation and advancement of African regional development institutions. Voice.

Claiborne Pell (D R.I.) -- Repeal effective July 1, 1967, rather than July 1, 1966, authority for assistance to certain American hospitals abroad, and increase from $7 million to $9 million the annual fiscal 1966-67 authorizations for certain American schools abroad. Voice.

June 11 -- Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Reduce from 20 to 15 percent the amount of development loan funds that could be used for loans and grants to the International Development Assn., the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Finance Corp. (Existing law authorized 10 percent for the IDA; the Committee bill made the figure 20 percent and extended the provision to cover the IBRD and the IFC.) Roll call, 42-39.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Stipulate that the voting power of the United States be exercised to disapprove any proposed loan by the International Development Assn. to any country to which the United States had suspended aid because of a finding by the President that the nation had expropriated U.S.-owned property and had not taken steps to provide compensation. Voice.

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Limit the total authorization for each of fiscal years 1966-67 under the Act to $3,243,000,000. Roll call, 40-35.

June 14 -- Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.)-Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) -- Stipulate that proposals for future foreign aid programs submitted by the President to Congress should be based on an analysis and estimate of the funds required by the developing nations of the world to close the gap between the economically deprived nations and those striving to achieve a developed economy, including an assessment of the role of economic assistance by the United States and other developed nations; and delete the provision that after June 30, 1967, the total number of countries receiving aid, except assistance intended primarily for humanitarian purposes, could not exceed 50. Roll call, 78-1.

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Bar aid to any country which extended its jurisdiction for fishing purposes over any area of the high seas beyond that recognized by the United States and which imposed a penalty or sanction against any U.S. fishing vessel in international waters. Roll call, 59-24.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Increase from 12 to 16 the membership of the Foreign Aid Planning Committee established by the bill, and provide that in any future foreign aid program established by Congress, proposals for assistance of the type currently carried on under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 through the use of surplus agricultural commodities would be referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the House Committee on Agriculture. Voice.

Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) -- Prohibit aid, including issuance of new investment guarantees, in connection with any project in which U.S. public or private property rights were previously expropriated by the country involved until the U.S. claims are settled pursuant to a judgment or award; effective for assistance granted after enactment of the bill. Voice.

Javits -- Require the Development Loan Fund and the Alliance for Progress to file annual reports on progress being made by "self help" programs. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

June 7 -- Morse -- Transfer $9 million in military aid funds to those funds provided for technical cooperation and development grants, and transfer $80 million in military aid funds to those funds provided for supporting assistance, for use in Southeast Asia. Roll call, 22-45.

June 8 -- William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Prohibit the Agency for International Development from purchasing petroleum products for use in its programs at higher than world competitive prices, and forbid the use of Government funds for the payment of barter agents' commissions in cases in which commodities furnished to a recipient country were obtained through the barter of other commodities. Roll call, 29-60.

June 9 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Prohibit aid to any country more than one year behind in payment of an assessment by the United Nations for regular dues or for peace and security operations, unless the President determined and notified Congress that aid should nevertheless be furnished. Roll call, 27-59.

Gruening -- Delete the fiscal 1967 authorizations provided in the bill. Roll call, 26-63.

June 10 -- Gruening -- Delete language urging the United States and other free world nations to place an increasing portion of their assistance on a multilateral basis and broadening the authority of the President to use 20 percent -- rather than the 10 percent in existing law -- of development loan funds to assist certain international financial organizations. Roll call, 40-46.

Morse -- Reduce by $170 million, to $1 billion, the annual fiscal 1966-67 authorizations for military assistance. Roll call, 22-63.

June 11 -- Morse -- Eliminate language authorizing assistance to foreign military forces for "civic action" programs helpful to economic and social development. Roll call, 10-71.

Frank Church (D Idaho) -- Reduce the fiscal 1966-67 authorizations for military aid by $115 million, to $1,055,000,000. Roll call, 38-43.

Morse -- Limit the total annual authorization for fiscal 1966-67 to $3 billion. Roll call, 26-54.

June 14 -- Morse -- Limit fiscal 1966 military and economic aid to India and Pakistan to 75 percent of the amounts specified for each in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to Congress for fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation. Roll call, 25-63.

Morse -- Limit fiscal 1966 military and economic aid to India and Pakistan to 90 percent of the amounts specified for each in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to Congress for fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation. Roll call, 26-58.

Morse -- Limit fiscal 1966 military and economic aid to Greece and Turkey to 75 percent of the amounts specified for each in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to Congress for fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation. Roll call, 2-80.

Morse -- Limit fiscal 1966 military and economic aid to Greece and Turkey to 90 percent of the amounts specified for each in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to Congress for fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation. Roll call, 6-79.

Morse -- Reduce by $100 million, to $500 million, the annual fiscal 1966-67 authorization for the Alliance for Progress. Roll call, 8-78.

Morse -- Reduce the existing limitation on military aid to Latin American nations in fiscal 1966 from $55 million to $40 million. Roll call, 20-67.

Morse -- Limit fiscal 1966 military and economic aid to Iran, Ethiopia and Jordan to 90 percent of the amounts specified for each in the presentation material submitted by the Administration to Congress for fiscal 1966 foreign aid legislation. Roll call, 15-74.

Conference Deadlock

Following passage of HR 7750 by the Senate, the bill was tied up in the House-Senate conference committee for two months, during which time the conferees met an unprecedented 12 times. Standing as a roadblock to agreement were the related questions of (1) whether to authorize funds for one year (fiscal 1966), as provided in the House version of the bill, or two (fiscal years 1966-67), as voted by the Senate and (2) whether to accept the Senate-passed provision calling for an end to the foreign aid program as currently constituted and establishing a study group to recommend a new program.

Senate and House conferees held their first meeting June 18, and subsequently met June 22, 23, 24 and 28. On June 29, they reportedly reached tentative agreement on a total authorization of $3,360,000,000 for fiscal 1966, but still had failed to come up with a solution of the two major differences. At this point, the conferees' six meetings equaled the record for foreign aid conference negotiations set in 1961.

Further meetings on July 7, 13, 19 and 21 also failed to produce a solution. On Aug. 3, Fulbright requested a meeting of members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with Secretary of State Rusk and AID Administrator Bell in an effort to obtain Administration assistance in finding a solution to the impasse. Fulbright said he had requested the meeting to "see if the Administration has any suggestions -- to see if there is any possibility of any compromise."

Following an Aug. 12 meeting of committee members with Rusk and Bell, the Committee met Aug. 16, and on Aug. 17 broke the deadlock that had been blocking action on HR 7750, agreeing to a one-year, $3,360,000,000 authorization.

The conference report (H Rept 811) was filed Aug. 18. Rep. E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) and Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), both conferees, did not sign the report. Both also voted against adoption of the report when it reached their respective chambers.

Major Conference Actions. Senate-House conferees on the foreign aid bill took the following actions on major differences between the bills:

Multilateral Aid-International Organizations. Rejected a Senate provision expressing the sense of Congress that an increasing proportion of U.S. aid be placed on a multilateral basis. Accepted a Senate provision authorizing the President to use up to 15 percent (rather than 10 percent as in existing law) of development loan funds for contributions to the International Development Assn., the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Finance Corp. (only the IDA qualified for the 10-percent contribution under the existing law). Rejected a Senate provision requiring the U.S. to use its voting power in the IDA to block any loan by that agency to a nation to which U.S. aid was suspended because of expropriation of American property without compensation.

The conference report noted that the 15-percent contribution section was "permissive only." It said that no use had been made of the authority in the past and that AID officials reported that there were no plans for allocating development loan funds to these international agencies in fiscal 1966.

Limitation on Authorization. Modified a provision in the Senate bill which arbitrarily limited the total authorization to $3,243,000,000. Provided instead a limit of $3,360,000,000.

The Administration's appropriation request totaled $3,459,470,000, $99,470,000 more than finally authorized. However, the amounts specifically authorized in HR 7750 plus the Administration's appropriation requests for several areas (State Department, Alliance for Progress and Development Loans) authorized under previous law technically allowed a maximum appropriation of $3,457,670,000, slightly less than the Administration originally sought in appropriations. Thus, the net effect of the arbitrary $3,360,000,000 limit approved by the conferees was to limit the maximum appropriation to $97,670,000 less than could have been appropriated had the arbitrary limit not been imposed. The conference report said that the Administration had to decide where to cut its appropriation request to bring the request down to the authorization ceiling. (See box p. 423)

Two-Year Authorization, Review of Program. Conferees rejected the Senate provisions authorizing the aid program for two years (fiscal 1966 and 1967, rather than the usual one year), and calling for an end to the program as it was currently constituted in fiscal 1967 and a thorough review by a planning committee that would recommend future actions.

In their statement accompanying the conference report, House conferees said that although they "could not agree to a blanket two-year authorization under present conditions, they were not irrevocably opposed to authorizing foreign aid funds for longer than a year regardless of circumstances. There was general agreement also that many of the shortcomings of the foreign aid program which have evoked public criticism are basic and cannot be corrected merely by improvement in administrative procedures or in the quality of personnel."

The House conferees said that while they could not "bind their colleagues in subsequent sessions of the Congress," they had, in view of the action of the Senate conferees in receding from their position, included an "expression of informal understandings" in their statement to the effect that (1) during consideration of the foreign aid authorization bill in 1966, they would "urge their colleagues to examine with the greatest care such proposals as may be submitted authorizing foreign aid programs for two or more years"; (2) the conferees of both houses "urge the President to inaugurate a review of the foreign aid program as presently constituted, seeking to direct it more effectively toward the solution of the problems of the developing countries"; and (3) the House conferees recognized that "the willingness of the Senate conferees to recede on these provisions represents not an abandonment of the positions taken by the Senate, but an attempt to reach a reasonable compromise."

The conference statement also said: "If two-year authorizations were made, the authorizing committees of the House and Senate might direct their attention in alternate years primarily to a review of aid policies and an evaluation of operations rather than focusing on the programs submitted by the Executive for the year to come." (It was sometimes suggested that members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee opposed multiyear authorizations because the Committee had little else to do, in contrast to its Senate counterpart which had responsibility for treaties and other matters, and because the House Committee members did not have another major committee assignment, in contrast to Senators who -- because of their fewer number -- often served on several major committees.)

African Regional Development. Accepted a Senate provision requesting the President to encourage African regional development. The conference statement noted that "the primary responsibility for free world economic assistance to Africa rests with Europe and that the role of the United States, at most, is that of an interested minority participant."

Housing Guarantees. Modified a House provision, not in the Senate bill, which specified that of $300 million of extended risk guarantees authorized to be issued under existing law, not less than $150 million could be issued only for housing projects throughout the world similar to those insured by the Federal Housing Administration. Conferees limited the amount of extended risk guarantees that could be used for purposes other than housing to $175 million, thus assuring at least $125 million of the $300 million would be available for housing projects similar to those insured by the FHA.

Ceiling on Latin American Housing Guarantees. Agreed to a compromise increasing the ceiling from $250 million to $400 million (House: $450 million; Senate: $350 million) and extending the authority to issue guarantees through June 30, 1967 (House: same; Senate: June 30, 1968).

Alliance for Progress Grants. Specified that not more than $75 million of the $600 million authorized for the Alliance for Progress in fiscal 1966 could be used for technical cooperation grants, with the balance being available for dollar repayable loans (House: $85 million; Senate: $70 million).

Southeast Asia Authorization. Accepted a Senate authorization of $89 million for technical cooperation and development grants and for supporting assistance. (The Administration requested this amount after House action on the bill; the House version authorized appropriation of whatever sums were necessary for economic and military aid to Southeast Asia.)

Latin American Military Aid. Accepted a Senate provision which authorized the use of $25 million of military aid funds for aid to an inter-American military force under the control of the Organization of American States. Added a proviso that the cost of U.S. military goods sent to the Dominican Republic should not be charged against a $55 million ceiling in existing law on the total value of grant programs of defense articles for the American Republics. The conference report said the continuing and unknown cost of inter-American operation in the Dominican Republic might swamp the $55 million ceiling and prevent further bilateral or multilateral aid programs during the fiscal year.

Expropriation. Rejected a Senate floor amendment by Hickenlooper which prohibited aid to any project in a country in which U.S. property rights were previously expropriated. Conferees said that "the issues were much less clear and far more complex and controversial than was at first supposed." They said the "entire subject" could be reviewed later if necessary.

Act of State Doctrine. Accepted the Senate version of amendments to existing law on the act of state doctrine.

Shipping. Accepted modified provisions in the House bill cutting off aid to nations whose ships sent goods to North Viet Nam and in the Senate bill ending assistance to any nation which took certain specified actions in regard to U.S. fishing rights in international waters. The effect of the modifications was to give the President discretion in whether or not to end aid.

PL 480. Modified a Senate floor amendment which prohibited PL 480 "Food for Peace" aid to Indonesia or the United Arab Republic if the nation was attacking or preparing to attack another country receiving U.S. aid. Specified instead that no PL 480 aid could go to the UAR unless the President decided that such assistance was in the national interest; in addition, prohibited a PL 480 sale to the UAR for a period longer than a year at a time.

American Schools and Hospitals Abroad. Rejected a Senate floor amendment by Pell dealing with repeal of the authority to aid hospitals and the authorization level for school aid. (The effect was to retain the House provision on schools and hospitals.)

FINAL ACTION

House. The House adopted the conference report Aug. 19 by a 224-150 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 990)

In floor discussion of the conference report, House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) said that while the House conferees had given their assurance that the question of a two-year authorization would receive "a fair go-round next year by the Committee on Foreign Affairs...the Senate did not ask us to commit ourselves to a two-year authorization next year, nor did we make such a commitment." Morgan said he had "an open mind on this matter, but I am not committed to supporting a two-year authorization next year, nor are the other House managers committed."

Senate. The Senate adopted the conference report Aug. 24 by a 67-27 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 1068)

Explaining the action of Senate conferees in receding from their insistence on a two-year authorization and provision for establishment of a new foreign aid program, Senate Foreign Relations Commiteee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) Aug. 23 said "it is possible we may have laid the groundwork for more thorough reforms next year." This was so, he said, because of the statement by the House conferees urging House Members to examine future proposals for a two-year or longer authorization "with the greatest care," and the Aug. 12 statement by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, in a meeting with the Foreign Relations Committee, that the Administration in 1966 would seek an extension of the "multi-year principle" to "all...authorizations contained in the foreign aid bill." Fulbright said that he hoped that in 1966 "some headway may be made so we may get away from the dreary cycle of one-year aid programs."

Speaking in opposition to the conference report, Wayne Morse (D Ore.) Aug. 24 called it "another retread on the same foreign aid program that has produced little or nothing for American foreign policy in the last five years except stonings, burnings and assaults on American property in many parts of the world." Morse said, "I yield to no one in my support of the theory of foreign aid," but added he believed "it is not in the interest of my country to continue foreign aid on the basis of its present format." Morse also said "the Senate conferees brought back no commitment...that gives the American taxpayer any assurance that the maladministration of foreign aid around the world will be corrected." He said, "The Senate conferees did not get any agreement out of the House conferees.... They gave us some language, but the language spells out no agreement whatsoever."

HR 10871 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 955) Sept. 2, 1965.

- Passed by a 239-143 roll-call vote of the House Sept. 8. (See p. 996)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 708) Sept. 13.
- Passed, amended, by a 59-22 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 23. (See p. 1076)
- Conference report (H Rept 1103) agreed to Oct. 1 by a 204-124 roll-call vote of the House (see p.1014) and Oct. 5 by a 40-23 roll-call vote of the Senate (see p. 1077).

Congress in 1965 appropriated $3,218,000,000 for foreign aid in fiscal 1966, a figure $142 million below the amount authorized and just $241,470,000 or 6.9 percent below the Administration's revised budget request. The final figure represented the smallest percentage reduction in the President's request in the program's history.

The bill (HR 10871) also provided $714,188,000 for other programs, including $102 million for the Peace Corps and $455,880,000 for the Inter-American Development Bank.

Passage of the bill with the relatively small reductions marked the second consecutive year that the House had rejected attempts by Rep. Otto E. Passman (D La.), chairman of the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee, to have the appropriations cut substantially below the amount authorized. In 1964, Passman had been stymied by the influence of Rep. George H. Mahon (D Texas), who had become chairman of the full Appropriations Committee following the death of Clarence Cannon (D Mo.). Cannon had supported Passman's previous efforts to cut foreign aid appropriations bills.

Mahon Jan. 28, 1965, announced a new membership list for the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, which had the effect of formalizing the loss of Passman's former power to bring about large cuts. The Subcommittee ratio was changed from seven Democrats - four Republicans to six Democrats - three Republicans. Dropped from the panel were Reps. George W. Andrews (D Ala.), John J. Flynt Jr. (D Ga.), John J. Rhodes (R Ariz.) and William E. Minshall (R Ohio). Remaining on the Subcommittee were Passman, John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), William H. Natcher (D Ky.) and Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.). (Two of the other three previous subcommittee members were not Members of the House in 1965; the third left the Appropriations Committee for another position.) The following new members were added: Julia Butler Hansen (D Wash.), Jeffery Cohelan (D Calif.), Clarence D. Long (D Md.), Garner E. Shriver (R Kan.) and Mark Andrews (R N.D.). In House voting on the Administration's foreign aid request in 1964, Passman, Shriver and Andrews (N.D.) had voted against the President's position, while the other six members of the Subcommittee (as it was reconstituted in 1965) supported the President. By contrast, Administration supporters won a victory in the Subcommittee in 1964 only with the help of Conte and considerable pressure exerted by President Johnson.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 10871 appropriated the following funds for fiscal 1966:

FOREIGN AID

Economic Assistance
Development Loans	$ 618,225,000
Technical Cooperation and Development Grants	202,355,000
Alliance for Progress
Loans	435,125,000
Grants	75,000,000
Supporting Assistance	369,200,000
Contingency Fund	50,000,000
Special Contingency Fund for Southeast Asia	89,000,000
International Organizations	144,755,000
American Schools and Hospitals Abroad	7,000,000
Administrative Expenses
AID	54,240,000
State Department	3,100,000
Military Assistance	1,170,000,000
Total, Foreign Aid	$3,218,000,000

OTHER FUNDS

Funds Appropriated to the President
Peace Corps	$ 102,000,000
Inter-American Development Bank	455,880,000
International Development Assn.	104,000,000
Army Department
Ryukyu Islands Administration	14,733,000
Health, Education and Welfare
Cuban Refugee Relief	30,000,000
Department of State
Migration and Refugee Assistance	7,575,000
	$ 714,188,000

In addition the bill:

Continued the availability of foreign aid funds previously appropriated but not yet obligated -- estimated at an additional $158.3 million.

Provided that any expenditure over $100,000 for procurement of any commodity outside the United States must be reported to Congress, and that the report must state the reasons why any adverse effects upon the U.S. economy of industrial mobilization would not outweigh the economic or other advantages of less costly procurement overseas.

Limited to $12 million the amount of development grant funds available for research.

Stipulated that no assistance could be furnished any country that sold, furnished or permitted ships under its registry to carry to North Viet Nam any strategic items unless the President determined that the withholding of such assistance would be contrary to the national interest of the United States and reported his determination to Congress.

Prohibited assistance to the United Arab Republic and to Indonesia, unless the President determined that the availability of such assistance was "essential" to the U.S. national interest.

Continued legislative provisions enacted by Congress in past years, covering: restrictions on aid to Communist countries and countries shipping economic and strategic items to Cuba, reobligation of funds no longer to be used for a project for which they were previously obligated, opposition to the seating of Communist China in the UN, the payment of back dues of other UN members and a ban on transfer of development funds to the IDA.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Peace Corps. Continued the availability of $12.1 million previously appropriated but not yet obligated as of June 30, 1965, providing the Peace Corps with a total of $114.1 million for operation in 1966. Set a ceiling on administrative expenses of $24.1 million.

Export-Import Bank. Set the Bank's operating budget at $1,190,172,000, including $4,052,000 for administrative expenses.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations, Foreign Operations Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- Intermittently March 30-June 8 on funds for the foreign aid program and other international programs in fiscal 1966. Following completion of

History of Foreign Aid Cuts

Over the years Congress consistently reduced Administration requests for foreign aid in two steps, first by authorizing less money than the Administration sought, and then by appropriating less money than the two chambers had authorized. Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson each protested against the reductions made in their foreign aid programs.

Following are the cuts Congress inflicted on foreign aid requests from the fiscal 1948-49 bill to the fiscal 1966 bill. The table shows that the final fiscal 1964 appropriation of $3 billion constituted the largest percentage cut ever made. The next highest cuts were in funds for fiscal 1958, fiscal 1953 and fiscal 1956. President Johnson's fiscal 1965 and fiscal 1966 bills fared best.

(in billions)

Fiscal Year	Request	Authorization	Appropriation	Percent Cut[1]
1948-49	$7.37	$6.91	$6.45	12.5%

1 Appropriation below request

hearings, further action on the bill was delayed pending passage of the foreign aid authorization bill (HR 7750), which was deadlocked by the failure of Senate and House conferees to agree on whether to authorize funds for one or two years, and whether to call for an end to the foreign aid program as currently constituted.

ACTION -- The full Committee Sept. 2 reported HR 10871 (H Rept 955), appropriating $3,285,000,000 for foreign aid and $716,453,000 for related programs in fiscal 1966, and setting the operating budget of the Export-Import Bank at $1,190,172,000.

The Committee explained that the conference report on the foreign aid authorization bill (HR 7750) contained specific authorizations totaling $3,457,670,000, but that a separate provision of the bill arbitrarily limited the total fiscal 1966 authorization fo $3,360,000,000. The Committee said the Executive had subsequently recommended that the arbitrary limitation be met by the following reductions: cutting technical cooperation and development grants from $210 million authorized to $202,355,000 appropriated; cutting Alliance for Progress development loans from $505,125,000 authorized to $470,125,000 appropriated; and cutting foreign aid development loans from $780,250,000 authorized to $725,225,000 appropriated, for a total reduction of $97,670,000.

The Committee made further reductions in funds appropriated for two of these programs. It cut funds for development loans below the Administration's revised request of $725,225,000 to $675,225,000, and those for Alliance for Progress development loans from the revised request of $470,125,000 to $445,125,000. These reductions totaled $75 million below the $3.36 billion authorized by HR 7750.

The Committee also explained that the $455,880,000 appropriated for the Inter-American Development Bank was composed of two elements: (1) $205,880,000, representing one-half the U.S. share of increased callable capital stock of the Bank, which had been authorized in 1964 and half of which had been appropriated in that year (1964 Almanac p. 318, 315); and (2) $250 million, representing the second installment of the U.S. share in the increase of resources of the Bank's Fund for Special Operations. Payment of the U.S. share had been authorized, and the first installment paid, earlier in 1965. (See p. 492)

Minority Views. All Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee except Silvio O. Conte (Mass.) and Howard W. Robison (N.Y.) said they hoped "that a reshaping of this program soon will be implemented." They said that foreign aid "is scattered throughout 10 bills presented to the Congress. Total requests of approximately $7.5 billion for foreign assistance purposes have been submitted." They added that "responsible cuts can be made without endangering United States foreign policy or its commitments to other nations." They said, "The time has come for a major overhauling. This should well be one of the major duties of this 89th Congress."

FLOOR ACTION

The House passed HR 10871 Sept. 8 by a 239-143 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 996)

Before passage, the House by voice vote rejected a recommittal motion with instructions to reduce economic assistance funds by $285 million -- bringing the foreign aid appropriation total down to $3 billion -- and to prohibit aid to any recipient country that engaged in military actions against another recipient country. The restriction was aimed at India and Pakistan as a result of the outbreak of fighting between the two countries. (See box p. 446)

The House by voice votes also rejected an amendment to prevent use of funds by the Agency for International Development for contracts calling for research into AID's organization, operation or personnel practices, and adopted an amendment to prohibit aid to any country which sold, furnished, or permitted ships under its registry to carry strategic goods to North Viet Nam.

Most debate was concerned with the provision in the recommittal motion, which was offered by Frank T. Bow (R Ohio). At the opening of debate on HR 10871, House Appropriations Committee Chairman George H. Mahon (D Texas) read a statement from Secretary of State Dean Rusk which said, in part, that the United States had "suspended military aid shipments to both India and Pakistan" and that "the Executive Branch will consult fully with appropriate Members of the Congress about the situation in the subcontinent and the conditions under which military aid might be resumed." Rusk's statement also said that pending enactment of the foreign aid appropriations bill, "the Administration has in general not been making new economic aid loans or grants to aid-receiving nations since the current fiscal year began," and that "the Executive Branch will consult with appropriate Members of Congress on the situation in the subcontinent in connection with making new economic aid loans or grants."

Mahon said that it was "too early to predict the course of events" in the India-Pakistan dispute, and that "the alternative lines of action open to the United States should not at this time be foreclosed by legislative action on the pending bill."

In subsequent debate on the proposed recommittal motion, Mahon said Congress should not "tie the hands of the President at such a critical time." He said that "in providing aid to India and Pakistan we were not blind to the fact that the nearest neighbor to India and Pakistan is Red China. We want Red China to have strong anti-Communist neighbors...should Red China, following the passage of this legislation by the Congress, conclude that, 'Well, we can now again renew our aggression against India because the hands of the President are tied by this Act of Congress,' it would be a horrendous thing...." Mahon added, "The point is that we would jeopardize the security of the United States by opening the door for Red China to attack India while the circumstances are favorable for such an attack."

Proponents of the recommittal amendment argued that it would not prevent aid to India or Pakistan if one of those countries was attacked by Communist China. Bow said that "this is a denial of aid where the countries in the fight have been the recipients of aid." Bow said "if the aggression is from Red China into India or into Pakistan, wherever it may be, there is no prohibition here against aid to the country to resist Communist aggression.... But what we are trying to say to our friends is this: 'You cannot take the foreign aid which we are voting, amounting to millions and millions of dollars, to kill each other'."

However, opponents of Bow's motion disagreed with this interpretation of its effect. House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.) said, "If you have the situation where Red China attacks one of two countries that are fighting each other, and you get Red China fighting one, and you have the two countries fighting each other, both of which have received our aid, (the provision of the recommittal motion) means because Pakistan and India are fighting we cannot give any aid to either one or the other, even though one of them happens to be fighting on the side of Red China while fighting the other."

Otto E. Passman (D La.), chairman of the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee and in the past a leading critic of the foreign aid program, opposed the provision of the recommittal motion that would have reduced the funds total. Passman said "all this year I have been asking for help on the problem of adjusting the funds required for this foreign aid bill.... I did not get too much encouragement along the way from either side of the aisle.... The proposal now comes a little bit late...."

Explaining his position as floor manager of HR 10871, Passman said that as chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee "it will be my responsibility to defend (the bill) to the fullest extent of my ability. May I say at the outset that I shall defend the bill as a representative of the majority of the Subcommittee and the full Committee. These views are not necessarily my own." Passman said "this is one of the fattest foreign aid bills presented to the Congress in many years. This can be established with facts when you pull together the fragments for a total figure. Foreign assistance has been fragmentized into different accounts, agencies and international organizations."

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) said that Congress was "at a crossroads for foreign aid. We have traveled a long road to the point where the mere continuation of what has been done in the past is insufficient to meet the problems of the future. We have reached the point where there must be a comprehensive reevaluation of the scope and character of our assistance efforts." But he said he supported the program.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10871 appropriated the following funds for fiscal 1966:

FOREIGN AID

Economic Assistance
Development Loans	$ 675,225,000
Technical Cooperation and Development Grants	202,355,000
Alliance for Progress
Loans	445,125,000

Supporting Assistance	369,200,000
Contingency Fund	50,000,000
Special Contingency Fund for Southeast Asia	89,000,000
International Organizations	144,755,000
American Schoools and Hospitals Abroad	7,000,000
Administrative Expenses
AID	54,240,000
State Department	3,100,000
Military Assistance	1,170,000,000
Total, Foreign Aid	$3,285,000,000

OTHER FUNDS

Funds Appropriated to the President
Peace Corps	$ 102,000,000
Inter-American Development Bank	455,880,000
International Development Assn.	104,000,000
Army Department
Ryukyu Islands Administration	14,733,000
Health, Education and Welfare
Cuban Refugee Relief	32,265,000
Department of State
Migration and Refugee Assistance	7,575,000
Total, Other Programs	$ 716,453,000

In addition the bill:

Set as the operating budget of the Export-Import Bank $1,190,172,000, including $4,052,000 for administrative expenses.

Continued the availability of foreign aid funds previously appropriated but not yet obligated -- estimated as an additional $158.3 million.

Continued the availability of $12.1 million of Peace Corps funds previously appropriated but not obligated as of June 30, 1965, providing the Peace Corps with a total of $114.1 million for operation in 1966.

Prohibited the use of funds appropriated for development loans for loans to the International Development Assn. (The Foreign Aid Authorization Act of 1965 and other recent years had authorized the President to make available a specified percent of development loan funds to the IDA and other international development organizations, but subsequent appropriations bills had prohibited such use of development loan funds.)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Sept. 8 -- John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) -- Prohibit aid to any country which sold, furnished or permitted ships under its registry to carry economic or military strategic goods to North Viet Nam (as well as to Cuba). Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Sept. 8 -- Vernon W. Thomson (R Wis.) -- Prohibit the use of funds appropriated for economic assistance by the Agency for International Development for contracts calling for research into AID's organization, operation or personnel practices. Voice vote.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

HELD HEARINGS -- Sept. 8-10 on appropriations for the foreign aid program and other international programs in fiscal 1966.

ACTION -- The Committee Sept. 13 reported an amended version of HR 10871 (S Rept 708) appropriating $3,193,000,000 for foreign aid and $714,188,000 for related agencies in fiscal 1966, and setting the operating budget of the Export-Import Bank at $1,190,172,000.

The Committee made reductions in two programs below the amounts appropriated by the House. It reduced from $445,125,000 to $435,125,000 funds appropriated for Alliance for Progress development loans, and from $675,225,000 to $593,225,000 those appropriated for foreign aid development loans, for a total reduction of $92 million below the amount appropriated by the House.

The Committee said that unexpected carryovers of unobligated funds had occurred in several programs, including Alliance for Progress development loans ($29,686,000 carryover) and foreign aid development loans ($91,292,000 carryover). It said these funds would be available in fiscal 1966 in addition to newly appropriated amounts.

In another section of the bill, the Committee cut House-approved funds for assistance to refugees in the United States from $32,265,000 to $30 million.

Majority Views. The Committee said the foreign aid program "continues to be an important adjunct of (U.S.) foreign policy and an effective instrument in...providing less-developed nations with technical knowledge and the necessary financial assistance to achieve greater economic growth and governmental stability, increased utilization of national resources and improved living standards."

The Committee explained that it had deleted a House-passed provision prohibiting the use of development loan funds for loans to the International Development Assn., and had provided instead that up to 10 percent of such funds could be made available to the IDA, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or the International Finance Corp. The report said that AID planned to use the authority on a matching basis so that any additional funds contributed by the United States would be matched by an equal contribution from other countries. The report said, "This could prove to be a useful instrument to persuade other donor countries to increase their levels of aid."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate passed HR 10871 Sept. 23 by a 59-22 roll-call vote, sending the bill to conference with the House. As passed by the Senate, the bill appropriated $3,143,000,000 for foreign aid and $714,188,000 for related programs in fiscal 1966, and set the operating budget of the Export-Import Bank at $1,190,172,000. (For voting see chart p. 1075, 1076)

Before passage, the Senate adopted an amendment by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) reducing the foreign aid appropriation by a total of $50 million, and adopted separate amendments by Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) barring aid to Indonesia or the United Arab Republic unless the President determined such aid to be essential to the national interest of the United States. The Senate also rejected seven amendments to the bill, six of which would have reduced appropriations.

Saltonstall's amendment, which was accepted by a 45-35 roll-call vote, reduced funds for technical cooperation and development grants by $20 million, for supporting assistance by $20 million and for international organizations by $10 million. Saltonstall said he had always "supported and been on the generous side concerning foreign aid," but that he believed "we shall have tremendous additional military expenses and responsibilities around the world on an increasing rather than on a decreasing scale...." He said he was confident "that our military assistance to Viet Nam will be greatly increased in addition to the amount provided in the bill," and that reductions should be made in funds appropriated for economic assistance to pay for the increases. Saltonstall said that even with the reductions, funds "would be sufficient to carry out our responsibilities" under the programs where the cuts would be made.

Opposing the amendment, John O. Pastore (D R.I.), floor manager of HR 10871, said that except for 1955, the fiscal 1966 foreign aid request was "the smallest amount ever requested by the Administration in the entire life of the foreign aid program." He said the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had already "cut the bill down to the marrow of the bone," and that Saltonstall's amendment would "get into the marrow and destroy the program."

Gruening first proposed an amendment that would have prohibited aid to Indonesia under any circumstances. He said that Indonesian President Achmed Sukarno "has denounced us. He has vilified the United States. He has gotten into bed with Communists. He has burned our libraries.... This amendment would merely withhold all financial aid from him for the next year."

Frank Church (D Idaho) opposed the amendment because there was no way "we can know whether Sukarno will remain as the head of the Indonesian Government. What if a revolt in the palace guard were to overthrow him tomorrow? What if, a month from now, he were to pass on to his reward and some new regime were to take control of Indonesian affairs? If we were to write into the bill and into the law itself a prohibition against the extension of any aid to Indonesia, then we will have blocked the President at the very time when we would no longer want to prohibit the extension of possible assistance to Indonesia."

At the suggestion of Pastore, Gruening modified his amendment to bar aid to Indonesia unless the President determined it to be "essential to the national interest of the United States." This, and an identical amendment relating to the United Arab Republic, were then adopted by voice votes, but an amendment without the modified language cutting off military aid to India and Pakistan was rejected by voice vote.

Three of the rejected amendments to reduce funds were introduced by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and three by Allen J. Ellender (D La.). Morse proposed the following amendments:

- Reduce by $25 million funds for military assistance to Latin American countries. It was rejected by a 41-43 roll-call vote. Morse said such aid "is making hay for the Communists, not for the United States." He said much of the aid was used to create "military oligarchies and a military class throughout Latin America. That military class, in country after country, is keeping down freedom and playing directly into the hands of the Communists." Morse said he favored providing "adequate military aid... to keep down Communist coups. But they do not need the kind or extent of military aid we are sending to Latin America to keep down Communist coups."

Pastore said the proposed $25 million reduction "may be considered small with reference to the $1.17 billion for the entire military assistance program for all nations...(but) the $25 million is one-third of the entire military assistance program for Latin America." He said, "It would be a drastic, dangerous and tragic cut."

- Reduce military aid appropriations by $170 million, to $1 billion, and limit military aid to India, Pakistan, Greece and Turkey to 50 percent of the costs of equipment and training which those countries received during fiscal 1965. It was rejected by a 32-54 roll call.

Morse said his amendment would reduce aid to countries "which have shown that they do not take seriously the admonitions of our military agreements that this equipment is not to be used against nations friendly to the United States."

- Reduce military aid appropriations by $292 million, to $878 million. It was rejected by a 30-56 roll call.

Morse said the amendment would cut military aid funds by 25 percent, and "leave to the discretion of the President the way in which he would apply the reduced amount." Morse said he would be "willing to apply to economic assistance the amount saved...." He said "our military aid is not helping to protect freedom. It is helping to spread Communism in the world. If the $292 million is spent for military assistance, in my judgment it will buy the American people the equivalent of billions (of dollars) of ill will."

Pastore called the proposed reduction "a meat axe cut." He asked, "Why the $292 million figure? Why not make it easier for bookkeeping purposes and make the figure $300 million or $400 million?... Vote against the whole program, if we wish to do so." Pastore said the $1.17 billion figure had been recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and approved by the House and by the Senate Appropriations Committee. He said, "If we cannot take the word of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, if we cannot take the word of the Commander in Chief, whose words are we going to take"?

Ellender introduced amendments to:

● Reduce military aid funds by $100 million, to $1.07 billion. It was rejected by a 35-47 roll call. Ellender said the amount of the reduction "is equal to the amount of the increase proposed in the 1966 Budget for countries not presently engaged in conflict...." He said, "A considerable amount of the increased military aid is going to Taiwan. Why this is so, I just cannot understand.... Strange as it may seem, the (fiscal 1966 Budget) includes increases for Pakistan...and also for Turkey."

Pastore said the proposed reduction would be "a disastrous cut." He said the Senate had rejected the amendment to reduce funds by $292 million, and said, "This is (a cut of) $100 million.... Do not handcuff or handicap foreign aid here. Do not start to make meat axe cuts."

● Reduce appropriations for development loans by $50 million, to $543,225,000. It was rejected by a 29-53 roll call. Ellender said the development loan fund was the portion of the foreign aid program "most prone to further reduction...." He said, "In some of the countries for which development loan funds are requested, the amount of development loan assistance seems to be deliberately understated...usually...in countries which are highly developed and really should not even be on the dole." Ellender said the program was conversely overstated "in those countries where there is a need for development loan funds, a need, I might add, that is not difficult to justify to Congress." Pastore replied that the Senate Appropriations Committee had already cut the appropriation for development loan funds "even below... the House figure on the development loan. I say that we have cut it down to the bare bone. Now we will be getting into the marrow."

● Reduce appropriations for the Contingency Fund by $30 million, to $20 million. It was rejected by an 18-63 roll call.

Ellender said, "This fund was initially established in 1958 to give the President the funds he required to provide help in any economic, political or natural emergency abroad.... It was not to be used for military contingencies." However, Ellender said, the fund had been used

India-Pakistan Conflict

The outbreak of major hostilities between India and Pakistan in 1965 strained relations between those countries and the United States, which had supplied large quantities of food, other economic goods and military equipment to both nations.

At the height of the warfare in September, the United States halted all shipments of military supplies to both countries and, beginning June 30, continued food shipments under PL 480 on a month-to-month basis. However, President Johnson Dec. 9 authorized a speed-up of grain shipments to India under the PL 480 program to help alleviate a threatened famine in that country. The allocation of 1.5 million tons was to cover the allocations of December, January and February. In addition, the President announced a $50 million loan to help India buy fertilizer in the United States.

The dispute between India and Pakistan over Kashmir had flared intermittently since the partition of the state in 1947, following India's and Pakistan's independence from Britain. Britain transferred power in a manner that permitted the rulers of the princely states that comprised British India to regain control of foreign and defense policies and to continue to exercise domestic powers. Most of these rulers quickly acceded to India or Pakistan as religious majorities, geographical contiguity or economic ties dictated. In Kashmir, with a Hindu ruler and a predominantly Moslem population, the ruler refused to accede to either. Late in 1947, Moslem tribesmen from Pakistan invaded Kashmir to avenge alleged mistreatment of Moslems, an invasion believed to have been encouraged and aided by Pakistan. The Kashmir ruler appealed to India for assistance and troops were sent but only after the ruler acceded to India. Fighting in Kashmir continued for more than a year before a cease-fire agreement was negotiated to go into effect on Jan. 1, 1949. Kashmir remained divided along the cease-fire line thereafter. India was left in control of about two-thirds of the area of Kashmir and Pakistan in control of the other one-third.

On Aug. 7, 1965, India charged that Pakistan had sent armed infiltrators into Indian-held Kashmir to start a guerrilla war. Pakistan replied that India was trying to cover up an internal revolt. Indian forces crossed the cease-fire line Aug. 16 to attack bases and staging areas of the infiltrators. Full-scale Indian-Pakistani hostilities followed.

As fighting continued, the United States and Britain halted all military aid shipments to both nations.

India Sept. 21 and Pakistan Sept. 22 accepted a UN Security Council resolution demanding a cease-fire. The fighting ended Sept. 22. Indian Prime Minister Lal Bahadur Shastri and Pakistan Mohammad Ayub Khan in early January met in Tashkent, in Soviet Central Asia, to discuss the Kashmir dispute. The U.S.S.R. arranged the meeting and Soviet Premier Aleksei N. Kosygin helped achieve agreement. Although the Kashmir dispute was not resolved, the agreement signed Jan. 10 provided that both nations were to withdraw their armed personnel to positions held before Aug. 5. Shastri died early Jan. 11 of a heart attack after signing the agreement.

"in both the military and economic areas." Ellender said another section, section 510(a) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, "gives the President special authority to use up to $300 million for contingencies that may develop in any particular year should he determine that it is vital to the security of the United States...." He added, "In view of what has been done with the contingency fund over the years, I am firmly convinced that the contingency fund should be minimal...."

Pastore called Ellender's proposal "a genuine handcuff amendment." He said the President was "responsible for the security of the nation" and "for peace in our time." Pastore said the President "cannot foretell where or when the emergency may be. Yet on the floor of the Senate, we are being asked to handcuff the President by reducing this fund from $50 million to $20 million because, it is said, we cannot trust the President to use that fund in case of an emergency."

On the passage vote, J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, responded "present." Fulbright said he did not vote "primarily because of the failure of Congress this year to give the foreign aid program a new philosophy and direction." As on previous occasions, Fulbright said that aid program funds should be authorized on a long-term basis "to permit orderly economic planning" by recipients, that economic and military assistance should be handled in separate legislation, and that "increasing amounts" of U.S. development assistance should be channeled through international organizations. He said that "virtually all of the reforms I thought necessary have been abandoned at least for this year."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 10871 appropriated the following funds for fiscal 1965:

FOREIGN AID

Economic Assistance
Development Loans	$ 593,225,000
Technical Cooperation and Development Grants	182,355,000
Alliance for Progress
Loans	435,125,000
Grants	75,000,000
Supporting Assistance	349,200,000
Contingency Fund	50,000,000
Special Contingency Fund for Southeast Asia	89,000,000
International Organizations	134,755,000
American Schools and Hospitals Abroad	7,000,000
Administrative Expenses
AID	54,240,000
State Department	3,100,000
Military Assistance	1,170,000,000
Total, Foreign Aid	$3,143,000,000

OTHER FUNDS

Funds Appropriated to the President
Peace Corps	$ 102,000,000
Inter-American Development Bank	455,880,000
International Development Assn.	104,000,000
Army Department
Ryukyu Islands Administration	14,733,000
Health, Education and Welfare
Cuban Refugee Relief	$ 30,000,000
Department of State
Migration and Refugee Assistance	7,575,000
Total, Other Programs	$ 714,188,000

In addition the bill:

Set as the operating budget of the Export-Import Bank $1,190,172,000, including $4,052,000 for administrative expenses.

Continued the availability of foreign aid funds previously appropriated but not obligated -- estimated as an additional $158.3 million.

Continued the availability of $12.1 million of Peace Corps funds previously appropriated but not obligated as of June 30, 1965, providing the Peace Corps with a total of $114.1 million for operation in 1966.

Stipulated that up to 10 percent of development loan funds could be made available to the International Development Assn., the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or the International Finance Corp. (AID proposed to make the funds available on a matching basis with other nations to encourage further increases in the resources of these institutions.)

Expressed the sense of Congress that assistance should be denied to any country which failed to take appropriate steps to prevent its ships from transporting strategic items, items of economic assistance or other equipment, materials or commodities to North Viet Nam.

Barred aid to Indonesia or the United Arab Republic unless the President determined aid to either country to be essential to the national interest of the United States.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Sept. 23 -- Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Reduce funds for technical cooperation and development grants by $20 million, for supporting assistance by $20 million and for international organizations and programs by $10 million. Roll-call vote, 45-35.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Bar aid to the United Arab Republic unless the President determined such aid to be in the national interest. Voice.

Gruening -- Bar aid to Indonesia unless the President determined such aid to be in the national interest. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Sept. 23 -- Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Reduce funds for military assistance to Latin American countries by $25 million. Roll-call vote, 41-43.

Morse -- Reduce military assistance appropriations by $170 million, to $1 billion, and limit military aid to India, Pakistan, Greece and Turkey to 50 percent of the cost of equipment and training which those countries received during fiscal 1965. Roll call, 32-54.

Morse -- Reduce military assistance appropriations by $292 million, to $878 million. Roll call, 30-56.

Gruening -- Bar military aid to India or Pakistan. Voice.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Reduce military assistance appropriations by $100 million, to $1.07 billion. Roll call, 35-47.

Ellender -- Reduce funds for development loans by $50 million, to $543,225,000. Roll call, 29-53.

Ellender -- Reduce funds for the President's Contingency Fund by $30 million, to $20 million. Roll call, 18-63.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Senate-House conferees Sept. 30 filed the conference report (H Rept 1103) on HR 10871, appropriating $3,218,000,000 for foreign aid in fiscal 1966. The conference report also contained an appropriation of $714,188,000 for related programs, which was the amount appropriated by the Senate and was $2,265,000 below the amount appropriated by the House.

The conferees accepted the following House-passed foreign aid appropriations figures:

- Technical cooperation and development grants, $202,355,000 (Senate: $182,355,000).
- International organizations and programs, $144,755,000 (Senate: $134,755,000).
- Supporting assistance, $369,200,000 (Senate: $349,200,000).

The conferees accepted the Senate figures of $435,125,000 for Alliance for Progress development loans (instead of the House appropriation of $445,125,000) and $30,000,000 for assistance to Cuban refugees (instead of the $32,265,000 House appropriation), and approved an appropriation of $618,225,000 for development loans (instead of the $675,225,000 voted by the House and $593,225,000 by the Senate).

In other actions, conferees:

- Restored House language prohibiting the transfer of development loan funds to the International Development Assn., the World Bank or the International Finance Corporation, instead of a Senate provision permitting the transfer of up to 10 percent of such funds.
- Deleted House language prohibiting assistance to countries shipping strategic equipment to North Viet Nam, but approved the House provision prohibiting economic assistance to countries which shipped items of economic aid to North Viet Nam. (As in previous foreign aid bills, HR 10871 prohibited aid to countries furnishing or shipping economic or strategic items to Cuba.)
- Prohibited assistance to any country which shipped military goods to North Viet Nam, unless the President determined that withholding of such assistance would be contrary to the national interest and so reported to Congress. (This replaced a Senate provision expressing the sense of Congress that assistance should be denied to any country which failed to take appropriate steps to prevent its ships from transporting goods to North Viet Nam.)
- Let stand Senate provisions prohibiting aid to the United Arab Republic or Indonesia unless the President determined such aid to be essential to the national interest.

FINAL ACTION

The House Oct. 1, by a 204-127 roll-call vote, and the Senate Oct. 5, by a 40-23 roll-call vote, adopted the conference report (H Rept 1103) on HR 10871. (For voting, see charts p. 1014, 1077)

Before adopting the report, the House, by a 164-174 roll-call vote, rejected a motion to recommit the report with instructions that House conferees insist upon disagreement to an amendment relating to aid to countries that shipped strategic goods to North Viet Nam. The motion to recommit the bill, which was offered by Rep. Garner E. Shriver (R Kan.), ranking Republican on the House Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee, would have instructed House conferees to insist upon disagreement to a Senate amendment which deleted House language prohibiting assistance to countries shipping strategic equipment to North Viet Nam, but retained similar language relating to Cuba. As passed by the House, HR 10871 contained separate provisions prohibiting aid to any country which sold, furnished or permitted ships under its registry to ship militarily strategic or economic items to Cuba or to North Viet Nam. The references to North Viet Nam, which had been added by an amendment offered by John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), were deleted by the Senate when it passed the bill. The conferees accepted the Senate's deletion of North Viet Nam in the provision relating to strategic goods, but retained the House's reference in the section relating to economic assistance. A substitute for the deleted section, giving the President discretionary authority to withhold aid, was approved by the conferees.

Supporting Shriver's recommittal motion, Charles E. Chamberlain (R Mich.) said it was intended to provide "that when it comes to shipping to the enemy we give the same identical treatment to North Viet Nam as we are giving to Cuba. Why should we create a double standard here?" Chamberlain pointed out that without the reference to North Viet Nam, the only restrictive language relating to the shipment of strategic items there would be a provision prohibiting aid to countries that shipped such goods unless the President determined that the withholding of assistance to such countries would be contrary to the national interest, and so reported to Congress. Chamberlain said, "This would give the President authority to aid countries that are in fact giving military aid to North Viet Nam if he finds it in the national interest. Why he would want this is beyond me. I cannot conceive a possible situation where free world ships would be carrying military assistance, strategic assistance to North Viet Nam and have the President say that it is in our national interest to give that country aid."

Opposing the recommittal motion, Rooney said it would be "folly to prevent the President from taking action necessary to protect our national interests. He has the facts and he has the responsibility to deal with situations and crises around the world...." Rooney argued that adoption of the motion would prohibit military assistance to Greece, which he said "has suffered a prolonged government crisis. I regret to have to say that the Greeks are simply unable at this time to take the steps necessary to end all shipping to North Viet Nam." Rooney also said the conference report "contains stronger language than what was contained in the authorization legislation. It also contains stronger language than what was contained in the Senate bill. It is not as strong as could be but all legislation is a result of compromise."

Appropriations Committee Chairman George H. Mahon (D Texas) also opposed the recommittal motion. He said that its adoption "could in my judgment be interpreted as a vote of no confidence in the President in this matter. This is certainly not the desire of any Members of the House on either side of the aisle." Mahon said, "Cutting off shipping to North Viet Nam is not the only question at stake; as indicated earlier (by Rooney), important relationships with NATO allies vital to our security might well be adversely affected if in our well-intentioned desire to hamstring North Viet Nam in every way possible we should unwisely tie our President's hands."

VIET NAM WAR GROWS, BECOMES MAJOR ISSUE

The war in Viet Nam during 1965 took many turns on many fronts -- military, diplomatic, domestic and foreign -- often without any clear points to mark the turnings. It was clear, though, that between January and December the American military involvement had mushroomed and the war escalated into North Viet Nam; that public pressure for a peaceful settlement of the war and Administration efforts to seek negotiations had increased; and that the war had become the dominant issue facing the nation, overshadowing and threatening President Johnson's domestic legislative achievements. Less clear at the year's end was whether the war would continue to escalate, or whether both sides would decide that "victory" was impossible and would attempt to "decelerate" the combat. Also unclear were America's precise negotiating terms, or whether the governments of either North or South Viet Nam were interested in negotiations. For the first half of the year, governmental chaos in Saigon threatened to undermine any efforts made by the United States to help South Viet Nam, and made it incumbent on the United States to step up its aid to save the situation. To add to the confusion, there was widespread disagreement on who was the dominant enemy force -- China, North Viet Nam, or indigenous South Vietnamese guerillas known as the Viet Cong and represented politically by the National Liberation Front (NLF).

The beginning of 1965 was marked by a serious deterioration of both the political and the military situation in Viet Nam. A six-day battle at Binh Gia, which ended Jan. 2, was described as a "disastrous" defeat for the American-backed South Vietnamese forces, while in Saigon the government was undergoing one of the numerous upheavals that were to last until the accession June 19 of General Nguyen Cao Ky. American forces in Viet Nam at the opening of the year consisted of 23,000 noncombat troops who were serving officially in an "advise and support" capacity, and the Administration retained a hope that a solution to the Vietnamese problem by the South Vietnamese could be found with the United States maintaining a limited role.

The nature of the war markedly changed following a surprise attack Feb. 7 by Viet Cong guerillas on a U.S. military compound at Pleiku, and the U.S. aim to remain in a limited advisory role was rapidly reassessed. U.S. and South Vietnamese bombers immediately retaliated against training and staging areas in North Viet Nam, with the raids coming only a few hours after the arrival of Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin in Hanoi, the capital of North Viet Nam. A State Department White Paper released Feb. 27 conceded the failure of the attempt to end the war by restricting the fighting to South Viet Nam and invited the North to choose between peace and an "increasingly destructive" conflict. By the end of February the air strikes against the North had been put on a continuing basis to "force" negotiations, while the United States prepared a buildup of combat forces. With the increased U.S. commitment, policy began to center on a military solution to the war with the United States undertaking the major military burden.

The new "escalation" of the war prompted immediate pressures to halt the widening hostilities. At home, the country was swept by a new phenomenon -- "teach-ins" protesting the American presence in Viet Nam. Internationally, the United Nations and foreign governments took unsuccessful steps to try to bring the participants of the war into negotiations. The Administration appeared reluctant to pursue such proposals and insisted that Hanoi showed no sign of any willingness to negotiate. However, in response to public pressures, President Johnson April 7, in a major policy speech on Southeast Asia at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, stated that the Government was willing to enter into "unconditional discussions" with any of the "governments concerned." This presumably did not include the Viet Cong. The President also offered to contribute $1 billion to a development program for all of Southeast Asia, including North Viet Nam, as soon as "peaceful cooperation" was possible.

Between April and May the American troop buildup continued, while regular army units of the North Vietnamese began to appear in the South. Between May 12 and May 18 the United States called a moratorium on bombing of the North in order to elicit peace feelers from Hanoi, which were not forthcoming. At the end of May the U.S. Government reported the presence of a number of Soviet anti-aircraft missile sites around Hanoi.

The installment of the Ky government June 19 established reasonable governmental stability in the South. On July 28 President Johnson replaced Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor with Henry Cabot Lodge as U.S. Ambassador to South Viet Nam. Following a trip July 14-20 by Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara and Ambassador Lodge to Saigon, the President July 28 announced that U.S. military strength in Viet Nam would be increased "almost immediately" from 75,000 to 125,000. However, Mr. Johnson assured an anxious nation that the increase would be accomplished without call-up of the reserves. American forces in Viet Nam by the end of the year were over 181,000.

The large-scale bombing raids, in both North and South Viet Nam, and the vast increase since the beginning of the year of troop strength in the South, required new outlays for men and materiel. Despite highly vocal criticism of his Viet Nam policy by a small group of Senators, Congress had earlier, on May 6, almost unanimously approved a special Presidential request for $700 million to fund the war (see story p. 180) -- a move which many felt reflected more a desire to get Congressional approval for his policies than an immediate need for the money. On Aug. 4, following McNamara's trip to Saigon and the President's announcement of a further troop buildup, the Administration requested an additional $1.7 billion in appropriations for Viet Nam operations. The defense appropriations bill (HR 9221 -- PL 89-312, see p. 168) containing the amended request was approved unanimously by Congress Sept. 21. Congressional debate was not completely muffled by these tests of support, and criticism continued both from those who wanted greater U.S. involvement in Viet Nam and those who wanted the U.S. to negotiate a withdrawal.

Negotiation Efforts. Throughout the year pressure increasingly mounted from abroad, from Congress and from the public to find a peaceful solution to the war. Demonstrations flared for three days Oct. 15-17 across the nation. In the United States an estimated 70,000 people participated in marches and rallies in over 60 U.S. cities. In addition, the Administration's interest in negotiations was greeted with increased skepticism when the State Department Oct. 14 confirmed that in August 1964, the Johnson Administration had turned down peace talks with North Viet Nam that had been secretly arranged by UN Secretary General U Thant. Citizen protests reached a peak when an estimated 20,000 demonstrators Nov. 27 joined in a non-violent "March on Washington for Peace in Viet Nam."

Meanwhile, it became increasingly apparent that the Administration had stepped up its diplomatic efforts for negotiations and that this effort was being made more public to assuage public criticism. Although greater efforts were shown, it was not clear if the Administration's aims had altered or that its negotiating position had been made sufficiently attractive to appeal to the Communists. The President during the late summer and fall looked first to the United Nations and then to other countries for assistance in approaching Hanoi, and by December the Administration appeared to be making one last "peace offensive" before a further escalation of the war was made. The United States sought an independent and secure South Vietnamese state, while North Viet Nam sought unification of the country and Communist participation in any new government, plus the withdrawal of all foreign forces and bases from Viet Nam. The positions on both sides tended to vary and presumably were subject to negotiation. However, the North tended to distrust American motives and seemed to remain confident that the Communist forces could eventually win without negotiations, through the collapse of U.S. willpower to fight a debilitating war in Asia. As the year ended, a 30-hour Christmas truce which began Dec. 24 had led into a second, and longer, moratorium of the bombing of North Viet Nam which continued into the new year. At the same time numerous top U.S. diplomats were sent to capitals around the world in a massive drive to sell the American position, rally support, and communicate to Hanoi the sincerity of the U.S. desire to settle the war by negotiation. No positive response was heard, however, from any of the parties on the Communist side, and an announced trip to Hanoi of a high-level Soviet delegation led by Aleksander Shelepin, Secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee, led to speculation that the Soviets were about to increase their aid to North Viet Nam despite hopes in the West that the Soviets would use their influence to try to persuade Hanoi to negotiate a peace.

Meanwhile, a high level Senate fact-finding mission led by Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) had returned Dec. 18 from a 35-day tour of Europe and Asia and submitted to the President Dec. 19 a bleak report on the situation in Viet Nam. An essentially similar report, printed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Jan. 6, 1966, outlined the basic alternatives for the United States: either disadvantageous negotiations (chances for which, the Senators felt, were slim) or a protracted, large-scale general war on the Asian mainland.

Background

REFERENCES -- 1964 Almanac p. 331; Congress and the Nation p. 52, 91, 130, 136, 138.

American commitments to South Viet Nam date back to the Geneva conference of 1954 which met to negotiate armistice agreements between France and Cambodia, Laos and Viet Nam -- the three territories which had made up French Indo-China. Prior to these accords American involvement in the area had consisted of economic aid and military equipment to assist the French. The U.S. Government did not formally subscribe to the Geneva agreements but agreed to support them.

As the French withdrew from Viet Nam, the Americans moved in with large amounts of economic and military aid to support successive Saigon governments against Communist-directed guerillas. President Eisenhower in October 1954, in a letter to the president of South Viet Nam, promised U.S. aid "in developing and maintaining a strong, viable state capable of resisting attempted subversion of aggression through military means." Also in 1954 the United States helped negotiate the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty (SEATO), which pledged joint action against "armed attack" on any state or territory in the area (South Viet Nam was included in a protocol to the treaty). The Senate approved ratification of the treaty by an 82-1 vote Feb. 1, 1955. (1955 Almanac p. 280)

President Eisenhower sent U.S. military advisers to help train the South Vietnamese army in 1955. By 1961, after some 18 months of increasing activity by the Viet Cong, the number of U.S. military advisers had doubled, to more than 600. In May 1961, during a trip to South Viet Nam, Vice President Johnson promised more U.S. military and economic aid, and May 13 President Kennedy ordered 100 specially trained jungle fighters (Special Forces) to South Viet Nam. In October President Kennedy sent Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, his military adviser, to South Viet Nam to investigate the military situation there and make a personal report. Following Taylor's trip the President Nov. 16 announced the U.S. intention to step up its aid to the Saigon government. The announcement prefaced an influx of American military instructors, helicopter pilots and support personnel. Soon after, the number of "advisers" in Viet Nam had risen to an estimated 1,650 and this number steadily increased until at the end of December 1964 there were approximately 23,000 U.S. troops in Viet Nam.

Prior to 1965 the United States maintained that it was only an indirect participant in the conflict and that the U.S. military personnel in South Viet Nam were there only in an "advise and support" capacity.

In spite of increased U.S. assistance, the political situation and the long-run war effort deteriorated markedly. American efforts to support a stable civilian government which could successfully combat the Viet Cong were continually frustrated. After the assassination of President Ngo Dinh Diem and his brother Ngo Dinh Nhu following a military coup in November 1963, one coup d'etat followed another, each one further weakening the nation's ability to successfully maintain its war effort. At the same time the Viet Cong steadily increased its control in both the rural areas and the cities.

A major turning point came on Aug. 2, 1964, when a U.S. destroyer cruising in international waters in the Gulf of Tonkin off North Viet Nam was attacked by North Vietnamese torpedo boats. After strong U.S. protests, PT boats Aug. 4 again attacked U.S. destroyers in the area. President Johnson that night announced that retaliatory air action was being taken against military facilities in the North. This led to an inexorable policy of retaliation by both sides.

Immediately following the Tonkin incident, Congress Aug. 7 overwhelmingly adopted a joint resolution (H J Res 1145 -- PL 88-408), recommended by the President, affirming support of "all necessary measures to repel any armed attack against the forces of the United States... to prevent further aggression...(and) to assist any member or protocol state of the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty requesting assistance...." (1964 Almanac p. 331) The resolution passed on roll-call votes of 414-0 in the House and 88-2 in the Senate, with only Sens. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) opposed. Although the voting on the resolution was not specific endorsement for enlargement of the war, bombing of North Viet Nam and the commitment of large numbers of American ground troops, the Administration did cite it as evidence of support for its policies.

A number of Senators publicly and privately urged the President to place less stress on military measures and to enter into negotiations to end the fighting. The President's speech at Johns Hopkins on April 7, 1965, was, in one respect, his answer to these critics.

Following U.S. retaliation for the Tonkin attack, the Viet Cong concentrated their efforts against U.S. forces and installations in Viet Nam and stepped up their terrorist activities in Saigon. On Nov. 1 the Communists carried out a devastating attack on U.S installations at Bien Hoa, outside Saigon, and on Christmas Eve terrorists bombed a U.S. officers' billet in the heart of the capital city.

1965 Developments

U.S. GOALS

In statements made by the Administration, U.S. goals appeared basically to be the maintenance of U.S. commitments, the halting of Communist aggression, the independence of South Viet Nam and the containment of China. In his State of the Union Message Jan. 4, President Johnson said that the United States was in Viet Nam "first, because a friendly nation has asked us to help against the Communist aggression. Ten years ago our President pledged our help. Three Presidents have supported that pledge. We will not break it now. Second, our own security is tied to the peace of Asia..... To ignore aggression now would only increase the danger of a much larger war. Our goal is peace in Southeast Asia. That will come only when the aggressors leave their neighbors in peace." (For text, see p. 1347)

At a Feb. 4 press conference the President said: "I only want to reassert...our determination to continue our present policy...to try to help the people of Viet Nam help themselves to preserve their freedom."

A Feb. 7 White House statement following the raids on North Viet Nam expressed the hope that the war could be contained and said that the attacks were "appropriate reprisal action...carefully limited...." It added, "The key to the situation remains the cessation of infiltration from North Viet Nam."

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's annual review of U.S. global defense policy, released Feb. 18, gave the following views: "Unless there is a change in Soviet policy, it still appears doubtful that the Chinese Communists will deliberately initiate any major overt aggression against their neighbors. Although they have long been the more militant of the two major Communist rivals, they have shown great caution when confronted with a determined display of military power....

"A Communist Chinese success in South Viet Nam would be claimed as proof positive that the Chinese Communist position (vis-a-vis the Soviets) was correct and they will have made a giant step forward in the struggle for control of the world Communist movement. Such a success would also greatly increase the prestige of Communist China among the non-aligned nations and strengthen the position of their following everywhere. Thus, the stakes in South Viet Nam are far greater than the loss of one small country to Communism.... All of this is not to say that the loss of South Viet Nam to the Communists would automatically mean the loss of all of Southeast Asia. Yet, we may be certain that as soon as they had established their control over South Viet Nam, the Communists would press their subversive operations in Laos and then in Thailand and we would have to face this same problem all over again in another place or permit them to have all of Southeast Asia by default. Thus, the choice is not simply whether to continue our efforts to keep South Viet Nam free and independent but, rather, whether to continue our struggle to halt Communist expansion in Asia. If the choice is the latter, as I believe it should be, we will be far better off facing the issue in South Viet Nam. The present situation in South Viet Nam is grave but by no means hopeless."

A "White Paper" entitled Aggression From the North," released Feb. 27 by the State Department, stated: "The United States seeks no territory, no military bases, no favored position....If peace can be restored in South Viet Nam, the United States will be ready at once to reduce its military involvement."

At his March 13 news conference the President said: "Our policy is still the same, and that is to any armed attack our forces will reply. To any in Southeast Asia who ask our help in defending their freedom, we are going to give it, and that means we are going to continue to give it."

Johns Hopkins Speech. The clearest Presidential statement of U.S. policy was made by Mr. Johnson in his speech at Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, on April 7. He said: "We are there (in Viet Nam) because we have a promise to keep,...we have made a national pledge to help South Viet Nam defend its independence... We are also there to strengthen world order.... To leave Viet Nam to its fate would shake the confidence of people around the globe in the value of an American commitment....The result would be increased unrest and instability, and even wider war."

"We are there," the President continued, "because there are great stakes in the balance. Let no one think for a moment that retreat from Viet Nam would bring an end to the conflict. The battle would be renewed in one country and then another....the appetite of aggression is never satisfied."

"The only path...is the path of peaceful settlement. Such peace demands an independent South Viet Nam -- securely guaranteed and able to shape its own relationships to all others -- free from outside interference -- tied to no alliance -- military base for no other country. These are the essentials of any final settlement." (For text, see p. 1370)

The President offered a $1-billion American investment in a cooperative effort of Southeast Asian countries for economic and social development "in that conflict-torn corner" of the world.

The President's offer, at Johns Hopkins, for "unconditional discussions" was repeated in an address

May 13 to the Assn. of American Editorial Cartoonists, but Mr. Johnson added that "Communist China apparently desires the war to continue whatever the cost to their allies. Their target...is Asia. Their objective...is to erode and to discredit America's ability to help prevent Chinese domination over all of Asia. In this domination they shall never succeed."

President Johnson July 28 said:

"What are our goals in that war-stained land?

"First: We intend to convince the Communists that we cannot be defeated by force of arms or by superior power. They are not easily convinced. In recent months they have greatly increased their fighting forces and their attacks and the number of incidents. I have asked the Commanding General, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, what more he needs to meet this mounting aggression. He has told me. We will meet his needs.

"We do not want an expanding struggle with consequences that no one can perceive, nor will we bluster or bully or flaunt our power, but we will not surrender and we will not retreat, for behind our American pledge lies the determination and resources, I believe, of all of the American nation.

"Second, once the Communists know, as we know, that a violent solution is impossible, then a peaceful solution is inevitable."

There was a general Administration silence during the fall while the President recuperated from major surgery. However, at the outset of his new "peace offensive" President Johnson Dec. 9 made the following remarks to the AFL-CIO which stressed the moral aims of the United States and, hoping for peace, warned of future "hard steps" to be taken if negotiations were not accepted by Hanoi.

"Every day someone asks: 'Why are we in Viet Nam?' And every day I want to answer: Not for economic reasons; we are spending our treasure, not reproducing it, there. And not for reasons of selfish pride; the lives of our sons are too great a price for national vanity. Not for reasons of empire; our own sense of others' rights and the harsh judgments of history on the conquerors do not speak well of either the morality or the logic of imperial ambitions.

"We are there because for all our shortcomings, for all our failings as a nation and a people, we remain fixed on the pursuit of freedom as a deep and moral obligation that will not let us go....

"In the past few days I have reviewed with my top advisers the situation in Viet Nam. We are carefully studying how we can best continue to turn back that aggression. We are all determined to do all that is necessary. At the same time, we are equally determined that every prospect for peace be exhausted before other hard steps are taken."

Economic Development

President Johnson, in his April 7 speech at Johns Hopkins University, pledged American support of an economic program for the development of all Southeast Asia, including North Viet Nam, as soon as peaceful cooperation was possible. This policy commitment in turn led to a promised U.S. contribution to the funding of an Asian Development Bank and the final realization of that organization.

In his speech, Mr. Johnson had proposed that the countries of Southeast Asia associate themselves in a cooperative effort, and that UN Secretary General U Thant initiate a plan for the area. The President then pledged a $1 billion investment in this effort as soon as it was underway -- subject to Congressional approval. At the same time the President invited the U.S.S.R. and other industrial nations to take part in the effort. He also appointed Eugene Black, former president of the World Bank, as head of a U.S. team to inaugurate U.S. participation.

The proposal for a Southeast Asia Development program led to the reversal of U.S. policy toward the Asian Development Bank sponsored by the UN Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE). This bank, to resemble existing regional banks for Africa and Latin America, was discussed and accepted in principle by ECAFE members in December 1963; the United States, however, although it wished the Bank well and said it would cooperate with it, did not plan to become a member. Following the President's April 7 speech, however, Black indicated at an ECAFE meeting of specialists in Bangkok during June that the United States was prepared to fund $200 million of the $1 billion capital needed to set up the new bank, a sum immediately matched by Japan. Black also said that the United States was prepared to grant another $100 million to a Southeast Asia Development Fund administered by the Asian Bank -- provided other countries also contributed to such special funds.

Following the U.S. lead other Asian nations quickly subscribed to the Bank, and the Asian Development Bank was chartered Dec. 4 with Manila, the Philippines, as the Bank's headquarters.

Extension of War Efforts

The U.S. military buildup in Viet Nam in 1965 was rapid. At the end of 1964, the number of U.S. military personnel in Viet Nam was 23,000 and the number of U.S. deaths from hostile action since Jan. 1, 1961, was 239. By the end of 1965, the number of U.S. military personnel in Viet Nam was 181,392, and the number of deaths from hostile action since January 1961 was 1,620. (See box, Defense Appropriations story, p. 168)

U.S. military operations in Viet Nam included both air and ground action in South Viet Nam, and air raids on North Viet Nam and on Communist supply lines in Laos. On the U.S. side, the escalation of the Viet Nam war began following a mortar attack by Viet Cong guerillas on a U.S. military compound at Pleiku, South Viet Nam, Feb. 7. The same day, President Johnson ordered U.S. carrier-based jets to attack military targets in North Viet Nam in retaliation. In the weeks that followed, U.S. raids on North Viet Nam became a regular feature of the war, and air attacks on targets in South Viet Nam were sharply increased.

North Vietnamese terrorism as counter-retaliation also steadily mounted. Terrorists March 30 set off an estimated 250 pounds of explosives in a car parked outside the U.S. embassy in Saigon, killing 20 persons, including 2 Americans, and injuring 175 others -- also seriously damaging the embassy. (Congress May 7 cleared, without any opposition, an Administration bill (HR 7064 -- PL 89-22) authorizing $1 million for construction of a new U.S. chancery in Saigon. The House passed the bill April 5 on a 378-0 roll-call vote. See chart p. 948.)

By April, U.S. forces in South Viet Nam had grown to 29,000 and a Marine anti-aircraft battalion had been dispatched to protect Danang airfield. In June, the first Army combat troops were landed. By June 3, U.S. forces in South Viet Nam had risen to 51,000.

During the summer, the phase of operations in which Americans served chiefly as advisers to South Vietnamese troops and in defense of bases gave way to the use of large numbers of U.S. troops in "search and destroy" operations. U.S. officials said there was an urgent need to blunt a "monsoon offensive" by the enemy while planes were grounded.

The war in Viet Nam entered a new dimension July 24 with the downing of a U.S. military plane and damage to three others by Soviet surface-to-air missiles. U.S. Air Force jet fighter bombers retaliated July 26 by attacking two of the missile sites 40 miles west of Hanoi.

President Johnson said at a July 28 news conference that U.S. troops in Viet Nam would be increased from 75,000 to 125,000 and that monthly draft calls would be raised from 17,000 to 35,000.

Mr. Johnson said it was not currently "essential" to order reserve units into action. He added, however, that if the situation later warranted reserve call-ups, the matter would be given "careful consideration" and the country would be given "due and adequate notice" before any action was taken.

On Dec. 15 the United States bombed Haiphong, for the first time hitting an industrial center in North Viet Nam.

Saigon Government. As 1965 began, Gen. Nguyen Khanh was in effective control of the civilian government of South Viet Nam following an armed forces purge Dec. 20, 1964. Although the purge left Phan Khac Suu as Chief of State and Tran Van Huong as Premier, the newly formed Military Council with Khanh as its spokesman emerged as the major force in the government. The situation for the following six months was one of governmental chaos with a series of coups, counter-coups and short-lived governments.

On Jan. 18 Premier Huong reshuffled his hitherto civilian cabinet to include four generals, among them Nguyen Cao Ky, the Air Force commander. A week later, the generals ousted Huong but retained a civilian as acting Premier. After an unsuccessful military coup against Khanh, he was ousted Feb. 21 as the head of the armed forces and exiled as a "roving ambassador." On June 14 Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu was proclaimed the chairman of a new military junta known as the National Leadership Committee. The other leading members of the junta were Gen. Ky and Gen. Nguyen Huu Co. On June 19 the junta appointed Ky, aged 34, as Premier. Ky's government, the 10th in 19 months, remained in power through the end of the year.

Following Ky's appointment, President Johnson, in a surprise move, July 28 appointed Henry Cabot Lodge as U.S. Ambassador to South Viet Nam to replace Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor. Taylor had previously replaced Lodge in June 1964 and had had to deal with at least five short-lived and unpopular governments. He had said he wanted only a one-year appointment.

Negotiations

Prior to the end of March the United States appeared to be reluctant to enter into negotiations to end the war in Viet Nam, insisting that no serious signs of interest in talks had been received from the Communists. However, public reaction to the escalation of the war and pressures to solve the conflict by negotiation rather than by military means succeeded in forcing the Administration to reformulate its position on negotiations. Following President Johnson's key policy speech April 7 at Baltimore, the year was marked by a score of peace initiatives culminating in December with a Christmas cease-fire, a second bombing moratorium, and a spectacular "peace offensive."

The U.S. position following the Feb. 7 air strikes against North Viet Nam, given by Government officials Feb. 28, was that the military action was designed to force the Communists to the conference table -- peace through pressure. However, pressure was mounting both at home and abroad against just such a military solution, and it was widely argued that the bombing would only harden North Viet Nam's resolve to win. British Prime Minister Harold Wilson Feb. 23 unsuccessfully approached the Soviet Union to reactivate the British-Soviet co-chairmanship of the Geneva conference that brought about the 1954 accords.

UN Secretary General U Thant Feb. 24 announced that he had approached all the "principal parties" with "concrete ideas and proposals" which included negotiations. White House Press Secretary George E. Reedy Feb. 25 said, however, that the President "was not contemplating any negotiations," and that the U Thant proposal was "not before the President."

Administration conditions for an acceptable end to the war in Viet Nam slowly became clarified during March. A halt to Communist "aggression against their neighbors" was a prime demand. The President stressed the "guarantee" of the independence and security of South Viet Nam and also stated that the United States sought "no more than a return to the essentials" of the Geneva accords. The President's April 7 Johns Hopkins' speech made the clearest exposition of the U.S. position up to that time and it remained the touchstone of later Administration statements. The President for the first time said that the United States was willing to enter into "unconditional discussions" with the "governments concerned" to find a peaceful settlement. The offer was coupled with what was considered to be an added incentive for the North Vietnamese to come to the bargaining table: a joint development plan for all of Southeast Asia, eventually to include North Viet Nam. The apparent change of attitude toward negotiations was in part due to public opinion but also in part due to a stronger military position in Viet Nam from which to negotiate.

An abortive attempt at negotiations occurred in late April when the United States April 25 announced its willingness to attend a conference of participants of the 1954 Geneva conference called by Cambodia to discuss her neutrality. The conference, it was reported, could have been used as a "back door" to Viet Nam talks. The United States was excluded, however, by Cambodia Prince Sihanouk's statement that only signatory nations should attend the conference.

Another attempt to elicit peace feelers from the North occurred in May when U.S. bombing raids on North Viet Nam were halted between the 12th and the 18th. According to news reports, the raids were stopped to give the North a face-saving opportunity to accept the President's offer for talks. The Administration made no official statement on the matter, but the State Department May 18 expressed disappointment that North Viet Nam had made no move towards negotiations during the bombing moratorium.

Hanoi's 4 Points. The apparent unwillingness of Hanoi to negotiate was a continuing problem surrounding negotiation attempts. Secretary of State Dean Rusk June 23 gave the view that Hanoi wanted a "military victory, not peace," and that North Viet Nam would not discuss the conflict unless the United States accepted in advance the withdrawal of U.S. forces from Viet Nam and a Communist-dominated government in Saigon. Hanoi's demands were basically four: that the United States stop its attacks against the North, end its aggression in the South, withdraw its troops from South Viet Nam, and let the Vietnamese people settle by themselves their own affairs as provided for in the Geneva agreements -- "in accordance with the program of the South Viet Nam National Front for Liberation (NFL)" -- (This was taken by the U.S. Government to mean NFL participation in a South Vietnamese government or recognition of the NFL.) At times Hanoi insisted that these points were not preconditions for talks, and at other times it insisted these were "the only basis for a correct settlement" and that talks were to be preceded by "actual deeds" on the part of the U.S. Government.

Geneva Terms. Each side in the war claimed that it was desirous of returning to the basic principles of the 1954 Geneva agreements and referred to them as a basis for negotiations, although each side had slightly different ideas of what the "essentials" of the agreement meant. The basic principles of the Geneva accords included: the ultimate withdrawal of all foreign military forces and bases, a prohibition against military alliances, and the peaceful reunification of the two Viet Nams through elections by secret ballot. (North and South Viet Nam never reached agreement on elections.) The accords also prohibited any crossing of a "provisional demarcation line" between the Communist and non-Communist parts of the country without the permission of the International Control Commission.

Another problem which remained unclear was the question of who would participate in the negotiations: Hanoi, the NFL or even possibly Red China -- the United States or Saigon. The position on June 17, given by the President, was: "We'd never agree to someone negotiating that is not a government. I am not aware of any government the Viet Cong has." This was modified in later statements. On July 28 the President said that negotiations with the Viet Cong would not "be an insurmountable problem."

In June the President turned to the United Nations. In a San Francisco speech June 25, marking the 20th anniversary of the United Nations, the President appealed to the international organization to use its influence to bring North Viet Nam to the conference table for peace negotiations. Further representations were made to the UN July 28 and again on Sept. 23.

Sen. Mansfield, in a Senate speech endorsed by the White House Sept. 1, said it was important "that we do not assume that we are engaged in Viet Nam against a group or government which has no objective except warfare for the sake of warfare." Comparing the U.S. and North Vietnamese conditions for peace negotiations, Mansfield suggested the divergences preventing a settlement might not be irreconcilable.

The basic U.S. conditions for peace negotiations, Mansfield stated, would be agreements on free elections in South Viet Nam; free choice by South Viet Nam of its future, either in independence or as a part of a unified Viet Nam; and the withdrawal of all foreign forces and bases throughout Viet Nam if "peace can be established" and if "the arrangements for peace include adequate international guarantees of noninterference." Mansfield said that two other points "obviously essential" to attaining peace through negotiation were provision for a "secure amnesty" and a "cease-fire" and "stand-fast" throughout Viet Nam, possibly to coincide with peace negotiations.

Dean Rusk Oct. 14 said that the North Vietnamese apparently were no longer demanding an American withdrawal from Southeast Asia as a condition for negotiations.

Despite statements by the Administration regarding its willingness to negotiate if there were some response from the other side, a November incident seemed to negate the Administration's attempt to establish its good faith in seeking negotiations.

The Department of State Nov. 15 confirmed a report that the United States in late 1964 rejected an offer by North Viet Nam to have emissaries of the two nations meet in Rangoon, Burma, to discuss terms for ending the Vietnamese War. Robert J. McClosky, Department press spokesman, said that the offer was spurned because, "on the basis of the total evidence available to us, we did not believe at that time that North Viet Nam was prepared for serious peace talks." There also were reports that the Administration did not want to negotiate before the 1964 elections, and feared that negotiations then would jeopardize the South Viet Nam government's stability.

By December the possibility for peace talks suddenly seemed to take a turn for the better. On Dec. 7 the NFL offered a 12-hour Christmas truce. The President Dec. 9 promised to exhaust every prospect for peace, but also included an implied threat: "before other hard steps are taken." The State Department Dec. 17 made public a purported peace feeler from Hanoi transmitted via the President of the UN General Assembly, Amintore Fanfani. Officials conceded that disclosure of the feeler may have destroyed its usefulness, but said that the disclosure had been "forced" by newspaper reports. Several observers believed that the feeler, and U.S. attempts to follow it up, were publicized to offset questions about the government's "credibility" in its peace efforts. (Arthur Goldberg Dec. 22 reiterated that the U.S. had no intention of using nuclear weapons in the war--a further U.S. emphasis on keeping the war limited.)

Pope Paul VI Dec. 19 urged the United States to accept the NLF offer of a Christmas cease-fire, and on the 22nd both the U.S. and South Viet Nam military commands ordered their own 20-hour Christmas cease-fire to be kept except in cases of self-defense.

Although allied ground forces resumed offensives in South Viet Nam following the end of the truce, the cease-fire was used as a starting point to extend the moratorium on the bombing of North Viet Nam. It soon became publicly known, despite official Administration silence, that a massive "peace offensive" was underway while the pause in bombing was extended into January. Numerous top U.S. diplomats were dispatched to capitals around the world in an apparent all-out effort to bring peace in Viet Nam, and to explain the U.S. position. At the same time a high-level Soviet delegation announced plans for a trip to Hanoi. Although the NFL announced a new offer for a truce during the Vietnamese New Year, Jan. 20-23, for South Vietnamese troops only, no clear response to the intensive U.S. peace moves were discerned from Hanoi.

U.S. 14-Points. At the end of the year the U.S. press, through press briefings, was told that the U.S. negotiating position rested on 14-points (they were officially released Jan. 7):

(1) The United States accepts the 1954 and 1962 Geneva accords as "an adequate basis for peace."
(2) It would welcome a conference on Southeast Asia or any part of Asia.
(3) It is ready for "negotiations without preconditions."
(4) It is also ready, if Hanoi so prefers, for informal unconditional discussions.
(5) A cease-fire could be the first order of business at a peace conference, or be preliminary to such a conference.
(6) It is willing to discuss Hanoi's four-point program.
(7) It wants no U.S. military bases in Southeast Asia.
(8) It does not want a continuing American military presence in South Viet Nam.
(9) Free elections will be supported.
(10) The reunification of the two Viet Nams should be decided by the free decision of their peoples.
(11) Southeast Asian countries can be non-aligned or neutral.
(12) The U.S. Government is prepared to contribute $1 billion to a regional development program in which North Viet Nam could take part.
(13) The Viet Cong would have no difficulty in having their views represented at a conference after aggression ceased.
(14) The bombing of North Viet Nam will stop if it would demonstrably promote peace.

Controversy and Protests

Democratic Criticism. The views and moves of the Administration were not unanimously backed by members of the Democratic party in Congress. In fact there was steady criticism from a small group and a number of proposals that were at variance with much of President Johnson's Viet Nam policy.

Democratic Sens. Frank Church (Idaho), George McGovern (S.D.), Ernest Gruening (Alaska) and Wayne Morse (Ore.), joined by Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), were the chief advocates of intensified efforts for negotiations. On the other hand, some Democrats urged intensification of the war.

Following Mr. Johnson's announcement of the retaliatory raids after the attack on Pleiku Feb. 6, Sen. Morse said: "The United States is carrying out the war escalation plans that both the Pentagon Building and the State Department have been manipulating for the past several months. The violations of international treaties by Communist nations and groups in Asia are inexcusable, but they do not justify the United States committing the same wrongs the Communists have been committing."

Sen. Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, April 18 said a temporary halt in air strikes against North Viet Nam might open the way to peace negotiations. "We don't have to make any commitments," Fulbright said, "We could resume bombing at any time if there is no response."

Sen. Mansfield April 22 said that delay in getting to the peace table increased "the likelihood that the present limited conflict will spread into general war in Asia."

Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.) April 26 attacked what he called "modern-day appeasers and isolationists." He said, "We will do whatever is necessary, including fighting a nuclear war, before we will surrender to anybody anywhere."

Fulbright June 15 said in a speech on the Senate floor it was "clear" that "a complete military victory in Viet Nam,..can in fact be attained only at a cost far exceeding the requirements of our interest and our honor" and that "the unconditional withdrawal of American support...would have disastrous consequences." Fulbright said U.S. policy, therefore, should remain "one of determination to end the war at the earliest possible time by a negotiated settlement involving major concessions on both sides."

Frank Church June 24 recommended direct dealings with the Viet Cong, free elections in South Viet Nam and efforts by the United Nations to bring about peace negotiations. Church said "further escalation of the war northward should be absolutely resisted."

Rep. L. Mendel Rivers (D S.C.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, speaking in Hartford, Conn., Aug. 11 said the United States must be prepared to use atomic weapons on Red China before Red China used them on the United States. "Even if we win the war in South Viet Nam," he said, "I cannot help but think that we are merely postponing the final victory of Red China -- unless the nation is prepared to risk the possible consequences of destroying the nuclear capability. And unless we make that decision, it is possible that all of our fighting in South Viet Nam will have been in vain."

Although Rivers expressed support of President Johnson's Viet Nam policy, he suggested that "we've fumbled and bumbled under civilian military tactics in South Viet Nam long enough" and called for turning "the conduct of the war over to those trained in war -- the professional military men."

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) Dec. 5, though supporting the U.S. position, questioned whether enough was being done to promote economic and political development in South Viet Nam. He said military efforts alone "cannot win the war."

Mansfield Report. A Senate group headed by Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) which made a 35-day world tour in late 1965, concluded in a Jan. 6, 1966, report that "a rapid solution to the conflict in Viet Nam is not in immediate prospect" and that "the situation, as it now appears, offers only the very slim prospect of a just settlement by negotiations or the alternative prospect of a continuance of the conflict in the direction of a general war on the Asian mainland."

The report, titled "The Viet Nam Conflict: The Substance and the Shadow," was published Jan. 7 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

In addition to Mansfield, the fact-finding mission consisted of Sens. George D. Aiken (R Vt.), J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.), Daniel K. Inouye (D Hawaii) and Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine). The group traveled to France, Poland, the Soviet Union, Romania, Ceylon, Burma, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Viet Nam, Hong Kong, the Philippines and Japan. The group returned Dec. 18, and Mansfield made a report to President Johnson Dec. 19. The President Nov. 7 had requested Mansfield and some of his colleagues to undertake the trip.

Following are the conclusions of the report:

Escalation. Discussing the military situation, the report made the following points:

- "The large scale introduction of U.S. forces and their entry into combat has blunted but not turned back the drive of the Viet Cong."
- "The lines remain drawn in South Viet Nam in substantially the same pattern as they were at the outset of the increased U.S. commitment."
- Despite the increased U.S. commitment, "it is doubtful...that the constricted position now held in Viet Nam by the Saigon government can continue to be held" indefinitely, let alone extended without more American ground forces.
- The Viet Cong "have responded to the increased American role with a further strengthening of their forces ...and a general stepping up of military activity." As long as the North Vietnamese and their supporters "are willing and able to meet increased force by increased force," American pressure is only being applied against a military situation that is "open ended."
- "All of mainland Southeast Asia, at least, cannot be ruled out as a potential battlefield... The war has already expanded into Laos and is beginning to lap over the Cambodian border while pressures increase in the northeast of Thailand."
- "The visible alternative at this time...is the indefinite expansion and intensification of the war which will require the continuous introduction of additional U.S. forces."

Vietnamese Government. "There is little foundation for the expectation that the government of Viet Nam in Saigon will be able, in the near future, to carry a much greater burden than it is now carrying."

U.S. Role. "The basic concept of present American policy with respect to Viet Nam" is the role of support of the Vietnamese government and people. "This concept becomes more difficult to maintain as the military participation of the United States undergoes rapid increase. Yet a change in the basic concept could have a most unfortunate impact upon the Vietnamese people and the world at large." If the concept is eroded, the war will be drained of a purpose with meaning to the people of Viet Nam.

Relations with Allies. "With a few exceptions, assistance has not been and is not likely to be forthcoming for the war effort in South Viet Nam from nations other than the United States."

Negotiations. "Even though other nations...may be willing to play a third party role in bringing about negotiations, any prospects for effective negotiations at this time (and they are slim) are likely to be dependent on the initiatives and efforts of the combattants."

"Negotiations...if they do come about, and if they are accompanied by a cease-fire and standfast, would serve to stabilize a situation in which the majority of the population remains under nominal government control but in which dominance of the countryside rests largely in the hands of the Viet Cong."

GOP STATEMENTS. Large support for the Viet Nam war came from Republicans. However, there were many who argued that the President was not doing enough to win the war. The vocal critics of the Administration generally demanded more bombing of industrial targets in North Viet Nam with less reliance on the commitment of U.S. ground troops in the war. The Viet Nam war threatened to become the dominant election issue in 1966.

House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford Jr. (Mich.) and Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) Feb. 17 issued a joint statement supporting President Johnson and assailing Senate Democrats who urged negotiations for a Viet Nam settlement.

Barry Goldwater Feb. 19 told the Young Republicans that the Johnson Administration was "at long last... listening to advice" he had given in the 1964 Presidential campaign. "I join in backing 100 percent these actions of the President against the Communists in (Southeast Asia)."

Rep. Melvin R. Laird (R Wis.) March 1 attacked the 1962 agreement which neutralized Laos and said it was the principal reason for the difficulties in South Viet Nam. Laird also said it was becoming "more and more likely that some sort of negotiated settlement eventually may be sought by the present Administration to extricate itself from that area of the world." He said "a compromised settlement cannot help but lead to an eventual Communist takeover."

During the week ended June 18, Republicans urged stronger military pressures on the Communists and criticized a June 15 Senate speech by Fulbright, in which he suggested a "negotiated settlement involving major concessions on both sides" and based on the 1954 Geneva agreement.

Rep. Ford denounced Fulbright's speech, saying, "The United States could not agree today -- any more than in 1954 -- to legitimatizing Communist control of all Viet Nam by the device of a Communist-style election." Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), ranking Republican member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, June 17 said it was "high time" American bombers destroyed military and industrial targets on the periphery of Hanoi. However, Hickenlooper opposed increased American involvement in ground fighting.

Ford June 26 said, "Shocking events demand that the Administration take the wraps off our military forces in Southeast Asia by unleashing devastating air and sea power against all significant military targets in North Viet Nam...(making) ruthless aggression in South Viet Nam so costly for the enemy that the Hanoi leadership will join us at the peace table it now spurns."

Former President Eisenhower Aug. 19 and 20 said he fully supported President Johnson's South Viet Nam policies. 'When it comes to the current job, we must follow the President," he said.

The House Republican Committee on Planning and Research Aug. 24 issued a "White Paper" charging that U.S. involvement in South Viet Nam dated from a May 1950 decision by the Truman Administration to aid the French forces fighting there. The report also said that there "was no crisis in South Viet Nam when President Eisenhower" left office in January 1961. The report said: "The nation by the President's admission is now engaged in war. All Americans must support whatever action is needed to put a stop to Communist aggression and to make safe the freedom and independence of South Viet Nam."

Richard M. Nixon, former Vice President and 1960 Presidential candidate, Nov. 21 predicted that Viet Nam would be the major issue in the 1968 Presidential campaign if the Johnson Administration failed to "win the war...and to end it." He urged the Administration to "step up the air strikes on North Viet Nam military targets, after warning civilians off," and "cut off the flow of supplies into North Viet Nam." "The purpose of this," Nixon said, "is not to extend the war but to limit the war, to shorten it, and to reduce the casualties on the ground."

Gen. Curtis E. LeMay (ret.), former Air Force Chief of Staff, in an Oct. 21 address to the National Aeronautics Assn. in Washington, D.C., said that the United States was doing "too little too late" in Viet Nam and that "we're getting people killed who shouldn't be killed." LeMay said the "wrong targets" were being hit, and Hanoi "was not getting the message." He stated that it was time to stop "pecking around the edges" in raids on North Viet Nam and to start hitting "industries, ports, power plants and transportation" whose destruction would "really hurt" the Hanoi regime. He specifically excluded Hanoi as a possible target. Referring to the air strikes in general, LeMay added, "We're getting around to doing what we should have done three years ago. We're doing some of those things the defeated Republican candidate for the Presidency (Barry Goldwater) -- and an Air Force officer -- recommended."

The Republican Coordinating Committee, composed of Congressional and national GOP leaders, Dec. 13 met to discuss party policy and was critical of the Johnson Administration's conduct of the war in Viet Nam. The committee said there was a "growing danger that the United States is becoming involved in an endless, Korean-type jungle war. A land war in Southeast Asia would be to the advantage of the Communists. Since it appears that the major portion of North Vietnamese military supplies arrive by sea, our first objective should be to impose a Kennedy-type quarantine on North Viet Nam." The statement criticized the Johnson Administration for "conflicting and repeatedly over-optimistic statements" about the progress of the war.

Rep. Ford told a news conference that the stepped-up use of American air power would not include bombing of such North Vietnamese population centers as Hanoi. Sen. Dirksen said, "We don't quarrel about being in Viet Nam, but we have been there too long without getting decisive results."

Citizen Protests. A variety of dramatic protests, both for and against U.S. actions in Viet Nam, were voiced by citizen's groups and private individuals, especially college students. Public actions ranged from mass-demonstrations, teach-ins and self-immolation, to public statements and letters to the President. Many of the groups that had taken part in civil rights demonstrations also protested the war in Viet Nam.

In reaction to the decision to bomb North Viet Nam, a wave of protest grew on U.S. campuses and in the academic community. The first large "teach-in" to protest U.S. policy occurred March 24 at the University of Michigan; it consisted of a 12-hour series of rallies, speeches and seminars. The teach-in quickly became popular at other campuses during April. In response to criticism, academic sponsors tried more and more to include representatives of the Administration's views. The movement reached its high-point at a 15-1/2-hour televised teach-in in Washington, D.C., May 16. Special Assistant to the President McGeorge Bundy, who was to be the chief Government spokesman, canceled his appearance at the last minute because of "other duties" (which later turned out to be a special mission to the Dominican Republic). Bundy later appeared at a June 21 campus forum on Viet Nam.

Both the Friends Committee on National Legislation and Americans for Democratic Action in July called for an end to the conflict in Viet Nam, a cease-fire and effective negotiations for peace.

Civil rights leader Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Sept. 10 submitted to Arthur J. Goldberg, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, a four-point proposal for bringing about a settlement of the Viet Nam conflict. The proposals called for giving Communist China a seat in the United Nations, a statement by the United States of willingness to negotiate unconditionally with the Viet Cong, a reorientation of U.S. foreign policy and halt in American air strikes on North Viet Nam.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, Sept. 6 denounced those Americans who wanted to withdraw from Viet Nam without understanding what might come from such action. "For America to surrender, to withdraw, to abandon its solemn commitment in South Viet Nam would be the first step toward a world holocaust," he said.

Demonstrations protesting U.S. military involvement in Viet Nam flared Oct. 15,16 and 17 across the nation and abroad. In the United States, an estimated 70,000 people participated in marches and rallies in over 60 cities and towns, with the largest demonstrations occurring in New York City (10,000 protestors) and Berkeley, Calif.

The nationwide protest was allegedly organized by the National Coordinating Committee to End the War in Viet Nam, headquartered in Madison, Wis. The majority of demonstrators were of college age and represented an amalgam of civil rights, peace, religious and political organizations. Except for a few incidents involving marchers and counter-demonstrators or hecklers, the marches were relatively peaceful.

A nationwide movement protesting the military draft was a major part of the weekend demonstrations. (See story on draft, p. 689)

Campaigns pledging support of U.S. involvement in the Viet Nam war and reassuring soldiers overseas of home-front loyalty grew across the country in the week following the October anti-war demonstrations. Campus groups, veterans organizations, unions and civic clubs held parades, rallies, information programs and sponsored blood donations and gifts to combat units overseas as a show of support.

A critic of the U.S. war effort in Viet Nam, Norman R. Morrison, 31, of Baltimore, Md., Nov. 2 chose a more violent form of demonstration when he burned himself to death at the river entrance of the Pentagon, within view of Defense Secretary McNamara's third-floor office. Morrison put down his 18-month-old daughter as he burned. She was unharmed. Morrison was executive secretary of the Stony Run (Friends) Meeting in Baltimore.

An estimated 20,000 demonstrators Nov. 27 joined in a non-violent "March on Washington for Peace in Viet Nam." The protesters gathered at the White House bearing placards demanding a U.S. cease-fire. Unlike the October demonstrations, few marchers demanded immediate U.S. withdrawal from Viet Nam.

On the grounds of the Washington Monument the marchers heard appeals for negotiations from Socialist Party Honorary Chairman Norman Thomas, Rep. George Brown Jr. (D Calif.), Mrs. Martin Luther King Jr., Dr. Benjamin Spock and Ronnie Dugger, editor of the Texas Observer. The demonstration was coordinated by Sanford Gottlieb of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy. Other organizations participating included Youth Against War and Fascism, U.S. Committee to Aid the National Liberation Front of South Viet Nam, Americans for Democratic Action, Union of Hebrew Congregations, Methodist Board of Christian Social Concern and the National Student Assn.

SENATE FLOOR ACTION ON USSR CONSULAR TREATY HELD UP

Exec D -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 4) Aug. 3, 1965. (Part 2, minority views, issued Aug. 10, 1965.)

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee in 1965 held brief hearings and reported favorably on the Consular Convention between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics which President Johnson in 1964 sent to the Senate for ratification (Exec D, 88th Congress, 2nd Session -- Exec Rept 4). The Administration, however, doubting that the treaty would receive the necessary two-thirds majority vote, postponed floor action on it.

The Consular Convention provided procedures for the establishment and operation of consulates in each country and defined the functions and privileges of consular officers. The Convention did not itself authorize the opening of consulates or specify how many there might be; it merely provided the legal framework for their operation should they be opened.

The treaty met heavy opposition by conservative Republicans and Democrats, right-wing groups and Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation J. Edgar Hoover which led Democratic leaders to abandon plans to seek Senate approval in 1965. (The treaty has no time limit for ratification.) The major charge was that provisions granting diplomatic immunity to all consular officers would encourage Soviet espionage in the United States.

BACKGROUND -- The Consular Convention was signed formally at Moscow on June 1, 1964, and President Johnson sent the treaty to the Senate June 12, 1964, for approval. No hearings were held on it in 1964, reportedly because the Johnson Administration feared that the Convention might become an issue during the election campaign.

For description and provisions of the treaty, see 1964 Almanac p. 333.

Unusual Provisions. The Convention followed the provisions of other U.S. bilateral consular conventions except that it contained certain distinctive provisions regarding notification (within three days) and access (within four days) in the case of citizens arrested or detained in either state, and also provided full diplomatic immunity for consular officers and employees.

The provisions on notification and access were considered an unprecedented commitment for the Soviet Union to make. Usually the Soviet Government has refused access to arrested persons until after the conclusion of an investigating procedure which can extend for as long as nine months under Soviet law.

The Convention included provisions designed to protect against abuse of the diplomatic immunity from arrest and against subversion. These specified the right of one state to declare consular officers persona non grata and consular employees unacceptable; required that those enjoying immunity respect the laws and regulations of the receiving state, including traffic regulations; made all nominees for consular assignments subject to advance screening and to controls currently applied to embassy personnel, including travel restrictions. As a final protection the treaty might be terminated by either state on six months' notice.

1965 Action

COMMITTEE -- Senate Foreign Relations.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 12 in executive session with testimony from State Department officials and July 30 a public hearing at which Secretary of State Dean Rusk and State Department Legal Adviser Leonard C. Meeker testified. No other witnesses were heard.

TESTIMONY -- July 30 -- Dean Rusk: "The Convention's provisions on notification and access have particular significance. These clauses should improve markedly the ability of the Department of State to protect and assist the thousands of Americans who now visit the U.S.S.R. as tourists or on business or under the exchange program."

COMMITTEE ACTION

The Foreign Relations Committee Aug. 3 reported the treaty favorably (Exec Rept 4). Minority views by five Senators were filed Aug. 10 (Exec Rept 4, Part 2).

Majority Views. The report said that the "Committee believes that the convention will afford significant and necessary protection to American travelers in the Soviet Union.... The Committee is persuaded that the convention contains adequate measures to guard against any increased danger of subversion. In this connection, Secretary Rusk assured the Committee that ratification would in no way represent a change in our policy of not recognizing the forcible incorporation of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia into the Soviet Union."

Minority Views. In a minority report, Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), John J. Williams (R Del.) and Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) said they believed "that the extension of immunity to include felonies would open the way to espionage and other forms of subversion on the part of Soviet consular personnel," as they would know that they would not be liable to prosecution but only to expulsion. The report cited the testimony of J. Edgar Hoover before a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee on March 4, 1965, which opposed the establishment of Soviet consulates in "many parts of the country." Hoover said, "One Soviet intelligence officer in commenting on the agreement spoke of the wonderful opportunity this presented his service and that it would enable the Soviets to enhance their intelligence operations."

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) submitted individual views opposing the treaty. Dodd particularly felt that it should not be ratified while the Soviets were aiding North Vietnamese aggression.

Pressures Against Treaty. Groups opposed to the treaty included the Liberty Lobby, which was the most active in mobilizing public pressure on Senators, the American Legion and Young Americans for Freedom. Sen. Stephen M. Young (D Ohio) Aug. 17 said he had received a "tremendous volume" of mail from constituents who were "misinformed" by pamphlets put out by "right-wing extremists" opposing the treaty. The Liberty Lobby protested that no private organizations or citizens were invited to testify on the treaty at the brief hearings.

On Aug. 18 Senate leaders unofficially acknowledged that the treaty would not be brought up for debate. They cited J. Edgar Hoover's testimony as the greatest obstacle to ratification.

NATIONAL QUOTAS FOR IMMIGRATION TO END

HR 2580 -- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 745) Aug. 6, 1965.

- Passed, amended, by the House on a 318-95 roll-call vote Aug. 25. (See p. 992)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 748) Sept. 15.
- Passed by the Senate on a 76-18 roll-call vote Sept. 22. (See p. 1074)
- Conference report (H Rept 1101) agreed to Sept. 30 by a 320-69 roll-call vote of the House and by voice vote of the Senate. (See p. 1012)

PL 89-236 -- Signed into law Oct. 3.

A 40-year campaign by minority groups for reform of the federal immigration laws ended Oct. 3, when President Johnson signed into law an Administration-backed bill (HR 2580) eliminating the national origins quota system as the basis of immigration to the United States by persons born outside the Western Hemisphere. The change had been sought by every President since Harry S. Truman. (For lobbying campaign on bill, see p. 480)

The new law abolished the existing system of country-by-country quotas which had fixed a legal maximum of about 158,000 persons who could enter annually on a quota basis from non-Western Hemisphere areas, and which, by assigning over two-thirds of all the quota numbers to Britain, Ireland and Germany, had sharply limited immigration from Southern Europe, Asia and Africa.

In place of the country-by-country quotas, HR 2580 provided that, with a few exceptions, total immigration from non-Western Hemisphere areas should be limited to 170,000 persons a year -- to be selected from all non-Western Hemisphere areas at random, on the basis of personal qualities like possession of special labor skills, family relationship to U. S. citizens and residents, or the need for political or other asylum. An applicant's country of national origin would be considered only to the extent that no more than 20,000 of the 170,000 could come in from any one country.

Although it relaxed the curbs on immigration which the national origins quota system had applied to applicants from Southern Europe, Asia and Africa, HR 2580 strengthened limitations on immigration from Western Hemisphere nations. The bill imposed for the first time a limit of 120,000 persons a year who could immigrate to the United States from the independent and self-governing nations of the Western Hemisphere. Previously, there were no numerical limits for such Western Hemisphere countries, except for Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago.

The Johnson Administration opposed the 120,000 Western Hemisphere limit (which was to go into effect in 1968). It argued that the existing no-maximum policy was justified by mutuality of interests between the United States and other Hemisphere nations, by "good neighbor" attitudes and by the "special relationship" between the United States and other Western Hemisphere countries. But the Administration finally accepted the Western Hemisphere limitation as the price of getting the national origins quota system repealed. The new limitation was backed by the American Legion, American Coalition of Patriotic Societies and others fearing a further upsurge of Western Hemisphere immigration into the United States, which reached 139,284 persons in fiscal 1964 including spouses and children.

After the provisions of HR 2580 went fully into effect in July 1968, there would be only three general categories of regular permissible immigrants: 120,000 persons a year from the Western Hemisphere; 170,000 annually from the rest of the world; and an estimated 30,000 to 40,000 immediate relatives of U. S. citizens (plus ministers and other small groups) who, under the law, could enter without regard to the above numerical limitations. In addition, under certain "parole" provisions of the basic Immigration and Nationality Act (Section 212d5), the Attorney General could allow individuals temporarily into the United States and then adjust their status to that of immigrants. The House and Senate Judiciary Committees said in their reports on HR 2580 that these "parole" provisions were intended only for isolated individual emergency cases, such as an alien requiring immediate medical attention, and that therefore only a handful of persons would become immigrants under this parole procedure. (There were some who believed, however, that the parole provisions could legally be used to bring in larger groups under emergency conditions. See section on Cuban refugees at end of this story.)

It should be noted that the 120,000 and 170,000 limitations, and nearly all the other provisions of HR 2580, applied only to immigrants -- persons seeking to enter the country permanently, normally with the intention of becoming a citizen eventually. They did not apply to temporary visitors such as tourists and persons entering for temporary business, work or study purposes.

DETAILS OF MAJOR CHANGES

Previous Law. The national origins quota system was started in rudimentary form in the 1921 Quota Act and was revised and continued in the 1924 Immigration Act and the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act. It imposed country-by-country quotas to control immigration to the United States annually from all countries of the world outside the Western Hemisphere. After the 1924 amendments, when the system received its basic long-term form, each country's quota was based on the number of persons of that national origin who were in the United States in 1920.

Because the ethnic composition of the nation in 1920 was primarily British, Irish and German, use of the 1920 national origins basis in assignment of country-by-country quotas heavily favored immigration to the United States of persons born in the British Isles, Ireland and Germany, while sharply limiting immigration from the rest of Europe, Asia and Africa. Quotas for all countries combined totalled 158,503 in fiscal 1965, and of these, 108,931 (70 percent) were for three countries -- Great Britain and Northern Ireland (65,361), Germany (25,814) and the Republic of Ireland (17,756). The rest of Europe received only 40,483 quota numbers; and all the countries of Asia, Africa and Oceania combined had quotas totalling only 9,089. Most of the Asian and African nations had quotas of only 100 persons a year.

Under the law, prior to the 1965 amendments, an individual was required to seek entry to the United States under the quota of his country of birth, regardless of his country of citizenship or residence. The only exception to this rule involved persons of non-white

Asian ancestry. Such persons, if born outside the non-white Asian nations, were required to seek entry under the quota of their country of racial ancestry, regardless of their country of birth, citizenship or residence.

The scope of the national origins quota system was not absolute. The system did not apply to the Western Hemisphere. With a few minor exceptions, persons born in the Western Hemisphere countries could enter the United States for immigration on a non-quota basis, with no over-all limit placed on the number of immigrants from those countries.

Moreover, the rigidities of the national origins quota system had led to the creation of certain special categories of immigrants who, even if born in non-Western Hemisphere countries, could enter on a non-quota basis. These were (1) husbands, wives and minor unmarried children of U. S. citizens (but not adult or married children), plus certain other very small groups of persons such as ministers and former U. S. citizens; (2) refugees of various types, who received special permission to enter on a non-quota basis in a series of laws passed in the post-World War II era. (See box p. 460 for breakdown of these laws.) In addition, there existed certain minor entry provisions, such as the parole provision described earlier.

Criticism of System. Many of the initial sponsors and later defenders of the national origins quota system contended it was a desirable method of limiting immigration because, they argued, natives of Britain, Ireland and Germany were most like Americans in their cultural or racial characteristics and therefore could most easily assimilate into American life.

But opponents of the national origins quota system contended it was based on false notions of the racial superiority of white Northern Europeans--notions which, they claimed, were both incorrect and grossly insulting to U. S. citizens and residents of non-Northern European stock and to the countries of Southern Europe, Asia and Africa. Critics also pointed out that the existing quota system had led to the wasting of substantial numbers of quotas each year. Countries like Italy, Greece, Portugal and Poland, had small quotas and long waiting lists of persons wishing to immigrate into the United States, while Britain, Germany and Ireland, which had the highest quotas, were failing to fill them. In fiscal 1965, for example, of the 108,931 quota numbers assigned to Britain and Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, and Germany, only 59,250 were used. The remaining unused quotas were not transferable to the natives of other countries with long waiting lists, and did not carry over to the next year.

Changes Made by HR 2580. In place of the immigration system described above, HR 2580 set up a new system, to become fully effective in mid-1968 after a three-year transition period. The new system provided:

(1) For non-Western Hemisphere countries, previously governed by the national origins quota system, the latter was abolished. Instead of country-by-country quotas, an over-all quota of 170,000 annual immigrants from outside the Western Hemisphere was to be permitted. Applicants would be accepted on the basis of certain conditions applying to them as individuals, and regardless of which specific non-Western Hemisphere nation they had been born in. Under this system, first preference for immigration (20 percent of the 170,000 total) was to be given to adult, unmarried children of U. S. citizens, in order to unite families. The remaining preferences would go to other categories of relatives of U. S. citizens and residents; to persons possessing special skills, or needed to fill labor shortages in the United States; and to displaced persons and refugees from political, religious and racial persecution. The final bill specified that of the 170,000 immigrants from countries outside the Western Hemisphere, no more than 20,000 could come from any one country.

(2) For the Western Hemisphere, an over-all limit of 120,000 immigrants a year from all independent and self-governing countries combined was to be established, to be filled on a personal first-come, first-served basis, without country-by-country quotas, preferences or limits on how many persons could enter from any one country (subject to the over-all 120,000 hemispheric limitation).

(3) The provisions of previous law which had permitted non-quota entry of husbands, wives and minor unmarried children of U. S. citizens, plus ministers and certain other special groups, were to remain in effect, and were even broadened to include parents of U. S. citizens. However, a distinction was now made between the immediate relatives as a group, on the one hand, and the ministers and others. Immediate relatives were to be subject neither to 170,000 non-Western Hemisphere limitation nor the 120,000 Western Hemisphere limitation; while the ministers and other special groups, while not subject to the 170,000 non-Western Hemisphere limitation, would be subject to the 120,000 Western Hemisphere maximum. A total of 30,000-40,000 immigrants annually was anticipated under these non-quota provisions.

(4) The provisions of previous law which had permitted non-quota entry of certain groups of refugees were repealed, since it was felt that refugees could be handled adequately under various provisions of the new law, particularly the one making them a special preference group for admission under the 170,000 non-Western Hemisphere quota. Most of the special refugee admission laws had already lapsed, and HR 2580 repealed the only remaining law specifically permitting further non-quota entry of refugees, the Fair Share Refugee Act of 1960, which had allowed refugees to enter under a "parole" system and then apply for an adjustment of their status to that of non-quota immigrants. Under HR 2580, persons already admitted under the 1960 law could still apply for adjustment of status, but no new entrants would be permitted under the 1960 provisions. (Note: While HR 2580 repealed the parole provisions of the 1960 Fair Share law, it did not repeal the parole provisions of Section 212d5 of the basic immigration law, which, as indicated earlier, were not aimed specifically at refugees but rather, according to the Judiciary Committees, at permitting emergency entry of a few individuals for such things as emergency medical treatment.)

(5) The provisions of previous law which attributed an individual to his country of birth, rather than his place of residence or citizenship (if different), were retained for certain purposes -- namely, to determine whether an individual was to be subject to the Western Hemisphere rules and regulations, or whether he was to be subject to the immigration provisos applying to the non-Western Hemisphere countries.

At the same time, the previous "Asia-Pacific triangle" provision under which non-white persons of Asian ancestry had been charged to the national quota of their racial ancestry rather than their country of birth, was repealed. Under this repealed provision, a person of Japanese ancestry, for example, even if he was born in England, was a citizen of England and had been resident there all his life, had been required to seek entry to the United States under the Japanese quota. Critics had called this an outright racial device, designed to exclude non-white persons of Asian ancestry by forcing them to seek entry under the tiny Asian quotas regardless of where they were born.

Henceforth, the birth rule was to be as follows: Persons born in independent and self-governing countries of the Western Hemisphere, such as Canada, Brazil, Chile, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, etc., were to be considered applicants from the Western Hemisphere, subject to the rules and regulations applying to such applicants -- even if they actually had moved to non-Western Hemisphere countries and taken citizenship there. Similarly, persons born in non-Western Hemisphere countries were to be considered applicants from outside the Western Hemisphere, subject to the rules and regulations applying to such applicants (and with racial ancestry now totally eliminated as a consideration) -- even if they had actually moved to the Western Hemisphere and become a citizen of some country there. The 20,000 limitation on annual immigration from any one country outside the Western Hemisphere (see provision 1, above) also would be determined by country of birth.

A lesser but nevertheless notable provision of HR 2580 strengthened safeguards in the existing immigration law designed to protect American workers against job competition from immigrants. The change was demanded by organized labor. (For details, see "Labor Requests" in hearings, p. 469.) The net effect of the changes in immigration law made by HR 2580 was to eliminate race and national origin as the major basis of preference for admission to the United States from non-Western Hemisphere nations by eliminating country-by-country quotas as well as the Asian-ancestry provisions. One immediate result was expected to be sharply increased immigration from Italy, Greece, Poland and Portugal and some other countries which previously had low quotas and long waiting lists.

Ultimate Effect on Immigration. By imposing a specific 120,000 annual limit on immigration by natives of the Western Hemisphere, HR 2580 closed off the possibility of a very substantial increase in future immigration from the one area on which there previously had been no numerical restrictions. In this sense, HR 2580 could be described as a bill which, while making immigration rules easier for certain categories of non-Western Hemisphere applicants, at the same time foreclosed any long-term upward trend in the number of immigrants.

Nevertheless, in the immediate future, total immigration was expected to rise slightly over current levels as a result of enactment of the bill, partly because there would no longer be many unused quotas, if any. Under the new system installed by HR 2580, maximum immigration each year once all provisions were in effect would be 120,000 from the Western Hemisphere, 170,000 from non-Western Hemisphere areas, and another 30,000 to 40,000 (possibly somewhat higher later on) from the non-quota group consisting of immediate relatives of U. S. citizens, ministers and other very minor categories -- a grand total of about 330,000.

By comparison, under the old system, fiscal 1964 immigration totalled 139,000 from the Western Hemisphere; 103,000 from non-Western Hemisphere areas subject to country-by-country quotas; 39,000 non-quota immediate relatives, ministers and related groups; and 11,000 non-quota refugees (under the refugee provisions now abolished)--a grand total of 292,000.

LEGISLATIVE STRUGGLE

Final enactment of HR 2580 came at the end of a rocky legislative road, marked by acerbic relations between House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and House Judiciary Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee Chairman Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio); by substantial lobbying on the part of minority ethnic groups, religious groups and labor organizations in favor of the bill; and by substantial concessions to the American Legion, American Coalition of Patriotic Societies and certain other groups on a number of important points.

The principal concession made by the Administration was to agree to the imposition of the 120,000 annual ceiling on immigration from the independent countries of the Western Hemisphere. The ceiling was to go into effect July 1, 1968. This issue was the main point of controversy during consideration of HR 2580 in both the House and the Senate. The House first accepted, by a two-vote margin on a teller vote, and then rejected (reportedly after strong Administration pressure), by a 189-218 roll-call vote, an amendment sponsored by Rep. Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) setting a 115,000 annual limit on such immigration.

However, representations from two members of the Senate Judiciary Committee who supported the limitation and who were needed to move the bill through the key subcommittee, Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), led Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach to a reluctant agreement to drop the Administration fight against the limitation. As a result, a 120,000 limit for the Western Hemisphere was added under Ervin's sponsorship in the Senate, and was retained in the final version of the bill. As a concession to opponents of the limitation, a provision was also included for a study group to review the whole matter and report back to Congress before the effective date (1968) of the limitation, possibly with recommendations that Congress increase the 120,000 figure or repeal it altogether.

The Administration was also overruled on a few other points, in several cases in favor of proposals put forward by Rep. Feighan. The original Administration bill gave first preference for immigration from non-Western Hemisphere areas to applicants with special talents and needed skills, and second preference to family. The final bill reversed the two preferences, placing first emphasis on family relationships and second on skills. Congress also refused to grant the Administration an Immigration Board and to provide the President with discretion to reallocate certain quotas, as initially proposed.

HR 2580 did, however, contain the major Presidential request: repeal of the national origins quota system. The new law provided that the system would be phased out over a three-year period, beginning July 1, 1965, and ending June 30, 1968. During that period the quotas system would remain in effect and all unused quotas from the previous fiscal year would be placed in a quota pool and made available to qualified applicants from countries whose quotas were oversubscribed. On June 30, 1968, the national origins quota system would be abolished and the new system, described above, would go into effect.

Feighan-Celler Feud

During House consideration July 21 of the conference report on a bill (HR 8775) appropriating funds to Congress for fiscal 1966, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), chairman of Judiciary Subcommittee No. 1, which has jurisdiction over immigration matters, exchanged bitter words over Feighan's efforts to obtain funds to activate the Joint Committee on Immigration and Naturalization Policy, which had lain dormant for 14 years. Feighan was chairman of the Joint Committee.

The House June 8, in the legislative appropriations bill (HR 8775) for fiscal 1966, approved an appropriation of $120,000 for reactivation of the Joint Committee. Celler, however, testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee in opposition to the appropriation and the Senate reduced the amount for the Joint Committee to $24,100. The conference committee agreed to the Senate appropriation and the conference report was accepted by both houses.

Feighan July 9, in a letter, demanded that Celler resign from the Joint Committee because of the testimony he had given before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

In the July 21 exchange, Feighan accused Celler of "victimizing" the House and of trying to "strangle the purposes of the Joint Committee" and "prevent the Congress from establishing control over immigration policy."

Celler in reply accused Feighan of "pettifogging tactics." Celler said he had been willing to assign Feighan up to $100,000 of the $250,000 allowed to the Judiciary Committee by the House Administration Committee, but that Feighan had preferred to seek funds on his own authority. But, Celler said, "I am going to tell you that nobody is going to ride in front of me when I ride the horse of the Judiciary Committee." Celler said Feighan had proposed two unacceptable men for staff posts on the Joint Committee. He said the Justice Department submitted a "horrendous" report on one of the proposed staffmen, and asked, "How in thunder could I accept on the staff of the Judiciary Committee a man who had been so excoriated by the Department of Justice?"

Several lobbyists told CQ they believed one reason for Celler's attempt to block funds for the Joint Committee on Immigration and Nationality Policy was Celler's fear (shared by several pressure groups supporting the Administration bill) that Feighan might use the Joint Committee's studies as an excuse to delay action on an immigration bill until 1966 or beyond. Celler never made a public statement to this effect. (Another explanation, by a lobbyist critical of Feighan, was that Celler feared the Joint Committee would engage in a "witch-hunt" on immigration security risks.)

Reasons for 1965 Passage. Many of the immigration bill's most ardent supporters told Congressional Quarterly that they believed the public at large was not greatly interested in immigration reform or especially concerned about the national origins quota system. They attributed the success of the legislation in 1965, after many years of defeats for similar proposals in the past, to the following factors:

(1) The unusual parliamentary situation in Congress, where there were 2-1 Democratic majorities in each chamber that were generally responsive to President Johnson's wishes.

(2) Relatively strong support for the bill from the Johnson Administration -- partly from general conviction that the national origins quota system was invidiously discriminatory, partly from a desire to ease U. S. relations with nations receiving unfavorable treatment under the national origins quota system and partly from a desire to win or retain political support of minority groups which believed they would benefit from repeal of the national origins quota system -- particularly Italian-American groups.

(3) The presence as chairman of the House Judiciary Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee of Rep. Feighan, who was more favorable to repeal of the national origins quota system than was the previous Subcommittee chairman, the late Francis E. Walter (D Pa. 1933-63). Walter had blocked all previous efforts at revision.

(4) The willingness of the Administration and many of the ethnic, labor and religious groups supporting immigration reform to compromise on the over-all quota, family reunification and other provisions, and thus help neutralize past opponents such as the American Legion and American Coalition of Patriotic Societies. Acceptance of the 120,000 limit for the Western Hemisphere was the most important Administration concession.

(5) Changing U. S. attitudes toward race and national origins. Several lobbyists told CQ that the fear of an "invasion" by "undesirable" immigrant ethnic and racial groups simply was not as great as in the past.

Opponents of the initial Administration bill said the sole explanations for passage, in their opinion, were the huge Democratic majorities in Congress and the desire of the Johnson Administration to win political support for the Democrats from minority groups.

Congressional Maneuvers. Within Congress itself, there was little opposition to final passage of the bill, once the issue of an annual ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration had been settled. In both chambers a majority of voting Northern Democrats and Republicans supported the bill on passage, while a majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed it. The final bill, however, represented a blend of Administration requests with proposals embodied in a bill (HR 8662) introduced by Feighan; and some observers said Administration agreement to accept a number of Feighan's proposals helped neutralize opposition to an immigration bill.

Other factors operative in 1965, however, also affected the bill. Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and its Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee, had long opposed immigration reform. In 1964, Eastland's Subcommittee held four days of hearings on a Kennedy-Johnson Administration measure (S 1932), but did not report a bill. At the beginning of the 89th Congress in 1965, there was a vacancy on the Subcommittee as a result of the defeat in the 1964 elections of Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), a strong supporter of immigration reform. Appointment of an opponent of reform could have swung the Subcommittee balance, but Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), also an advocate of revision, was selected to fill the vacancy.

In the House, prospects for the passage of a reform measure had been improved by the revision of the Judiciary Committee ratio from 21 Democrats and 14 Republicans to 24 Democrats and 11 Republicans, and by an increase in Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee membership from five to nine members at the beginning of 1965 -- changes which appeared designed to provide a clear majority for the basic Administration proposals. The liberalization of House rules to avoid bottlenecks in the Rules Committee also aided passage, as did Feighan's succession, in place of former Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), as chairman of the Subcommittee in 1963. Although Feighan had opposed the 1964 Kennedy-Johnson immigration bills (HR 7700--S 1932), he had, since 1957, introduced legislation to reallocate unused quotas on a basis other than race or nationality. Feighan in 1965 said this was an attempt to find a way to replace the national origins quota system. In 1964, Feighan had also scheduled hearings on a basic revision of the immigration system, the first such hearings held in the House Subcommittee in 12 years.

Despite the fact that Feighan appeared to be more favorable to reform than Walter had been, the prospects for a major revision of immigration policy were clouded for a time by a dispute between Feighan and House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), who had long been one of the most ardent supporters of immigration law reform in Congress, and who was the actual sponsor of the initial version of HR 2580. The Celler-Feighan dispute erupted publicly in 1964 over the appropriation of funds to activate and staff the Joint Committee on Immigration and Nationality Policy, which was created by the McCarran-Walter Act but never met until July 1963. Feighan, who expected to head the Joint Committee, favored the appropriation, but Celler opposed activation, declaring that the Joint Committee would lack legislative authority and that immigration studies could best be handled in the Subcommittee. Staffing funds were denied in 1964 and again in 1965, although in 1965 the House provided the funds, only to have them reduced by the Senate at Celler's request. (See box, p. 463; 1964 Almanac p. 203; and story on 1965 Legislative Branch funds, p. 221)

In the end, Feighan backed the Administration bill with revisions based on his own proposals; agreed not to insist on a Western Hemisphere limitation during House action, even though he personally favored it; and helped to persuade the American Legion and American Coalition of Patriotic Societies not to take a position of all-out opposition to the bill.

As signed by the President, HR 2580:

Established a limit of 170,000 persons who may enter the United States annually as immigrants (or may have their temporary status in the United States adjusted to permanent or may conditionally enter as refugees), exclusive of "immediate relatives," immigrants from independent nations of the Western Hemisphere (and other "special immigrants" -- see below). Specified that no more than 45,000 visas could be issued in any of the first three quarters of any fiscal year.

Defined "immediate relatives" as minor unmarried children, spouses and parents of a U.S. citizen (providing, in the case of parents, the citizen is over 21 years of age). Permitted these persons to enter without numerical limitation. (Children over 21 or married were subject to the 170,000 limitation, but received a preference for admission. See below.)

Provided a three-year (July 1, 1965-June 30, 1968), phase-out of the national origins quota system during which quotas for each country would remain in effect as they were on June 30, 1965. Provided that during the three-year period, unused quotas would be transferred to a "pool" and made available to immigrants who could not obtain permission to enter because of a nation's oversubscribed quota. (For fiscal 1966, 55,611 -- the number of visas unused under the quota system during fiscal 1965 -- would be available from the "pool.") Provided that quota numbers in the "pool" shall be allocated on the basis of the preference percentages established by the bill (see below). Specified that the number of immigrants allowed entrance from "pool" quota numbers and the national origins quota system during the three-year period would not exceed 170,000 per fiscal year.

Terminated the national origins quota system and the "pool" as of June 30, 1968.

Limited each country outside the Western Hemisphere to 20,000 immigrants per fiscal year, exclusive of "immediate relatives" of U. S. citizens, effective July 1, 1968. Specified that each independent country, self-governing dominion, mandated territory and territory under the U. N. trusteeship system would be considered a separate foreign state for the purpose of applying the 20,000 limitation. Specified that other foreign lands (i. e., colonies of various countries) would be charged to the foreign country specified by the Secretary of State.

Repealed the Asia-Pacific triangle provision of existing law which required that an Asian person be charged to the quota of the country of his ancestry even though he was born outside of the triangle area (stretching from Pakistan and India to Japan and the Pacific islands).

For the purpose of the 20,000 numerical limitation in the bill, charged an immigrant to the foreign country of his birth, with the following exceptions (which also appeared in existing law): (1) permitted a child, born in a country other than that of his parents, to be charged to the state of birth of one or both of his parents to prevent separation of the child from his accompanying parent or parents; (2) permitted an applicant to be charged to his accompanying spouse's country of birth to avoid separation; (3) permitted an alien born in the United States to be charged to the country of his citizenship or, if none, the country of his last residence; (4) permitted an alien born in a foreign country in which neither parent was born or resided at the time of his birth, to be charged to the country of either parent. Charged an alien born in a colony or dependent area of a foreign state to the foreign state, with the proviso that no colony or dependent area could receive more than 1 percent of the immigrant visas permitted the foreign state.

Allotted the 170,000 annual immigration ceiling according to the following order of preference ("preference classes") and percentages:

1) 20 percent (of 170,000) for unmarried adult sons and daughters of U. S. citizens;

2) 20 percent plus all numbers left from class one for spouses and unmarried sons and daughters of aliens lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence;

3) 10 percent for members of the professions or those having special talents or education;

4) 10 percent plus unused numbers from classes one through three for married sons and daughters of U. S. citizens;

5) 24 percent plus unused numbers from classes one through four for brothers and sisters of U. S. citizens;

6) 10 percent for skilled or unskilled laborers who could fill a specified labor need in the United States (but not temporary or seasonal work);

7) 6 percent to refugees who because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of their race, religion, or political opinions have fled from a Communist or Communist-dominated country or from the Middle East area and cannot return to their country or who have been uprooted by a catastrophic natural calamity. The Attorney General was authorized to make conditional entry available for these refugees. Stipulated that up to half of this number could be used as immigrant visas for aliens who had been in the United States for two years or more and had applied for adjustment of status.

8) Provided that all unused numbers from the 170,000 limit would then be distributed on a first-come, first-served basis to qualified immigrants.

Provided that all immigrants would be considered non-preference until they proved otherwise.

Permitted the Secretary of State to terminate registration of an alien who fails to show a continued interest in emigrating to the United States and authorized the Secretary to estimate the expected number of visas to be issued in each category during each fiscal quarter.

Required the Attorney General to report to Congress twice a year (January and June 15) on each alien admitted conditionally. Required an alien admitted conditionally who did not acquire permanent residence status within two years to return to the Immigration and Naturalization Service which would investigate and specify the action to be taken.

Defined "special immigrants" as persons born in an independent foreign country of the Western Hemisphere or in the Canal Zone, returning resident aliens, certain former citizens of the United States, ministers of religion and certain foreign employees of the U.S. Government.

Defined "profession" as including but not limited to architects, engineers, lawyers, physicians, surgeons and teachers.

Required a prospective immigrant to possess (1) a valid, unexpired visa or be born to parent subsequent to parent's receiving one and (2) a valid, unexpired passport or similar travel document.

Provided that before an immigrant could enter the United States to perform skilled or unskilled labor, the Secretary of Labor must determine that there were not sufficient U. S. workers to perform the work at the required location and that the employment of such immigrant would not adversely affect the wages and conditions of U. S. workers. Applied this requirement to immigrants from the Western Hemisphere (other than spouses, parents and children of U. S. citizens and residents) intending to seek jobs in the United States; to immigrants from other areas entering the United States under the preferences for skilled or other labor (categories 3 and 6, above), and to non-preference quota immigrants (category 8, above).

Allowed alien crewmen to adjust their status to that of a lawful permanent resident, if the crewmen entered the United States prior to June 30, 1964.

Prohibited nationals of "adjacent islands" in the Western Hemisphere (such as the colonies of Great Britain, France and the Netherlands) and the nationals of independent Western Hemisphere countries from entering the United States as non-immigrants (e. g., as a visitor or parolee) and then applying for adjustment of status to that of aliens lawfully admitted for immigration.

Eliminated epilepsy and feeble-mindedness in the 1952 Act as grounds for exclusion, but added sexual deviation and mental retardation instead.

Permitted the granting of a waiver of exclusion to permit entrance into the United States of unmarried children, minor unmarried lawfully adopted children, and parents of U. S. citizens or permanent resident aliens who would otherwise be excludable because of a past history of mental illness, if the Surgeon General finds that the person has been free of such illness for a time sufficient to indicate recovery.

Permitted the adjustment of status of those who entered the United States illegally prior to June 30, 1948, to that of lawfully admitted aliens.

Repealed the Fair Share Refugee Act (a 1960 statute permitting refugees to enter the United States as non-quota immigrants and then apply for an adjustment of status) with the exception of the sections which permitted adjustment of status for those refugees who already were admitted.

Made the Act effective the first day of the first month after the expiration of 30 days following enactment (Dec. 1, 1965).

Set an annual ceiling of 120,000 immigrants from independent countries of the Western Hemisphere and wholly self-governing countries of the Western Hemisphere (such as Canada), effective July 1, 1968. Established a Select Commission on Western Hemisphere Immigration to study such immigration and its effects on U. S. population and unemployment. Provided that the Commission was to be composed of 15 members -- five appointed by the President (including the chairman), five by the Vice President and five by the Speaker of the House, with no more than three of the members named by the Vice President or Speaker to come from the same political party. Required the Commission to report to Congress by July 1, 1967, and Jan. 15, 1968.

Directed the Commission to study, among other things, the future legal status of Cuban refugees admitted into the United States under the parole provisions of the basic immigration law, or other provisions. (Under certain provisions of HR 2580 which restated and broadened existing law--see provision above, beginning "Prohibited nationals of 'adjacent islands' in the Western Hemisphere" -- a Western Hemisphere native paroled into the U. S. could not have his status adjusted to that of an alien lawfully admitted for immigration without leaving the country and reapplying for admission as an immigrant. Therefore, Cuban refugees, escaping into the U. S. and being admitted under the parole provisions of the basic law, would need some new Congressional action, or reinterpretation of some existing provisions of the law, in order to remain in the U. S. permanently without first leaving the country and reapplying.)

Provided that non-self-governing and non-independent areas of the Western Hemisphere (e. g. -- colonies) would be considered as dependencies of the mother country, subject to certain special rules for such colonies as explained above. (See paragraphs of provisions, above, beginning "Limited each country outside" and "For the purpose of the 20,000 numerical limitation.")

Pre-1952 Laws. In the early years of the nation, immigration was encouraged by the national Government. But the great increase in immigration from Europe after the wars, revolutions and famines from 1830 to 1850, gave rise to anti-foreign agitation.

Congress first passed restrictive legislation in 1875, prohibiting the immigration of convicts, the importation of women for immoral purposes and the transportation of Chinese or Japanese without their free consent. In 1882, paupers and criminals were excluded, and a 50-cent head-tax was levied on each immigrant to defray costs of administering the restrictions. The same year a 10-year ban on immigration from China was put into effect, and Chinese were barred from citizenship. This ban was later extended and was made permanent in 1904.

Immigration of contract labor (future wages pledged to pay for transportation to the United States) was forbidden in 1885. In 1891, a comprehensive qualitative exclusion act was passed, forbidding entry of mentally, morally or physically undesirable persons.

In 1903, existing law was codified, further classes of undesirables were specified, including anarchists or persons who believed in or advocated the overthrow of the U. S. Government by force or violence. Enforcement provisions were strengthened, provision was made for deportation, and the head-tax was raised to $2. In 1907, the tax was raised to $4, and the President was given authority to control immigration by treaty -- a power designed to control Japanese immigration.

In 1917 the laws were again codified in a new basic statute containing existing restrictions and adding new ones. This law excluded persons of Asiatic ancestry.

The first quota law was passed in 1921. It limited the number of any nationality entering the United States to 3 percent of foreign-born persons of that origin living in the United States in 1910. This permitted entry of about 350,000 persons a year, mostly from northern and western Europe. When the 1921 law came up for renewal in 1924, the House Immigration Committee proposed a limit of 2 percent of the foreign-born persons in the United States in 1890, which would have further restricted immigration from southern and eastern Europe. There was, however, strong opposition to extension of the system. A substitute was proposed which would base the quota on the "national origins" of all people comprising the U. S. population in 1920 rather than on the number of foreign-born persons in the United States in that year or in 1910 or 1890. The substitute was defeated in the House, but retained in the Senate and in conference.

The 1924 law provided quotas for all areas outside the Western Hemisphere, assigning a minimum of 100 to those which, under the formula, would have less. Asiatic countries each had a quota of 100 available only to "white" persons coming from those areas; thus the Asiatic exclusion features of the 1917 law were retained.

In 1943 the provisions excluding Chinese were repealed, and a separate quota of 105 for Chinese persons was set up. When the Philippines attained independence in 1946 they were given a quota of 100, and exclusion of "races indigenous" to India was repealed.

Naturalization laws were codified in the Nationality Act of 1940 but 31 amendments were added in the next 11 years.

McCarran-Walter Act. The McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act, passed over President Truman's veto in 1952, revised the immigration law to abolish the Asiatic exclusion as such, but imposed a ceiling of 2,000 on annual immigration from the "Asia-Pacific Triangle," extending from India and Pakistan east to China, Japan and most of the Pacific islands except Australia and New Zealand. If born outside the triangle, persons of half or more non-white Asian ancestry were required to seek entry under the quota of their country of ancestry. Except for the above limitation, the 1952 law retained the national origins quota system which allotted annual quotas to countries outside the Western Hemisphere equal to one-sixth of 1 percent of the persons of that national origin in the United States in 1920. New nations coming into existence were to be allotted annual quotas of 100. Non-quota status would be applied to all persons born in the Western Hemisphere; to the spouses and minor unmarried children of U. S. citizens; to ministers, former foreign employees of the U. S. Government; and former citizens. The law prohibited transferral of quota numbers from one country to another and also prohibited carrying unused quotas over from year to year. The law provided that individuals in any country, applying for admission to the United States under that country's quota, should receive preference over other applicants from the same country if they had special labor skills valuable to the United States or if they were relatives of U. S. citizens and residents.

Originally, the country-by-country quotas set by the 1952 Act for immigration from non-Western Hemisphere countries totalled 154,657 (approximately the same number as permitted under the 1924 Act), but after 1952 a number of new countries came into existence and the over-all quota rose to 158,503 by fiscal 1956.

Opposition to the McCarran-Walter Act, which focused on the national origins quota system, arose almost immediately. Critics charged that it was unduly discriminatory and harmful to the U. S. image overseas. They pointed out that place of birth was a poor criteria for admissibility of immigrants and that the quota system was heavily balanced in favor of immigrants from northern and western Europe at the expense of countries in southern and eastern Europe, Africa, the Middle East and Asia. (Great Britain and Germany, for example, had quotas of 65,361 and 25,814, respectively, in 1965, while Italy had 5,666, Turkey, 225 and India, 100.)

As time passed, critics claimed that (1) the national origins quota system was so rigid that it had been necessary to pass numerous special refugee laws from 1948-64 in order to afford asylum to several hundred thousand refugees and displaced persons; (2) that the system discriminated against the countries which became independent after 1952, particularly the newly independent African and Asian nations and the recently independent Western Hemisphere countries of Jamaica and Trinidad-Tobago which had annual immigration quotas of 100, unlike other Western Hemisphere nations which had non-quota status; (3) that the great number of bills introduced after 1952 to relax quota restrictions for certain classes of immirants such as Hungarian and Chinese refugees and the large number of private relief bills introduced each session were evidence that the Act was inflexible and incapable of meeting changing conditions; (4) that the entire national origins basis of the system, plus the Asia-Pacific triangle provisions, were based on false notions of white European "nordic" racial superiority, and were designed to exclude members of other groups; (5) that a large portion of the quotas for the northern and western European countries (such as Great Britain and Germany) were regularly unused, while annual quotas for countries in southern and eastern Europe and other continents were oversubscribed. Assistant Attorney General Norbert A. Schlei, for example, in March 5, 1965, Senate hearings, pointed out that on Feb. 1, 1965, Italy had the longest waiting list of applicants, 249,583 persons (quota 5,666); Greece was next with 98,385 (quota 308), Poland third with 80,481 (quota 6,488), and Portugal fourth with 71,477 (quota 438). And, Mike Masaoka of the Japanese-American Citizens League June 4 pointed out that Japan's waiting list was "backlogged through 1990." (For chart on quotas, pending applications, etc., see 1964 Almanac p. 325.)

After McCarran-Walter. President Eisenhower, in his 1953 State of the Union address, noted that the McCarran-Walter Act "does, in fact, discriminate", and he asked Congress to write an immigration law which would "at one and the same time guard our legitimate national interests and be faithful to our basic idea of freedom and fairness to all." In 1953, a Refugee Relief Act, under which 189,021 persons entered on a non-quota basis from 1953-64 was passed. But basic reform failed to evolve. (For list of special refugee laws, see chart p. 460)

Mr. Eisenhower, in his 1956 State of the Union address, cited the "urgent need" for revision of the immigration system. Although he did not directly challenge the national origins system, the proposals he sent to Congress would have altered it drastically. Again, however, despite continued Presidential requests for revision, Congress failed to act.

During the 1960 Presidential campaign, Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) who, as House Member in 1952 had voted to uphold the Truman veto of the McCarran-Walter Act, endorsed proposals similar to those advanced by Mr. Eisenhower in 1956 and later, but he said the country should also "look beyond, to the abolition of the national origins system and its replacement with a more equitable method of regulating the inflow of immigration." Mr. Kennedy did not, however, send a comprehensive revision proposal to Congress until 1963. In 1961, however, Congress removed the 2,000 limit on immigration from the Asia-Pacific triangle area.

The 1963 Kennedy Administration bill (S 1932) was co-sponsored in July 1963 by 27 Senators, including Sens. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and Claiborne Pell (D R.I.), each of whom had introduced his own omnibus immigration bill. In the House, 55 bills identical to the Administration measure (HR 7700) were introduced, but another 38 different bills also were presented.

In the 88th Congress, there was general feeling in both chambers that some revision of the McCarran-Walter Act was needed, but the Administration bill had much stronger support in the Senate than in the House. While most Congressmen were wearied by the large number of private immigration relief bills introduced each session, many would not support any substantial revision and others did not feel sufficient pressure in support of such legislation from their own districts. In both chambers, however, there was opposition to any large increase in total U. S. immigration. In addition, the immigration legislation was not given as high a priority by the Administration as, for example, the poverty program or civil rights. The bill received no attention in either chamber in 1963.

In 1964, President Johnson gave high priority to passage of the immigration reform bill, urging, in his State of the Union address, revisions which would lift "the bars of discrimination" against immigrants, "particularly those with much-needed skills and those joining their families." Hearings were held on the bill in both houses, but no further action was taken.

Outside Congress, the immigration bill was discussed during the 1964 Presidential campaign, but there did not appear to be any major public interest in the issue. Democratic National Chairman John. M. Bailey April 5, 1965, however, credited Republican opposition to amending the immigration laws as the reason for Mr. Johnson's making a stronger showing than Mr. Kennedy among Spanish, Italian and Polish wards. Johnson won 75 percent of the vote in 69 Italian wards, compared with 67 percent for Kennedy in 1960; 74 percent in 55 Polish wards, compared with 68 percent for Kennedy; and 72 percent in 47 Spanish wards, compared with 63 for Kennedy.

1965 Proposals. In his Jan. 4, 1965, State of the Union message, President Johnson said, "Let a just nation throw open...the city of promise...to those in other lands seeking the promise of America, through an immigration law based on the work a man can do and not where he was born or how he spells his name." (For text, see p. 1347)

The President Jan. 13 sent Congress a message proposing legislation to amend the 1952 Immigration and Nationality (McCarran-Walter) Act and to eliminate the national origins quota system. The measure was almost identical to the one proposed by Kennedy in 1963.

In the message, President Johnson said the national origins quota system was "incompatible with our basic American tradition" and "too often it arbitrarily denies us immigrants who have outstanding and sorely needed talents and skills." He said the proposed bill would not alter any of the current security restrictions on immigrants and "no immigrants admitted under this bill could contribute to unemployment in the United States." Asking that "priority consideration" be given the bill, Mr. Johnson urged Congress "to return the United States to an immigration policy which both serves the national interest and continues our traditional ideals." (For complete text, see p. 1423)

The proposed bill provided for the gradual elimination of the national origins quota system over a five-year period, reducing each country's quota by 20 percent (one-fifth) each year and placing eliminated origins quota numbers into an over-all quota pool. New quota numbers were to be allocated on a first-come, first-served basis as follows: 50 percent of the over-all quota to persons with exceptional skills, training, or education who would be "especially advantageous" to the United States; 30 percent to unmarried sons and daughters of U. S. citizens ineligible for non-quota status because they were over 21 years of age; and 20 percent to spouses and children of aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence. Any unused quota numbers were to be allocated to other relatives of U. S. citizens and resident aliens and to special classes of workers. The bill retained the current non-quota status for spouses and children of U. S. citizens and granted non-quota status to parents of U. S. citizens. After the first four years, the number of immigrants from any single country was to be limited to 10 percent of the over-all quota, which was expected to be about 166,000 per year.

The only major change from the 1963 bill affected the percentage of quota numbers subject to allocation by Presidential discretion and conformed to a recommendation made July 22, 1964, by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy. The new bill provided for the President to reserve up to 30 percent (formerly 50 percent) of the quota pool for allocation to countries disadvantaged by the change in laws and for allocation "in the national security interest" of the U. S. This provision was to prevent hardship to NATO allies, particularly Great Britain and Germany, whose quotas were to be substantially reduced by full operation of the new law. The 10-percent maximum for each country did not apply to visas issued under this provision. The bill also gave the President discretion to allocate up to 10 percent (formerly 20 percent) of the total 166,000 pool to refugees from "catastrophe or oppression."

The Administration bill also provided for repeal of the remaining Asia-Pacific triangle provision involving the racial ancestry of non-white Asiatics; and for continuation of the 1960 Fair Share Refugee Act (slightly broadened to take in new groups of applicants from the Middle East), which permitted political refugee-escapees to seek entry on a "parole" basis, and then seek an adjustment of status so that they could remain in the United States as immigrants on a non-quota basis.

In addition, the bill established a seven-member Immigration Board (three members Presidentially appointed, two members to be Senators, two members to be Representatives) to study immigration, recommend policy changes, and advise the President on the reallocations described above.

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) Jan. 13 introduced the Administration bill (HR 2580). Sen. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Jan. 15 introduced the companion bill (S 500) for himself and 33 other Senators. Celler and Hart had introduced the Kennedy Administration bill in 1963.

It was estimated that under the Administration bill, annual immigration would rise from the fiscal 1964 level of about 292,000 to approximately 350,000 to 360,000 persons a year. While immigration from the Western Hemisphere was expected to stay about the same (139,000), as was immigration by non-quota relatives (39,000) and possibly special refugees (11,000), immigration from non-Western Hemisphere quota areas was expected to rise from the current level of 103,000 to a new level of 166,000. This would result from a slight increase (to 166,000) in the over-all legal maximum quota and the elimination of the wasting of quota numbers formerly reserved solely for Britain, Ireland and Germany but not fully used.

House

COMMITTEE -- House Judiciary, Subcommittee No. 1 (Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee).

HELD HEARINGS -- March 3 - June 1 held 12 days of hearings on HR 2580. The Subcommittee Jan. 28 was increased from 5 members to 9. The change reportedly provided a 5-4 margin for approval of the Administration's bill. Retained on the Subcommittee were its Chairman Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), and Reps. Frank Chelf (D Ky.), Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.) and Arch A. Moore Jr. (R W. Va.). Added were Harold D. Donohue (D Mass.), Jacob H. Gilbert (D N.Y.), Jack Brooks (D Texas), William T. Cahill (R N.J.) and Clark MacGregor (R Minn.). Richard H. Poff (R Va.) was dropped from the Subcommittee.

TESTIMONY -- March 3 -- Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach stressed the urgency of prompt Congressional passage of the Administration's immigration bill. He cited three reasons for swift action -- "elemental humanity" in the reuniting of families; "domestic self-interest" in facilitating immigration of brilliant and skilled aliens; "self-interest abroad" in the elimination of the illogical and unjust national origins quota system. Katzenbach said that in effect the new law would result in an increased yearly immigration of 60,000 more than were currently admitted, but compared with the internal growth of the United States, nearly three million annually, these additional 60,000 immigrants annually "would be nearly invisible."

May 18 -- Rep. Richard S. Schweiker (R Pa.) told the Subcommittee that he favored an immigration law "which will eliminate once and for all the discriminatory aspects of our immigration policy." For this reason, he said, he had introduced his own immigration bill which was in "general agreement with the basic purpose" of HR 2580. Under the Schweiker bill, the quota system would be phased out over a five-year period and immigrants would be admitted on a "first-come, first-served, skill criteria basis." Unlike the Administration bill, Schweiker's proposal would eliminate the "preferential" treatment for nationals of the Western Hemisphere. Schweiker recommended an annual ceiling of 315,000 on immigration to cover both quota and non-quota immigration; elimination of the provision in the Administration bill singling out the Middle East as an area with a number of likely political refugees; and elimination of the provision in HR 2580 allowing the President "to take 30 percent of a reserve pool intended to benefit victims of small quota countries, and assign this 30-percent reserve instead to northern European nations which have enjoyed preferential large-quota treatment for the past 45 years." Schweiker proposed tighter restrictions than HR 2580 provided on immigrants who might compete with the U. S. labor force, including a statement by the Secretary of Labor that a labor shortage which cannot be filled by U. S. citizens exists, possession by the U. S. Attorney General of written evidence that a U. S. employer will hire an immigrant for the specific shortage and written proof from the immigrant that he has been offered a job and plans to accept the offer.

May 20 -- John B. Trevor Jr., chairman of the Immigration Committee of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, Inc., reported that the Annual Conference of the Society had adopted a resolution in support of the McCarran-Walter Act. He said the quota system was "based upon our own people" and that "national origins simply attempts to have immigration into the U.S. conform in composition to our own people." If changes must be made in the immigration law, Trevor suggested a ceiling on the total number of immigrants to be admitted both from the Western Hemisphere and from outside the Western Hemisphere, and application of the same conditions that apply to all other immigrants to refugees from Communism plus an annual ceiling on the number of these particular immigrants to be admitted.

Daniel J. O'Connor, chairman of the National Americanism Commission of the American Legion, said the Legion had "re-examined its position" of opposition to change in the McCarran-Walter Act and the national origins quota system and had decided to offer proposals for changes in the immigration laws, "not because of a change of heart, but because the American Legion is not unaware of the strength and direction of the current political winds." He continued, "We have also had it dramatically demonstrated to us that over the past decade the national origins quota system has not worked in practice as in theory."

He suggested as guidelines for a new immigration policy that Congress retain control over immigration and naturalization, safeguards be established to prevent an imbalance of immigration from any single country, a worldwide ceiling be set on the number of immigrants to be admitted, and the naturalization processes currently in operation be retained as well as the section of the McCarran-Walter Act excluding certain undesirables.

O'Connor said HR 2580 would "simply compound and emphasize a discriminatory pattern in favor of our neighbors in this hemisphere." The Legion's proposal for a worldwide ceiling, like the American Coalition's similar proposal, would, in effect, set a limit on Western Hemisphere immigration for the first time.

May 26 -- David Carliner of the American Civil Liberties Union and Frank E.G. Weil of the American Veterans Committee supported HR 2580, giving substantially the same testimony which they presented in the Senate. (See Senate hearings, p. 473)

LABOR REQUESTS

May 27 -- Andrew J. Biemiller, director, department of legislation, AFL-CIO, supported HR 2580. Biemiller requested, however, that certain labor protection provisions be added to the present law, so that eased immigration would not endanger domestic wage scales and conditions.

The most important change eventually made in the bill as a result of AFL-CIO representations at the hearings and in private meetings with sponsors of HR 2580 involved certification that the entry of an immigrant would not take jobs away from Americans or adversely affect U. S. labor conditions. Under the existing law, immigrants seeking to enter for labor purposes were not free to do so if the Secretary of Labor certified that their entry would have an adverse effect on labor conditions or would fill a job for which American labor was already available. In practice, the Labor Department looked into an immigrant's effect on the U. S. labor market only where the immigrant was seeking a preference for admission on the basis of possessing special labor skills. Individual non-quota immigrants from the Western Hemisphere and quota immigrants entering on a non-preference basis normally were not investigated as to their effect on U. S. labor conditions. The unions favored a strengthening of this procedure, and won their point.

In the final bill, as later enacted into law, a provision was inserted requiring that any person seeking to enter the U.S. as an immigrant for labor purposes obtain a positive certification from the Secretary of Labor that the job could not be filled by available domestic labor and that the immigrant's entry would not adversely affect domestic wages and working conditions. This requirement applied, under the final version of HR 2580, not only to persons seeking to enter under the labor preference provisions (categories 3 and 6 of the preference immigrants, see final provisions of bill, p. 465) but also to all entrants from the Western Hemisphere (other than relatives of U. S. citizens and residents) who intended to work, and to non-preference quota immigrants. The net effect of this change was to place Western Hemisphere immigrants and non-preference quota immigrants under the same automatic review and labor certification requirements as had, in effect, formerly been applied only to those seeking a preference on the basis of special skills.

Biemiller also requested that HR 2580 make clear that the granting of an immigration preference to individuals able to perform specific work for which there was a labor shortage in the United States should occur only when the labor shortage was of a long-term character, not if it involved seasonal or short-term work. The final version of HR 2580 complied with this request. Another Biemiller request fulfilled in the final bill was, that the Secretary of Labor be given the final legal authority to determine whether long-term shortages existed for the purposes of the above provision, rather than just an advisory role to the Justice Department.

Two other Biemiller requests, not granted in the final bill, would have flatly prohibited temporary importation of foreign farm workers; and would have vested in the Secretary of Labor, instead of the Attorney General, power to determine whether temporary labor shortages existed which justified bringing in temporary workers from abroad under certain provisions of the law. (His existing role was merely advisory.)

June 1 -- W.B.Hicks Jr., executive secretary of the Liberty Lobby, said that the "problem of immigration... is the mistaken preservation of an international myth... (that) the United States has a special duty to welcome all who would come live with us." Hicks said that both the labor market and national security were endangered by the "myth" of the "open door," pointing out that in New York's garment industry "the piece-work wages of women rise and fall on immigration." Hicks added that "we read of espionage and betrayal by some who have been welcomed as friendly refugees, and we grow uneasy." He said the United States already had a less stringent immigration policy than most nations of the world. Hicks called for uniting of immediate families through use of " the device of indefinite residency visas, with all rights of citizenship except those of voting and becoming a public ward." He claimed that those who criticized U. S. immigration policy on the grounds that it forced separation of families had "purposely" blurred the distinction between visitation and immigration, since "it is possible under our present law for a visitor to remain in the United States almost indefinitely." He said this destroyed "the illusion that our law physically separates families."

Hicks suggested that it was a "cruel hoax to perpetrate on new immigrants" the promise of "work for all" and said that the preference for skilled, professional and talented persons was unnecessary, since "it is difficult to justify the argument that the United States actually needs brilliant, talented immigrants any more than the rest of the world needs them."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Feb. 20 -- Feighan held public hearings in Cleveland, Ohio, on immigration and asked various groups including the press, organized labor, immigration committees of bar associations, women's organizations and leaders of nationality groups to answer a questionnaire. He reported that his survey showed that those responding to the questionnaire thought there should be an annual ceiling on immigration, that Congress should set the limit, that the 300,000 currently admitted was about the right number, that the national origins quota system should be repealed, that Congress should provide safeguards in law for U. S. laborers and that the number of refugees admitted should be limited. Feighan pointed out that the question of political refugees was of importance, because there was no adequate limit in the Administration measure on how many might be admitted.

April 28 -- Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) published in the Congressional Record an outline "designed to correct mistaken notions" about HR 2580. Celler's outline pointed out that instead of admitting an excessive number of immigrants, the effect of the bill would be "quite insignificant" on U. S. population; that the bill would not let in "great numbers of immigrants from anywhere," including Africa and Asia; that there was "no real evidence" to back the charge that the bill would increase unemployment; that HR 2580 did not change the present law relating to the admission of Communists and subversives; and that it was "a misunderstanding of both the bill and the existing law" to claim that an immigrant would no longer have to prove he has a job waiting for him, since immigrants now generally did not have to prove that a job was waiting for them.

FEIGHAN BILL

Feighan, June 1, introduced his own immigration bill (HR 8662). He noted that he had had several conferences with the President, and, at the Administration's request, he had not included provisions imposing a Western Hemisphere limitation quota, even though he personally favored such a limitation. Several sources told CQ that, in fact, by the time Feighan introduced HR 8662, the Administration had decided to go along with many of Feighan's major proposals for revision of the Administration's original bill.

Most of Feighan's proposals, as incorporated in HR 8662, were outlined in a Feb. 4 speech to the 36th annual conference of the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies. At that time, Feighan expressed his opposition to the non-quota status granted persons of Western Hemisphere nations under HR 2580. He also opposed the seven-member immigration board provided by HR 2580 as a violation of the separation of powers, since four Members of Congress were to be included on the board and thereby engaged in the business of the the Executive Branch. HR 8662 did not provide for an immigration board.

The Feighan bill, which was to go into effect immediately, instead of after a five year transition, eliminated existing country-by-country quotas and set an annual ceiling of 225,000 on immigration from all countries outside the Western Hemisphere. Feighan said this was "about equal to the number now authorized by the quota system (158,503) plus the annual average of non-quota immigration (58,000) from those countries, plus the increase of 7,000 called for by President Johnson."

Under HR 8662, total immigrants from a single country could not exceed 20,000 a year. By comparison, the Administration bill limited immigrants from any country to 10 percent of the over-all number allowed after the national origins quotas were phased out. This total was expected to be about 166,000 immigrants a year. Neither ceiling affected immigration from the Western Hemisphere.

HR 2580 gave first preference to persons with special skills, talents or education, maintained non-quota status for spouses and children of U.S. citizens, and granted non-quota status to parents of U.S.citizens. By comparison, HR 8662 put all persons coming from countries outside the Western Hemisphere under the 225,000 ceiling, giving first preference to spouses, children and parents of U. S. citizens. Other than the over-all ceiling, there would be no limit on the number of persons in this category who could enter the U.S. The visas not used by persons in the first category were distributed as follows: 10 percent to professional persons, scientists and those with special skills and talents; 20 percent to members of the immediate family of permanent resident aliens; 20 percent to married children of U.S. citizens; 20 percent to brothers and sisters of U.S.citizens; 20 percent to persons with skills which the Secretary of Labor found to be needed in the U.S.; and 10 percent to refugees from Communist persecution. Any visas left over from this were to be distributed on a first-come, first-served basis. However, up to half of the visas not used by the preference classes could be used by the President to relieve hardships which fell upon countries such as the United Kingdom and Germany, which would lose currently available visas under both the Feighan bill and the Administration bill, and to relieve international refugee emergencies and natural calamities.

HR 8662 also completely eliminated the remaining Asia-Pacific triangle provision involving racial ancestry of non-white Asiatics; contained several of the special guarantees sought by the labor unions--including the requirement of certification prior to admission that Western Hemisphere and non-preference quota immigrants would not harm U.S. labor conditions--and repealed the Fair Share Refugee Act except for provisions permitting adjustment of status of those already in.

Bill Reported

The House Judiciary Committee Aug. 6 reported HR 2580 (H Rept 745) after adding substantial amendments drawn from Feighan's bill, HR 8662. As reported, the bill retained the two principal reforms sought by President Johnson: repeal of the national origins quota system and the Asia-Pacific triangle racial ancestry provisions; and retention of non-quota immigration status for natives of independent Western Hemisphere nations, with no numerical limit on immigration from such nations. The reported bill was basically the same in all major provisions as the version of HR 2580 eventually signed into law, except that a numerical limit on Western Hemisphere limitation was added to the bill in the Senate and final version.

Voting in Committee. Action leading up to the reporting of the bill began June 17, when the Immigration and Nationality Subcommittee began executive sessions on the bill. The Subcommittee July 22, by an 8-0 vote, approved an amended version of the bill. The ninth Subcommittee member, Clark MacGregor (R Minn,), voted "present."

In the full Committee, MacGregor July 29 offered an amendment to impose a numerical limit of 115,000 persons a year, exclusive of spouses, minor children and parents of U.S. citizens, on immigration from the Western Hemisphere. But his amendment was beaten, 11-22. He said he would offer it again on the floor. Although it rejected the 115,000 limit, the Committee did adopt a provision requiring the President to notify Congress and recommend action whenever Western Hemisphere immigration rose more than 10 percent above the average of the previous five years. (The average immigration from North and South America for fiscal years 1960-1964 was 122,812.)

The full Committee finally approved HR 2580 Aug. 3, by a 27 to 4 vote. President Johnson the same day praised the Committee's action. He said he had worked since his first weeks as President "to bring realism and understanding to the immigration procedures of this nation." He said the Committee's action redeemed "the pledge of this nation to posterity -- that free men have no fear of justice, and proud men have no taste for bias."

Majority Views. The report said that since only about one-third of the immigration to the United States during the past two decades had come in under the quota system, "the national origins system has failed to maintain the ethnic balance of the American population as it was designed and intended..." It noted that the "performance of the Congress in the field of immigration in the postwar period has been far more generous and sympathetic than adherence to the national origins system alone would allow." The report also said that "it should be emphasized that there has been no relaxing of the qualitative criteria for admissibility to the United States and that no relaxation of the mental, health, moral, economic, and security criteria is proposed."

The Committee said it did not want the parole provisions of Section 212d5 of the Immigration and Nationality Act to be used to bring in large classes of refugees (as had been the case with some Hungarian refugees in the 1950s) and then adjust their status to non-quota immigrants. It wanted 212d5 used only for temporary entry of isolated, individual persons in emergency situations. (Note: The Administration nevertheless used the authority of 212d5 to bring in large blocs of refugees from Cuba later in 1965.)

Additional Views. Seven Republican members of the Committeee signed a minority report which noted that the bill, as approved by the Judiciary Committee, would leave nations of the Western Hemisphere "in a highly preferred position to that of the natives of the more than 100 countries in the rest of the world." This, the seven Republicans maintained, would be "illogical, unwise, shortsighted and inconsistent." The minority report therefore supported the amendment proposed in committee July 29 by Rep. Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) to set a ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration.

Republicans signing minority views were: Reps. Clark MacGregor (Minn.), William M. McCulloch (Ohio), Richard H. Poff (Va.), William C. Cramer (Fla.), Carleton J. King (N.Y.), Edward Hutchinson (Mich.) and Robert McClory (Ill.).

Provisions. As reported, HR 2580:

- Repealed the national origins quota system as of July 1, 1968, and repealed the Asia-Pacific triangle provisions immediately.
- For the three-year period prior to elapse of the national origins quota system, authorized the use of unfilled national quotas as a general quota "pool" under which preference applicants (see below) from countries with over-subscribed quotas would be considered for immigration. The number of visas issued from the quota system and the "pool" could not exceed 170,000 a year.
- Continued to exempt immigrants who were natives of the nations of the Western Hemisphere and all spouses and minor children of U.S. citizens from the numerical limits imposed and added an exemption for parents of U.S. citizens.
- For all other immigration, set the numerical limit of 170,000 a year to be distributed according to the following priorities and percentages:

20 percent for unmarried adult children of U.S. citizens.

20 percent for immediate relatives of aliens admitted to permanent residence, plus unused portion from preference class one.

10 percent for artists and professional persons.

10 percent to married children of U. S. citizens, plus unused portions of above classes.

24 percent for brothers and sisters of U.S. citizens, plus unused portions from above classes.

10 percent for persons with skills needed in the United States.

6 percent for political refugees.

All unused visas would be distributed on a first-come, first-served basis.

- Established an annual ceiling of 20,000 immigrants to be permitted entrance from a single country exclusive of immigrants from the Western Hemisphere and spouses, parents and minor children of U.S. citizens, effective July 1, 1968.
- Established that, for any immigrant seeking employment in the United States, there must be a finding by the Secretary of Labor, on a case-by-case basis, that no U.S. citizen would be displaced from a job because of an immigrant's entrance. (For details, see "Labor Demands," p. 469.)
- Required the President to report to Congress with recommendations for action whenever immigration from the Western Hemisphere exceeded the previous five-year average by 10 percent.
- Prohibited the adjustment of status of Western Hemisphere natives who enter as nonimmigrants to the status of immigrants.
- Eliminated "epilepsy" as grounds for exclusion of prospective immigrant and included "sexual deviation" as grounds for exclusion.
- Repealed the Fair Share Refugee Act with the exception of the sections that permit adjustment of status for those refugees who have already been admitted. Future refugees were provided for under the preference classes.

FLOOR ACTION

The House Aug. 25 passed HR 2580 by a 318-95 (R 109-25; ND 179-8; SD 30-62) roll-call vote, with the majority of Republicans and Northern Democrats supporting the bill and the majority of Southern Democrats opposing it. Before passage, the House rejected, by a 189-218 (R 121-13; ND 13-170; SD 55-35) roll call, an amendment by Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) to impose a 115,000 annual limit on immigration from the Western Hemisphere. The MacGregor proposal was initially adopted on a 156-154 teller vote, but then rejected on the 189-218 roll call. In another important vote before passage, the House by voice vote rejected a motion by Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) to recommit (kill) the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 992)

Except for minor floor amendments, HR 2580 as passed by the House was identical to the version that had been reported by the Judiciary Committee. (See p. 471 for provisions.)

The major point of contention during debate was the MacGregor amendment to set a 115,000-a-year Western Hemisphere limitation. Administration spokesmen reportedly put heavy pressure on House Members to get them to vote against MacGregor's proposal.

Rep. Celler said a Western Hemisphere limit could "adversely affect" the "unison in the hemisphere" and would alienate Latin America. MacGregor Aug. 25 said, "To allow unlimited immigration from the Western Hemisphere and the Caribbean while imposing rigid ceilings on the number who could come in from the rest of the world... is highly prejudicial."

MacGregor said the Presidential reporting requirement would have little effect. That provision "said that when immigration from the Western Hemisphere shall reach 10 percent more than 125,000, the President shall recognize a danger point and call our attention to the fact and make recommendation if he sees fit," he said, "We have probably exceeded the danger point for the fiscal year 1965. Seventy-five thousand people came in in the first six months."

OTHER DEBATE

During the two days of debate, there was little opposition to the bill as a whole. Proponents contended that the bill would eliminate an immigration system which was discriminatory, that it would not result in an appreciable increase in immigration to the United States and that the U.S. standard of living would not be affected by the new policy.

The few Members who opposed the bill claimed that it would open the gates to many new immigrants, especially persons from Asia and Africa. They maintained that when the United States was faced with unemployment and the necessity of setting up such programs as the "war-on-poverty," it was not a desirable time to increase immigration.

Celler, in Congress since 1923, said that he "inveighed against this national origins theory away back in 1924." He said, "I made a speech then against this theory. I am glad I am living today and have lived to see that my theories have been vindicated, that we are now to obliterate and nullify and cancel out this admonition called the national theory of immigration." Celler, dean of the House in 1965, was the only current Member who was in Congress when the quota system was enacted. He was a freshman then.

Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio), chairman of House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 1 which handled HR 2580, said the bill "reaffirms that constitutional responsibility (of Congress to deal with immigration) through a clear-cut, self-executing law which delegates no authority to the Executive Branch which properly and historically rests with the Congress."

James J. Delaney (D N.Y.) Aug. 25 inserted into the Record the first speech made by current House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.), on Feb. 14, 1929. The 1929 speech said, "The basis prescribed by this (national origins) clause for the establishing of quotas of countries affected has as its object a definite purpose which is unfair and discriminatory, and a reflection upon elements of past immigrants, now Americans, some for many generations, that have contributed so much toward the building up and progress of our country."

Other highlights of debate:

Aug. 24 -- Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.) -- "The provisions of HR 2580 which eliminate the national origins quota system express the true concepts of freedom and equality for which this country stands."

Donald J. Irwin (D Conn.) -- "There is no longer room for a wide-open gateway into the United States -- there are no virgin lands to settle and few occupations which are in dire need of labor. Yet, there still is room for those in need of shelter and those in search of freedom. And there is still need for those with skills and talents."

Aug. 25 -- John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- "The bill will unite families.... It will give even greater preference to persons of special abilities. And it will insure that immigrants be capable of supporting themselves without endangering the livelihoods of American working people."

Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.) -- "The major contribution of the bill is the repeal of the national origins quota system which is archaic, discriminatory and has become clearly unworkable."

Paul J. Krebs (D N.J.) -- "We must learn to judge each individual by his own worth and by the value he can bring to our nation.... Americanism has too long been equated with conformity. We must learn to take pride in the cultural diversity which is fundamental to our history."

Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) -- "The present outrageously discriminatory policy makes second class nationalities of many of the world's people. Our immigration policy must dovetail with our foreign policy, if we expect to be successful in leading the free world."

Arch A. Moore Jr. (R W.Va.) -- "The new immigration system proposed has two highly significant characteristics or features that may not be apparent at first reading. First, this bill is more restrictive than present law. It imposes even more rigid requirements, and it sets more specific limitations than does present law. Second, for the first time in 25 years it establishes an immigration policy and practice based, not upon an accumulation of pent-up pressures and past mistakes, but upon present-day needs."

Jeffery Cohelan (D Calif.) -- "The national origins quota system of 1924 has served to grade citizens of other countries on the color of their skin and on their nationality. It has implied that men and women from some areas of the world are more desirable than others. It has arbitrarily denied us people with skills and talents that would benefit our way of life and our well-being."

Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) -- The present law is "more liberal than that of any other nation," but..."does it make sense at all to spend billions bringing new skills to the underdeveloped nations and at the same time initiating a new immigration policy that will drain the same skills from nations which need them far worse than we do? I say it does not."

Joe Skubitz (R Kan.) -- "Chief among my reasons (for opposing the bill) has been the fear that any change in the laws might add to the unemployment problem as well as the fact that our own growth in population has placed increasing demands upon education, housing, health facilities, and transportation."

Maston E. O'Neal (D Ga.) -- "The President either fails or refuses to understand that America is not hurting for population, jobseekers or illiterates. The supporters of this legislation also refuse to accept the fact that human beings differ in their desire to maintain stable governments, their levels of ambition, and their degree of morality."

Richard H. Ichord (D Mo.) -- "The labor clearance clause is not a workable provision. This is not an effective limitation. Can you picture the Department of Labor deciding whether or not an applicant plumber from Bolivia will displace any workers in Buffalo or New York; and further, whether or not this plumber will have an adverse effect on the wages and working conditions of plumbers in Buffalo? This provision directs the Labor Secretary to do the impossible."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aug 25 -- Richard H. Poff (R Va.) -- Prohibit nations of "adjacent islands" such as the colonies of Great Britain, France and the Netherlands in the Western Hemisphere, as well as the nationals of independent Western Hemisphere countries (as already provided in the committee bill), from entering the United States on a visitor's visa and then applying for adjustment of status to that of a permanent resident alien. Voice vote.

Poff -- Authorize the Attorney General to suspend deportation of any alien who can prove to the Attorney General's satisfaction, that he would, if returned to a foreign country, be subjected to persecution on account of race, religion or political opinion (rather than subjected to "physical persecution," as provided in the bill). Voice.

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) -- In the case of children and close relatives of U.S. citizens, permit the Surgeon General and the Attorney General to grant waivers of exclusion to permit the entrance of mentally retarded children and close relatives with a past history of mental illness who have been cured, providing certain public health and other safeguards are met. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Aug 25 -- Richard H. Poff (R Va.) -- Alter the definition of orphan eligible for adoption by United States citizens. Voice.

Jacob H. Gilbert (D N.Y.) -- Authorize the Secretary of Labor rather than the Attorney General to determine when temporary nonimmigrant labor should be admitted to the United States. Standing, 10-96.

Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) -- Set an annual ceiling of 115,000 immigrants from the Western Hemisphere. Accepted by teller vote, 156-154; rejected by roll call, 189-218.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 10 - Aug. 3 on S 500, the Administration bill.

The Subcommittee also considered a similar bill (S 1093) sponsored by Sens. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) which provided for elimination of the national origins system within one year, instead of five years as provided in S 500.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 10 -- Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach testified in support of S 500 on behalf of the Johnson Administration. Citing the damaging results of the McCarran-Walter Act, Katzenbach said the national origins quota system separated families, deprived the U.S. of skilled persons and created "an image of hypocrisy which can be exploited by those who seek to discredit our professions of democracy."

He also said the bill would increase annual immigration by only 8,000 above its currently authorized level, from about 158,000 to about 166,000 quota immigrants a year. Total actual immigration to the U.S. would be increased because all quota numbers, to a large extent unused under the present system, would be distributed for use, he said.

Katzenbach also said there would not be a substantial change in the areas of immigration, nor would the new law increase unemployment because it contained safeguards to prevent immigration of persons with surplus skills. He stressed that the "net effect would be to create rather than absorb jobs" because of the total immigration increase of 60,000, all would be consumers and it was estimated that only about one-third would enter the work force.

Feb. 24 -- Secretary of State Dean Rusk spoke in favor of three changes in the immigration laws which would be made by S 500 -- elimination of the national origins quota system, elimination of the "Asia-Pacific Triangle" provisions, and granting of non-quota status to immigrants from Jamaica and Trinidad-Tobago. Rusk said that despite the fact that over the past 16 years Congress had put aside the origins system to admit refugees and displaced persons, the United States continued "to be judged abroad by a basic provision of law which suggests that prospective immigrants are selected on the basis of their national origins." He said he had been approached on a number of occasions by ministers of other countries who complained that "this principle discriminates against their countries." Rusk favored gradual elimination of the origins system over a five-year period, as provided for in S 500, because "too precipitous a change would result in reverse discrimination against those countries which now enjoy a situation where quota numbers are readily available to them." He explained that "many of the countries which would be adversely affected are among our closest allies. At a time when our national security rests in large part on a continued strengthening of our ties with these countries, it would be anomalous indeed to restrict opportunities for their nationals to immigrate to this country."

Rusk said that current immigration was "considerably different" from the older immigration, in that it was "in limited volume and includes a relatively high proportion of older people and persons of high skill and training." He said, "Under the present circumstances, our country has a rare opportunity to draw migrants of high intelligence and ability from abroad; and immigration, if well administered, can be one of our greatest national resources, a source of valuable manpower and brainpower."

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) said the bill was "just one little hole in the dike for unrestricted immigration" and if immigration from Africa and Asia were increased "the country will be drastically changed." Ervin alleged that the bill provided a new form of discrimination, "against the people who have made the greatest contribution to building up our country because they have preference under the law now." Ervin identified these as immigrants from England, Scotland, Ireland, France, Germany, Holland and the Scandinavian nations.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) retorted: "I know that too much blood and toil was contributed to the building of America by immigrants from Italy, from Eastern Europe, and from many other places to accept the statement of the Senator from North Carolina that only immigrants from Northern Europe made America."

Feb. 25 -- Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz testified that the changes in U.S. immigration laws contained in S 500 would "promote the admission of individuals with qualifications and occupations needed in the United States...without disturbing the domestic employment situation." Wirtz said that when the provisions of S 500 were fully operative, in the fifth year after enactment, an estimated 60 percent of the increase in immigrant admissions due to full use of the annual quota of 166,000 would be non-workers, housewives and children. "This means that an additional yearly number of about 23,900 quota immigrants would be expected to enter the labor force," Wirtz explained. "In a total force that is estimated to reach 86 million by 1970, the yearly addition of 23,900 would have no appreciable impact. Qualitatively, the increased immigration of persons of high education, specialized experience, exceptional ability or capable of filling labor shortages could be beneficial." Discussing provisions which may operate to prevent increased unemployment resulting from increased immigration, Wirtz said that a permanent residence visa would not be issued to an immigrant unless he "can satisfactorily demonstrate that he will not become a public charge." He said: "Moreover, applicants for immigrant visas who would be entering the labor force become excludable aliens if the Secretary of Labor certifies that domestic workers are available to perform the work which would be performed by the alien or if the alien's employment in the United States would adversely affect the wages and working conditions of our own workers."

Ervin dismissed the argument that S 500 would increase immigration of skilled persons as "just sanctimonious propaganda," and said justification of the measure would have "to depend on something else." Ervin charged that the bill would result in about 66,000 more immigrants each year "to compete with Americans for available jobs."

March 1 -- Sens. Hugh Scott (R Pa.) and Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) testified in favor of S 500.

March 3 -- Administrator of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs Abba P. Schwartz discussed the effect of S 500 on the world refugee situation. Schwartz particularly endorsed the section of the bill to permit the President to reserve up to 10 percent of quota reserve numbers annually for allocation to refugee-escapees. He said that this provision would provide the means for dealing promptly with refugee emergencies. Approving other changes, Schwartz said that the change in the "Fair Share Law" to permit the United States to determine unilaterally which refugees might be admitted, without regard to the United Nations as previously, would provide "satisfactory means for the United States to admit up to one-fourth of the current flow of escapees from the communist countries and the Middle East." Schwartz said that Presidential authority to admit refugees without delay was "important to our foreign policy interests," since the United States had a worldwide reputation as a haven.

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) said that the new immigration act would not have any significant effect on the ethnic composition of the U.S., in reply to statements made by Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D N.C.). Kennedy noted that annual immigration from Poland was larger than from Ireland. "This fact demonstrates the absurdity of any argument that the national origins system preserves the ethnic balance of the United States," Kennedy said. "In fact, the distribution of limited quota immigration can have no significant effect on the ethnic balance of the United States.... What is objectionable in the present law...are group discriminations from which no individual can escape because no one can change his place of birth. Any individual test is acceptable, (but) no group test can ever be."

March 8 -- Nicholas S. Limperis, national chairman of the AHEPA Immigration Legislation Committee, testified in favor of S 500. Limperis said, "America has the right to limit immigration. But once it proclaims its policy, it should primarily concern itself with the inherent worth of the person who seeks to come to America, rather than concern itself with the place of birth or origin.... This bill emphasizes not primarily increased immigration but equality of opportunity for all people to reach this promised land."

March 11 -- Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Anthony J. Celebrezze said that, with the exception of provisions relating to epilepsy and mental conditions, the Administration bill did not alter "the qualitative standards for immigration, which prevent the entry of those whom we can, in justice and logic, exclude." He said that required standards of mental and physical health for immigrants should "keep pace with medical progress...(and) should not separate families if arrangements can be assured that will safeguard the public interest without forcing families to choose between their desire to stay together and their desire to come to this country." Celebrezze endorsed changes provided in S 500 which would permit admission of aliens with epilepsy and the mentally retarded, with assurance that such immigrants would be provided with necessary services and not become public charges. He also endorsed a change regarding persons afflicted with certain types of mental illness which "would not alter the language of the present exclusion for mental disorders...(but) would permit conditional admission of certain categories of excludable aliens who are members of the immediate family of a U.S. citizen or of an alien who is a permanent resident of the United States or had been issued an immigrant visa." He said that the safeguards for such admissions would rely on "firm assurances of all necessary care and support for the afflicted family member after entry into the United States instead of reliance on exclusion from the country."

Dr. Andrew P. Sackett, assistant Surgeon General, testified, "The Public Health Service believes that our immigration policy regarding mental handicaps can be modified to serve humanitarian objectives and at the same time protect the public health, safety and welfare."

Sackett discussed three steps which would be taken in waiving visa restrictions for persons with excludable mental disorders: (1) overseas medical examination and prognosis of the usual course of the immigrant's condition, potential for treatment and probable duration of the required treatment program; (2) assurance that upon arrival in the United States, the alien will have a complete study to determine his intellectual capacity, adaptability to U.S. environment and need of any specialized training or treatment, with adequate financial arrangements made for such treatment by the alien or his sponsors; and (3) requirement by the Public Health Service of an initial evaluation of the health of the immigrant by a U.S. hospital immediately after his arrival and of periodic progress reports for five years.

NON-GOVERNMENT GROUPS

March 12 -- David Carliner, American Civil Liberties Union, endorsed abolition of the national origins quota system, immediate repeal of provisions strictly limiting the number of immigrants of Asian stock (Asia-Pacific Triangle provisions), and establishment of provisions for easier admission of refugees. Carliner said the ACLU objected to a provision of S 500 which defined a refugee-escapee as an alien who "because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion or political opinion" had fled from a Communist area or the Middle East area bounded by Morocco, Turkey, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and Ethiopia. He said the provision was "unnecessarily limiting" and "restrictive." He said the Committee recommended rephrasing of the provision to permit admission, on a continuing basis, of persons from any area who were "oppressed or persecuted, or threatened with oppression or persecution, because of their race, color, religion, national origin, adherence to democratic beliefs, or their opposition to totalitarianism or dictatorship...uprooted by natural calamity or military operations who are unable to return to their usual place of abode." The ACLU also recommended that a 10-year statute of limitations be placed on deportable offenses and that an alien admitted to the United States for permanent residence prior to his 14th birthday be immune from deportation. The ACLU recommended a provision to permit persons who entered the United States on non-immigrant visas -- students, seamen, visitors, diplomatic personnel -- to transfer to permanent residence status, and establishment of a formal procedure for review of denials of visas by a Board of Visa Appeals, comparable to the Justice Department's Board of Immigration Appeals.

March 15--James B. Carey, president of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (IUE), and secretary-treasurer of the Industrial Union Department of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO), testified in "wholehearted support" of S 500. He said it "will do little or nothing to add to unemployment." Carey said it was estimated that by the fifth year after enactment of S 500 "only about 24,000 quota immigrants will have joined the labor force each year. At that time we will have a labor force of 86 million. The newcomers will constitute three-thousandths of one percent of that group of workers.... We can expect that a good number of these immigrants will bring badly needed skills to this country."

Carey said the AFL-CIO favored certain changes to protect U.S. workers. (See House hearings, above, Biemiller testimony, for details.)

March 16 -- James Read, president of Wilmington College, Wilmington, Ohio, and former United Nations Deputy High Commissioner for Refugees, testifying on behalf of the American Friends Service Committee and the Friends Committee on National Legislation, made several suggestions for revision of S 500. He suggested that the Committee "modify the requirement that all...refugees must meet the physical and political requirements of the regular immigration law" and that the definition of refugee "be expanded so that some refugees could be admitted on a continuing basis regardless of country of origin." He supported proposed provisions to permit admission of epileptics and persons with mental defects and eliminate the national origins quota system. Read expressed the hope that S 500 would not "emphasize unduly" the need for immigrants to have special skills and would not encourage too great an emigration of skilled persons from other countries. He also recommended that the language of a provision permitting the Attorney General to prevent deportation of an alien to a country where he would be "subject to physical persecution" be changed to prevent deportation if the alien "would have well founded fear of persecution."

March 17 -- Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger (D Ore.), a co-sponsor of S 500, applauded its provisions for the elimination of the national origins quota system which she said "stands in conflict with our principles of human brotherhood and equality."

Sen. Claiborne Pell (D R.I.), also a co-sponsor of the Administration bill, suggested an additional amendment to the McCarran-Walter Act which would provide that if an unmarried immigrant, admitted to the United States under the special skills first preference quota status, later married an alien, his spouse also would receive first preference quota treatment. Under the current law, if a first preference immigrant married an alien after his admittance to the United States, his spouse could only enter this country in the heavily overloaded third preference quota, although the wives and children of married immigrants admitted under the first preference quota also received first preference status. Pell stated, "First preference is allowed aliens who are urgently needed because of their skills and technical abilities. It would seem to be only fair to allow those few who may wish to return to their homeland or some other country to marry, to be able to then bring their spouses back to the United States." Pell said that he doubted that many of the 1,200 immigrants admitted annually later would marry overseas, "but at least we should not impede them by law."

March 22 -- Donald E. Anderson, director of the Luthern Immigration Service of the National Lutheran Council and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, said that the organizations he represented supported the enactment of the Administration bill. Endorsing the elimination of the national origins quota system, Anderson said, "The view of man underlying the national origins quota theory is not too dissimilar from that which ended in tragedy and death for millions in Europe within our lifetime."

Frank E.G. Weil, representing the American Veterans Committee, said his organization "wholeheartedly approves" legislation to repeal "the present procedure of selecting immigrants on the basis of their national or racial origins" and to substitute "a procedure based upon...criteria...such as the possession of skills needed in the United States or the reunification of families." He said the AVC supported provisions contained in several bills introduced in the 88th Congress which provided that an alien could not be deported for conduct occurring 10 years before the institution of deportation proceedings and that a denaturalization proceeding could not be instituted more than five years after an alien was admitted to U.S. citizenship, and prohibited deportation of immigrants admitted to the United States before their fourteenth birthday or who had lived in the United States continuously for ten years. (The American Civil Liberties Union also supported such provisions. See testimony, above.) The AVC also opposed a provision which would revoke the citizenship of immigrants who evaded military service by leaving the United States, or who were court martialed. Noting the presence of opposition to the 7,000 quota increase proposed in S 500, the AVC suggested that "it might be an act of political realism to give up this modest increase in total quota numbers available, if to do so would reduce opposition to the bill and would enhance its chances of passage." The AVC also suggested that to keep pace with population increases, quota numbers for the ten years after each census might be based on the ratio between the total U.S. population in the previous and the new censuses. If the 1970 census should show a 20-percent increase in the U. S. population since the 1960 census, the total number of quota numbers available from 1970 to 1980 would be increased by 20 percent.

June 4 -- Mike M. Masaoka, Washington representative of the Japanese American Citizens League, endorsed the "principles, objectives and provisions" of the Administration bill, particularly the elimination of the Asia-Pacific triangle provisions, the abolition of the national origins quota system, the increase in all minimum quotas from 100 to 200 and the permanent provision for the admission of refugees and victims of political persecution and of natural calamities or military operations.

Masaoka pointed out that although Japan had a waiting list of less than 5,000, under the McCarran-Walter Act the quotas for the country were "backlogged beyond 1990." He said he had "some grave reservations" regarding the first-come, first-served visa provisions of HR 2580, since Europeans had an "eight-year headstart" on registration over Asian countries.

Sen. E.L. Bartlett (D Alaska) testified that residents of islands adjacent to the United States, including Bermuda, the Bahamas and other Caribbean possessions of Britain, France and the Netherlands, should be granted the non-quota status which S 500 provided for independent Western Hemisphere countries, Jamaica, Trinidad, Tobago and European colonial possessions which became independent. Bartlett pointed out that the islands had cultural and economic ties to the Western Hemisphere as well as being important to the defense of the hemisphere, and that consequently they should be granted the "same opportunity which we would accord to all other people of the Western world."

Henry Vesey, chairman of the Trade Development Board of Bermuda, said Bermuda needed non-quota status because it was "facing the serious dilemma of a small land mass, no natural resources whatsoever, and a steadily growing population" and because its residents could not gain the skills needed for preferential status under S 500 while residents of "a small, isolated island that is only tourist oriented."

June 8 -- Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D N.J.) said, "Over the past 15 years, out state -- with less than 3.5 percent of the nation's population -- has welcomed seven percent of all immigrants to the United States. Has this immigration been detrimental to New Jersey: I think not. Our state stands at the highest level of prosperity in its history."

June 9 -- Julia Thompson of the American Nurses' Assn. supported "the intent" of S 500, but added that "nurses coming to the United States to seek employment should have the same professional qualifications for licensure to practice nursing as those required of United States nationals."

June 15 -- W.B. Hicks Jr. of the Liberty Lobby opposed S 500, presenting basically the same testimony he presented before the House committee.

June 16 -- Matt Triggs, assistant legislative director of the American Farm Bureau Federation, reported that his organization had "no position relative to S 500," but that it opposed the proposal "to prohibit absolutely the temporary importation of foreign farm workers." Triggs said "the farm labor situation of 1965 has resulted in loss of crops, reduced production in the United States, increased production in other countries and a reduction of employment in agricultural processing and marketing concerns." He told the Committee that, under these circumstances, "it would be contrary to the interests of farmers and the public to cut off entirely the trickle of foreign farm workers permitted to enter the United States."

CRITICS TESTIFY

June 23 -- Mark M. Jones of the National Economic Council said, "...There is no need for immigration and no need is foreseeable within two or three years at least; (and) there are reasons to believe that an embargo on all immigration for two or three years would be in the national interest...."

Myra C. Hacker of the New Jersey Coalition said the Coalition believed that "every nation has a right and a duty to its own citizens, to regulate the flow of aliens to its shores." She supported the Feighan bill rather than S 500 because HR 8662 "does away cleanly with the allegedly offensive national origins quotas; ...sets a definite and realistic maximum limit on annual immigration, which the present Act and S 500 do not; ...establishes a system of preferences, irrespective of race or national origin, which forfend the debasing of American cultural and economic standards; ...takes note, as S 500 does not, of the necessity of safeguards against the importation of politically dangerous individuals; (and)...keeps immigration policies in Congress, where they belong...."

June 24 -- Mrs. Ray L. Erb, president of the Republican Committee of One Hundred Inc. and author of "Invasion Alert," said that the proposed immigration legislation would "enormously increase the number of immigrants permitted to enter the United States annually for permanent residence." Mrs. Erb asked, "Do we want to build a national population based on the predominantly northern and western Europe stock which discovered, explored and developed America, and which today so deeply cherishes our freedom and our ways of life?" She continued, "Or, are we willing to permit the American population makeup to be based rather on the makeup of foreign lands whose natives can get in line fastest, in the greatest number, under a first-come, first-served scheme of entry?"

June 25 -- Dr. Mollie Ray Carroll of Fairfax, Va., told the Committee that "while America has been built by the vision and energy of immigrants, including your ancestors and mine, the so-called melting pot has often not melted. Masses of poorly screened immigrants have too often become undigested lumps of frustrated, undiluted foreign ideology and habits, pawns of some of the world's worst elements."

Mrs. William H. Sullivan Jr., president general of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, asked, "Why is it...unreasonable to seek to preserve national identity by maintaining the nation's historic population blend?" She suggested that immigration reform not "be dictated by well-intentioned humanitarian pleas which are unrealistic and which could result in further unemployment, overladen taxes, to say nothing of a collapse of moral and spiritual values if nonassimilable aliens of dissimilar ethnic background and culture are permitted gradually to overwhelm our country."

July 15 -- Patricia Huster of the Maryland Coalition of Patriotic Societies asked the Committee whether the United States was actually helping certain nations "by sending our young people to help foreign lands develop; by sending industrialists to do the same; by opening our universities to foreign citizens; by sending billions of dollars to aid in development; by doing all of this, and then robbing these nations of their talented citizens."

Jack Wong Sing of the National Chinese Welfare Council said, "The migration of Chinese scholars, scientists, engineers and of other skills to the United States, together with the descendants of the first immigrants, have helped to create a reservoir of manpower and material and of spiritual wealth beneficial to the welfare of the United States."

Stewart Boswell of the National Council of Agricultural Employers opposed any proposal to prohibit the entry into the United States of foreign, supplementary agricultural labor.

July 22 -- Dr. Thomas Parker, representing the Assn. of American Physicians and Surgeons, suggested that "the mission of America is to lead the way in this world, to give an example of what it is possible for men to do with God's help." He said, "Our mission is not to save the world, but to save ourselves, thereby encouraging others to do likewise." He noted that the Assn. in April had adopted a resolution in opposition to the proposed legislation.

Anni M. Wagenfohr of the Baltimore Anti-Communist League urged the Committee "not to repeal but enforce the McCarran-Walter Act of 1952." She said that immigration would change the makeup of the U.S. population.

July 29 -- Rosalind Frame, executive director of Doorstep Savannah, claimed the "United States is one of the few nations whose immigration laws discriminate against no nation and no race. It restricts the number from some nations; however, it forbids entry to none." But, she said, "False propaganda is continuously circulated, claiming the United States discriminates against certain nations."

Sam Baccala, Baltimore district of the American Legion, told the Committee "the rich-sounding words do not cover up the fact that these new (immigration) bills are going to hurt the working man, specialized or unspecialized."

BILL REPORTED

Hemisphere Quota Inserted. On Aug. 25, the same day that arms were twisted in the House to kill the MacGregor amendment, Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach met with Sens. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and agreed that the Administration would not wage an all-out Senate floor fight against a 120,000 Western Hemisphere limitation if such a provision (which was being sponsored in the Senate Judiciary Committee by Ervin) were added in Committee. The agreement also included a provision, sponsored by Dirksen, for a study commission on Western Hemisphere immigration to look into the whole matter of immigration from that area and report back in 1967 and 1968 on whether the 120,000 limitation should be continued, dropped, raised or lowered.

The agreement on this "package" was based on fears the Administration simply did not have enough votes in the Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee to defeat the Ervin amendment, nor, possibly, even to move the entire bill through the Subcommittee. The Subcommittee Aug. 26, by a 5-3 vote, adopted Ervin's 120,000 - person limitation on Western Hemisphere immigration. Sens. Eastland (D Miss.), Ervin (D N.C.), McClellan (D Ark.), Dirksen (R Ill.) and Fong (R Hawaii) voted for the Ervin amendment. Sens. Kennedy (D Mass.), Hart (D Mich.) and Javits (R N.Y.) voted against it.

Report Issued. The Judiciary Committee Sept. 15 reported HR 2580 (S Rept 748) with amendments, after Dirksen had blocked consideration of the bill until the Committee agreed to report out Dirksen's reapportionment measure on state legislatures, an unrelated bill. (See story p. 520)

The Committee vote for the bill was 14 to 2, with Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.) and John L. McClellan (D Ark.) casting the negative votes. Except for insertion of the 120,000 annual ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration, the Committee's amendments to the House-passed bill were minor. (See Floor Action, p. 478, for list of committee amendments.)

The report said that HR 2580, as amended, "does not embody a comprehensive revision of the Immigration and Nationality Act, but has as its primary objective the abolishment of the national origins quota system..."

In minority views, Sens. Eastland and McClellan suggested that "all countries consider their self-interest first" and asked, "Why is it that of all the nations of the world the United States is the only one that must answer to the rest of the world and be apologetic about its immigration policy?"

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.), Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), in separate views, critized the imposition of a ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration, suggesting that "at no other time in the history of our immigration policy have we disturbed or altered the unique relationship that exists among the nations of the New World."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Sept. 22 passed HR 2580 by a 76-18 roll-call vote. On passage, the bill was supported by a majority of Republicans and Northern Democrats, but was opposed by a majority of Southern Democrats (R 24-3; ND 43-2; SD 9-13). (For voting chart, see p. 1074)

The Senate Sept. 22 defeated by a voice vote an amendment offered by Jack Miller (R Iowa) to set an over-all annual ceiling of 290,000 on immigration to the United States. An amendment offered by Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) to prohibit the deportation of anyone who had been forcibly brought into the United States was withdrawn. Thurmond said his amendment resulted from various news reports that General Wessin y Wessin of the Dominican Republic was forced to enter the United States involuntarily and that his status was now uncertain.

While no amendments to HR 2580 were adopted on the Senate floor, the bill as passed by the Senate differed from the House version in several respects because of changes made by the Senate Judiciary Committee in reporting HR 2580. The changes are described below:

● The major change made by the Senate version was the addition of an annual ceiling of 120,000 immigrants from independent countries of the Western Hemisphere.

● HR 2580, as passed by the Senate, also established a Select Commission on Western Hemisphere Immigration to study such immigration and its relation and effects on U.S. population and employment. The Commission was to be composed of 15 persons, nine of whom would be appointed by the President, three by the President of the Senate and three by the Speaker of the House. The Commission was to report to Congress twice -- by July 1, 1967, and by Jan. 15, 1968. Eliminated from the bill was the House provision requiring the President to report to Congress, with recommendations, when immigration from the Western Hemisphere exceeded by 10 percent the average number of persons admitted during the previous five years.

Other Senate changes included:

● Addition of "catastrophic natural calamity" to the reasons for admitting refugees under the seventh preference class. The bill retained the House wording in that preference class for admission of refugees from Communism and areas of the Middle East.

● Provision for refugees from Western Hemisphere nations who have fled persecution or the fear of persecution because of race, religion or political belief from Communist or Communist-dominated countries to adjust their status without having to return to those countries. Because the Immigration and Naturalization Service had had difficulty with nationals from adjacent countries entering the United States and then applying for adjustment of status, the House-passed version prohibited nationals of independent countries of the Western Hemisphere and nationals of "adjacent" islands (such as the colonies of Great Britain, France and the Netherlands) from having their status adjusted in this manner. The Senate provision was added to care for special cases such as Cuban refugees.

● Provision for alien crewmen to adjust their status through the suspension of deportation procedures. Aliens other than immediate relatives and immigrants from independent nations of the Western Hemisphere or "adjacent" islands already were permitted to enter under the House version of HR 2580 and seek adjustment by having a number deducted from the nonpreference visas authorized for the fiscal year.

● Issuance of visas to alien students, provided the students posted bond and showed proof of acceptance at a recognized institution of higher learing. This amendment was designed to permit bona fide students to enter the United States, but to discourage persons from entering on a student's visa and then seeking adjustment of status.

● Provision for all aliens who entered the country illegally before June 28, 1958, to have their status adjusted to that of lawful entrants. The House-passed bill had made no change in existing law, which permitted such adjustments of status only for those who had entered before June 28, 1940.

DEBATE

In the course of four days of debate (Sept. 17, 20-22), most of the same arguments advanced during the House debate were presented. Proponents of HR 2580 claimed that the bill would eliminate the discriminatory national origins quota system and Asia-Pacific triangle provisions without greatly increasing the number of immigrants to the United States or affecting the U.S. level of unemployment or standard of living. Opponents of HR 2580 called discrimination in immigration justified, noting that numerous immigrants, especially from cultures and backgrounds different from those of the United States, would enter and affect the labor supply and living conditions. As in the House, the major point of contention was the ceiling on Western Hemisphere immigration.

Highlights of debate:

Sept. 17 -- Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.), floor manager of HR 2580 -- "This bill is not concerned with increasing immigration to this country, nor will it lower any of the high standards we apply in selection of immigrants. The basic change it makes is the elimination of the national origins quota system, in line with the recommendations of the last four Presidents of the United States, and Members of Congress from both parties."

Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) -- "The wish to preserve one's identity and the identity of one's nation requires no justification -- and no belief in racial or national superiority -- any more than the wish to have one's own children, and to continue one's own family through them, need be justified or rationalized by a belief that they are superior to the children of others.... There is no merit in the contention that the quota system is racist or morally wrong."

Sept. 20 -- Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) -- "Since only an extremely small number of immigrants who are unskilled workers are admitted annually, immigration has only a minimal effect, if at all, on unemployment."

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- The Western Hemisphere ceiling "is most unwise and improvident in terms of" U.S. relations with Latin America.

Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) -- "A system which allows an American citizen to bring to this country a maid or a gardener overnight -- but forces him to wait eight years for his sister -- makes no sense."

Sept. 21 -- James O. Eastland (D Miss.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee -- "Quotas for one country may be larger than quotas for another under the national origins formula, but the same will be true under the formula provided in HR 2580."

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- "If we exclude anybody by law from immigrating to our country, to that extent we discriminate."

Sept. 22 -- Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- "It makes little sense to me to continue to accept large numbers of immigrants when we have almost four million unemployed in the United States at the present time."

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- "Why, for the first time, are the emerging nations of Africa to be placed on the same basis as are our mother countries, Britain, Germany, the Scandinavian nations, France, and the other nations from which most Americans have come?"

John O. Pastore (D R.I.) -- "The bill is saying, in effect, that it does not make any difference where one comes from, that it does not make any difference what the color of one's skin might be, if he can add to the glory of America he will be welcome to come into this country."

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Sept. 22 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Set an over-all annual ceiling of 290,000 on immigration to the United States. Voice vote.

Conference

REPORT. The conference report on HR 2580 was filed Sept. 29 (H Rept 1101).

The major point of disagreement settled by the conference committee was whether or not to institute the first ceiling in U.S. history on immigration from independent countries of the Western Hemisphere. The Senate limit of 120,000 immigrants annually was agreed to by conferees.

The conferees also agreed to the Senate provision establishing a Select Commission on Western Hemisphere Immigration to study such immigration and its relation and effects on U.S. population and employment and to report to Congress twice -- by June 1, 1967, and Jan. 15, 1968. However, the conferees provided for five Commission members to be appointed by the President and five each by the House Speaker and Senate President, instead of the Senate's provision for nine Presidential appointees and three each by the Speaker and Senate President. Eliminated was a House provision requiring the President to report to Congress, with recommendation for action, when immigration from independent countries of the Western Hemisphere exceeded by 10 percent the average number of persons admitted during the previous five years.

Otherwise, the conference committee:

Agreed to include in the definition of refugee persons affected by natural disaster. This provision was added by the Senate.

Agreed to Senate provision permitting the Attorney General to suspend deportation of alien crewmen and adjust their status to that of permanent residents, but added wording making the section applicable only to those individuals who entered before June 30, 1964.

Agreed to Senate provision authorizing discretionary waiver of exclusion for certain relatives who were excludable because of mental illness, providing the Surgeon General determined that the person had been free of such illness for a period of time sufficient to indicate recovery.

Provided for adjustment of status to that of lawful admission for aliens who entered the United States illegally prior to June 30, 1948. The Senate bill added the provision but set the date at June 28, 1958. (Existing law provided for adjustment of status if the entry was before June 28, 1940.)

Dropped the Senate wording on requiring alien students to show proof of acceptance for study (the conferees said this was already in the law and did not need restating) but retained bond requirements for students.

Permitted immigration officers as well as consular officers to administer oaths to persons petitioning for preference standing. This was to make the bill conform to existing procedures.

Deleted the Senate provision permitting aliens born in an independent country of the Western Hemisphere to have their status adjusted to that of a permanent resident when they could not return to their native country because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion or political opinion. The provision was intended to aid Cuban refugees. The House provision had forbidden such adjustment of status for aliens from the Western Hemisphere, in order to discourage natives of the Western Hemisphere from entering the United States on a visitor's visa and then applying for adjustment of status. The House version was retained. However, the conferees directed the Western Hemisphere Commission to study the status of any Cuban refugees temporarily admitted to the U.S. under parole or other provisions.

ACTION. The Senate Sept. 30 by a voice vote and the House the same day by a 320-69 roll-call vote adopted the conference report (H Rept 1101) on the Administration-backed bill. (For voting, see chart p. 1012)

In the House, a motion by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D Texas) to recommit the report with instructions to reject the Senate amendment placing a limit on Western Hemisphere immigration was rejected by a voice vote.

President Signs Bill

President Johnson Oct. 3, at the foot of the Statue of Liberty, signed HR 2580 into law (PL 89-236).

At the signing, the President said that "this is not a revolutionary bill. It does not affect the lives of millions. It will not reshape the structure of our daily lives or add importantly to our wealth and power.... This bill says simply that from this day forth those wishing to emigrate to America shall be admitted on the basis of their skills and their close relationship to those already here."

Mr. Johnson also announced that he would ask Congress for $12.6 million to accomplish the "orderly entrance into the United States" of Cuban refugees -- first, those who have relatives in the United States and then those who are political refugees. Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro Sept. 28 said he would allow Cubans with relatives in the United States to emigrate. (For funds appropriated to aid Cuban refugees, see stories p. 441, 182; for story on Cuban refugees, see p. 482.)

Commission Appointees. Speaker of the House John W. McCormack (D Mass.) Oct. 12 named to the Select Commission on Western Hemisphere Immigration Reps. Celler, Feighan, Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.), William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) and Arch A. Moore Jr. (R W.Va.). Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey Nov. 15 announced that the following Senators would serve on the Commission: Eastland, Hart, Kennedy (Mass.), Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) and Dirksen. The Presidential appointees, including the chairman, had not been named as of Dec. 31, 1965.

Summary of Lobbying

Although public interest in the immigration bill was not as great as it was in measures such as medicare and civil rights, a number of minority ethnic groups, religious groups and labor unions lobbyed in favor of the bill. Several groups, such as the American Legion and American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, supported the Feighan bill, rather than the original Administration proposals; while two groups, the Liberty Lobby and the American Committee on Immigration Policies, opposed all attempts to modify the McCarran-Walter Act.

Major Groups for Bill. The major organizations actively working for passage of immigration reform legislation in 1965, according to a survey by Congressional Quarterly, were the American Immigration and Citizenship Conference; the National Committee for Immigration Reform; a number of minority ethnic groups, among the most active of which were the American Committee for Italian Migration, AHEPA (Greek-Americans), the National Council of Jewish Women and the Japanese American Citizens League; the United Steelworkers of America (AFL-CIO) and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department; the AFL-CIO; the National Council of Churches of Christ; the National Catholic Welfare Conference; and the Lutheran Immigration Service. All these groups favored the initial Johnson proposals outlined Jan. 13 by the President. Labor groups, however, wanted assurances that new immigrants would not provide too much job competition for U.S. workers. A large number of other groups testified for the immigration bill but did not work actively.

Major Groups Against Bill. According to reports obtained by Congressional Quarterly, there was relatively little strong, organized opposition to the immigration bill by large organizations. Among the chief active opponents were the conservative Liberty Lobby and the American Committee on Immigration Policies (formed in 1964 to support the principles of the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act). The total membership of these groups, however, was comparatively small -- far smaller than that of groups supporting the bill.

Major Opponents Neutralized. In past years, the American Legion, American Coalition of Patriotic Societies, and several similar organizations had provided the bone and muscle of organized opposition to proposals for repeal of the national origins quota system. These groups, whose past opposition was based in part on fears that a relaxation of existing restrictions would permit a massive influx of new immigrants, did not actively oppose the immigration bill in 1965 -- a fact cited by many as the major reason for the comparatively easy passage of the measure through Congress. The reason they ceased active opposition was that the Johnson Administration agreed to make substantial revisions in the initial Administration proposals, along lines proposed early in the year by Subcommittee Chairman Feighan. One of the early concessions was the imposition of a 170,000-person over-all quota for the entire world outside the Western Hemisphere. Later in the year, when the Senate added to the bill the 120,000-person limit on annual immigration from the Western Hemisphere, spokesmen for these organizations said one of their major goals had been achieved -- imposing what amounted to an over-all world immigration quota and thus guaranteeing against an excessive number of immigrants.

They pointed out that the net effect of the final bill was to limit immigration to about 320,000 persons a year -- 120,000 from the Western Hemisphere, 170,000 from the rest of the world and 30,000 immediate relatives who would enter quota-free. By comparison, the Johnson Administration's initial proposals would have permitted an estimated entry of 350,000 a year at first, and this eventually could have gone even higher because there was no limit on entries from the Western Hemisphere. (Total immigration in recent years had averaged about 300,000 annually.)

FOR THE BILL

Immigration Conference. A major force for immigration reform, not only in 1965 but in previous years, was the American Immigration and Citizenship Conference, located in New York City. The Conference did not engage in lobbying of Congress as such; rather, it was a clearinghouse and coordinator of information and research on immigration and nationality problems. The AICC came into being in 1960, when two similar organizations merged -- the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship, which had been formed in 1930, and the American Immigration Conference, which had been formed in 1954. From 1960, the AICC was headed by Mrs. Ruth Z. Murphy, a nonpaid executive vice president, who previously had directed the National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship.

The AICC actually consisted of a large number of organizations (about 100 active or affiliated groups) interested in immigration reform. Most of them favored repeal or revision of the national origins quota system. Over the years, the AICC engaged primarily in educational and informational work on immigration -- distributing pamphlets, a bimonthly newsletter, fact sheets, statements and research materials. Its general position was to work for a "non-discriminatory" policy in immigration.

The president of the AICC in 1965 was former Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) and the honorary president was former State Department Chief of Protocol Angier Biddle Duke.

National Committee. In the nation's capital, an important ad hoc lobbying group in favor of the original Administration bill was formed early in 1965 -- the National Committee for Immigration Reform. The group actually consisted solely of individuals, not of organizations, but a large number of the members were affiliated with organizations which were strongly supporting the Johnson Administration bill. The National Committee had its origins in February, when Nathan Straus III of New York City, who was affiliated with radio station WMCA and with various business, Democratic party and civic groups, came to Washington to discuss formation of the Committee with various individuals and groups favoring repeal of the national origins quota system.

The primary objective was to enlist the active support of various influential individuals who would write personal letters to their Representatives and Senators, and help urge others to do so, in favor of immigration changes.

Former Presidents Truman and Eisenhower and a large number of other former public officials of both parties became members. Leading active figures or officers of the group included former Under Secretary of State Robert Murphy, RCA Chairman David Sarnoff, Detroit Edison Co. President Walter L. Cisler, AFL-CIO President George Meany, Inland Steel Co. Chairman Joseph Block and individuals connected with many of the unions and ethnic groups working most strongly for the bill.

In April, Straus hired Mrs. Gladys Uhl, a former newspaperwoman and writer for the Democratic National Committee (1950-60) as information director and Washington coordinator of the group. Mrs. Uhl May 28 filed a registration both for herself and the National Committee for Immigration Reform as lobbyists for the Administration bill. She told CQ Sept. 27 that the group had enlisted 283 members, had collected between $11,000 and $12,000 to cover its expenses, of which $3,200 was used to cover the cost of an advertisement in the Aug. 24 Washington Post on behalf of the bill. The remaining money was for expenses and her salary. She said the group would dissolve once the bill was passed.

Although initiated in February and April, the formation of the group was not publicly announced until June 14, after a substantial number of supporters had indicated adherence. A delegation from the group, headed by Sarnoff, met with the Attorney General and President successively June 16 in the nation's capital.

Early in the year, a Washington "steering committee" was formed to discuss weekly plans and developments. Its members included several of the most active backers of the Administration bill, such as Jack Sheehan of the United Steelworkers (AFL-CIO), Jacob Clayman of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department and National Catholic Welfare Conference Immigration Director John E. McCarthy. Other steering committee members included Mrs. Uhl, Harry Rosenfield (an attorney and immigration specialist), Albert Arent (an attorney connected with the National Community Relations Advisory Council, a council of Jewish community organizations), James Hamilton of the National Council of Churches Washington office, and Mrs. Rachel Bell.

Ethnic Groups. The chief ethnic lobbying for the bill was conducted by organizations representing Americans of Italian, Greek and Japanese stock. In general, minority ethnic groups took the position that a revision of the national origins quota system was needed to remove the stigma of racial or national inferiority (which, they said, was implied by sharp restrictions on immigration from Southern Europe and Asia) or to permit the entry of persons from countries with small quotas and long waiting lists.

The ardent support for the bill demonstrated by American-Italian and American-Greek organizations arose partly from the desire to open up the gates to the many thousands on the waiting lists from those two countries. By all accounts, the American Committee for Italian Migration, headed by Judge Juvenal Marchisio of New York, was the single most active ethnic group working for the bill outside the nation's capital. The group was a member of the American Immigration and Citizenship Conference and Marchisio was a member of the National Committee for Immigration Reform.

Other groups said to be highly active were AHEPA (American-Hellenic Educational Progressive Assn.), the Sons of Italy and the Japanese American Citizens League, the only one of these organizations maintaining a direct Washington, D.C., lobbying operation.

Religious Groups. The National Catholic Welfare Conference, the National Council of Churches of Christ, the Lutheran Immigration Service, the National Council of Jewish Women and a number of other Jewish organizations all gave strong and active support to the bill.

Unions. Major support came from the United Steelworkers of America (AFL-CIO), whose new president, I.W. Abel, was described as particularly interested in immigration reform; and from the Industrial Union Department of the AFL-CIO. The steel union and some of the other large unions in the IUD (Automobile Workers, Clothing Workers) were described as "little Leagues of Nations" containing many first and second generation Americans seeking family reunification. These two union groups were active both in Washington, D.C., and in local lobbying elsewhere in the country. They helped put the muscle in a pressure campaign early in 1965 in Feighan's home district, designed to make clear to Feighan that there was strong support in his district for immigration reform and that he therefore should not delay in bringing a bill out of his Subcommittee. The AFL-CIO national lobbying staff also testified for the bill and lobbied for it, particularly during late August and September. Although immigration was not at the very top of labor's legislative priority list, it was high up.

AGAINST THE BILL

The only organizations which actively worked against the bill from start to finish were the Liberty Lobby and the American Committee on Immigration Policies. The Liberty Lobby, a highly conservative group formed in 1955, claimed (through its executive secretary, W.B. Hicks, who testified in the Senate June 15), to speak for 137,000 persons of various national origins receiving its publications. Hicks testified against the immigration legislation; and Liberty Letter, the group's publication, in its September issue urged a letter-writing campaign against the bill, adding that if the bill were passed, at very least it should include the Western Hemisphere limitation.

Congressional offices said, for the most part, they had seen little or no mail directly traceable to Liberty Lobby. The group may have been responsible, however, for the heavy flow of mail received by Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) in opposition to the bill. Holland's office said he had received about 2,000 letters, at a rate as high as 150 a day at one point, opposing the bill; and many of the letters also were against the U.S.-Russian consular treaty, strongly opposed by the Liberty Lobby.

The Liberty Lobby reported spending $37,448.84 to lobby Congress in 1964.

The American Committee on Immigration Policies was formed in June 1964 to send out educational material in support of the principles of the 1952 Immigration and Nationality Act. The group's director, Robert H. Goldsborough, said it was nonpartisan and that it did oppose the 1965 immigration bill but did not lobby against it directly or urge people to write letters in opposition. He said it was a small group, not a mass membership organization, had little money (he was working on an unpaid basis) and was neither a conservative nor a liberal organization, despite charges made by some liberal groups that it was extremely conservative. He said the group had no affiliation or connection with any other organization.

Goldsborough, a former staff member of the House Un-American Activities Committee (1959-61), said his group had placed advertisements involving immigration in the Chicago Tribune and in a Raleigh, N.C., newspaper (the Raleigh News and Observer of Sept. 5, CQ learned elsewhere), quoting a speech by Rep. O. C. Fisher (D Texas) against the immigration bill. He emphasized that the advertisements did not urge any letter writing against the bill by the public but said he "hoped our material was responsible for some of the letters received by Members of Congress in those areas." Several Congressional offices and lobbyists for the legislation said they did not believe the activities of Goldsborough's group had resulted in much pressure being felt by Congressmen, although it was possible in a few areas.

The ad in the Raleigh paper might have had some effect on Sen. Ervin, possibly strengthening his position in favor of a Western Hemisphere limitation, some observers said, although sources close to Ervin denied he was influenced by this pressure.

Cuban Refugees

In reply to a Sept. 28 announcement by Cuban Prime Minister Fidel Castro that he would allow Cubans to go to the United States to join relatives or as exiles, President Johnson Oct. 3, at the signing of HR 2580, revealed that he had directed the Department of Health, Education and Welfare "to make all necessary arrangements to permit those in Cuba who seek freedom to make an orderly entry into the United States." The President Oct. 5 asked Congress for $12.6 million in fiscal 1966 supplemental appropriations to aid Cuban refugees entering the United States. Congress granted the entire request in the general supplemental funds bill (HR 11588 -- PL 89-309). (For story on HR 11588, see p. 182)

Negotiations between the United States and Cuba, which were concluded Nov. 6 and which provided for a U. S. airlift of two flights a day to bring refugees out of Cuba, were conducted through the Swiss embassy in Havana. Despite the U.S. Government's emphasis on an "orderly, systematic and regular system of transportation" to facilitate the entrance of the refugees and its announcement that it would provide "regular, reliable and safe transportation of refugees at no cost to them or their relatives," a number of Cubans refused to wait until negotiations were completed, embarking on the trip to the United States in small fishing craft and pleasure craft.

Moreover, from Oct. 10 to Dec. 1, the U.S. Government cooperated with and, during the last two weeks of the period, participated in, a systematic sealift of refugees out of Cuba. The sealift and most of the private small boat ventures ended Dec. 1, when the official U.S. airlift operation provided for in the Nov. 6 agreement went into effect on a two-flight-daily basis.

The Nov. 6 airlift agreement provided that first preference for flight to the U.S. on the airlift would go to parents who had children under 21 years of age who were already in the United States, second to children under 21 years of age whose parents were already in the United States, third preference to brothers and sisters under 21 years of age and to spouses, and fourth preference to other relatives who had lived with families moving to the United States. Doctors and technical personnel were not permitted to leave although they were promised the opportunity of doing so at some future date. Males between the ages of 15 and 26 also were not permitted to migrate. (The first preference group -- parents whose minor children were already in the United States -- was given its high priority because, early in the Castro regime, about 15,000 children from Cuba had been sent to the United States by their parents who remained in Cuba.) The United States agreed to provide free air transportation for the 3,000 to 4,000 expected to leave Cuba monthly. No time limit was set on completion of the exodus.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare told Congressional Quarterly that during the small boat-sealift movement from Oct. 10 to Dec. 1, a total of 4,829 persons had been taken from Cuba to the United States; and that from Dec. 1, when the airlift began, through Jan. 6, a total of 3,979 persons had been brought out of Cuba on the airlift, which was still continuing. In addition, the Department said, an average of about 80 persons a month regularly were escaping from Cuba on their own, without being involved in any of the formal or semi-official sealift and airlift operations, and were seeking refuge in the United States.

Administration spokesmen cited the parole provisions of Section 212d5 of the basic Immigration and Nationality Act as authority for bringing in the Cuban refugees under the sealift and airlift -- despite the fact that both the House and Senate Judiciary Committees, in their reports on the 1965 immigration bill (HR 2580), had specifically stated that they did not wish Section 212d5 to be used to bring in large groups of refugees, only isolated persons for special needs. These Committee statements, however, were made before Castro's Sept. 28 offer to allow large groups of refugees to emigrate to the United States, and it was not clear whether either Committee would rebuke the Administration for using Section 212d5 in a manner contrary to the Committees' previously expressed wishes. (Note: The Cuban sealift and airlift refugees had to be brought in under some special procedure, rather than simply entering under regular provisions for immigration from the Western Hemisphere, because there were no U.S. consular officers in Cuba to administer various provisions of the law involving qualifications of applicants for immigration.)

Several Administration spokesmen told CQ that, because of provisions in HR 2580 which forbade persons from the Western Hemisphere, if they had entered the U.S. as parolees or visitors, from having their status adjusted to that of aliens lawfully admitted for immigration, it would not be possible for the Cuban refugees to remain in the U.S. permanently. Unless Congress acted to adjust their status (the special Western Hemisphere study commission set up by HR 2580 was directed to study this matter), or unless there was some reinterpretation of the law, these Cubans would have to go to Mexico, Canada or other such countries where the U.S. had consular offices, and apply for readmission to the United States as regular immigrants from the Western Hemisphere. It had become the regular practice, one Administration spokesman told CQ, for Cubans, previously admitted to the United States under the parole provisions, to mail their documents to U.S. consular offices in Canada, then make a quick trip to Canada for an appearance before the consular officer after their papers had been checked, after which they were readmitted to the United States within a very brief period as regular Western Hemisphere immigrants (provided they met the personal qualifications as to health, character, etc.).

CONGRESS APPROVES COFFEE AGREEMENT ENFORCEMENT

S 701 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 53) Feb. 1, 1965.

- Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 56-23 roll-call vote Feb. 2. (See p. 1026)
- Reported, amended, by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 252) April 19.
- Passed, amended, by the House by a 300-97 roll-call vote May 12. (See p. 960)
- Senate concurred in House amendments by a 61-19 roll-call vote May 13. (See p. 1037)

PL 89-23 -- Signed into law May 22.

Congress in 1965 passed an Administration-backed bill (S 701) to enable the United States to carry out its obligations under the International Coffee Agreement of 1962. The bill authorized the President to limit the importation of coffee from countries not participating in the International Coffee Agreement, and to prohibit the entry of coffee shipments from countries participating in the agreement if the shipments were not accompanied by a certificate of origin or re-export. The bill also authorized the President to require certificates of origin for coffee exported or re-exported from the United States, and to require the keeping of records, statistics, etc., concerning the importation, distribution, prices and consumption of coffee. It directed him to submit annual reports to Congress on the operation of the Agreement. If Congress determined at any time, in a concurrent resolution, that there had been an "unwarranted" increase in coffee prices attributable to the Agreement, the law would expire immediately. Otherwise, it would run until Oct. 1, 1968 (the termination date of the Agreement).

Passage of S 701 was one of the Administration's top priority requests for 1965. Since Oct. 1, 1964, the United States had been in technical violation of the Agreement because it did not have authority to enforce the provisions concerning coffee imports. This was because the House, on Aug. 18, 1964, rejected a similar bill in a surprise defeat for the Administration.

State Department officials said that if Congress failed in 1965 to reverse this defeat, the Coffee Agreement was liable to collapse, with serious consequences for the economies of Latin American and other developing nations. The failure would also mean a diplomatic loss for the United States, they said, since it had helped to bring about the Coffee Agreement.

In contrast to 1964, the coffee measure May 12 easily passed the House on a 300-97 roll-call vote. The principal reasons for the change appeared to be the absence of special factors which combined to defeat the 1964 measure: a rise in the price of coffee and election-year pressures. The new large Democratic majority also helped, since a majority of Republicans continued to oppose the bill.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 701, the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1965:

Provided that the enabling legislation would remain in effect until Oct. 1, 1968, but would expire if Congress by concurrent resolution determined that there had been an "unwarranted increase" in coffee prices, or if the Coffee Agreement was terminated.

Authorized the President to limit entry into the United States of coffee imported from countries not participant to the Agreement; to prohibit entry of coffee shipments from participating members that were not accompanied by certificates of origin or re-export; to require certificates of origin for coffee shipments exported or re-exported from the United States; and to require record-keeping concerning coffee importation, distribution, prices and consumption.

Required the President to submit an annual report to Congress on the operation of the Agreement, including information on the level of coffee prices and a summary of actions taken by the United States and the International Coffee Council to protect U.S. consumers.

Authorized the appropriation of funds necessary to carry out the Agreement, but limited U.S. contributions for administration of the Agreement to 20 percent of total contributions and not more than $150,000 per fiscal year.

Specified that before the Act would become effective, the President would have to determine and report to Congress that it would not result in an "unwarranted increase" in coffee prices to U.S. consumers.

REFERENCES -- 1964 Almanac p. 329; 1963 Almanac p. 319.

The United States Sept. 29, 1962, along with 32 coffee exporting nations and 21 other importing countries, signed the International Coffee Agreement, which was designed to prevent major fluctuations in the world coffee market by stabilizing minimum world prices at the 1962 level. The purpose was to end a long down-trend in coffee prices, stabilize production and so protect the foreign exchange and internal economies of coffee-producing countries. These countries were concentrated in Latin America, but some were in Africa and Asia as well. All were "developing" countries. Over an eight-year period, the world price for Brazilian coffee (the most commonly used kind) had declined from an all-time high of 79 cents a pound in 1954 to a price of 34 cents a pound in 1962.

Following adoption of the International Coffee Agreement, the price climbed back to about 50 cents a pound in March 1964. In October 1964 it was still nearly 47 cents a pound; by October 1965 the price had dropped to about 42 cents a pound.

The International Coffee Agreement set up an International Coffee Organization to establish basic export quotas for producing countries, thereby preventing dumping; required importing countries to limit purchases from nonparticipating countries, but did not place any quota restrictions on imports from participants; and required exporting nations to provide certificates of origin with their shipments to aid enforcement efforts.

The Senate in 1965 ratified the Coffee Agreement, and the Agreement went into effect on Oct. 1, 1963, for five years. To assure U.S. membership in the International Coffee Council, policy-making body of the International Coffee Organization, the State Department deposited the U.S. instruments of ratification before the Dec. 31, 1963, cut-off date for participation, although under normal procedure the United States does not formally accede to a treaty until Congress has approved implementing legislation. Once the ratification was formalized, the United States began participating in those activities which did not require legislation, the most important being membership on the International Coffee Council, where annual quotas are set.

On Oct. 1, 1964, the Organization required importing countries to begin enforcement of the Agreement provisions barring imports which did not bear a certificate of origin. However, the United States was unable to comply until May 22, 1965, when S 701, implementing U.S. participation in the Agreement, was signed into law.

1964 Bill Rejected. The House in November 1963, by a 181-145 roll-call vote, passed an Administration bill (HR 8864) implementing U.S. participation in the Coffee Agreement. The Senate in July 1964 also passed HR 8864, amending it to provide that if Congress found that there had been an "unwarranted" increase in coffee prices attributable to the Agreement, it could direct the President to request remedial action from the Coffee Organization. If no action were taken in 30 days, the amendment authorized the President to file notice of withdrawal from the Agreement. It was sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.).

Conferees on HR 8864 accepted the Dirksen amendment. But the conference report on the bill was rejected by the House Aug. 18 in a surprise defeat for the Administration. The vote was 183-194. During debate, House Members complained of the rise in coffee prices during 1963 and 1964, and attributed this in part to the quotas set under the Agreement. They also complained that the United States had agreed to these quotas without waiting for Congress to pass implementing legislation, so that Congress was faced with a fait accompli. These factors contributed to the vote against HR 8864, particularly among Republicans. But observers believed that the major factor in the defeat was that the bill came up immediately after the House, that same day, had passed a bill authorizing quotas on meat imports. The meat import quota bill, although opposed by most Northern Democrats, had been worked out by cattle interests and Administration officials, and was expected to result in higher beef prices. Observers believed a number of Northern Democratic Congressmen broke with the Administration on the coffee bill because they were dissatisfied with the meat quota bill and did not want the responsibility for passing additional legislation that might raise consumer prices in an election year. (1964 Almanac p. 133)

Whatever the reason, the Administration considered the bill dead for the year. But President Johnson Oct. 14, 1964, said he would "press for prompt execution of the worldwide coffee agreement" as soon as Congress returned in 1965. Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) introduced an Administration bill to carry out his promise (S 701) on Jan. 26, 1965.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HELD HEARINGS -- Jan. 27 on S 701, the Administration bill to implement U.S. participation in the International Coffee Agreement.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 27 -- Under Secretary of State George W. Ball said that unless Congress passed implementing legislation, "there would be a withering away of the interest of other nations" in the Agreement and a feeling on the part of Latin American nations that the United States did not mean to carry out its promises to try to do something to ease the cyclical problems of primary producing countries. Ball said that during the period in which the United States was in technical violation of the Agreement (beginning Oct. 1, 1964), it had requested voluntary cooperation of coffee importers, but had no enforcement powers adequate to police the Agreement.

Ball stressed the importance of the Agreement to U.S. foreign policy and the Alliance for Progress. He said: "Coffee is the single most important agricultural commodity in the trade of most of the developing countries, particularly in Latin America. Coffee exports account for more than 50 percent of all exports in six Latin American countries and an average of 25 percent in all the 14 Latin American exporting nations. Seven new African countries receive from 30 to 50 percent of their foreign exchange earnings from coffee. About 20 million persons in the world depend on coffee for their livelihood; more than 60 percent of them in Latin America."

Ball said, "The agreement has already helped to bring some stability to coffee prices." He noted the parallels between the coffee supply and demand situation in the summer of 1963 and in 1954, when there was no agreement. In the earlier year, coffee buying, touched off by a severe frost that reduced Brazilian coffee production, drove prices from 58 cents a pound to over 90 cents a pound. In 1963, demand and prices again jumped when frost and drought crippled Brazilian production, but the members of the International Coffee Organization voted to increase export quotas, and prices declined.

John F. McKiernan, president of the National Coffee Assn., said his organization believed "that the Coffee Agreement, properly and fairly administered, can serve a useful purpose for consuming countries as well as producing countries by bringing stability to the world coffee market.... Congress should enact the necessary enabling legislation." He said that the members of the Association of importing, roasting and distributing firms "represent about 85 percent of the total tonnage of coffee consumed in this country."

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 1 reported S 701 (S Rept 53) by an 8-6 vote. (Individual positions were not made public.)

The Committee version of the bill differed in one major respect from the bill drafted by the Administration. It provided that Congress could rescind the legislation to implement the International Coffee Agreement by passing a concurrent resolution declaring that there had been an "unwarranted" increase in coffee prices. This amendment to S 701 was sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.). It replaced a milder Administration provision which would have made it the sense of Congress that the United States should adhere to the International Coffee Agreement only so long as there was no unwarranted increase in coffee prices; would have permitted the Congress, by joint resolution, or the President to determine that such an increase had occurred; and would have stated that in such case the President "should" apply to the International Coffee Organization for corrective action and, if the Organization failed to take action within 75 days, make recommendations to Congress. The Administration proposal was advanced as preferable to the 1964 Dirksen amendment to the earlier coffee legislation (HR 8864). (For details, see above)

Majority Views. The Committee said the bill would bring "a measure of stability to coffee prices throughout the world." "In accomplishing this," the report said, "not only will we be strengthening the Alliance for Progress which is an important part of the Administration's program, but also...through the mechanism of the International Coffee Organization we can isolate our consumers from the extreme fluctuations which caused them to have to pay record prices for coffee a few years ago when there was no agreement."

Minority Views. The opponents charged that the Coffee Agreement "serves us no purpose but to increase the price our consumers must pay for the coffee they buy.... After we joined the coffee cartel, coffee prices immediately began an upward spiral.... Inevitably, enactment of this bill will be followed by new pressures to force prices up still higher." The opponents said they feared "the precedent that is being set today (by S 701) inevitably will be relied upon by the State Department, and others, to justify future agreements which serve to redistribute the wealth of the world by requiring American consumers to pay more for foreign products than they may be worth. We are concerned that the American consumer may thus soon find himself supporting the world price for an endless procession of these products from tropical countries." The minority report was signed by Committee Chairman Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and Sens. Frank Carlson (R Kan.), John J. Williams (R Del.), Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.).

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Feb. 2 passed S 701 by a 56-23 roll-call vote. There were no floor amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 1026)

In debate, most opposition to the bill was based on the increase in U.S. retail coffee prices since the International Coffee Agreement had gone into effect in 1963 (from 70 cents a pound to 85 cents a pound). Opponents of the bill argued that the Agreement created an international cartel to reduce coffee exports and raise prices in importing countries. Supporters said the Senate Finance Committee amendment assured the maintenance of reasonable coffee prices.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Latin American Affairs, said the Coffee Agreement was "vital" to U.S. relations with Latin American countries and to the success of the Alliance for Progress. He said, "The lowering of the price of coffee per pound in Latin America is a loss to Latin America that is far in excess of the millions of dollars that we pour into Latin America by way of aid."

Supporting Morse's contention, Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said: "A sharp decline in the price of one commodity can wipe out in one afternoon our combined efforts to raise standards of living in Latin America through private and public investment. It is estimated, for example, that each decline of 1 cent per pound in the price of coffee means a loss of $70 million in the foreign exchange earnings of the 35 principle producing countries in Latin America and elsewhere.... The price of coffee has fallen about 42 percent within the last 5 or 6 years." Javits agreed that stabilization of coffee prices by price guarantees and limitations on production was an "imperfect" method, but said it was necessary "to deter erosion for the present, so that the forces of recovery, development and diversification of the economies of these countries may be given a chance to get started."

Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) said there were a number of assurances in the Agreement and the enabling bill that U.S. consumers would not be "victimized by price fixing." He cited the committee amendment and the fact that the U.S. exercised 400 of the 1000 consumer votes in the International Coffee Council and thus had "virtual veto power over the fixing of annual (coffee export) quotas," which required a two-thirds majority.

Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) argued that the Agreement had been effective in stabilizing coffee prices since 1963. He said that the rise in coffee prices during the 1963-64 period had been caused by the "panicky buying of coffee roasters in fear of an impending shortage following a severe frost in Brazil." Smathers said the Coffee Agreement dealt with the "crisis" by increasing quotas "to provide the market with coffee from stocks in warehouses inside the producing countries.... The feared shortages never materialized and the sharp price rises which might have occurred in the absence of the coffee agreement were avoided."

Sen. Frank Carlson (R Kan.), second-ranking Republican on the Finance Committee, strongly opposed passage of S 701. He argued that the agreement "operates to levy an excise tax on American coffee consumers for the purpose of paying subsidies to already wealthy coffee growers, processors and speculators; and it does this indirectly, without the formality of a taxing act." Carlson said: "For every 1-cent rise in the price of coffee the American consumer must pay an additional $32.5 million a year for the coffee he drinks. And in the 13 months that we have been party to the Agreement there has been a 15-cent rise in the price of coffee. At this rate the Coffee Agreement is already taking from our consumers more than $487 million a year."

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) said his committee amendment allowing Congress to revoke the implementing authority, as well as procedures provided by the Agreement, constituted a "fairly good safeguard" for American consumer interests. He said the amendment meant that "Congress is free at any time, on ascertaining that coffee prices have increased to the point where we should take cognizance of the fact, to enact a concurrent resolution and, in so doing, bring it to the attention of the President." He said the resolution would have the effect of "stimulating an increased quota in order to head off a possible price increase."

Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) said the Coffee Agreement "constitutes an international price-fixing cartel (and)...establishes a dangerous precedent that will almost certainly result in extending this principle to such other commodities as tea, cocoa, soybeans and other products."

Sen. Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) said the Coffee Agreement would aid the Hawaiian coffee industry which "is absolutely dependent on world market prices." "Without the Agreement," he said, "I am afraid that the price of coffee will continue to be erratic and may force many of our farmers out of business."

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- April 19 reported S 701 (H Rept 252). The Committee added an amendment to the Senate-passed bill which limited U.S. contributions toward the administrative costs of the Agreement to $150,000 a year.

Majority Views. The report said the Committee believed there were "built-in safeguards in the treaty that are designed to assure an adequate supply of coffee at fair prices" -- principally the voting power of the United States and other consuming countries. But it endorsed the Senate amendment providing for revocation of the implementing authority granted in S 701 if Congress determined in a concurrent resolution that there had been an unwarranted increase in coffee prices.

Individual Views. Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) said he was "reluctant to recommend" S 701 because the "use of a government-sponsored cartel to stabilize coffee prices will not in the long run benefit the producing countries it is primarily intended to assist." He said the Agreement represented "political decisionmaking," supplanting "the use of the market place...to produce economic decisions." (Curtis voted for S 701.)

FLOOR ACTION

The House May 12, by a 300-97 roll-call vote, passed S 701, amended, and returned it to the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 960)

In 1964, the House rejected a similar bill on a close, 183-194 roll-call vote. The breakdown was, in 1964: R 23-135; D 160-59 (ND 89-37; SD 71-22). The same in 1965: R 50-80; D 250-17 (ND 171-4; SD 79-13). The swing votes came principally from Northern Democrats and from Republicans representing populous Northern districts. (1964 Almanac p. 659)

Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), the bill's floor manager, said the measure would promote price stability and check "wild price swings" for coffee. Much Republican debate against the bill was summed up by H.R. Gross (R Iowa), who said it created a "windfall for the coffee barons" of Latin America and stabilized prices "at an artificially high level."

Before passing S 701, the House added an amendment to the bill as reported by Ways and Means which specified that the legislation would not become effective until the President determined and reported to Congress that it would not result in "an unwarranted increase" in U.S. coffee prices. The amendment, by Paul Findley (R Ill.), was accepted by voice vote. Prior to passage, the House, by voice vote, rejected a motion by Findley to recommit (kill) the bill.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

May 12 -- Paul Findley (R Ill.) -- Require that before the Act became effective, the President determine and report to Congress that it would not cause an unwarranted increase in consumer coffee prices. Voice vote.

Final Action

The Senate May 13, on a 61-19 roll-call vote, concurred in House amendments to S 701, sending the bill to the President. (For voting, see chart p. 1037)

BILL SIGNED. President Johnson May 22 signed S 701 into law (PL 89-23). He stated that he had transmitted to Congress, in accordance with its provisions, "the determination that the Act will not result in an unwarranted increase in coffee prices to United States consumers." In his statement, Mr. Johnson said, "The United States is now in a position to do its full part in making the International Coffee Agreement an effective instrument.... Coffee dominates the economy of Latin America and many countries in Africa and Asia as well. More than 20 million persons depend directly on coffee for their livelihood. The hopes of these countries and these people for economic and social progress are tied to coffee. A weak and disorderly coffee market is of deep concern to them and to us...."

MONETARY FUND INCREASE

HR 6497 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 222) April 1, 1965.
- Passed by the House by a 301-88 roll-call vote April 27. (See p. 954)
- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 196) May 19.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 24.

PL 89-31 -- Signed into law June 2.

HR 6497 authorized an increase of $1,035,000,000 in the U.S. contribution to the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The sum represented the U.S. share of a general 25-percent increase in IMF quotas, and brought the total U.S. obligation to the Fund to $5,160,000,000. Only minor objections to the increase were raised in Congress but House Republicans used the bill as a vehicle for criticizing the Administration's balance-of-payments program.

President Johnson March 17 requested enactment of HR 6497. He said the proposed increases in IMF quotas would "contribute importantly to the economic health of the Free World." Mr. Johnson said expanded Fund resources would help to promote growth of world trade and bilateral credit facilities, strengthen the position of the IMF, finance temporary balance-of-payments deficits and increase the Fund's holdings of major currencies.

Passage of HR 6497 accompanied growing U.S. and foreign interest in reform of the international monetary system. The basic criticism of the existing system was that it contained no adequate mechanism to insure that world monetary reserves (gold, convertible currencies, and credit) would expand sufficiently to meet the demands of growing world trade and economic development. The possibility of a shortage in reserves came to the forefront when the United States achieved a balance-of-payments surplus in the second quarter of 1965. U.S. balance-of-payments deficits for the past six years had been the main source of foreign countries' additional dollar reserves, providing the main source of international liquidity. Thus, an end of the U.S. payments deficit would have serious implications for international liquidity.

In his Feb. 10 message to Congress on balance-of-payments problems, the President said the Government for some time had been "jointly exploring with our major trading partners how best to create new reserve assets that will be available if needed to supplement gold and dollars." (For story on the balance of payments, see p. 865; for text of the message, see p. 1390)

In August Mr. Johnson sent Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler and Under Secretary of State George W. Ball on a two-week European trip to seek agreement among the major European capitals on preliminary steps for holding international monetary negotiations. Further arrangements for negotiations among major industrial nations were made at the IMF meeting Sept. 27-Oct. 1 in Washington.

The increased IMF quotas expanded the Fund's resources to finance payments deficits and other transactions, thereby adding to world liquidity. The general increases did not, however, relieve pressure on the dollar or the pound sterling as the basic currencies used in international transactions. Discovering new methods of creating additional reserves to supplement the dollar and pound remained the principal task of international monetary reform.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law HR 6497:

Authorized the U.S. Governor of the International Monetary Fund (the Secretary of the Treasury) to consent to an increase of $1,035,000,000 in the U.S. subscription to the Fund (bringing the total authorized U.S. contribution to $5,160,000,000). The bill also authorized appropriation of the funds.

The fiscal 1966 Treasury-Post Office appropriations bill (HR 7060 -- PL 89-57) granted the full $1,035,000,000. Of this amount, $259 million (one-quarter of the total amount) would be paid in gold while the remaining $776 million would remain on call in the U.S. Treasury.

Background

REFERENCES -- World Bank Increase (1959 Almanac p. 195); Loan to Monetary Fund (1962 Almanac p. 342).

The International Monetary Fund was established by the Bretton Woods Conference of 1944 to deal with problems of foreign exchange. The Fund was designed to promote convertibility of currencies and stability of exchange markets by helping countries to finance temporary balance-of-payments deficits without resorting to measures restrictive to trade. As of April 30, 1965, the Fund had 102 member nations.

The Fund is essentially a pool of free world currencies, available to each member to meet temporary shortages of foreign exchange. The currencies are originally supplied to the pool by each member country through its subscription, or quota. The Fund also buys currencies at need. Each member's quota is based on various economic factors including the member's international trade, its national income and its reserves of gold and convertible foreign currencies. From time to time quotas are adjusted, usually to reflect an increase in a member's reserves. In addition, the Fund periodically reviews all quotas in the light of the growth of international trade. All quotas were increased 50 percent in 1959, when the original U.S. quota of $2,750,000,000 was raised to $4,125,000,000. (1959 Almanac p. 195)

Quota Increases. The 25 percent increase in quotas was recommended by the Fund's Executive Directors in February 1965 and accepted by the Board of Governors in April. The Governors also accepted a resolution of the Executive Directors providing for special increases in the quotas of 16 newly prosperous countries to more accurately reflect their financial positions. Included in this category were Austria, Canada, West Germany, Japan, Mexico, Spain and Sweden. The special increases amounted to $870 million.

The quota changes would not become effective until member countries with two-thirds of the Fund's total quotas agreed to accept the proposed increases in their own quotas. The deadline for consent, originally set for September 1965, was extended to March 1966.

The general 25 percent quota increase for all members, together with the special increases of the newly prosperous countries would raise total Fund quotas from the current $16,093,000,000 to approximately $21,046,000,000.

Normally, each country pays its quota one-quarter in gold and three-quarters in its own currency. A country's quota sets the limit it may draw in other currencies. In making a drawing, a country buys from the Fund other members' currencies and pays with its own currency. It is obligated to repurchase its currency within three to five years by offering other convertible currencies or gold in payment. (A convertible currency is one that can be readily exchanged for other currencies without restrictions in current trade transactions. There are currently about 25 convertible currencies. The term does not imply that the currency can be converted into gold on demand to the issuing country; only the U.S. dollar carries this promise in international transactions.) All drawings must be approved by the Fund's Board of Directors, but a country is virtually assured of being able to draw currencies equivalent to the portion of its quota paid in gold -- its "gold tranche" or share of the Fund's gold subscriptions. ("Tranche" is French for slice, as in slice of pie.)

The United States did not make use of the Fund until 1963, when it began to draw foreign currencies for the following reason: Under Fund rules, countries may not repay their drawings in currencies which the Fund holds in excess of 75 percent of the currency's quota. The Fund's dollar holdings dropped as low as 21 percent of the U.S. quota at the end of 1957, but due to the continuing U.S. balance-of-payments deficit, by 1963 Fund holdings of dollars had reached 75 percent of the U.S. quota. Thus countries holding dollars could no longer use them to repay Fund drawings. Normally these countries would have converted their dollars to gold with which to repay the Fund. But the United States exercised its rights to draw foreign currencies acceptable for repayment and sold them for dollars to countries which wished to repay the Fund. As a result of these transactions, the Fund's dollar holdings amounted in early 1965 to 81 percent of the U.S. quota.

In 1962 Congress authorized the United States to lend up to $2 billion to the IMF for a standby pool of $6 billion contributed by 10 major industrial nations for stabilization of any of their currencies threatened by balance-of-payments difficulties. The pool was established by the General Arrangements to Borrow, and its members are known as the Group of Ten: Belgium, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Sweden, United Kingdom and United States. (1962 Almanac p. 342)

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 23-24.

ACTION -- April 1 reported HR 6497 (H Rept 222).

Majority Views. The report said the proposed increase in IMF quotas was "clearly inadequate." It said that a 50 percent general increase in quotas "would have come closer to meeting the foreseeable needs of the future." The report noted that the Fund had proposed additional special quota increases for Germany, Canada, Japan and Sweden to reflect the growth of their reserves and participation in international trade, and it said Italy had doubled its quota in 1964. But it charged that several members of the Group of Ten, particularly France, the Netherlands and Belgium, had "fallen far short of meeting their responsibilities for contributing to the supply of international credit." It noted that the three countries had refused special quota increases despite the manyfold growth of their reserves, and pointed out that France had voted against "even the general increase in quotas."

The Committee said steps must be taken to strengthen the international monetary system by a multilateral program "for generating international reserves and credit to fill the gap between legitimate world needs and the supply made available through new gold production, gold dishoarding, the proposed enlargement of Fund resources and...modest increases in foreign holdings of the reserve currencies."

The report said that the gold which the United States contributed as part of its quota increase would not adversely affect the balance of payments since the "gold tranche" of the United States was counted part of its international reserves. It estimated that special measures planned by the Fund and other contributing nations would have the effect of cutting to between $25 and $45 million the gold loss to the United States resulting from gold purchases by other countries to meet their increased Fund quotas. The majority complained that these arrangements were "unnecessarily complicated," but observed that "international financial matters are often hard to understand."

Supplemental Views. Ten of the 11 minority members on the Committee filed supplemental views charging that the Fund's arrangements to reduce the impact of the general quota increase on the U.S. gold reserves amounted to a "fast shuffle of assets" and "window dressing" made necessary by "neglect" of the nation's balance-of-payments deficit. The minority said the Administration program to end the balance-of-payments deficit was merely "expedient" and only delayed the "day of reckoning when the United States will have to face up to the disciplines" required by chronic balance-of-payments deficits. (Seymour Halpern (N.Y.) did not sign the Republican views.)

FLOOR ACTION

The House April 27, by a roll-call vote of 301-88, passed and sent to the Senate HR 6497, authorizing an increase of $1,035,000,000 in the U.S. contribution to the IMF. (For voting, see chart p. 954)

The bill was supported by both the Democratic and Republican leadership. However, prior to passage Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) backed a motion by Rep. Harold P. Collier (R Ill.) to recommit the bill to the House Banking and Currency Committee. The recommittal motion was rejected by a 113-275 roll call. W. E. Brock III (R Tenn.), a member of the Committee, said the recommittal vote would register criticism of the Administration's program to eliminate the balance-of-payments deficit, rather than opposition to the bill. Ford, Brock, 37 other Republicans and two Virginia Democrats (Abbitt and Tuck) who supported the recommittal motion subsequently voted for passage of HR 6497.

Brock said the Administration's steps to solve the problem created by the balance-of-payments deficit -- including the Interest Equalization Tax, removal of gold backing from Federal Reserve notes to obtain more gold to pay foreign debts, voluntary restraints on capital outflow, Treasury Department arrangements to swap currencies with various European countries, reduction of the import duty-free exemption for tourists, sponsoring an increase in IMF resources and others -- were "misdirected away from the real cause" of the balance-of-payments problem. "Virtually every Administration effort to correct our balance-of-payments deficit is characterized by placing the blame on the private sector of our economy," he argued. Brock said the real problem was that "We do not have sufficient external resources to meet our annual Government obligations, leading to the present situation where we have to borrow abroad in order to pay our bills for foreign aid and military commitments." He said there was a danger that the current program of voluntary restraints on business would lead to mandatory controls.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.
HELD HEARINGS -- May 6.
ACTION -- May 19 reported HR 6497 (S Rept 196).

Majority Views. The report stated that the bill would "contribute to the monetary stability and balanced growth of the free world community." It added, however, that the measure would not reduce the U.S. need "to pursue effective means of rapidly improving its (balance of) payments position, or the need for a strengthened international monetary system."

Supplemental Views. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), although supporting the bill, said the measure should be viewed as "merely a stopgap measure." The United States must strive to improve the present international monetary system, which "is essentially a primitive mechanism far too inhibited by outmoded concepts of unlimited national sovereignty," Clark said. He concluded: "The United States can no longer be asked to sacrifice its own economic viability in order to maintain international credit and trade. This is properly an international responsibility. And the present arrangements under the International Monetary Fund meet that responsibility only a little more than halfway."

FLOOR ACTION. The Senate May 24, by voice vote without debate, passed HR 6497 and sent it to the President.

Joint Committee Hearings

The House-Senate Joint Economic Committee's International Exchange and Payments Subcommittee Sept. 3 issued a committee print, "Guidelines for Improving the International Monetary System," summarizing deficiencies in the system and proposing guidelines for improvements. The Subcommittee July 27-29 had held hearings on the subject. Subcommittee members included five Democrats (Reps. Henry S. Reuss (Wis.), Richard Bolling (Mo.), Hale Boggs (La.) and Sens. Paul H. Douglas (Ill.) and William Proxmire (Wis.)) and three Republicans (Reps. William B. Widnall (N.J.), Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.) and Sen. Jack Miller (Iowa)).

TESTIMONY -- July 28 -- Dr. Henry C. Wallich, professor of economics at Yale University, disagreed with the accepted view that there was danger of a liquidity shortage. He argued that "widespread predominance of inflationary pressures" in most developing and European countries did not signal a liquidity shortage "of the kind that might threaten to bring on world deflation." He added that the U.S. objective in the forthcoming negotiations on international monetary reform was to secure the dollar's role as an important element in world liquidity. To do this, Wallich said, the United States would have to give assurances that it was able to "more effectively" control its balance-of-payments deficits.

Sens. Vance Hartke (D Ind.) and Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.), in a joint statement, recommended that the IMF be empowered to extend commercial trade credits as a means of increasing international liquidity. The trade credits would be financed by requiring IMF members to subscribe additional amounts of gold. In exchange, each member would be "empowered to issue trade credits against the actual shipment of goods up to an amount two, three, or four times the absolute amount of the gold subscription," leaving the amount of the gold subscription and the size of the multiple to "administrative decision and international negotiations."

Dr. Robert A. Mundell, a Brookings Institution economist, said the greatest danger in adhering to a gold-exchange standard was the risk of "collapse by miscalculation" resulting from a major crisis, such as escalation of the war in Viet Nam or devaluation of the British pound sterling. He noted that devaluation of the pound would bring heavy selling pressure on the dollar as each nation attempted to protect the value of its reserves. To forestall such an emergency, Mundell suggested the establishment of a "contingency" fund whereby European central banks would pledge a certain amount of their domestic currencies as "insurance against a run on the dollar or sterling."

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

SUMMARY -- Major deficiencies of the international monetary system outlined by the Subcommittee report were as follows:

- There was no adequate mechanism to ensure that credit facilities, including the IMF, would expand sufficiently to keep pace with the growing demand for reserves.
- The system was subject to the instability that might arise if a foreign nation suddenly decided to liquidate its holdings of foreign currencies. Such action would place the reserve countries whose balances were being liquidated under severe pressure and might even cause involuntary devaluation. Should such a devaluation occur, the entire international monetary system would be severely disrupted, since a reserve currency, once devalued, loses acceptability as an international reserve asset.
- Domestic economic policies to ensure price stability and maximum employment conflicted with free market forces which would normally operate to restore international equilibrium. In fact, such policies often intensified international imbalances. In addition, the burden of adjustment fell on those nations whose capacity to incur deficits was largest, such as the United States.

Despite the deficiencies, the report pointed out that the international monetary system had provided "a relatively steady rate of growth in world reserves since 1959" and that the surplus nations of Western Europe, especially West Germany and France, had experienced high rates of reserve accumulation. It indicated, however, that the high rates of reserve accumulation in Western Europe and the steady rate of growth in world reserves were financed in large measure through U.S. balance-of-payments deficits.

GUIDELINES -- To assure an "orderly and adequate expansion of international liquidity," the Subcommittee recommended 12 guidelines for reforming the system:

- World liquidity needs could not be met through existing sources of reserves (gold, dollars and pounds sterling) or even through the addition of new reserve currencies. New ways of creating international reserves would have to be discovered.
- Nothing should be done to expand or undermine the international role of the dollar. Concurrently, the United States should work for a plan for a new reserve creation which would not encourage or require countries to convert existing balances or new acquisitions of reserve currencies into gold or the new reserve medium. This would help maintain the role of the dollar.
- Gold should continue in its present role as a universal medium of international exchange, but nothing should be done to enhance its value in relation to other forms of reserve assets. No arrangement should be implemented which would induce holders of reserve currencies to convert those currencies into gold.
- Any new reserve creation should be accomplished through agreed minimum annual increases with supplements to be determined by annual decision.
- The new arrangements should be carried out under the IMF.
- The newly created reserves should be distributed to all IMF members qualifying under criteria equally applicable to all countries.
- While the new reserves should not be used as a foreign aid device to aid less-developed countries, since securing such reserves by the credit of less-developed countries could impair their acceptability, the benefits of any new reserve creation should be extended to countries "meeting suitable minimum standards of international financial conduct."
- The IMF could create new reserves by adopting a new reserve unit (CRU), making borrowing rights more automatic and larger without requiring additional gold deposits, or by special operations in currencies, gold or deposits.
- The IMF's conditional credit facilities should be expanded at the same time any new reserves were created.
- The current structure of quotas should be revised to insure that economically advanced nations, such as France, the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany, contributed larger quotas to the IMF commensurate with their economic position.
- The present system of bilateral "swap" arrangements against short-term instability should be expanded.
- International financial reforms should be supplemented by improvements in the "adjustment process" which brings international payments imbalances to an end. Specifically, efforts should be made to have national fiscal and monetary policies complement each other, agreement should be sought with other countries on guidelines for restricting capital movements for balance-of-payments reasons, and the advantages and disadvantages of widening the permissible limits of exchange rate variation should be examined thoroughly as an essential ingredient in international monetary reform.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Sept. 7 -- Robert V. Roosa, former Under Secretary of the Treasury for Monetary Affairs (1961-1964), announced his own proposals for monetary reform. The "Roosa Plan" was similar to other proposals recommending the creation of a new reserve unit. Under the plan, key industrial nations would contribute portions of their own currencies to a "fund unit account" within the IMF. In return, each depositor would receive a usable reserve asset, called a "checking account deposit." The new reserve units would then be distributed among the participants in the scheme in proportion to use of their currencies in international reserves.

PEACE CORPS

S 2054 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 267) May 27, 1965.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by voice vote June 2.

HR 9026 -- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 530) June 21.

S 2054 -- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote July 29.
- Conference report (H Rept 728) agreed to by voice votes of the House Aug. 10 and the Senate Aug. 11.

PL 89-134 -- Signed into law Aug. 24.

Congress in 1965 passed a bill (S 2054) authorizing $115 million for the Peace Corps in fiscal 1966, the same amount authorized for the previous year. The sum was requested by the President April 22. Later, in the foreign aid appropriations bill (HR 10871), Congress appropriated $102 million in new funds for the Peace Corps and continued the availability of $12.1 million in unspent funds from the previous appropriation. This brought the total fiscal 1966 appropriation to $114.1 million, which was a $10 million increase over funds provided in fiscal 1965. It was intended to support 15,110 Peace Corps volunteers by the end of August 1966.

S 2054 created a unified, non-career personnel system for the Peace Corps' foreign and domestic staffs, with appointments under the new system limited to a maximum of five years' service. The bill also made minor changes in the operation and regulations of the Corps.

The Senate version of the bill included a floor amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) which would have prohibited R. Sargent Shriver from holding both the office of Director of the Peace Corps and Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) "at one and the same time." The provision was not contained in the bill as enacted.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 2054:

Authorized $115 million for the Peace Corps in fiscal 1966, of which not more than $500,000 was to be spent for carrying out research.

Authorized the use of appropriate provisions of the Foreign Service Act for establishing categories and pay rates in the appointment of U.S.-based employees of the Peace Corps. This provision brought headquarters personnel, previously appointed under Civil Service authority, under the same personnel procedures applied to Peace Corps staff members abroad, thereby creating a unified personnel system.

Limited the term of appointments to the Peace Corps staff to no more than five years, with a one-year extension allowed in exceptional cases personally determined by the Peace Corps Director, and provided that no person whose appointment had terminated could be reappointed before the expiration of a period of time equal to his preceding tour of duty.

Authorized the payment of compensation for positions of a routine nature at rates below the minimum established for members of the Foreign Service staff, waived the salary differential generally paid to federal employees in Puerto Rico and made other adjustments and exceptions dealing with employees under the new unified personnel structure.

Authorized the Peace Corps to transfer gifts of money from private U.S. groups to organizations abroad with which Peace Corps volunteers were working, as a means of facilitating people-to-people programs. (Current transfers were limited to property.)

Increased from 100 to 200 the number of clerical and secretarial volunteers who may work on the staff of Peace Corps representatives abroad.

Permitted the lump-sum readjustment payments received by Corps members at the end of their service to be treated, for tax purposes, as if they were paid out over the length of their service.

Extended the scope of health examination and dental care programs authorized for volunteers.

Background

REFERENCES -- 1961 Almanac p. 324; 1962 Almanac p. 341; 1963 Almanac p. 312; 1964 Almanac p. 319.

The Peace Corps was established by law in 1961 as a permanent agency (PL 87-293). The Corps operates on the basis of annual authorizations handled in a special Peace Corps measure (such as S 2054) and subsequent appropriations made in the annual foreign aid appropriations bill.

Since the establishment of the Corps, the number of volunteers actually in service has run below the number authorized. (For a summary of annual authorizations and the number of volunteers in service, see 1964 Almanac p. 319.)

Although Congress authorized $115 million in fiscal 1965 to increase the number of volunteers to 14,000, only $106.1 million was requested in appropriations because the agency determined that certain economies would enable the same number of volunteers to be financed by a smaller appropriation. Congress appropriated $104.1 million -- $87.1 million plus $17 million in unspent funds from fiscal 1964 -- providing $2 million less than the modified request.

At the end of fiscal 1965 $12.1 million of the appropriation remained unspent. Approximately 13,710 volunteers were serving overseas or in training in the United States as of Aug. 31, 1965.

In his initial fiscal 1966 request, President Johnson Feb. 25, 1965, asked for an authorization of $125.2 million to enable the Peace Corps to expand to 17,000 volunteers. On April 22 the President submitted a revised request of $115 million, to finance 15,110 volunteers. Sargent Shriver testified April 26 that the request was lowered because the Corps was not getting sufficient applicants of the desired quality to meet the 17,000 goal.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HELD HEARINGS -- April 26 on the original Administration bill (S 1368), authorizing $125.2 million for Peace Corps operations in fiscal 1966 and making a number of changes in the Peace Corps Act. Shriver was the principal witness.

ACTION -- The Committee May 27 reported a clean bill (S 2054 -- S Rept 267) authorizing the modified Administration request of $115 million.

Majority Views. The report expressed satisfaction with the steady progress made in expanding the Peace Corps and praised the continuing stress on quality which "has obviously contributed much to the success of the program to date." The Committee expressed a hope that other developed nations would benefit from the U.S. experience and be able to adapt the information gained from the Peace Corps to expansion of their own programs.

The report explained that the unified staff personnel system, with a five-year limit on service, would achieve the goal of placing Peace Corps staff more nearly in line with the concept of volunteerism -- serving for a limited period of time and then moving on to give others the same opportunity for service. The application of Foreign Service Act authorities to the Washington staff, removing them from Civil Service rolls, "would permit a constant flow of new blood and ideas by allowing administrative flexibility which is not possible under the restrictions of the civil service system." The Committee expected that appointments would normally be for 30 months, promoting higher turnover.

The Committee said it rejected the Peace Corps request to provide counseling to returned volunteers for up to three years after their release from service, instead of the one year currently permitted. It disapproved the Corps' proposal to spend $1.4 million on research projects and limited the research program to $500,000.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 2 amended and passed S 2054 by voice vote, without opposition.

A floor amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), accepted by voice vote, stipulated that the Peace Corps Director could hold "no other federal office of equivalent rank." Javits said the purpose of his amendment was "to provide that the Director of the Peace Corps, Sargent Shriver, shall not be, at one and the same time, Director of the Peace Corps and Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, administering the antipoverty program." Javits said that Shriver was "an excellent public servant," but that he should not be "torn in two." He said Shriver had informed him that "it is not his decision that he serve in both these critically important posts. It is the decision of the President of the United States." Javits declared, "One of the jobs is bound to suffer."

Chairman J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.) of the Foreign Relations Committee said the unusual situation had been "discussed to some extent in the Committee," and that he would be glad "to take this question to conference and see what can be done about it."

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 2, 3 and 8 on the original Administration bill (HR 5876).

Shriver, testifying June 8, said in reference to his holding two high federal posts simultaneously, that he would leave either or both whenever the President wanted him to do so. He told the Committee that his "resignation was on the President's desk all the time, night and day, and if they want somebody else to man one job or the other or both that's their decision to make."

ACTION -- The Committee June 21 reported a clean bill (HR 9026 -- H Rept 530) authorizing the revised request for $115 million. The Committee rejected a Peace Corps proposal to increase from $75 to $100 per day compensation for consultants and did not include a provision limiting the Director to one federal job.

Seperate Views. Although HR 9026 was approved by the Committee without opposition, the report carried separate views signed by Reps. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) and Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.), "intended to provide much-needed and overdue constructive criticism" of Peace Corps operations. Among their criticisms were the "vague utopian heights" envisioned for the Corps instead of realistic goals, a tendency to promise too much in situations where complete success cannot be expected and too large a staff. They called for a thorough review of the program by Congress. The Representatives noted that at the hearings non-governmental witnesses were "conspicuous by their absence."

FLOOR ACTION

The House July 29 passed the Senate bill (S 2054) by voice vote after inserting in it the provisions of HR 9026. There was only brief debate and no floor amendments were offered.

Conference

The House Aug. 10 and the Senate Aug. 11 by voice votes adopted the conference report (H Rept 728) on S 2054.

The Javits amendment limiting the Peace Corps Director to one job was dropped in conference after the Justice Department held that it was an unconstitutional attempt to remove from office a member of the Executive Branch. Although Javits did not fight to retain the provision in S 2054, he said he would raise the question again when the poverty bill was considered. (He offered it to the poverty bill (HR 8283) Aug. 18 and it was defeated on a 30-59 roll-call vote. For voting, see chart p. 1066)

In other conference action, the Senate provision limiting expenditures for research to $500,000 was accepted and the provision holding staff appointees to five-year periods of service was modified to permit a one-year extension in exceptional circumstances.

CONFERENCE OF RETURNED CORPSMEN

President Johnson Jan. 26 named Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey chairman of the Peace Corps National Advisory Council and requested him to convene a national conference of volunteers who had returned from Peace Corps jobs abroad. As Vice President, Mr. Johnson had served as chairman of the Council.

The Conference of Returned Peace Corps Volunteers, bringing together over 1,000 volunteers with 250 leaders in national life, met in Washington, D.C., March 5-7. The focus of the meeting was the problem of utilizing the "major new national resource" of volunteers returning to civilian life, both at home and abroad. Various recommendations were made by the Conference to utilize the skills developed in service with the Peace Corps. The proposals ranged from the creation of special internships in community action programs that would enable volunteers to continue service while earning full academic or professional accreditation, to the establishment of new, middle-level positions in the Agency for International Development to enable volunteers to continue in international service.

INTER-AMERICAN BANK

HR 45 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 27) Feb. 8, 1965.
S 805 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 67) Feb. 11.
HR 45 -- Passed by the House by a 288-93 roll-call vote Feb. 18. (See p. 938)
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 67-14 roll-call vote Feb. 25. (See p. 1030)
- Conference report (H Rept 137) agreed to by voice votes of the House March 4 and the Senate March 8.

PL 89-6 -- Signed into law March 24.

Congress in 1965 passed an Administration bill (HR 45) authorizing a $750 million increase in the U.S. contribution to the Fund for Special Operations of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB). The sum was to be paid out in three annual installments of $250 million, beginning in fiscal 1965. It represented the U.S. share of a total increase in Fund resources of $900 million. HR 45 also authorized the United States representative on the Bank's Board of Governors to vote in favor of the $900 million increase. (The balance of $150 million was to be provided by 19 Latin American countries.)

The Fund for Special Operations (FSO) was one of two "windows" of the IDB which provided loans, on easy credit and repayment terms, for high-priority economic and social development projects in Latin America that could not be financed on regular commercial terms because of balance-of-payments or other economic considerations. The other "soft window" of the IDB was the Social Progress Trust Fund (SPTF). The FSO, jointly financed by the countries participating in the Inter-American Development Bank, provided loans for such projects as roads, dams, water facilities and industrial development. The SPTF, wholly financed by the United States, provided loans for four types of "social" projects only: water supply and sanitation; advanced education; housing; and land settlement and improved land use.

In authorizing U.S. participation in the increase in FSO resources, HR 45 also in effect gave U.S. consent to IDB plans to combine both of the "soft" loan operations into one operation under the FSO. This meant that funds for "social" projects of the sort financed by the SPTF, formerly provided entirely by the United States, would henceforth be provided in part by Latin American countries. Loans from the expanded FSO would be repayable in the currency of the borrower, with maturities of 20 to 30 years and interest between 3 percent and 4 percent, including a small insurance fee payable in dollars. (While the SPTF was not abolished, it became quiescent as practically all of its capital was committed in loans. It did not receive any more capital contributions.)

Debate on the legislation centered on objections that the increased contribution would have an adverse effect on the United States balance of payments. But Administration spokesmen declared that over 80 percent of the funds loaned out would be spent in the United States.

The final version of HR 45 differed from the bill requested by President Johnson only in requiring the U.S. representative on the Bank's Board of Executive Directors to block loans, financed by the U.S. contribution, to any country where bilateral U.S. aid was suspended as a result of failure to make compensation for seized American property or businesses. The provision was a modified version of an amendment added on the Senate floor.

Congress in 1965 appropriated $500 million of the amount authorized in HR 45. (See below)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law HR 45:

Authorized the U.S. Governor of the Bank (Secretary of the Treasury) to vote in favor of a resolution increasing the Fund for Special Operations of the Inter-American Development Bank by $900 million.

Authorized appropriations of $750 million as the U.S. share of the increased contribution.

Required the United States representative on the IDB Executive Board to disapprove any FSO loan to a country which expropriated property or business firms owned at least 50 percent by U.S. citizens, on or after Jan. 1, 1962, without taking steps to provide adequate compensation. Made the provision applicable only to loans made from U.S. contributions to the FSO and only during periods when U.S. bilateral aid to the country was suspended because property was expropriated without compensation.

Background

REFERENCES -- 1964 Almanac p. 318; 1963 Almanac p. 289; 1961 Almanac p. 165; 1960 Almanac p. 216; 1959 Almanac p. 217.

The Inter-American Development Bank, patterned after the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank), was created by the members of the Organization of American States in 1959 to assist in the economic and social development of Latin American nations by providing capital and technical assistance, and promoting private investment in development projects. The Bank eventually became the chief banking instrument of the Alliance for Progress.

Before enactment of HR 45 the IDB had made loans from three sources: the Ordinary Capital Fund, from which loans were made on "hard" or ordinary commercial bank terms; the Fund for Special Operations, which made loans on "soft" terms, i.e., at 4 percent interest payable in either the currency lent or in the currency of the borrower with maturities of 20 to 30 years; and the Social Progress Trust Fund which made loans on terms calling for repayment in local currencies over periods of up to 30 years with interest and charges amounting to 2 percent to 3.5 percent.

The initial total resources of the IDB totaled approximately $1 billion. Of this amount $850 million was authorized capital stock for the Ordinary Capital Fund and $146 million represented the initial contributions to the Fund for Special Operations. The United States in 1959 subscribed to $350 million of the capital stock of the Ordinary Capital Fund; $150 million was paid in and $200 million was "callable" by the Bank on demand. The United States also gave $100 million to the Fund for Special Operations. Latin American countries contributed the remaining amounts.

In April 1963 the Governors of the Bank approved a proposal by the Board of Executive Directors to enlarge the "callable" capital stock of the Ordinary Capital Fund by $1 billion and the resources of the separately maintained Fund for Special Operations (FSO) by $73 million (50 percent). Of the recommended increase the United States contributed $411,760,000 in "callable" capital stock and $50 million to the Fund for Special Operations. Congress authorized the funds in 1964.

The additional U.S. and Latin American subscriptions brought the total resources of the Fund for Special Operations to $219 million (of which the United States contributed $150 million). Payment of the contributions was made one-half in U.S. dollars and one-half in national currencies -- which meant that the entire U.S. contribution was in dollars. Of the $219 million in the FSO, $171 million had been committed in 51 loans in Latin America by Dec. 31, 1964.

The genesis of the Social Progress Trust Fund was slightly different from that of the other two IDB operations. In 1960 Congress responded to a request of President Eisenhower by authorizing a $600 million program of aid to Latin America. Of this sum, $500 million was not specifically earmarked, and was designed to be, in Eisenhower's words, "an expression of the sentiment of Congress" in support of a joint Inter-American development program based on self help and mutual efforts. On the basis of this authorization, the United States in September 1960 subscribed to the Act of Bogota, pledging to cooperate with Latin American nations in a program of economic and social development in Latin America.

In May 1961, Congress appropriated $394 million of the amount authorized in 1960, to set up a special fund in the Inter-American Development Bank for "social development" loans covering housing, advanced education, water supply, sanitation, and land reform. This became the Social Progress Trust Fund. Its funds were entirely provided by the United States, but were managed by the multilateral Bank. (The balance of the $600 million authorized in 1960 was appropriated at the same time for other forms of aid to Latin America.) Finally, in August 1961, the United States and 19 Latin American nations (all but Cuba), signed the Alliance for Progress, a 10-year, $20 billion economic and social development program for Latin America that grew out of the Act of Bogota.

In 1963 the SPTF was appropriated an additional $131 million for fiscal 1964, bringing its total resources to $525 million. Of this amount, $450 million had been committed in 102 loans as of Dec. 31, 1964.

All loans by the IDB must be approved by a Board of Executive Directors, consisting of a U.S. representative and representatives of six Latin American nations. Voting power on the Board is assigned in accordance with the size of national contributions to the Ordinary Capital Fund of the Bank. The voting power of the U.S. representative is 42.5 percent of the total; this voting arrangement gives the United States a veto power over loans from the FSO and SPTF, which require a two-thirds majority for approval.

In his Jan. 14, 1965, message to Congress on foreign aid, President Johnson asked approval of an increase in the U.S. contribution to the FSO of $750 million, "to strengthen multinational aid, and to further strengthen the Alliance for Progress." (See text, p. 1397.)

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 3-5 on HR 45. Secretary of the Treasury Douglas Dillon, who was also U.S. Governor of the Bank, testified that consolidation of the FSO and SPTF would make Bank administration "more efficient and economical", create a more uniform pattern of loan terms, and make loan procedures "simpler and more understandable."

He said consolidation of the two accounts would place all U.S. aid administered through the Bank on a multinational footing, and increase participation by Latin American nations in the Bank's special loan operations from less than 10 percent, or about $69 million, to "$150 million out of $900 million, or something like 16 percent ..., more than twice as much on an over-all basis than..., in the past."

Dillon said the increased U.S. contribution would have "very little effect" on the U.S. balance of payments, because under the rules of the Bank virtually all of the funds contributed by the United States could be tied to purchases of material from the United States or in the country to which the loan was made. Dillon said, "The general impression is that about close to 90 percent, well over 80 percent of these funds, will eventually be spent in the United States."

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 8 reported HR 45 (H Rept 27), with a technical amendment requested by the Administration.

Majority Views. The Committee said the 5 to 1 ratio of the proposed U.S. and Latin American contributions to the Fund for Special Operations ($750 million from the United States, $150 million from Latin countries) was "reasonable" and that the bill would bring about "a significant increase in the amount of U.S. development assistance to Latin America which is channeled through multilateral institutions."

The Committee supported the consolidation of the two funds but warned that the objectives of the SPTF (loans for housing, water and sanitation facilities, education and land use) "should in no way be submerged or diminished under the new proposed operation of the Bank." The Committee recommended that the Bank give consideration to proposals for action in such fields as cooperative housing and research and education in agriculture.

The Committee also recommended that the Bank make loans in Latin American currencies to encourage Latin member countries to buy from each other materials and equipment needed for Bank-financed projects. It said Latin American countries currently traded very little with each other, and purchased "practically all their requirements from distant countries in Western Europe and North America."

FLOOR ACTION

The House Feb. 18 passed HR 45 by a 288-93 roll-call vote and sent it to the Senate after rejecting all amendments. (For voting, see chart, p. 938.)

Prior to passage, the House twice rejected efforts by Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) to cut the authorization by $25 million, to $725 million. Fino first offered an amendment to lower the figure; it was rejected by a 70-145 standing vote. Later, he moved to recommit the bill to committee with instructions to report it back with the $725 million authorization; the motion was rejected by a 142-237 roll-call vote.

The House also rejected, by a 72-141 teller vote, an amendment by William B. Widnall (R N.J.) requiring that before each of the three annual U.S. contributions of $250 million was paid, the President must conclude that the payment, in light of the U.S. balance-of-payments position, was in the national interest.

In urging passage of HR 45, Wright Patman (D Texas), chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, Feb. 17 said that "through the Inter-American Development Bank, the financial arm of the Alliance for Progress program, we have successfully fought off Communist progress in the Latin American countries."

Widnall, ranking Republican on the Banking and Currency Committee, said the type of lending conducted by the Fund for Special Operations -- loans of soft currencies repayable with soft currencies -- was needed in the areas which could be "most helpful to the economic development and trade development in our hemisphere and to develop better relations between our people and the people of Central and South America." Widnall said that since the establishment of the Bank in 1959, there had been a gradual change in loan philosophy. Originally, hard loans were supposed to account for 85 percent of the Bank's loan activity. Currently, the Bank's hard loans amounted to $544.6 million while the soft loan totals, obligated by the Fund for Special Operations and the Social Progress Trust Fund, amounted to $620.9 million. Widnall noted that with the $750 million increase, the United States would be providing from 90 to 86.6 percent of all contributions to the Fund, while exercising only 42.5 percent of the voting power over the conduct of the Bank's affairs.

Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) Feb. 18 urged passage of HR 45 as a vote of confidence in the Alliance for Progress, as well as the Inter-American Bank, adding that with its 42.5 percent vote the United States would have an effective veto power on all projects because approval required a two-thirds vote.

Fino argued that if the United States was seriously concerned over its balance-of-payments deficit, it could not "afford" to contribute $750 million to the Bank. He said the proposal was an aid program disguised as a loan program and money was "virtually being given away" by the Bank. Fino suggested that the $25 million he proposed to cut from the authorization be used to continue operation of the 31 Veterans Administration facilities which the Johnson Administration planned to close. (See story p. 395)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Feb. 18 -- William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Require the President to determine that the payment of each annual $250 million contribution, in light of the U.S. balance-of-payments deficit, "is in the national interest." Teller vote, 72-141.

Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) -- Reduce the authorization from $750 million to $725 million. Standing, 70-145.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

ACTION -- Feb. 11 reported S 805 (S Rept 67) without amendments. The bill was identical to HR 45. The Committee Feb. 9 voted 15-1 to report S 805, with Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) opposed.

Majority Views. The Committee said the Inter-American Bank was proving to be a "vital instrument" in achieving the success of the Alliance for Progress. The report noted that "the Bank's operations have led to a mobilization of domestic resources for development in Latin America which in volume (about $2.6 billion) are more than one and a half times greater than the size of the Bank's loan commitments."

Endorsing the consolidation of the FSO and SPTF, the report said the combined resources of the two funds would be exhausted in 3 months, at the current lending rate. It said the new subscription of $900 million would permit a lending rate of $300 million annually for the next 3 years.

The Committee expressed concern over the number of U.S. personnel on the Bank's staff, relative to the size of U.S. contributions, but said that testimony had indicated that "a rise in the number of U.S. personnel is expected."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Feb. 25 passed HR 45, amended, by a 67-14 roll-call vote, following three days of debate. It did not reduce the $750 million authorization, but accepted two amendments which restricted use of the U.S. contribution. (For voting, see chart p. 1030)

Much of the debate on HR 45 was about the effect of foreign aid on the U.S. balance-of-payments deficit; in addition, opponents of the bill contended that the Administration should submit all of its foreign aid requests in one package, instead of breaking them up into separate bills such as HR 45 in an effort to disguise the size of the aid program.

One of the amendments to HR 45, proposed by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and accepted by 60-22 roll-call vote, required that U.S. voting power in the Bank be used to prevent FSO loans from being made to any country that expropriated American property without providing adequate compensation. A provision of the 1962 foreign aid bill (PL 87-565) -- which was broadened in the 1963 aid bill (PL 88-205) -- required a cutoff of assistance to nations which expropriated, or undertook measures equivalent to expropriating, U.S.-owned property without taking adequate steps toward compensation. Morse's amendment required the United States to block any FSO loan to a nation which violated that provision. (1962 Almanac p. 302; 1963 Almanac p. 256, 277)

The Senate rejected, by a 34-48 roll call, a substitute amendment by Russell B. Long (D La.) which would have made Morse's amendment a non-binding, "sense of Congress" provision of the bill.

The Senate also adopted, by a 49-32 roll call, an amendment by Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) to require that one-third of the aggregate amount of loans from U.S. contributions to the FSO be repaid in U.S. dollars. Earlier, the Senate had rejected by a single vote, 42-43, an amendment by Morse to require that 50 percent of the amount of loans from U.S. contributions be repayable in U.S. dollars. The Senate also rejected amendments by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) to prevent the Bank from floating any security issues in the United States and to reduce the FSO increase to $480 million and the U.S. contribution to $400 million over two years.

DEBATE -- Feb. 23 -- J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.), floor manager of HR 45 -- Said the increase in U.S. contributions to the FSO is "the kind of foreign assistance activity in which the United States should be engaged." It is difficult for many Latin American countries to handle loans for economic and social projects on a conventional or "hard" loan basis. Such projects as housing, technical training, education and other social and economic development programs are necessary to provide a base for long-term economic development, but they do not represent the immediate, short-term financial return necessary for ordinary bank financing and therefore require special "soft" loans of long maturity, low interest rates and repayable in "soft" currencies. The maximum annual effect of the contribution on the U.S. balance-of-payments could not be more than $50 million in each of the three years and "may reach only one-half or even one-third of the maximum."

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Imports from the United States by South American nations have been decreasing. "We can tie 80 percent of that money to purchases in the U.S. markets, but we do not tie those nations and prevent them from spending their other moneys in foreign countries...the other moneys which we free through the aid are usable for spending wherever the recipient nation wants to spend them."

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- "By strengthening the Inter-American Bank, we presumably make more secure American investments which have been made in Latin America, and we make the governments of those countries more secure."

Stuart Symington (D Mo.) -- "I do not see how we can urge such corrective measures as restrictions on foreign borrowing in U.S. capital markets, applying capital controls to long-term bank loans, and so forth, and at the same time be requesting this $750 million from the taxpayers, with its automatic adverse impact on our growing balance-of-payments problem."

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- "I believe that the roughly $25 million to $37.5 million outflow resulting from the U.S. contribution to the Bank is justified on security grounds."

Feb. 24 -- Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Despite Administration statements that the fiscal 1966 foreign aid request was the "smallest ever," the total amount of aid was as large as when the program started. Ellender said the Administration was asking for $6.9 billion in foreign aid, including $3.4 million in the regular aid program and $3.5 billion in such programs as the U.S. contribution to the International Development Assn. ($104 million), the U.S. contribution to the increased capital of the International Monetary Fund ($1 billion requested as a supplement to the fiscal 1965 budget), the Food for Peace program ($1.7 billion) and the fiscal 1965 and fiscal 1966 appropriations and obligations to the Inter-American Development Bank ($750,880,000). (See stories p. 422, 486, 194, 227, 441.)

Lausche, in support of his amendment to prevent sale of Bank securities in the United States -- "One of the important causes of our drain on gold" has been sale of foreign bonds in U.S. financial markets.

Morse, in support of his amendment on repayment of loans in dollars -- It was a mistake to create the impression in Latin America and elsewhere that the United States would continue to pay out millions of dollars in loans each year "with little or no hope of getting the money back in loan repayments in the form of American dollars."

Fulbright -- The Morse amendment "negates the principle purpose" of the FSO. "In a sense, it would amount to merely increasing the amount under the terms of the Bank's ordinary operations and decreasing by almost half the amount available for the softer loans."

Feb. 25 -- Fulbright -- Morse's expropriation amendment was "an attempt unilaterally to impose the policies of the United States on an international organization." The greatest value of the 1962 amendment was as a deterrent to expropriations and if its sanction of cutting off U.S. aid were ever invoked "it will mean that the amendment has failed of its original purpose." An attempt to impose the amendment on others would be "a needless irritant" in our relations with Latin America; besides, Secretary of the Treasury Dillon had stated that the United States would use its voting power to block FSO loans for a nation in which U.S. bilateral aid was suspended because of expropriation of American property without adequate compensation.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Feb. 25 -- Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Require the United States to use its voting power in the Inter-American Development Bank to disapprove any loan from the FSO to any country which on or after Jan. 1, 1962, had expropriated American property and not taken steps to provide compensation. Roll-call vote, 60-22.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Require that at least one-third of the amount of loans made from U.S. contributions to the FSO be repayable in U.S. dollars. Roll call, 49-32.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Feb. 24 -- Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Make the U.S. contribution conditional on the Bank agreeing not to float any new security issues in the United States during fiscal 1965-67. Roll-call vote, 35-46.

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Require at least 50 percent of the aggregate amount of loans made from U.S. contributions to the FSO be repayable in U.S. dollars. Roll call, 42-43.

Feb. 25 -- Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Substitute for pending Morse amendment on expropriation (see above), new language stating the sense of Congress that during any period when U.S. foreign aid to any member country of the Bank was suspended (under another law) because the country did not provide appropriate compensation for expropriation of American property, the U.S. representative in the Bank shall vote against any loans to that country from the FSO. Roll call, 34-48.

Lausche -- Direct the U.S. Governor of the Bank to present and vote for a resolution increasing the FSO by $480 million and authorizing appropriations of $200 million annually in fiscal 1965-66 as the U.S. share of the increase. Roll call, 37-44.

Conference

The House March 4 and the Senate March 8, by voice votes, agreed to the conference report (H Rept 137) on HR 45.

The conferees dropped from the final version of HR 45 Gruening's amendment on partial repayment of FSO loans in dollars. They modified Morse's amendment on expropriation to provide that U.S. voting power in the IDB would be used to block only such loans as were made from the U.S. contribution to the IDB and only when U.S. bilateral aid to the country in question was suspended by Presidential action in retaliation for failure to make compensation for expropriated property. The report, filed March 3, was signed by all conferees.

Senate action followed brief debate in which Morse and Gruening criticized the conference report and said they would vote against it.

Bill Signed. In signing HR 45 into law March 24, President Johnson said the bill was "another important milestone in continuing United States support for the Alliance for Progress."

APPROPRIATIONS

The second supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1965 appropriated $250 million to the IDB's Fund for Special Operations. The second installment of $250 million was appropriated in the fiscal 1966 foreign aid appropriation bill, which also provided $205,880,000 as the second half of the increase in "callable" capital stock of the IDB which had been authorized by Congress in 1964. (See p. 227, 441)

HAGUE PROTOCOL

The Senate in 1965 did not act on the Hague Protocol (Exec. H, 86th Congress, 1st Session) to the Warsaw Convention, which had been favorably reported by the Foreign Relations Committee. The Protocol amended the Convention to raise the limit of an international air carrier's liability to each passenger for death or injury from the existing $8,300 to $16,600.

Congress in 1965 also did not take action on separate but related legislation to provide additional compulsory insurance for passengers on international flights by American airlines.

Following the failure of the Senate to act on Exec. H, the United States Nov. 15 formally denounced the Warsaw Convention. The action was taken under Article 39 of the Convention, which permitted any member country to denounce and withdraw from the Convention upon 6 months notice. A Nov. 15 press release issued by the State Department said that if prior to the effective date of the denunciation -- May 15, 1966 -- there were "reasonable prospect" of an international agreement raising the limits of liability (to approximately $100,000) in international air transportation, the United States would be prepared to withdraw its denunciation.

Opposition to the Protocol was based on what critics said was the "totally inadequate" level of insurance to be provided under it and the related legislation. In addition, the Warsaw Convention was said to be outdated.

The Warsaw Convention was signed in 1929 and entered into force for the United States in 1934. Besides limiting the liability of air carriers to $8,300, it also established uniform rules governing the rights and obligations between international air carriers and passengers. Over 90 nations became party to the Convention.

The Hague Protocol was signed in behalf of the United States June 28, 1956, and submitted to the Senate June 24, 1959. The Protocol entered into force as a treaty (not with respect to the United States) Aug. 1, 1963. As of July 1, 1965, 45 countries had become party to the Protocol.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee June 29, by a 16-1 vote, reported Exec H (Exec Rept 3) with the recommendation that the Senate consent to its ratification. The dissenting vote was cast by Albert Gore (D Tenn.).

The report stated that "one of the major factors" influencing the Committee's decision to report the Protocol had been the "Executive Branch assurance that a concerted effort would be made to secure enactment of the proposed automatic insurance legislation," pending before the House and Senate Commerce Committees. The legislation (S 2032, HR 8386) provided for compulsory accident insurance for passengers on American airlines traveling internationally (paid for by the U.S. air carriers) of $50,000 for death ($25,000 for persons under 12) and up to $50,000 for injury. These amounts were in addition to the $16,600 provided in the Hague Protocol. Thus, ratification of the Protocol together with enactment of the compulsory insurance legislation would have provided maximum compensation of $66,600.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee urged the State Department to "take immediate steps" to denounce the Warsaw Convention if the insurance legislation were not enacted during the 89th Congress. Neither bill had passed by the end of the 1st Session and opposition of many Members of Congress made action in the 2nd Session unlikely.

Opposition to action in 1965 centered largely on the amount of insurance to be provided under the Protocol and the proposed legislation. Opponents argued that the arbitrary $66,600 limit was inadequate coverage for many persons, such as a young man with considerable earning potential who left a wife and family, but would be a windfall for others, such as distant relatives, who suffered no financial hardship as a result of the death of an individual in an air accident. In addition, opponents argued that the existing and proposed treaty arrangements conferred upon commercial airlines special exemptions from liability, both legal and financial, enjoyed by no other commercial enterprises. It was also argued that the Warsaw Convention should be denounced because it was no longer needed. It was intended originally, in the early days of commercial air travel, to protect young airlines by preventing a large recovery from an accident which would cause bankruptcy.

GUT DAM CLAIMS

The Senate Aug. 30, by a 74-0 roll-call vote consented to ratification of the Gut Dam Claims Agreement with Canada (Exec. C, 89th Congress, 1st Session). (For voting see chart p. 1069)

The Agreement was signed at Ottawa on March 25, 1965.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported Exec. C (Exec Rept 5) Aug. 16. The report stated that the purpose of the Agreement was "to provide for the establishment of a three-member international arbitral tribunal to receive, determine, and make awards on claims of U.S. nationals for damage to their properties on the shores of Lake Ontario resulting from the construction and maintenance by Canada of the Gut Dam in the St. Lawrence River." Claims amounted to $8.5 million.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

The Senate Sept. 14 approved, by an 85-0 roll-call vote, ratification of a convention codifying traditional diplomatic principles observed by nations together with an optional protocol concerning compulsory settlement of disputes involving diplomatic relations. The convention and protocol (Exec. H, 88th Congress, 1st Session) were signed in Vienna April 18, 1961; were submitted to the Senate by President Kennedy May 14, 1963; and were reported (Exec Rept 6) by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Sept. 8, 1965. (For voting, see chart p. 1073)

During debate, Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) said Exec. H was the "first truly comprehensive convention regulating diplomatic relations among sovereign states." He said the convention codified traditional diplomatic principles, such as the treatment of diplomatic personnel and property, and established new rules where principles had not previously been uniform, such as granting immunity from criminal, but not civil, jurisdiction to administrative and technical employees of diplomatic missions. Fulbright added that the convention applied only to diplomatic missions and not to trade or consular missions, etc., and was generally "more restrictive" than current U.S. practice.

The special protocol, Fulbright said, would give the International Court of Justice jurisdiction over disputes involving the convention unless the disputants agreed to another form of settlement.

ARMS CONTROL AGENCY

HR 2998 -- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 37) Feb. 10, 1965.

- Passed by the House by a 302-63 roll-call vote Feb. 17. (See p. 938)
- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 73) March 5.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 74-11 roll-call vote March 10. (See p. 1031)
- Conference report (H Rept 233) adopted by the House April 13 by a 316-65 roll-call vote (see p. 952) and by the Senate May 14 by voice vote.

PL 89-27 -- Signed into law May 27.

HR 2998 extended for three years the life of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. The bill authorized appropriations of $30 million over fiscal years 1966-68, thus continuing the program at the same authorization level as in fiscal 1964-65. (This figure represented a compromise between the three-year, $40 million authorization voted by the House, and the two-year, $20 million program authorized by the Senate.)

The length of the authorization, not the function of ACDA, was the major subject of controversy during debate on HR 2998, although one Republican Senator remarked that he found the Agency's "pacific accomplishments...somewhat nebulous." Administration spokesmen said a long-term authorization (they asked for four years) would give a greater opportunity for "long-term planning for peace." Republicans in general said a short-term authorization would permit closer Congressional scrutiny of the Agency's work.

Following enactment of HR 2998, Congress appropriated $10 million to ACDA for fiscal 1966. (See p. 217)

Background

The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency was established by Congress in 1961 at the request of President Kennedy. PL 87-297 set up a permanent, independent agency to assume primary responsibility within the Government for directing and coordinating disarmament matters, including conduct of negotiations and sponsorship of research. (1961 Almanac p. 317)

Total authorizations for the agency, from its founding through fiscal 1965, amounted to $30 million; of this amount, $24.8 million was appropriated (including transfers from the State Department). (1963 Almanac p. 317)

From its founding, the Agency participated as the U.S. representative in all disarmament negotiations at the United Nations in New York and the 17-nation Disarmament Committee in Geneva. The 1963 treaty partially banning nuclear test explosions was based on an ACDA draft, and the 1963 agreement with the Soviet Union for the "hot-line" communications system between Washington and Moscow, as well as the mutual U.S.-Soviet pledge to ban nuclear bombs in orbit, were based on proposals developed by ACDA.

About 75 percent of the Agency's budget was devoted to research into arms control techniques, including such problems as verification of agreements.

President Johnson Jan. 15, 1965, asked Congress to extend and increase the authorization of the Agency "to assure the continuing leadership of the United States in the purposeful pursuit of peace. (For text of message, see p. 1373)

Mr. Johnson asked that Congress authorize a four-year, $55 million program for the Agency, beginning with fiscal 1966. The existing authorization, scheduled to expire June 30, 1965, was for $20 million over fiscal years 1964 and 1965. The President said the Agency's "record of achievement...has refuted the doubts of those who questioned whether there was effective work for such an agency to perform." He concluded, "I am determined to work in every way that I can for safeguarded agreements that will halt the spread of nuclear weapons, lessen the risk of war and reduce the dangers and costly burdens of armaments."

1965 Activities. During calendar 1965, ACDA participated in discussions at the UN Disarmament Commission in New York (April 21-June 16) and at the 17-nation Disarmament Committee in Geneva (July 27 - Sept. 17). The principal topics of discussion -- on which no final agreement was reached -- were a treaty to prevent spread of nuclear weapons to nations which currently did not possess them, and extension of the nuclear test-ban treaty to cover underground testing.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Jan. 21 -- The President's Committee on Nuclear Proliferation, headed by former Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell L. Gilpatric, made its report to President Johnson on means to avert the spread of national nuclear forces. The report was not made public. The Committee was established Nov. 1, 1964.

June 23 -- Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) urged that Communist China be invited to join the Geneva disarmament talks. Kennedy said that "central priority" should be given to achieving a non-proliferation treaty.

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HELD HEARINGS -- Jan. 26 on an Administration bill (HR 2998) to authorize appropriation of $55 million for fiscal years 1966-1969 for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA).

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 26 -- ACDA Director William C. Foster called the Agency's "most urgent mission" the prevention of "nuclear spread," a problem which had become more pronounced since the Chinese Communist nuclear explosion in October 1964.

He said the United States would seek international agreements to halt nuclear spread and would continue its development of verification and inspection instruments. Foster said that the Agency requested a four-year authorization, instead of a two-year authorization, in order to facilitate "the long-range research planning required to meet security and negotiating requirements." Approximately two-thirds of the $55 million would be allocated to an extensive research program aimed at establishing "realistic arms control measures" to maintain "adequate national defense" at current and, ultimately, at lower levels. Foster said, "A disproportionate amount of our national resources goes into armaments."

Committee members questioned some of the research efforts outlined by Foster. Rep. Peter H.B. Frelinghuysen (R N.J.) doubted whether studies were necessary to deal with "nuclear spread," which he indicated was a problem for political negotiation. Rep. Leonard Farbstein (D N.Y.) said that "ten other agencies," in addition to ACDA, were conducting studies on the problems of economic readjustment and re-employment. Foster said the legislation creating ACDA assigned it to study the economic effects of disarmament.

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 10 reported HR 2998 (H Rept 37) without amendment. Voting against the action were H.R. Gross (R Iowa) and Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.).

Majority Views. The Committee said that, though "concerned" about the request for a four-year authorization, it had granted the request. It noted that ACDA Director Foster had defended the long-term authorization on the grounds that it would "permit long-range planning for studies that cannot be completed in a relatively short time" and allow "the development of expertise" by both Agency and non-Government personnel. The Committee said that 70 percent of the total funds were for contract research, a sum that "must be regarded as reasonable in view of the novelty, complexity and variety of the problems with which the Agency must deal."

Separate Views. The 12 Republican Committee members said that a four-year, instead of a two-year, authorization represented "an abdication of Congressional responsibility for reviewing the program...at a time when the world situation requires closer and more frequent scrutiny by the responsible committee -- not a lesser one."

FLOOR ACTION

The House Feb. 17 passed HR 2998 by a 302-63 roll-call vote after reducing the authorization to $40 million for three years. The authorization represented a compromise between the four-year, $55 million total sought by the Administration and a two-year, $25 million figure favored by many Republicans. (For voting, see chart p. 938)

Eighty Republicans and 222 Democrats voted for passage; 35 Republicans and 28 Democrats were opposed. Debate centered on the length of the authorization. There was very little opposition to the Agency itself or to the additional authorization for its operation.

The authorization cut came after William S. Mailliard (R Calif.) proposed an amendment that would have authorized $25 million for fiscal 1966-67, which was the amount that Administration officials said they would allot for those two fiscal years (the bill contained only a flat amount for the four-year period, fiscal 1966-69). Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) proposed a substitute amendment to authorize $40 million for three years. It was accepted by voice vote.

During debate, Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, supported a four-year authorization because of what he called the need for "systematic and comprehensive study in the development of (disarmament) policy proposals." He said the four-year authorization would encourage private contractors and universities to "invest more" in disarmament research. Morgan "reluctantly" accepted Hays' amendment for a three-year program.

Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) opposed the four-year authorization, saying he was "not sure that this particular agency of Government has actually accomplished much" toward achieving disarmament. E. Ross Adair (R Ind.), second ranking Republican on the Foreign Affairs Committee, said the agency's activities were "too important to be left to drift along for three or four years" without Congressional review.

Senate

COMMITEEE -- Foreign Relations.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 22-23 on an Administration bill (S 672) to authorize appropriations of $55 million for fiscal years 1966-69 for ACDA.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 22 -- ACDA Director William C. Foster stressed the important role the Agency was playing in the development "of positive measures to reduce the risk and devastation" of nuclear war. He said, "A four-year authorization would let the world know now that we intend to give even greater emphasis to long-range planning for peace at a time when tensions have increased."

Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), ranking Republican on the Committee, said the Agency's "pacific accomplishments are somewhat nebulous."

Feb. 23 -- Stanley M. Andrews, executive director of Americans for National Security, opposed S 672 and proposed instead a two-year authorization of $10 million. Andrews said that, while recognizing that Congress "is not ready to abolish" ACDA, his organization believed its projects "have entered into a fantastic area of theoretical exposition of views considered by many as contrary to American tradition and actually dangerous" to national security.

W.B. Hicks, executive secretary of the Liberty Lobby, testified that the ACDA's research was "not the kind of scholarly wisdom for which the taxpayer should pay hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Representing the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA), Amitai Etzioni, a professor at Columbia University's Institute of War and Peace Studies, called for a four-year authorization of $80 million. Etzioni testified that ACDA "was never given the funds needed to serve Congress" and that most of its funds were committed to ways of curbing the danger of nuclear war. This resulted, he said, "in the absence of any significant contribution by ACDA to our understanding of the recent crisis in Viet Nam" and other small-scale confrontations.

Don H. Cummings, representing the American Veterans Committee (AVC), called for at least a three-year mandate for ACDA and "a level of funding commensurate with its enormous responsibilities."

Robert Morris, former chief counsel of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and currently president of the University of Plano, Texas, said the policy of ACDA was "utterly fanciful and unrealistic in view of Soviet aggression and intransigence all over the world."

ACTION -- The Committee March 5 reported HR 2998 with an amendment providing only a $20 million authorization for fiscal 1966-67.

Majority Views. The majority said that it was not opposed to the efforts of the ACDA and that its version of HR 2998 continued the Agency's authorization "on precisely the same basis as during fiscal years 1964 and 1964." The majority said that the two-year authorization would not affect the permanency of the Agency and would be sufficient because ACDA contracts generally had a 1-1½-year duration.

Individual Views. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and Wayne Morse (D Ore.) supported the Administration request for $55 million over four years. They said that President Johnson and ACDA Director Foster had made "a convincing case" for the Administration request and the only witnesses appearing in opposition were those representing "self-styled conservative organizations."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate March 10 passed HR 2998, amended, by a 74-11 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 1031)

Prior to passage, the Senate accepted, by a 50-38 roll call, the amendment proposed by the Foreign Relations Committee reducing the authorization to $20 million for two years from the $40 million, three-year fiscal 1966-68 authorization passed by the House. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) proposed, but later withdrew, a substitute proposal for the committee amendment which would have provided the four-year, $55 million Administration request.

Most of the debate over two days was about the committee amendment and Clark's alternative proposal. Clark said that most of the votes taken in the Foreign Relations Committee on HR 2998, as passed by the House, and the Administration's four-year proposal were registered by proxy. He said that if an actual vote had been taken, the House bill would have been approved 9-8 with two Senators not voting. Clark argued that the two-year authorization did not offer sufficient assurance of the Agency's continued existence to enable it to hire qualified people and properly continue its work. "A new authorization is not needed for agencies which are concerned with building armaments which, if necessary, will take us to war, in effect, or to take us to the Moon or to Mars," Clark said. "But when it comes to a small agency with a budget of less than one-half of one-tenth of 1 percent of the military budget, we find a reluctance to continue the authorization of the agency for a mere four years, not open end." Also arguing for Clark's proposal were William Proxmire (D Wis.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.), Ross Bass (D Tenn.), John O. Pastore (D R.I.) and Wayne Morse (D Ore.).

Supporters of the committee amendment argued that $20 million annually was "ample" for the ACDA's continued operation.

At the suggestion of Pastore, Clark withdrew his amendment "with deep reluctance..." and urged defeat of the committee amendment. The Senate, however, accepted the Committee's change with 32 Democrats and 6 Republicans voting in opposition and 24 Republicans and 26 in favor. On the passage vote, the bill was opposed by Democrats Byrd (Va.), Eastland (Miss.), McClellan (Ark.), Robertson (Va.) and Talmadge (Ga.) and Republicans Curtis (Neb.), Hruska (Neb.), Murphy (Calif.), Simpson (Wyo.), Thurmond (S.C.) and Tower (Texas).

Conference

The conference report (H Rept 233) was filed April 12, providing for a three-year, $30 million authorization. Two Senate conferees, Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) and George D. Aiken (R Vt.), did not sign the report. Hickenlooper April 8 said they were willing to grant the ACDA "a little more money" than the Senate authorized, but felt the two-year Senate extension was "enough."

The House April 13 adopted the conference report by a 316-65 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 952)

In brief debate, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Morgan said the ACDA would have almost $32 million during the three-year period, including an unused $1.7 million from a previous authorization. H. R. Gross (R Iowa), who forced the roll call, said the ACDA was "a wanton waste of the taxpayers' money...."

The Senate May 14 adopted the report by voice vote.

WORLD BANK, IFC CHARTERS

S 1742 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 372) June 28, 1965.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote June 30.
- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 644) July 22.
- Passed by the House on a 330-54 roll-call vote Aug. 4. (See p. 986)

PL 89-126 -- Signed into law Aug. 14.

Congress in 1965 enacted a bill (S 1742) authorizing U.S. consent to certain changes in the charters of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank) and its affiliate, the International Finance Corporation (IFC). The legislation was requested by the Treasury Department.

The bill authorized the U.S. Governor of the Bank (the Secretary of the Treasury) to agree to World Bank proposals to amend the articles of agreement of the two organizations to allow the Bank to make loans to the IFC, and the IFC to borrow from the Bank. The IFC would be authorized to borrow up to four times its unimpaired capital and surplus (capital in excess of liabilities). As of August 1965, the limit on borrowing amounted to $400 million. Previously, the World Bank could not make loans to the IFC because of the different terms under which each organization made loans.

The bill's second provision allowed the U.S. Governor to agree, without express Congressional approval, to a World Bank resolution to increase its capital stock, if the increase did not entail additional U.S. subscriptions. Existing law required that Congress enact authorizing legislation for any increase in the Bank's capital, whether or not it affected U.S. subscription. The World Bank proposal to raise the Bank's capital from $22 billion to $24 billion was effected Oct. 29. The additional $2 billion was to be acquired from countries other than the United States.

A third provision of the bill required the National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems to submit a report to Congress on a yearly basis instead of the currently required semiannual and biennial basis. The Council consisted of the Secretaries of the Treasury, State and Commerce, the chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System and the president of the Export-Import Bank.

S 1742 passed both houses with limited debate. Among the 54 House opponents were Reps. Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) and H.R. Gross (R Iowa), who opposed the bill on the grounds that building up private industry in foreign countries would compete unfavorably with U.S. labor and manufacturers.

BACKGROUND. The World Bank was established by the Bretton Woods Agreement Act of 1945 for the purpose of building up the basic economies of member governments. To stimulate private enterprise in developing nations, the International Finance Corporation (IFC) was created in July 1956 as an affiliate of the World Bank. Loans by the IFC are granted to private industry and need not be guaranteed by the member government, as World Bank loans must be. These loans are generally directed to secondary industries, such as brick, construction materials, fertilizers or crops. (1955 Almanac p. 288, 1961 Almanac p. 341)

EXPORT CONTROL ACT

HR 7105 -- Reported, amended, by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 434) May 29, 1965.

- Passed, amended, by the House by a 388-1 roll-call vote June 8. (See p. 966)
- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 363) June 23.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote June 30.
- House agreed to Senate amendment by voice vote June 30.

PL 89-63 -- Signed into law June 30.

Congress in HR 7105 extended the Export Control Act of 1949 for four years, to June 30, 1969, instead of making it permanent as the Administration had proposed. The Act contains the basic authority in law to control exports to Communist nations and to regulate exports in line with U.S. foreign policy aims.

In a related development in 1965, there were numerous proposals to ease restrictions on trade with the Communist bloc, but no substantive changes resulted. (See story, p. 502)

There was no opposition in Congress to extension of the Export Control Act, but a controversy arose over a side issue involving an attempt by Arab nations to create an economic boycott of Israel. Some American companies doing business in Arab nations had told Congressional committees that they were required to reply to questionnaires as to whether they had branches in Israel, whether their goods were produced in Israel, and similar questions. Companies refusing to cooperate or those trading with Israel were prevented from operating in the 12 nations of the Arab League.

The House rejected an amendment which flatly prohibited American businesses from furnishing information that would aid the boycott. Milder provisions, which did not bar businesses from furnishing such information, but which stated that U.S. policy was to oppose "restrictive trade practices and boycotts" and which required that requests for information be reported to the Commerce Department, were agreed to in the final bill. The Administration opposed the mandatory anti-boycott provision but was reported amenable to the final provision.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law HR 7105:

Extended the Export Control Act of 1949 for four years from June 30, 1965, to June 30, 1969.

Authorized the administrative imposition (by a department or agency head) of civil penalties, not exceeding $1,000 for violations of the Act. Specified that export privileges under the Act may be withheld for one year as a means of collecting a penalty. Authorized judicial action to obtain payment of the penalty.

Declared the policy of the United States was to "oppose restrictive trade practices or boycotts" by foreign countries against nations friendly to the United States and to encourage American businesses engaged in exporting to refrain from supplying information or taking other actions that would aid such boycotts.

Required American business firms to report to the Secretary of Commerce any requests from other nations to furnish information or to sign agreements in connection with restrictive boycotts of nations friendly to the United States.

Directed Executive Branch officials to "expeditiously" adopt rules and regulations to enforce the policy directives and to publish them within 90 days of enactment of the bill. (See regulations below).

Expanded the existing definition of items whose export the President could prohibit or regulate to include "or any other information." (Existing law specified "any articles, materials, or supplies, including technical data." The new words were added to this definition).

Background

The Export Control Act of 1949 was based on legislation which was originally enacted in 1940 and was extended several times before being rewritten in 1949. The Act was one of a number of laws by which the Federal Government, during the Cold War period that began after World War II, restricted trade with unfriendly or hostile foreign nations, particularly exports to Communist bloc nations of arms and strategic and economically critical materials. (See p. 502 for discussion of these laws and changes in volume of trade)

The 1949 Act was extended periodically for two- and three-year periods, sometimes with amendments. It was scheduled to expire June 30, 1965. Public law numbers of initial passage of the Act and later extensions (including HR 7105 in 1965) are shown below:

The 1949 Act, as most recently extended prior to 1965, empowered the President to bar or limit exports to protect national security, promote the foreign policy of the U.S. and prevent national shortages. The Act was administered by the Commerce Department by means of a licensing system. Under that system the Commerce Department, with the aid of other agencies, drew up a Commodity Control List showing all commodities -- strategic or nonstrategic -- validated for export to various nations. Some items on the list could be exported to any country; others, only to certain nations. This list replaced the original "positive" list, abolished Jan. 1, 1965, in an administrative reform, which had listed only exports banned to the Communist bloc.

Generally speaking, U.S. policy under the Export Control Act as of 1965 was (1) to bar all exports to Communist China and Manchuria, North Korea, North Viet Nam, Inner Mongolia and Cuba (except that food and medicine could be exported to Cuba; (2) to bar the export of arms and strategic and critical materials -- but not other items -- to the Soviet Union, Outer Mongolia, and most of the Communist countries of Eastern Europe (with the restrictions being slightly less on Poland and Romania); and (3) to place no restrictions on exports to non-Communist nations and Yugoslavia. Policy under export and import control laws was similar. According to the Commerce Department, the number of items on the Commodity Control List forbidden for export to the Communist bloc amounted to 1,153 in 1965. Numerous other items on the over-all list were not forbidden for export to Communist bloc countries other than Red China and the other total embargo nations listed in category number 1, above.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HELD HEARINGS -- May 5, 13 and 20-21 on HR 7105 and on several bills (HR 627, HR 4361, others) that would have required the President to forbid U.S. exporters to participate in or aid in any way a boycott by any foreign country of another country friendly to the U.S. -- a reference to the Arab trade boycott of Israel.

ACTION -- May 29 reported (H Rept 434) HR 7105, amended, extending the Export Control Act of 1949 for four years, to June 30, 1969.

As reported, the bill stated that it was the policy of the nation to oppose restrictive trade practices and boycotts against nations friendly to the United States. The Committee said this declaration left the President free to take such action as he deemed necessary, if any, under the Export Control Act, to protect American firms from being forced to answer questionnaires by Arab countries pertaining to the Arab boycott of Israel. This approach, rather than a mandatory provision prohibiting participation in a boycott or furnishing of information, reportedly was approved by a 14-11 vote of the Committee, with seven absences and one abstention. Later, some of the non-voting Committee members reportedly joined in support of a flat prohibition against U.S. businesses in any way assisting the Arab boycott. As a result, 17 members of the Committee -- a majority -- signed supplemental views to H Rept 434 in which they supported an amendment containing an outright prohibition which was to be offered by William B. Widnall (R N.J.) on the floor. They were: Multer (D N.Y.), Barrett (D Pa.), Reuss (D Wis.), St. Germain (D R.I.), Gonzalez (D Texas), Minish (D N.J.), Grabowski (D Conn.), Ottinger (D N.Y.), Widnall (R N.J.), Fino (R N.Y.), Dwyer (R N.J.), Halpern (R N.Y.), Harvey (R Mich.), Brock (R Tenn.), Clawson (R Calif.), Johnson (R Pa.), and Stanton (R Ohio).

FLOOR ACTION

The House June 4, by a roll-call vote of 388-1, passed HR 7105, amended. The single "no" vote was cast by Charles E. Goodell (R N.Y.). (For voting, see chart p. 966)

There was no opposition to extension of the Act. Most of the debate involved Arab requests that American businesses supply information on their business relations with Israel.

Before passage of HR 7105, the House adopted an amendment stating that the U.S. policy was to encourage American businesses to refrain from supplying such information. The amendment, sponsored by Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), also authorized Government officials to adopt rules and regulations to enforce the policy statement. A second floor amendment that was adopted required the rules and regulations to be promulated "expeditiously" and published within 90 days of enactment of HR 7105. A provision in the bill as it was reported from committee said that U.S. policy was to oppose "restrictive trade practices and boycotts." This remained in the bill.

The House rejected by a 53-85 standing vote and a 64-96 teller vote an amendment by William B. Widnall (R N.J.) which would have flatly prohibited American businesses from furnishing information or signing agreements that would aid the boycott or other restrictive trade practices.

Widnall's amendment was identical to the proposal put forth a few days earlier by a majority of members of the House Banking and Currency Committee, including Multer. (See above) The Administration opposed the mandatory provision proposed by Widnall, but was reported agreeable to the milder provision resulting from the committee wording and Multer's floor amendment.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

June 8 -- Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) -- Add to pending Multer amendment (below) wording to require that the rules and regulations shall be promulgated as expeditiously as practicable, and shall be published in the Federal Register within 90 days after the date of enactment of the bill. Voice vote.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) -- Declare that the policy of the United States was to encourage American businesses engaged in exporting to refrain from supplying information or taking other actions that would aid boycotts by foreign countries against nations friendly to the United States; authorize Executive Branch officials to adopt rules and regulations to enforce the policy directives. Voice.

Glenard P. Lipscomb (R Calif.) -- Add the words "or any other information" to the definition in existing law of the items whose export the President may prohibit or regulate. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

June 8 -- William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Substitute for pending Multer amendment (above) wording to prohibit the "furnishing of information or the signing of agreements" that would assist boycotts by countries against nations friendly to the United States. Standing vote, 53-85; teller, 64-96.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- June 23 reported HR 7105 without amendment (S Rept 363).

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 30 passed HR 7105 by voice vote.

Before passage the Senate adopted by voice vote an amendment by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) requiring that American business firms report to the Commerce Department any requests from foreign countries to furnish information or sign agreements in connection with boycotts against countries friendly to the United States. The amendment was intended to strengthen a provision of the House bill on American compliance in foreign boycotts.

In a June 30 letter from Secretary of Commerce John T. Connor to Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Connor promised full cooperation with the intent of the House provisions and said the executive departments would take "specific action" called for in the provisions and the Javits amendment. The letter was inserted in the Congressional Record.

FINAL ACTION. The House June 30 by voice vote concurred in the Senate amendment, clearing the bill for the President. Mr. Johnson signed the measure into law that evening (PL 89-63).

REGULATIONS ISSUED. The Commerce Department Sept. 23 issued regulations, effective Oct. 7, under the boycott provision of HR 7105. They said, in effect, that it was the policy of the U.S. not to participate in or aid boycotts; that the Government hoped that U.S. firms would not participate in boycotts and would not furnish information to Arab countries or others in connection with trade boycotts; that U.S. firms, however, were not forbidden to participate or to furnish such information and were free to do so; and that all requests made to U.S. firms for such information were required to be reported to the Commerce Department within 15 days.

A Commerce Department spokesman told CQ that while HR 7105 and the boycott regulations issued Sept. 23 clearly did not prohibit U.S. firms from furnishing information to foreign countries or firms in connection with boycotts of the type considered in the bill, the President under the Export Control Act, as amended, no doubt had discretionary authority to block the furnishing of such information if he chose.

EAST-WEST TRADE PLANS

During 1965 there were numerous proposals but no substantive action on expanding U.S. trade with the Communist bloc. Recapitulating Administration thinking late in 1965, Anthony M. Solomon, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Oct. 21 said, "The question here is whether the policies we have followed in the last 17 years continue to serve our interest well or whether changes in the Communist world and in the world at large have made some aspects of our policy obsolete."

Solomon, summarizing the three key arguments in favor of more U.S. trade with the Communist countries, said increasing trade with the Soviet bloc could benefit the United States economically, could help lessen world tension, and could encourage "external independence and internal liberalization in individual Communist countries." He indicated that the Administration was considering whether to recommend legislation in 1966 to permit expanded trade with the Communist world.

Groups on record as favoring more trade with the Communists included the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Union and the National Grange and the Committee for Economic Development. The AFL-CIO Executive Council, however, denounced efforts to expand East-West trade.

Background

REFERENCES -- 1961 Almanac p. 360; 1962 Almanac p. 295; 1963 Almanac p. 326.

The cold war between East and West in the post-World War II era led to the imposition of barriers to trade, particularly in strategic and critical materials and arms. Under a variety of laws, the U.S. Government restricted exports from the United States to Communist countries and also limited imports from those nations, embargoing some countries altogether.

The major laws under which the Government limited U.S. trade with Communist nations were: the Export Control Act of 1949, administered by the Commerce Department, which allowed the Government to limit exports in the interests of national security and other considerations (see preceding pages for details); the 1917 Trading with the Enemy Act, administered by the Treasury Department, which gave the Government power to restrict both imports and exports; the 1951 Battle Act (Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act), administered by the State Department, banning exports of arms and strategic goods to the Communist bloc; and Section 414 of the Mutual Security Act of 1954 (derived from the Neutrality Acts of the 1930s), administered by the State Department, permitting the Government to control both the import and the export of arms, ammunition and other instruments of war to and from any country -- in the interests of national foreign policy objectives.

Although details of each of these laws differed, the general U.S. policy on trade with the Communist bloc as of 1965 was as follows:

(1) All U.S. trade (both imports and exports) was forbidden with Communist China, Manchuria, North Korea, Inner Mongolia, North Viet Nam and Cuba, except that food and medicines could be sent to Cuba. This total embargo, imposed under the Trading with the Enemy Act and Export Control Act, went into effect in 1950 for the first four areas, in 1954 for North Viet Nam and in 1960 for Cuba.

(2) The export of arms and strategic and critical materials from the U.S. to the Soviet Union, Outer Mongolia, and the Eastern European Communist countries was forbidden (with the restrictions somewhat less for exports to Poland and Romania). Trade in other types of items, like foods, was not forbidden, but exports receiving Government subsidies (such as wheat exports) had to get special Government permission.

(3) Generally, no restrictions were placed on trade with non-Communist nations and Yugoslavia.

In addition, various foreign-aid bills and amendments to the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) imposed restrictions on the granting by the U.S. Government of any foreign aid, credit guarantees, or PL 480 benefits to Communist countries. In general, the rule was that such assistance to Communist countries was forbidden, unless the President made some type of positive finding that giving benefits to the particular country in question would be in the interests of the United States.

As a result of all these restrictions, U.S. trade with Communist-bloc nations was substantially less in the post-World War II era than it was with the same nations before. In 1963, for example, U.S. exports to the Communist bloc amounted to only $166.7 million, which was only seven-tenths of 1 percent of total U.S. exports of $20.2 billion. By contrast, during the period 1926-30, U.S. exports to the countries which later made up the postwar Communist bloc averaged $214 million a year -- or 4.7 percent of total exports, and this did not include exports to East Germany, for which separate figures were not then kept. The figure was 4.6 percent from 1936-40.

1965 Developments

PRESIDENTIAL ACTIONS

President Johnson, in his State of the Union Message Jan. 4, said the United States sought "peaceful understandings" with Russia which could "lessen the danger to freedom" and that the U.S. Government was exploring ways of increasing peaceful trade with the Soviet bloc.

Study Committee. The President followed up his Jan. 4 remarks with the establishment Feb. 16 of a business advisory committee to study means of expanding trade with the USSR and its satellites.

The committee, known as the Special Presidential Committee on U.S. Trade Relations with Eastern European Countries and the USSR, consisted of 12 private businessmen and educators, with J. Irwin Miller of the Cummins Engine Co. as chairman. The Committee's April 29 report to the President, made public May 6, made several recommendations which Assistant Secretary of State Solomon Oct. 21 indicated might be the basis for possible 1966 Administration legislative proposals to increase East-West trade.

The Committee said "political, not commercial or economic considerations, should determine the formulation and execution of our trade policies" with the Soviet bloc and that "the United States should use trade negotiations with individual Communist countries more actively, aggressively and confidently in the pursuit of our national welfare and world peace."

The Committee's chief recommendation was that the President "be given discretionary authority to grant or withdraw most favored nation tariff treatment to and from individual Communist countries when he determines it to be in the national interest." MFN treatment is now given to only two Communist nations, Yugoslavia and Poland.

The report emphasized that trade with the Communists should be in nonstrategic goods only and "should not be subsidized nor should it receive artificial encouragement." The Committee said, "The U.S. Government should decide the permitted scope of the trade in terms of security considerations. Within these limits, the amount of trade that takes place should be left to U.S. business and the U.S. consumer to decide."

The Committee also recommended that the President should continue to have authority to grant Government-guaranteed commercial credits up to five years when deemed in the national interest, that the United States should review its trade with the Communists periodically and that the United States should bargain for agreement on matters related to trade, such as settlements of outstanding financial claims and procedures to avoid dumping.

(A staff member of the Senate Commerce Committee Dec. 7 told Congressional Quarterly that any proposed legislation on East-West trade would probably be based on the committee's recommendations.)

Trade Missions. A group of 93 business executives who attended a trade conference in Moscow in late 1964 submitted a report to the President Jan. 7, 1965, also calling for expanding trade to help "bridge a communications gap" with the Soviet bloc and influence the evolution of Soviet society.

The President sent a seven-member trade mission, representing three Government members and four private businessmen, to Poland and Romania from Sept. 18 to Oct. 16 to further the Administration's plan "for building bridges of increased trade" with that area. The group explored opportunities for selling more American products to the civilian industries and reported that there was great interest by both countries in U.S. products. The group generally favored increased trade, although members cited some obstacles, such as the need for western currency, before the countries could buy from the United States.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTIONS

House Report. The House Foreign Affairs Committee, in a report (H Rept 15, Feb. 3) called for a review of U.S. trading laws, saying that restrictions against Communist countries were not accomplishing their purpose because of other Free World nations' trade with the Communists and that American manufacturers were needlessly being denied access to the market. The report, made by seven Representatives who visited the Soviet bloc in late 1964, suggested that the American list of restricted goods might be made as lenient as those of Western European countries if the Soviet Union would meet certain conditions, such as agreeing to new negotiations on lend-lease debts. However, the Representatives emphasized their opposition to granting long-term (more than five years) credit to the Communists because such credit would be "tantamount to foreign aid."

Senate Proposals. Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) of the Senate Commerce Committee Feb. 1 introduced a bill (S J Res 36) to establish a permanent Council for Expanded Trade, composed of private citizens, to advise the President and Congress as to how trade in peaceful goods could be boosted with the Communist nations. No hearings were held.

Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) and House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) March 4 said there should be no negotiations on expanding trade until the Communists stopped aggression in South Viet Nam and elsewhere. Ford said GOP Congressional leaders had endorsed a "no-concession -- no deal" policy.

Senate Hearings. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, continuing its review started in 1962 on East-West trade policy, held three days of hearings in February 1965 on East-West trade.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) Feb. 24 said expanded East-West trade in peaceful goods could have a "useful impact on over-all East-West relations and is definitely indicated for the future." He offered a nine-point "fair practices code" covering such points as patent protection and dumping.

William Blackie, representing the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the U.S. policy of boycott against the Communists was not working. He said that "other countries are filling the orders for those goods which, by their definition but not ours, are not strategic."

Howard W. Hardy of Great Plains Wheat Inc., a marketing association of wheat growers, Feb. 25 said there was a "continuing and significant long-term market for wheat" from the West in the Soviet Union, but that American growers could not compete for this market with the requirement that shipments be made in U.S. ships, which had about 14 percent higher freight rates than foreign carriers. Expanded trade was also endorsed by Elliott Haynes of the Business International Corp.

Former Ambassador to Russia and Yugoslavia George F. Kennan, Johns Hopkins professor Isaiah Frank and Harvard professor Harold J. Berman Feb. 26 testified in favor of more trade with the Soviet bloc. They pointed out that even a complete embargo would have only a limited effect on the Soviet economy and that it was not in the interest of the United States to refuse normal trade relations with the Soviet bloc.

In a related development, the AFL-CIO Executive Council March 1 denounced American businessmen for seeking more trade with Communist nations and called for a ban on such trade until Communist leaders agreed to such concessions as removing the Berlin Wall and ending their activities in South Viet Nam. AFL-CIO President George Meany characterized the business community's interest in expanding trade with the Reds as "greed for profit."

A contrary view was contained in a report issued May 6 by the Committee for Economic Development, a private group of 200 U.S. businessmen and educators. The CED said the "interests of the West" would be enhanced by East-West trade expansion.

In the course of earlier, 1964 hearings before the Committee on a general review of East-West trade, Secretary of State Dean Rusk March 13 said the USSR had a "largely self-sufficient economy" so that a total trade embargo would have "only a marginal effect." He said Soviet satellites were "trying to reduce their economic dependence upon the USSR" and that trade "enables us to exert some influence on the evolution of policy and institutions" in these nations. He cited Yugoslavia as a country whose trade with the West had helped it "break loose from Soviet domination."

During the same hearings, the then Secretary of the Treasury, Douglas Dillon, April 9 testified that "nonstrategic trade with the Soviet bloc on normal commercial terms can be fully as beneficial to the United States as to the bloc."

BOYCOTT ACTIONS

Firestone Case. Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, July 25 cited the activities of a "minor vigilante group... the Young Americans for Freedom" as a factor behind a decision in April of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. to discontinue negotiations for the construction of a synthetic rubber plant in Romania. Fulbright said the YAF had started a boycott in the U.S. against Firestone products in protest against the proposed plant. He criticized the State Department for not helping Firestone resist the pressures, and also said a major competitor, Goodyear Tire and Rubber, also pressured Firestone not to build the plant. The State Department July 29 said it had done everything within reason to support Firestone and that George W. Ball, Under Secretary of State, had given the President a detailed report on the Department's actions in the matter.

Cigarette Dispute. The Secretaries of State, Defense, and Commerce Oct. 11 praised six major U.S. cigarette manufacturers for their defiance of a threatened consumer boycott because of the use of a small amount of tobacco imported from Yugoslavia. In a letter to the cigarette firms, the Administration said it "regards commerce, in peaceful goods with the countries of Eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union, as completely compatible with our national interests." Businesses, the letter said, should not be penalized for lawful trade.

TARIFF SCHEDULES

President Johnson Oct. 7 signed into law a bill (HR 7969 -- PL 89-241) correcting oversights and errors in the Tariff Classification Act of 1962. (1962 Almanac p. 290)

House. HR 7969, supported by the Administration, was reported by the House Ways and Means Committee, without amendment, May 17. It affected more than 70 categories of imports.

Senate. The Senate Finance Committee Aug. 2 reported the bill with 116 changes (S Rept 530). The Committee deleted provisions in the House bill which increased the duty on wood particleboard from 12 to 20 percent and reduced the duty on permanent magnets from 18 to 16 percent. The Committee also amended 10 House provisions and added 19 new sections, including provisions raising the duty on waterproof footwear of synthetic rubber and cheap brooms.

The Senate passed the bill by voice vote Aug. 13 after adopting by voice votes the following amendments:

Aug. 12 -- Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) -- Lower the duty on semi-processed picker sticks (used on textile looms) to the 14 percent rate on finished picker sticks.

Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) -- Reduce the rate on paper-drying machines to that of paper machinery.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Clarify rate on anesthetic machinery parts.

Aug. 13 -- Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) -- Abolish the American selling price valuation on natural rubber footwear and set duties ranging from 12.5 percent to 60 percent (for boots and galoshes) on natural, synthetic rubber and plastic footwear.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Reduce rates on particleboard imported by Puerto Rico.

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- In lieu of the committee increase on broom duties, permit imports of 320,000 dozen brooms annually at 20 percent duty and set a 32 percent rate on above-quota imports, giving the President discretion to adjust the quotas if U.S. consumption changes. (The amendment was designed to help Mexico).

The Senate rejected only one amendment: an Aug. 13 proposal by Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) to raise the duty on spring clothespins.

During debate Aug. 12 Ribicoff accused the State Department of "duplicity" in withdrawing support of his and Hartke's amendment when the Japanese government protested the increased duty on synthetic footwear.

Conference. The conference report on HR 7969 (H Rept 979) was filed Sept. 13. On substantive Senate amendments, the House accepted 25 and the Senate receded on 10, while others were compromised. On action taken on Senate floor amendments, the Javits and Kuchel amendments were accepted intact but the Thurmond, Case and Long amendments were dropped. The Hartke-Ribicoff amendment was accepted in part but the rate on boots and galoshes was reduced to 37.5 percent. On particleboard, the House increase in duty was agreed to except for three specified tropical hardwoods where the 12 percent duty was retained.

The House Sept. 16 and the Senate Sept. 20 adopted the conference report without dissent.

RATIFICATION OF U.N. CHARTER AMENDMENTS

Exec. A -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 1) May 5, 1965.
● Approved by the Senate on a 71-0 roll-call vote June 3, 1965. (See p. 1044)

The Senate in 1965, with little opposition and no negative votes, consented to the ratification by the President of amendments to the United Nations Charter enlarging the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council (Executive A, 89th Congress, 1st Session). The increases were to compensate for the enlarged membership of the UN, which had grown from its original 51 members to 114 members by June 1965.

The amendments enlarged the Security Council from 11 to 15 members and the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27 members. The amendments also increased from seven to nine the number of affirmative votes required for decisions of the Security Council. However, the amendments did not change the existing authority of the permanent members to veto non-procedural matters.

Approval of the amendments represented the first revision of the UN Charter in the United Nations' 20-year history. Amendments to the Charter must be approved by two-thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified by two-thirds of the member states, including all of the permanent members -- the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and Nationalist China. As of Aug. 31, 95 members -- well over the required 76 -- had agreed to the proposed amendments, and ratification by President Johnson Aug. 31 made the United States the fifth and final permanent member to approve them. The Charter changes were to go into effect Jan. 1, 1966, following the Assembly elections held in December 1965. (See p. 507)

President Johnson April 6 submitted the amendments to the Senate for consent to ratification. He said that the proposed increase in the Councils was "clearly necessary to restore the balance which existed between the Councils and the General Assembly when the Charter came into force" but was "not such as to make the Councils unwieldy." (For text, see p. 1418)

The Senate considered the revision of the Charter June 3. The proposed amendments were not particularly controversial and the only opposition to them was voiced by Sen. Strom Thurmond (R S.C.), who did not vote on ratification. Debate in the Senate focused more on criticism of UN operations than on the amendments, although an expected full-scale debate on the UN as a whole did not materialize.

PROVISIONS -- As consented to by the Senate, Exec. A, 89th Congress, 1st Session, authorized the President to ratify United Nations Resolution No. 1991 revising the UN Charter as follows:

Amended Article 23 of the Charter to increase the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15 members and to increase the number of Council members to be elected by the General Assembly to two-year terms from 6 to 10; specified that in the first election following the increase in membership of the Security Council, two of the four additional members would be elected to terms of one year.

Amended Article 27 of the Charter to require nine, rather than seven, affirmative votes for decisions of the Security Council.

Amended Article 61 of the Charter to increase membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27; specified that nine (rather than six) of the members would be chosen each year for a term of three years; specified that in the first election following the increase in membership in the Economic and Social Council, three of the nine additional members would be elected to one-year terms, three to two-year terms, and three to three-year terms.

(For provisions regarding the geographic distribution of seats, which did not require Senate approval, see Distribution of Seats, p. 506.)

Background

REFERENCES -- For historical background on the UN see 1965 CQ Weekly Report p. 907-917 and Congress and the Nation p. 93, p. 128.

An outgrowth of a number of wartime conferences, the UN Charter was signed by 50 nations at San Francisco, Calif., June 26, 1945, and by Poland, one of the original 51 members, on Oct. 15. The Charter went into effect Oct. 24, 1945, when the requisite ratifications had been deposited with the United States Government.

Six principal organs were established: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court, and a Secretariat. Virtually all power was to reside in the 11-member Security Council, with each of the five permanent members having the right of veto on most kinds of substantive decision.

Security Council Veto. The Security Council, to which the Charter assigned "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security," is composed of five permanent members -- the United States the Soviet Union, Great Britain, France and Nationalist China -- plus members elected by the General Assembly for terms of two years. Decisions require an affirmative vote of at least nine members, under the 1965 amendments. On matters of substance, as distinct from matters of procedure, the affirmative votes must include those of the permanent members. The so-called veto is thus exercised when a permanent member, by a negative vote, prevents adoption of a resolution which otherwise might have the required nine votes.

The Council was authorized by the Charter to investigate disputes or situations likely to endanger international peace, to make recommendations for peaceful settlement and to enforce its decisions by ordering application of non-military sanctions or by taking "such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security." Members of the UN were obligated by the Charter to accept and carry out decisions of the Security Council.

The United States had originally proposed the veto privilege at the Yalta conference, and has never advocated its abolition. It was expected, however, that the veto would be used sparingly and the great powers would act in concert in maintaining peace. The free use the Soviet Union made of the veto soon disabused the UN of this assumption. During the UN's first year (1946) Russia cast nine vetoes. By May 1, 1965, the Soviets had cast 104. By 1965 France had cast a total of four, Britain three, China one and the U.S. none.

Economic and Social Council. The Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) is the largest of the three UN Councils; as enlarged in 1965, it consists of 27 members elected by the General Assembly. Efforts are made to distribute these seats equitably among all the member nations of the UN, although this is not required by the Charter. Whereas the General Assembly and the Security Council deal for the most part with international disputes as they arise, the function of ECOSOC is to alleviate international tensions and prevent international conflicts before they arise by dealing with the improvement of world economic and social conditions.

ECOSOC promotes: higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development; international cultural and educational cooperation; and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. To carry out its functions ECOSOC has important recommendation and coordinating responsibilities. It has established a variety of regional and functional commissions and other bodies -- for example, Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, Population Commission and UN Children's Fund.

Two reasons were advanced for enlarging the Council's membership: (1) to enable it better to meet its vast obligations; and (2) to spread its representation among the newer UN nations and thus secure more support from those members who stood to gain the most from the Council's activities.

UN Growth. The question of increasing the size and membership of the Security Council and ECOSOC first arose in 1956, after UN membership had increased by 20 countries in two years. The influx of new African and Asian states made the question of distribution of seats on the Councils increasingly urgent.

Nine new members came into the UN in the first five years of its existence, raising the membership from 51 to 60. Prospective membership, however, increasingly became a cold war issue, with Western-sponsored applications encountering a Soviet veto and with Western countries refusing to vote for the admission of states with Communist governments. After 1951 there were no further admissions until the deadlock was broken in 1955, when a compromise formula resulted in the admission of 16 nations on the same day. Since 1955, most countries attaining independence have been admitted automatically. By September 1965, the total had risen to 114, of which 61 were from Africa or Asia. (Three more states became members Sept. 21, after ratification of the amendments, bringing the total to 117, of which 64 were from Africa or Asia.)

CHARTER AMENDMENTS PROPOSED

For years the Soviet Union opposed any Charter amendments so long as Communist China was not occupying China's seat in the UN. As Rep. Jonathan B. Bingham (D N.Y.), former U.S. Ambassador to the Economic and Social Council, described the situation in an April 28, 1965, speech to the House, the United States had been "in the agreeable position of saying to the Afro-Asians: 'We agree that the Council ought to be enlarged somewhat to reflect the changed membership of the UN. Go talk to the Russians. They are the ones that are holding it up.'"

In 1963 the Afro-Asians decided to push ahead for enlargements of the Councils despite Soviet objections. The General Assembly Dec. 17 approved UN Resolution 1991 containing the texts of amendments to increase the number of nonpermanent members of the Security Council and to enlarge the Economic and Social Council. Article 108 of the UN Charter requires that amendments must be adopted by a two-thirds vote of the Assembly and ratified by two-thirds of the UN membership, including the five permanent members of the Security Council. The vote to increase the size of the Security Council was 97 to 11 with 4 abstentions. On the enlargement of the Economic and Social Council, the vote was 96 to 11, with 5 abstentions. In both cases, Cuba, France and the Soviet bloc, minus Albania, opposed the amendments, while the United States, Britain, South Africa and Portugal abstained. China also abstained on the Economic and Social Council vote. (For explanation of the U.S. abstention, see Stevenson testimony, next page.)

The resolution called upon the member states to ratify the amendments by Sept. 1, 1965, and as of Aug. 31, 95 nations had done so. Of the five permanent members of the Security Council, the Soviet Union, which had voted against the resolution in the General Assembly, was the first to ratify; the United States Aug. 31 was the last.

Distribution of Seats. In addition to the amendments enlarging the Councils, Resolution 1991 specified the geographic distribution of seats on the two Councils. Since these provisions of the UN resolution were not offered as amendments to the Charter, they were not subject to ratification by member states and were not submitted to the Senate for consent to ratification. The resolution:

Distributed the 10 nonpermanent seats on the Security Council as follows: five from Africa and Asia; one from Eastern Europe; two from Latin America; and two from Western Europe and other regions.

Distributed, without altering the area distribution of 18 existing seats, the nine additional seats on the Economic and Social Council as follows; seven from Africa and Asia; one from Latin America; and one from Western Europe and other regions. (In effect, the total of 27 seats would thus be distributed as follows: 12 from Africa and Asia; six from Western Europe and other regions (including Britain and France); five from Latin America; three from Eastern Europe (including the Soviet Union); and one from the United States.

Effects of Amendments. The "gentlemen's agreement" by which the nonpermanent seats on the Security Council were originally distributed provided two seats for Latin America -- then the largest identifiable group of members -- and one seat each to Western Europe, the British Commonwealth, the Middle East and Africa combined, and Eastern Europe. No separate provision was made for Asia since, in 1945, there was only one non-Commonwealth Asian member (the Philippines) besides China, which had a permanent seat. One seat for the Middle East and Africa was considered sufficient because there were then only seven Middle Eastern members and only two from Africa (Ethiopia and Liberia) besides South Africa, which was then eligible for the Commonwealth seat.

Beginning in 1955, the Eastern European seat was used, by splitting the two-year term, to give representation to Asian states which were not members of the Commonwealth; in 1963 the Commonwealth seat, held in recent years by African or Asian members of the Commonwealth, was granted to a non-Commonwealth African country (Ivory Coast). In 1960, the term of the Western European seat was split with an African country.

There was no formal agreement governing the distribution of seats on the Economic and Social Council.

The effect of the shift in membership in the Councils was described by Rep. Bingham in his April 28 speech. Admitting that U.S. influence on the Councils would be "somewhat diluted," Bingham said there were "offsetting factors." The United States would retain the veto, which it has never used, for use if needed. To defeat a Security Council resolution without a veto, the U.S. would now need to muster seven, rather than five, negative votes or abstentions. Bingham said this "should not be too difficult" because it would require the support of only the five Western members and the two Latin American representatives. However, in the future, with the enlarged Council, the United States might lose its unique distinction of being the only permanent member never to have cast a veto.

To secure favorable action by the Security Council, the United States would need, in addition to solid Western and Latin support, the votes of at least two Afro-Asian members of the Council to obtain the required nine affirmatives. Bingham thought this "feasible," because the Afro-Asian group includes "some staunchly Western-oriented states and many moderates. Indeed, our experience with the Afro-Asian states generally is that they tend to vote with us more often than with the Soviet Bloc."

With regard to the Economic and Social Council, Bingham said that the enlargement would revive the organ, which "has in recent years suffered a decline in influence by very reason of its comparatively small size and the under-representation of the newer states."

Council Members Named

The General Assembly Dec. 10 elected the following countries, in addition to the five permanent members, to the Security Council: Argentina, Bulgaria, Japan, Jordan, Mali, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Uganda and Uruguay.

On Dec. 15 the General Assembly elected the following 27 members to the Economic and Social Council: Algeria, Cameroun, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Dahomey, Ecuador, France, Gabon, Greece, India, Iran, Iraq, Luxembourg, Morocco, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Sierra Leone, Sweden, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, Tanzania, United States and Venezuela.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HELD HEARINGS -- April 28 and 29 on the proposed amendments to the United Nations Charter (Exec. A) submitted by President Johnson April 6.

TESTIMONY -- April 28 -- Secretary of State Dean Rusk reiterated U.S. interest in a strong United Nations and summarized the advantages of the proposed amendments to the Charter. He said they would: "modernize the current obsolete apportionment of seats on the two Councils;...add to the prestige of the Councils and to the confidence of the membership at large that they are fairly represented;...alleviate the present severe pressures on the original allocation of seats, which has led to bickering; ...help minimize contentious rivalries for seats on the Councils and help to assure that a greater number of countries over the years will have opportunity to participate in the affairs of the Councils."

Rusk said the proposed enlargements "are reasonable and equitable without expanding the councils to unwieldy sizes." The proposed voting majorities, he said, "are fair and workable -- and in our judgment would not materially change the voting alignment from the present situation."

April 29 -- Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, sought "to clear up one misapprehension that has had too much currency: That is, that the UN is a dead or dying institution." Stevenson said that "while the General Assembly has been inactive for some months, the UN is in full operation, in some respects on a scale greater than ever before. One might say simply that its parliamentary arm is temporarily disabled."

Noting that the first proposal to enlarge the Councils was made after the admission of 16 new members in 1955, Stevenson said the United States "has consistently supported reasonable increases in the Councils but that the proposals, until 1964, were always blocked by the Soviet Union," which opposed any increase until Communist China was seated in the UN. The U.S. abstention in the 1963 Assembly vote on the proposed amendments was due, Stevenson testified, not to the "substance" of the resolutions, but because they were adopted at the end of the session. "Last-minute changes were made in the proposed size of the enlargements, and in the fast-moving parliamentary situation we had insufficient time for renewed consultation with Members of the Congress and our UN allies," he said.

With regard to the proposed enlargement of the Security Council, Stevenson said: "It is our considered judgment that the voting alignments under the new allocation, with a majority requirement of nine, would not differ materially from the present one.... We expect that, as in the past, our policies would usually be in harmony with those of a majority of Council members, and we would not, as a result of Security Council enlargement, be more likely to have to cast a veto than now."

Stevenson said that the 18-member Economic and Social Council was "less than sufficiently representative" to carry out its tasks. "It has been losing touch with some nations or groups of nations," he said, "and it has been losing support and not accomplishing all that the UN and we could wish in the broad area of economic and social development." The proposed increase in the Economic and Social Council, Stevenson said, "would improve the Council's ability to reflect the opinions of all the areas of the world in its recommendations and actions on the important issues with which it deals."

Asked if there might be any possible disadvantage to the United States as a result of enlargement of the Councils, Stevenson replied: "...I think, on the contrary, there are more advantages than disadvantages." He added: "The disadvantages are the unknown, as against the known and the tried experience of the past. I think in anything that is experimental like this, one has some misgivings that something may arise, that you may not have made every calculation that you can, or taken every precaution that you can."

Harlan Cleveland, Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, and representatives of the United World Federalists, the American Assn. of University Women and the Friends Committee on National Legislation also testified. No witness appeared in opposition to the charter amendments. (Continued on next page)

Treaty Reported. The Committee May 5 reported Exec. A (Exec. Rept 1) favorably, recommending that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification of the proposed amendments to the UN Charter.

FLOOR ACTION. The Senate June 3 consented, by a 71-0 roll-call vote, to the ratification by the President of the amendments to the UN Charter (Exec. A). (For voting, see chart p. 1044)

During Senate debate on Exec. A, the only opposition to the amendments was expressed by Strom Thurmond (R S.C.). The "so-called newly emerging nations" becoming members of the UN General Assembly, Thurmond said, "have demonstrated a degree of impatience, irresponsibility and radicalism that is inconsistent with, if not entirely prohibitive to, effective operation of a stable international organization." He added that while enlargement of the Security Council "purportedly represents" an effort to make that council more representative by increasing the number of African and Asian nations, "the actual effect...will be to propel the Security Council along the same road of irresponsibility and paralysis that the General Assembly has already traveled." (Thurmond did not vote on the amendments.)

Although all other Senators who spoke expressed support for the amendments, a number criticized UN operations.

Related UN Developments

Five-Power UN Conference. President Johnson, at his Feb. 4 news conference, responded to a suggestion made by France's President de Gaulle that a five-power conference be held, including Red China, to discuss possible changes in the UN. Mr. Johnson said that "the problems of the UN are traceable not to the United Nations' charter but to those countries which have violated either the spirit or the letter of the charter." The United States continued to oppose the admittance of Communist China to the UN.

UN 20th Anniversary. President Johnson June 25, in a speech at San Francisco marking the 20th anniversary of the signing of the United Nations Charter, appealed to the UN to mobilize its influence and lead North Viet Nam to the conference table for peace negotiations. The President also renewed his plea for arms control and called on member nations to "rededicate themselves to wage together an international war on poverty."

Prior to the President's speech, Congress June 22 adopted a sense-of-Congress resolution (S Con Res 36) marking the UN anniversary by calling on the United States to rededicate itself to the principles of the world organization.

Stevenson Death. Adlai Ewing Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations since 1961 and the Democratic Presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, collapsed July 14 on a street near the U.S. embassy in London and died almost immediately. Death was caused by a heart attack. Stevenson was 65.

President Johnson July 20 nominated Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg to succeed Stevenson as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations. The appointment was confirmed by the Senate July 23.

UN Finances. Ambassador Goldberg Aug. 16 told the UN Committee on Peacekeeping Operations that the United States "regretfully" accepted the majority view of UN members that penalties should not be invoked against the Soviet Union, France and 11 other nations which had refused to pay for peace-keeping operations. Since October 1964, the U.S. Government had insisted that Article 19 of the UN Charter be applied to deny the right to vote to UN members that were two years or more in arrears in contributions due. (The debtor countries had paid their regular UN dues but balked at the special assessments for operations in the Congo and Suez.) The UN General Assembly was immobilized throughout its 1964-65 session because of the U.S. demand. (1964 Almanac p. 321)

Goldberg said the United States was abandoning its standpoint because "it is not in the world interest to have the work of the General Assembly immobilized in these troubled days." However, he warned that the United States would not allow a double standard on UN costs and would reserve the right not to make future payments.

Pope's Visit. Pope Paul VI Oct. 4 made a 14-hour visit to New York City to address the United Nations. In his address he made a plea that the UN resolve destructive disputes and work toward establishing a universal political and juridical world authority. The trip marked the first time that a reigning Pope had visited the Western Hemisphere.

While he was in New York, the Pope conferred with President Johnson for 46 minutes. They discussed ways to use America's prestige and the Roman Catholic Church's spiritual influence to bring peace to Viet Nam and other global trouble spots. They also envisioned a stepped-up campaign against poverty, illiteracy, and disease around the globe.

RYUKYU DAMAGE CLAIMS

S J Res 32 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 564) Aug. 10, 1965.
- Passed by voice vote of the Senate Aug. 11.
- Reported, amended, by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 972) Sept. 9.
- Passed by a 312-55 roll-call vote of the House Oct. 7. (See p. 1016)
- House amendments agreed to by voice vote of the Senate Oct. 13.

PL 89-296 -- Signed into law Oct. 27.

Congress in 1965 authorized a $22 million appropriation to compensate citizens of the Ryukyu Islands for damages by U.S. armed forces during the occupation of Okinawa and adjoining islands from Aug. 15, 1945, to April 28, 1952. The bill provided $15 million for land rentals, $3,650,000 for damage to property and growing crops and loss of fishing rights, $2,500,000 for restoration of damaged released lands, $800,000 for personal injury or death and $50,000 for water rights.

The payments were recommended by the Administration after a joint Ryukyuan-American Committee reviewed original claims for $53 million and reduced them to $22 million.

The House passed the bill Oct. 7, with committee amendments, by a 312-55 roll-call vote. In debate Oct. 6, Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa) called the payments a "bribe" and a "waste that the taxpayers...can ill afford." Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) criticized the formula used in determining the amount to be paid for personal injury and death as "inflated."

The amendments made municipalities ineligible to receive payments and restricted the payment for service to any law firm representing an association of claimants to not more than 1 percent of the claims paid.

U.S.-CANADIAN REMOVAL OF AUTO TARIFFS APPROVED

HR 9042 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 537) June 21, 1965.

- Passed by the House on a 280-113 roll-call vote Aug. 31. (See p. 994)
- Reported by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 782) Sept. 27.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, on a 54-18 roll-call vote Sept. 30. (See p. 1077)
- Conference report (H Rept 1115) agreed to by voice votes of the Senate Oct. 5 and the House Oct. 8.

PL 89-283 -- Signed into law Oct. 21.

Passage of HR 9042 authorized the President to remove tariff duties at the manufacturer's level on Canadian automobiles and parts for original equipment. The U.S. tariff, which had been 6.5 percent on autos and 8.5 percent on most parts, was abolished, retroactive to Jan. 18, 1965. The bill also established an Automotive Agreement Adjustment Board, composed of the Secretaries of the Treasury, Commerce and Labor, to aid U.S. workers "dislocated" by the U.S. - Canadian agreement.

HR 9042 was designed to implement an agreement signed Jan. 16 by President Johnson and Canadian Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson calling for removal of U.S. and Canadian tariff duties on cars and car parts. As a corollary to the U.S. Government's agreement, U.S. car manufacturers (whose subsidiaries produced most of the cars made in Canada) formally promised the Canadian government to increase their production in Canada through the 1968 model year, and in turn the Canadian government eliminated its tariffs on U.S. cars. In asking for Congressional approval of HR 9042, President Johnson said the agreement with Canada envisioned eventual "full integration of the North American automobile industry."

The bill won Congressional approval despite a heated floor debate in the Senate centering on the contention that the agreement would build up the Canadian automotive industry at the expense of the United States. Congressmen also complained that the agreement favored Canada in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), but the majority accepted the Administration argument that it was needed to head off a U.S.-Canadian trade war. In 1963 Canada had taken steps to build up its automobile production by placing greater restriction on imports of U.S. automotive products.

PROVISIONS

HR 9042, the Automotive Products Trade Act of 1965, contained the following major provisions:

Authorized the President to abolish retroactively to Jan. 18, 1965, the 6.5-percent U.S. tariff on Canadian automobiles and the 8.5-percent duty on Canadian parts, as applicable to those for use in original equipment.

Directed the President to report to Congress and, if necessary, to outline steps for legislative action if he should determine that the Canadian government after Aug. 31, 1968, had increased the percentage of local parts and labor that Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. auto companies had agreed to put into automobiles produced in Canada during model years 1965-68.

Established, until July 1, 1968, a special adjustment assistance program for U.S. auto firms and workers "dislocated" by the U.S.-Canadian agreement. Directed the Tariff Commission to investigate and report to the President on applications for assistance. Authorized the President, after consultation with the Departments of Commerce, Labor and the Treasury, and the Small Business Administration, to make final determination as to whether assistance should be granted.

Modified tariff schedules to designate automotive products on which duties were to be eliminated.

Directed the President to submit to Congress an annual report on implementation of the Act.

Stipulated that nothing in the Act should be construed to affect or modify the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Act of 1921, or any of the antitrust laws.

Authorized appropriation of whatever funds were necessary to implement provisions of the Act.

Eliminated the existing $10,000 limit on appropriations for the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Expenditures.

Background

President Johnson March 31 submitted to Congress a draft bill authorizing the President to remove all U.S. duties on Canadian automobiles and auto parts. This was designed to implement the Jan. 16 executive agreement between the President and Canadian Prime Minister Pearson. The agreement was reached after U.S. parts manufacturers protested a tariff "remission" plan drawn up by the Canadian government in 1963 to subsidize greater exports of automobiles.

President Johnson said Canada Jan. 18 had reduced all relevant duties to zero. Since that time, U.S. import duties had been suspended under an agreement made pending passage of the bill. Before the agreement, Canadian tariffs had been 17.5 percent on imported cars and up to 25 percent on parts.

In a letter accompanying the draft legislation (see p. 1420), the President said:

"This agreement resolves the serious difference which existed between Canada and the United States over our automotive trade. More significantly, it marks a long step forward in U.S. commercial relations with her greatest trading partner." Upon implementation of the agreement, "Canada will have achieved her objective of increasing her automotive production. U.S. manufacturers will be able to plan their production to make most efficient use of their plants, whether in Canada or the United States." (Over 90 percent of Canadian-made cars were produced by subsidiaries of U.S. companies. To benefit from the reduction in the Canadian tariff, U.S. subsidiaries agreed with the Canadian government to increase the value of their production in Canada by 60 percent of the growth in Canadian sales plus $241 million by the end of the 1968 model year.)

By proclaiming that duties would not be eliminated until 60 days from the bill's signing, (i.e., effective Dec. 20), President Johnson allowed time for the 66 member nations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) to act on the U.S. request for a waiver of the "most-favored nation" rule. This rule requires that a tariff concession granted to one GATT member must be granted to all. Administration officials said the United States was willing to eliminate auto tariffs mutually with any other GATT nation. This would be of great benefit to U.S. producers, because European auto tariffs included a 22-percent rate by the Common Market nations and a 27-percent rate by Great Britain.

A GATT spokesman announced Dec. 18 that more than the necessary two-thirds of GATT's 66 member nations, in a postal ballot, had approved the waiver requested by the United States.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

HELD HEARINGS -- April 27 - 29 on the Administration's draft bill (HR 9042) to implement the U.S.-Canadian executive agreement.

Officers of the Administration, U.S. automobile companies and the United Automobile Workers (AFL-CIO) union supported the agreement. Charles P. Taft of the Committee for a National Trade Policy April 28 said it would foster freedom of trade and ultimately benefit both U.S. and Canadian consumers. However, opposition was voiced by representatives of the independent automotive parts trade, who said it would increase the dominance of the "Big Three" (General Motors, Ford and Chrysler, all with plants in Canada).

ACTION -- The Committee June 21 reported (H Rept 537) the Automotive Products Trade Act of 1965 (HR 9042).

Majority Views. In approving the executive agreement the Ways and Means report said, "Fundamentally, it represents a decision by Canada to join with the United States in a relationship that will allow the development of a single North American automotive industry on the basis of efficient and rational production."

Separate Views. The eight Committee Republicans signed a statement warning that the agreement: (1) was "a complete departure from the multilateral trade negotiations" advocated by the U.S. Government for years; (2) might "result in a net loss to the U.S. economy" by shifting car production to Canada; (3) failed to contain concessions by Canada on products, such as wood and paper, on which that country had a favorable balance of trade with the United States; (4) gave auto workers more favorable treatment, if they should suffer from the agreement, than was made available to all workers by the adjustment assistance provisions of the 1962 Trade Expansion Act. (1962 Almanac p. 249)

FLOOR ACTION

The House Aug. 31, by a 280-113 roll-call vote, passed HR 9042 without amendment. (For voting, see chart p. 994.)

The major section of HR 9042 gave the President authority to abolish retroactively to Jan. 18, 1965, the 6.5-percent U.S. tariff on Canadian automobiles and the 8.5-percent duty on Canadian parts used in original equipment. Other sections of the measure authorized the President to make similar agreements with other countries, to make agreements with Canada and other countries for duty reductions on automobile replacement parts and to set up until July 1968 a special adjustment assistance program for U.S. auto firms and workers "dislocated" by the agreement.

The bill had the support of U.S. automobile manufacturers and the United Auto Workers Union (AFL-CIO) but was opposed by many independent parts manufacturers. Five Representatives with automotive parts manufacturers in their districts sent a letter Aug. 30 to all House Members asking defeat of the bill. They were Robert McClory (R Ill.), John Brademas (D Ind.), Lynn E. Stalbaum (D Wis.), John O. Marsh Jr. (D Va.) and Frank A. Stubblefield (D Ky.).

At the outset of debate on the measure, several critics of the bill opposed adoption of the closed rule (H Res 551), precluding floor amendments, under which HR 9042 was to be considered. McClory sought defeat of the rule so that he could offer an amendment authorizing the President to negotiate an agreement for free and unrestricted trade in automobiles and parts of all types. After a brief discussion, however, the rule was adopted, 363-23. Tariff bills traditionally are considered by the House under a closed rule.

Supporters of HR 9042 said the measure was needed to prevent a "trade war" between the United States and Canada. Ways and Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) asserted that if Congress failed to implement the agreement, "we could expect Canada to put back their duties on automobiles and parts -- duties that are about three times as high as U.S. duties" -- and probably restore the "remission of duties plan." Mills and other supporters said the measure would result in cost savings that would lower the price of cars and increase employment in both countries.

Critics argued that the bill was one-sided in favor of Canada and U.S. auto companies with subsidiaries there. They charged that the executive agreement signed by President Johnson committed the United States to the compact and left Congress with no choice in the matter. McClory said the legislation was designed to "placate and satisfy the current political Administration in Canada" whose policy was "one of greater Canadian nationalism...." He protested the "discrimination" against replacement parts and in favor of parts used in new cars.

Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), criticizing the bill although he subsequently voted for passage, said the legislation violated traditional U.S. policy aimed at equal treatment for U.S. trading partners. "If we keep making agreements on a nation by nation basis," Curtis said, "this is going to end in a fiasco."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- The Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Canadian Affairs held a hearing Feb. 10 on the U.S.-Canadian Auto Agreement. Testimony was given by G. Griffith Johnson, then Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, who spoke in favor of the legislation. No report was issued.

The Finance Committee held hearings on HR 9042 Sept. 14-16 and 20, with many of the witnesses who testified earlier at the House hearings.

ACTION -- HR 9042 was reported Sept. 27 (S Rept 782) by the Finance Committee.

Majority Views. The Committee report said the agreement was a "new and bold approach directed toward the dismantling of trade barriers thwarting the economic growth of the United States - Canadian auto industry." Upshot of the compact, the report said, would be a more rapid growth of the Canadian auto market, an ultimate reduction in the price of cars to the Canadian consumer and increasing sales for U.S. parts manufacturers.

Minority Views. Three Committee Democrats, Abraham A. Ribicoff (Conn.), Vance Hartke (Ind.) and Albert Gore (Tenn.), dissented on grounds that the agreement contemplated "the exportation of American jobs to Canada." Noting that U.S. auto manufacturers had agreed to expand their production in Canada by $241 million through model year 1968, the minority said the expanded capacity and its intended employment opportunities could "come only out of the United States."

Changes in House Bill. The Senate Committee bill modified the version of the measure passed by the House Aug. 31 in several respects. The committee amendments:

- Provided that present U.S. duties on cars and new car parts would be reimposed if the Canadian government after 1968 increased the percentage of local parts and labor that Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. auto companies had agreed to put into automobiles produced in Canada for the 1965 through 1968 model years. This provision could be waived, however, if Congress specifically endorsed the higher Canadian input rates.
- Provided that any future automotive agreement negotiated by the Administration must be submitted for the approval of Congress before the change could take effect. The House-passed measure provided for automatic approval of such agreements unless Congress passed a concurrent resolution of disapproval within a 60-day period.
- Modified tariff schedules to designate automotive products on which duties were to be eliminated.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Sept. 30, by a 54-18 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 9042. (For voting, see chart p. 1077.)

Prior to passage, the Senate by voice vote adopted the three amendments written into the bill by the Finance Committee and accepted a series of minor floor amendments.

Rejected, on roll-call votes, were two proposals by opponents of the measure to delay implementation of the agreement. The first, sponsored by Albert Gore (D Tenn.), called for postponement of further consideration of the bill until Jan. 10, 1966. After the Gore motion was defeated by a 32-43 roll-call vote, Vance Hartke (D Ind.) offered an amendment directing the Tariff Commission to study and report to Congress on the tariff agreement by Jan. 15, 1966, and providing for the compact to take effect 90 days later unless Congress voted to reject it. The Hartke amendment failed on a 34-40 roll call.

In a heated three-day floor debate, opponents of the bill contended that the agreement was one-sided in favor of Canada, that it violated the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) and that it worked against, rather than for, free trade.

Gore, Hartke and Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), the three leading critics of the bill, Sept. 28 charged that increased Canadian capacity under the agreement would come only at the expense of the United States. The sharpest criticism came from Hartke, who said the agreement "clearly contemplates the exportation of jobs to Canada." (In December 1963 the Studebaker Corp. closed its South Bend, Ind., automobile plant and transferred production to its Canadian plant in Hamilton, Ont.) Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.), the bill's floor manager, conceded that the pact would result in higher employment in Canada, but insisted that it would not come at the expense of U.S. jobs.

Frank Carlson (R Kan.) Sept. 30 said the pact embarked the United States on a "bilateral" trade agreements posture in violation of the multilateral agreements policy embodied in GATT.

Gaylord Nelson (D Wis.) Sept. 30 asserted that the agreement took the form of a "cartel" by excluding auto replacement parts and removing Canadian tariffs only on goods exported by U.S. auto producers who had committed their Canadian subsidiaries over a four-year period to greater use of local parts and labor. These commitments, Nelson said, "removed an element of free competition from the determination of both how the Canadian market is to be divided and of how production is to be divided between plants in the United States and those in Canada." Long replied that the side-arrangements were necessary "so that the subsidiaries would produce enough to take care of increased consumption in Canada.... Canada has to require this to get efficiency and economy of operation."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Sept. 30 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Stipulate that nothing contained in the Act should be construed to affect or modify provisions of the Anti-Dumping Act of 1921 or any of the antitrust laws. Voice vote.

Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) -- Add language to make clear that U.S. duties suspended under the agreement would be restored if the Canadian Government after Aug. 31, 1968, increased the percentage of local parts and labor that Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. auto companies had agreed to put into automobiles produced in Canada over model years 1965-68. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Require the President in his annual report on implementation of the Act to specifically include information regarding the effect of the agreement on automotive production, prices and employment in both the United States and Canada, and information regarding U.S. and Canadian automotive trade, particularly trade with each other. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- for Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- Eliminate the existing $10,000 authorization ceiling on appropriations for the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, thereby providing an open-ended authorization. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Sept. 30 -- Vance Hartke (D Ind.) -- Direct the Tariff Commission to study and report to Congress on the U.S.-Canadian automotive agreement by Jan. 15, 1966; provide for the agreement to take effect 90 days after the Commission's report (unless Congress voted to repeal the Act). Roll-call vote, 34-40.

Conference

The Senate Oct. 5 and the House Oct. 8 by voice votes adopted the conference report (H Rept 1115) on HR 9042, clearing the bill for the President's signature. The conferees took the following actions on specific points where the House and Senate versions differed:

- Agreed to language which, in effect, deleted a section of the House bill providing for approval of any future automotive agreement negotiated by the Administration with another country, unless Congress should disapprove within 60 days.
- Agreed to a proposal by House conferees directing the President to report to Congress and, if necessary, outline steps for legislative action, if he determined that the Canadian Government after Aug. 31, 1968, had increased the percentage of local parts and labor that Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. auto companies had agreed to put into automobiles produced in the Dominion during model years 1965-68. The Senate version of the provision required automatic reimposition of U.S. duties when the President determined that the Canadian Government had increased the Canadian input rates. There was no comparable provision in the House bill.

● Agreed to Senate provisions, not in the House bill: (1) modifying tariff schedules to designate automotive products on which duties were to be eliminated; (2) stipulating that nothing contained in the Act should be construed to affect or modify the provisions of the Anti-Dumping Act of 1921 or any of the antitrust laws; and (3) eliminating the $10,000 ceiling on annual appropriations for the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

Bill Signed. In signing the bill Oct. 21 (PL 89-283), President Johnson said the legislation "opens the way to a new era of even closer economic and commercial relations with our greatest trading partner, Canada." The President added, "We have assured continuation of over 25,000 jobs for American workers directly involved in producing the automotive goods we sell to Canada, and as many more for those who work in the steel, textile, electrical, rubber and other supporting industries."

Little Progress Made in 'Kennedy Round' Negotiations

As 1965 came to a close, U.S. hopes for substantial progress toward lower tariffs and fewer nontariff barriers at the "Kennedy Round" of tariff negotiations had dimmed. The negotiations, which began May 4, 1964, at Geneva, Switzerland, under the auspices of GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), had produced agreement on some industrial tariff cuts but made almost no progress on agricultural products.

The Trade Expansion Act of 1962, which President Kennedy called the "most important international piece of legislation...affecting economics since the passage of the Marshall Plan," had fallen far short of expectations. The main impetus behind the legislation was the Kennedy Administration's desire to negotiate mutual tariff concessions with the European Economic Community (EEC), or Common Market, which, with its continuing growth in demand for consumer goods, offered the United States great opportunities for increasing its export sales. (1962 Almanac, p.249)

Heralded as the forerunner of an expanded and liberalized free world trade system, the Act gave the President a five-year authority -- until July 1, 1967 -- to negotiate tariff reductions of up to 50 percent and to eliminate them in certain cases.

The major obstacle at the Kennedy Round negotiations was the failure of the EEC to resolve its own internal difficulties. The chief difficulty was in formulating a common agricultural policy, without which EEC could not negotiate meaningfully on questions of reducing agricultural tariffs.

The problem of arriving at a common farm policy was compounded by the actions of France, which withdrew July 1, 1965, from all EEC negotiations. The reason for the French boycott was the decision of the Community's nine-man Executive Commission to give the European Parliament, the Community's governing body, control over the receipt and disposal of all revenues accruing from the EEC's common external tariff. The effect was to remove control of the tariff revenues from each individual EEC member, including France, which considered the proposals an infringement on its sovereignty. The evolvement of the EEC into a supranational political entity was entirely unacceptable to France.

French interests had often been at variance with the over-all interests of the EEC and those of the United States. The first setback occurred in January 1963, when France vetoed Britain's bid for membership in the Community. The Kennedy Administration's policy and the entire thrust of the Trade Expansion Act was geared toward British membership. This was reflected in the Act's provision which gave the President authority to eliminate tariffs on categories of goods in which the United States and the EEC together accounted for 80 percent of free world trade. The "80 percent" provision was rendered practically meaningless by Britain's exclusion from the Community. At the time the Act was under discussion, the Commerce Department estimated that 26 categories of goods would fall under the 80-percent clause. However, without Britain in the EEC, only aircraft would come under the provision. (1962 Almanac p. 265)

French reasons for vetoing British membership were expressed by President Charles de Gaulle at a Jan. 14, 1963, press conference. He said that because England was "insular, maritime, linked through its trade, markets and food supply to very diverse and often very distant countries" and had "very marked and original customs and traditions..., the nature, structure and economic context of England differed profoundly from those of the other states of the continent." Although Britain might "one day" transform itself "enough to belong to the European Community," De Gaulle said that admission of diverse nations would lead to a "colossal Atlantic Community under American dependence and leadership which would soon completely swallow up the European Community."

U.S. OBJECTIVES

What the United States hoped to gain from the Kennedy Round was greater access for its agricultural and industrial products to foreign markets, particularly the EEC market. A favorable trade balance is the chief mitigating factor in U.S. payments deficits, and increased exports would make the trade balance more favorable. Although the United States has always had a trade surplus, in 1965 the surplus dropped slightly.

The United States entered the Kennedy Round with a definite set of objectives. It sought across-the-board 50-percent tariff reductions on all agricultural and industrial commodities (with essential exceptions) and insisted that both agricultural and industrial concessions proceed hand in hand.

FOREIGN AGENTS ACT

S 693 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 143) April 1, 1965.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote April 5. (For roll-call vote on tax amendment, see p. 1033)

The Senate in 1965, for the second consecutive year, passed Administration-backed legislation (S 693) to tighten and clarify provisions of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (PL 75-583). The House did not act on the bill, which was an outgrowth of hearings held in 1962-63 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on foreign lobbying activities. (1963 Almanac p. 303)

As passed by the Senate, S 693 imposed stricter disclosure requirements on lobbyists for foreign interests; redefined the activities of persons required to register under the Act; authorized the Attorney General to enjoin persons from activities not in compliance with the Act; outlawed contingency arrangements in which the agent's fee was based on his legislative success; and prohibited agents from making Congressional campaign contributions in behalf of a foreign principal.

According to the Justice Department, nearly 500 active agents were registered under the Act in 1965.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), the bill's floor manager, said S 693 was designed "to update the Foreign Agents Registration Act to reflect the changes in the nature of the U.S. role in world affairs." He said the Act was originally drawn to deal with subversive agents and propagandists. But in recent years, he said, such agents were replaced by "the professional lobbyists and public opinion manipulators whose object is not to subvert the Government but to influence its policies to the satisfaction of their clients. The trench coat has been replaced by the grey flannel suit."

Fulbright said the bill was written so as not to affect bonafide commercial and legal regulations between a U.S. agent and his foreign client.

BACKGROUND -- The Foreign Agents Registration Act, originally administered by the Department of State, in 1942 was transferred to Justice Department jurisdiction.

In 1962 and 1963, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee inquired into the activities of lobbyists acting for foreign interests. As a result of the hearings, legislation (S 2136) was introduced Sept. 10, 1963, by Fulbright and ranking Committee Republican Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa). S 2136 was passed by the Senate by voice vote July 6, 1964, but died in the House upon adjournment of the 88th Congress. (1963 Almanac p. 309; 1964 Almanac p. 336)

SENATE ACTION. S 693, identical to S 2136, was introduced by Fulbright and Hickenlooper Jan. 28, 1965.

The Foreign Relations Committee Feb. 16 held a hearing on S 693 and unanimously reported the bill April 1 (S Rept 143). The Committee adopted several minor amendments, primarily of a clarifying nature.

In its report, the Committee cited two areas where restraints were needed, but effective legislative remedies were "impossible": (1) exaggerated or misrepresented facts in reports by agents to their foreign principals which distorted U.S. policy or the views of agencies and individual officials; (2) the public's right to know when material reaching them via the mass media originated with or was promoted by foreign agents.

Floor Action. The Senate April 5 accepted the committee amendments and passed S 693 by voice vote.

Prior to passage, the Senate debated an extraneous tax amendment and then adopted a motion by George A. Smathers (D Fla.) to table (kill) the tax rider on a 37-29 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 1033) The rider, offered by John G. Tower (R Texas), would have permitted taxpayers, who had insufficient amounts of taxes withheld from 1964 wages, to make up to four late tax payments during 1965, depending on the size of the amount due. No interest would have been charged on the deferred payments.

In debate, Tower and other Republican supporters of the amendment commended the Internal Revenue Service for its April 3 ruling giving limited relief for those suffering "undue hardship," but argued for greater relief. They said numerous taxpayers had an insufficient amount of taxes withheld from their paychecks after the withholding tax rate was reduced from 18 to 14 percent under the $11.5 billion tax reduction bill enacted in 1964 (1964 Almanac p. 531) and contended this was done to help the Democratic 1964 election campaign.

HOUSE ACTION. The House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 3 held hearings July 28 and Aug. 2 on S 693 and a similar bill, HR 290. In testimony, the Justice Department favored enactment of the bill. Spokesmen for the American and New York City Bar Assns., Chamber of Commerce, Province of Alberta, Canada, and the Public Relations Society of America urged changes in the bill to protect various business and legal interests not engaged in political activity.

No further House action was taken in 1965.

CUBAN CLAIMS

Congress in 1965 enacted a bill (HR 9336 -- PL 89-262) amending a 1964 law (PL 88-666), which authorized the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission to determine the amount of claims by U.S. citizens and corporations against the Cuban government.

The claims, estimated to total $1.5 to $2 billion in 1965, had arisen from the expropriation of U.S. property in Cuba and from disability or death since Jan. 1, 1959. The determination was intended for use in any eventual claims agreement with Cuba. The 1964 law specified that none of the claims would be paid out of U.S. funds and that the administrative expenses of the bill would be paid by the proceeds from the sale of Cuban government assets blocked by the United States. (1964 Almanac p. 304)

Because of State Department objections to the latter provision, on the basis that sale of Cuban assets would be in conflict with U.S. policy recognizing the sanctity of property, the 1965 bill authorized appropriations to cover the Commission's administrative expenses. HR 9336 also amended the International Claims Settlement Act to clarify the Commission's jurisdiction and to facilitate processing the adjudication of claims.

HR 9336 was passed by voice vote of the House Aug. 16. The Senate Sept. 22 passed the bill by voice vote after substituting the language of a companion bill (S 1826 -- S Rept 701) for the House text. The major difference was that the Senate version authorized appropriation "of such sums as may be necessary" for administrative expenses while the House version specifically authorized $750,000. The House Sept. 30 concurred by voice vote in the Senate version and sent HR 9336 to the President, who signed it Oct. 19.

U.S. TROOPS SENT TO DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Rebellion broke out April 24, 1965, in Santo Domingo, capital of the Dominican Republic, and four days later U.S. troops were sent in to help stem the fighting. The Dominican rebels opposing the military-backed civilian junta of J. Donald Reid Cabral claimed to be fighting to restore the constitutional government under deposed President Juan Bosch. President Johnson April 27 announced that he had ordered the evacuation of U.S. citizens from Santo Domingo and the following day disclosed the landing of 400 U.S. Marines to protect and carry out the evacuation of Americans and other nationals caught in the revolution-torn capital.

U.S. troops continued to flow into the Republic, apparently well beyond the stated needs of protecting U.S. citizens. By May the Administration was suggesting that the danger of a Communist takeover in the Republic justified the increasingly large involvement of U.S troops. Some sharp criticism of such a large military intervention in Latin America was voiced by influential U.S. newspapers and Members of Congress, but many others, with Castro's takeover of Cuba in mind, supported the President's actions. Criticism focused, in part, on the role played by U.S. Ambassador to the Dominican Republic W. Tapley Bennett Jr., for urging the intervention and sending exaggerated reports of Communist influence in the rebel camp. Critics felt that Bennett's policy was to support reactionary military elements and to oppose a "liberal" revolution.

The question of the exact number of Communists involved and their role in the revolution became for a while a "cause celebre" in the American press.

After the situation became more stable, with the fighting more or less halted and the capital under the supervision of an Organization of American States (OAS) inter-American peace force, Congressional critics led by Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) began to seriously question the Administration's actions in the Dominican Republic. Fulbright's Senate Foreign Relations Committee held nine days of closed-door hearings and, though no Committee report was issued, Fulbright Sept. 15 used information from the hearings as a basis for sharp criticism of the Administration in a Senate speech. Fulbright voiced the major complaints of the liberal critics: the change in emphasis from saving American lives to preventing a Communist takeover; the Administration's faulty evaluation of and overreaction to the threat of Communism; poor intelligence and advice from governmental officials on the scene; and, not least, the Administration's lack of candor with the American public. Fulbright questioned the legality of the intervention and over-all U.S. policy toward Latin America and asked for greater reliance on the OAS.

Strong reaction to Fulbright's speech was immediate. The House Sept. 20, in an apparent counter-attack to his criticism, passed, 312-52, the Selden Resolution (H Res 560) which, in effect, endorsed the unilateral use of force by any country in the Western Hemisphere to prevent a Communist takeover in the Americas. This supported the President's actions, but also countered many basic premises of modern U.S. policy toward Latin America.

Chronology of Dominican Events

Following is a chronology of events in the Dominican Republic, taken from press reports and official sources:

May 30, 1961. Generalissimo Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina, dictator of the Dominican Republic (D.R.) since 1930, assassinated.

Dec. 20, 1962. Juan Bosch, candidate of the Dominican Revolutionary Party (PRD), elected President.

Feb. 27, 1963. Bosch inaugurated as President.

Sept. 25. Bosch government overthrown by a bloodless military coup d'etat. Bosch fled to Puerto Rico.

Sept. 26. Three-man military-backed civilian junta sworn in.

Dec. 3. Foreign Minister J. Donald Reid Cabral named to a vacancy in the military junta. He became de facto head of the "Triumvirate."

Sept. 7, 1964. Junta set Sept. 1, 1965, as election date.

1965

April 24. Rebellion broke out in Santo Domingo. "Rebels," led by Cols. Miguel Angel Hernando Ramirez and Manuel Ramon Montes Arache, captured Radio Santo Domingo. Not at first identified with Bosch, the rebels quickly called for restoration of the constitutional government and the return of the ousted President. The rebels consisted of young officers, other Army and Marine personnel and elements of the PRD.

April 25. Some rebels, starting the 24th and continuing through the 26th, handed out arms to civilians, including juveniles. "Loyalist" forces strafed the capital. Reid resigned. The rebels swore in Rafael Molina Urena as "Acting President" to serve until Bosch's return. The anti-Bosch "loyalist" forces, consisting of the Air Force, the Navy and some Army units, led by Brig. Gen. Elias Wessin y Wessin, opened fire on the Presidential Palace being used by Molina Urena. Apparently the basic issue was that the regular military forces -- loyalists -- insisted on establishment of a military junta to prepare for elections in September. Ramirez and the rebels insisted on an interim government until Bosch could be reinstated to complete his interrupted term. (Neither side supported Reid.)

April 26. Wessin's aircraft continued to strafe rebel strongpoints in the capital.

April 27. President Johnson ordered the evacuation of U.S. citizens. Molina Urena stepped down as Acting President and with other PRD members sought diplomatic asylum. The OAS Inter-American Peace Committee met to consider the situation in the D.R. and resolved to keep informed of developments.

April 28. Col. Francisco Caamano Deno assumed nominal command of the rebel movement after Col. Ramirez and other rebel leaders took asylum in foreign embassies. Sections of Santo Domingo remained in the hands of the rebels. The loyalists named a three-man military junta headed by Air Force Col. Pedro Bartolome Benoit. President Johnson announced that 400 U.S. Marines had landed to protect and help evacuate U.S. citizens and nationals of other countries. The Marines repulsed a sniper attack on the U.S. Embassy. Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) reported that the President had told Congressional leaders that at least three Communists had been identified in the rebel command by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The OAS met to hear the report of the Dominican ambassador.

April 29. The OAS Council convened to hear of the U.S. decision to intervene unilaterally and for discussion of possible actions by the OAS. At a briefing in Santo Domingo by U.S. Ambassador Bennett, an intelligence document, attempting to illustrate the extent of Communist activity in the revolution up to that time, was given to U.S. newsmen. The report listed 53 Communists allegedly active in the revolution. By evening, about 1,700 U.S. Marines had landed.

April 30. The OAS Council in Washington adopted a resolution calling for an immediate cease-fire and an international security zone in which foreign embassies and nationals could find protection. President Johnson announced a cease-fire had been agreed on in principle by both sides. OAS Secretary General Jose A. Mora arrived in the D.R. to implement the cease-fire, Fighting continued. U.S. Marines began to secure the International Safety Zone under the provisions of the OAS resolution. The first American was killed by a sniper. Two battalions of U.S. airborne troops (about 2,500 men) began landing at San Isidro Air Base (headquarters of Wessin and the loyalist junta and the only place to land a sizable number of troops by air). Former U.S. Ambassador John Bartlow Martin, on a Presidential mission, arrived at the base.

May 1. President Johnson announced that about 2,000 more troops were being sent, bringing the total to about 6,200. The OAS voted to send a five-man peace committee (Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Guatemala and Panama) headed by Argentina's Ricardo M. Colombo to help restore order. The Soviet Union called for an "urgent meeting" of the UN Security Council to consider U.S. "military intervention" in the internal affairs of the D.R.

May 2. The President said the revolution had been taken over by Communists and announced that he had ordered another 6,500 U.S. troops to the country.

May 3. U.S. troops established a "supply corridor" between the loyalist forces and rebel-held area in the capital and linking the International Zone with San Isidro Air Base. The United States urged in the OAS Council the formation of an inter-American peace force for the D.R.

May 4. Rebel leader Caamano Deno was inaugurated (in the rebel-held area) as "Constitutional President." U.S. Marines extended the International Safety Zone by an area four blocks deep to encompass several foreign embassies at their request. About 16,000 U.S. troops were in the D.R. President Johnson declared that "some 58 Communists" were involved in the revolt.

May 5. A formal cease-fire was signed by junta and rebel government members ratifying the April 30 cease-fire. Heavy sniper assaults continued. The State Department and the CIA revealed the names of 54 "Communists and Castroites" said to be active among the rebels.

Peak of 30,209 U.S. Troops

May 6. The OAS Council voted 14-5 to create an Inter-American Force to restore peace and constitutional government -- a two-thirds majority was required for passage (Mexico, Uruguay, Chile, Ecuador and Peru were opposed; Venezuela abstained). Some 30,209 U.S. troops were in the D.R. operation: more than 14,000 paratroopers and 7,000 Marines ashore; others manning the 30 ships nearby and the 275 aircraft supplying the force ashore.

May 7. Loyalists set up a five-man civilian-military junta, to replace the Benoit junta. The new junta was headed by Gen. Antonio Imbert Barreras and was reportedly under U.S. influence.

May 7 and 8. The five-man OAS Peace Committee reported to the OAS Council that the diplomatic corps in Santo Domingo (including their own countries' representatives) were convinced that Communists had heavily infiltrated the rebel forces. They also reported that rebel leaders had privately expressed concern about the Communists' penetration but had insisted that they would not be allowed to gain the upper hand.

May 9. The loyalist junta, to broaden its appeal, exiled eight officers. Gen. Wessin refused to leave and rebels continued to demand his removal.

May 10. OAS meeting of foreign ministers voted to extend the mandate of the Peace Committee and give it unprecedented responsibility for restoring governmental machinery in the D.R. The vote was 14-3 (Chile, Mexico and Uruguay opposed; Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela abstaining). Wessin reportedly resigned as commander of the loyalist forces.

May 11. The United States called for a coalition government. Wessin denied resignation reports.

May 13. Five planes of the Imbert junta broke the truce and attacked the rebel-held radio station with rockets and machine-gun fire. They also fired on the U.S. Embassy and Marines returned the fire, downing one plane. The State Department confirmed it was making $750,000 available to the Imbert junta to pay D.R. public employees. Abe Fortas, a Presidential emissary, arrived secretly in Puerto Rico to discuss with Bosch a possible compromise government. Silvestre Antonio Guzman was considered as a coalition President.

May 14. The United States joined in unanimous adoption of a UN Security Council resolution to send a UN representative to the D.R., despite U.S. insistence that the task be left to the OAS. Maj. Gen. Indar Jit Rikhye of the Indian Army headed an advance UN party. 250 Honduran soldiers and 20 Costa Rican policemen arrived in the D.R.

May 15. Truce broken. Jose Antonio Mayobre of Venezuela appointed by UN Secretary General U Thant as his representative in the D.R. Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Jack Hood Vaughn and Under Secretary of State Thomas C. Mann arrived in Santo Domingo on a Presidential "fact-finding" mission.

May 16. Presidential Assistant McGeorge Bundy and Deputy Secretary of Defense Cyrus R. Vance joined the fact-finding mission. The junta continued large-scale fighting in an attempt to capture the northern section of the capital and further isolate the rebels.

May 17. The U.S. and Caamano governments agreed on a Guzman government to serve until elections were held in December 1966; loyalists did not accept the agreement. The United States offered to turn over its more than 22,000 troops ashore to the OAS inter-American military force.

May 19. Imbert forces continued fighting, seized the rebel-held Radio Santo Domingo and gained control of the northern section of the city.

May 20. Both factions signed a 24-hour "humanitarian" cease-fire to remove dead and wounded.

May 21. U.S. announcement of the withdrawal of 1,700 U.S. troops, to be replaced by Brazilians.

May 23. OAS Council established inter-American force under Brazilian Gen. Hugo Panasco Alvim. The force was composed of U.S., Brazilian, Costa Rican, Honduran and Nicaraguan troops. Plan for Guzman government apparently abandoned.

May 26. McGeorge Bundy returned to Washington. Vance remained to seek a political settlement. Secretary Rusk announced the withdrawal of 600 U.S. troops.

June 2. Three-member OAS mediation committee of Ellsworth Bunker, U.S. Ambassador to the OAS Council, and representatives from Brazil and El Salvador, appointed.

June 4. The last 2,100 Marines embarked, leaving 14,000 U.S. paratroopers behind in Santo Domingo.

June 15. Cease-fire broken with an assault on the Inter-American Peace Force by maverick rebel elements. The fire was returned and the OAS troops advanced three blocks into the rebel zone.

June 16. Heavy fighting continued.

June 18. OAS announced an eight-point proposal for solution of the crisis, calling for elections under inter-American supervision within six to nine months and an interim provisional government. Troops would return to their barracks and civilians would surrender arms.

Sept. 3. Provisional government established under Hector Garcia-Godoy.

Sept. 9. After Godoy and OAS agreed to Wessin's removal he was flown by the U.S. from the D.R. to Miami.

Sept. 25. Former President Juan D. Bosch returned to the D.R. from two-years' exile in Puerto Rico. About 7,000 U.S. troops remained with the OAS force of about 8,500 at the end of the year.

Background

REFERENCES -- Congress and the Nation p. 99; 1949 CQ Almanac p. 630.

The United States Sept. 2, 1947, signed the Rio Treaty (formally, the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance) setting up a security zone of the American continents. The Rio Treaty provided, in the event of an armed attack on any American state, for joint action through collective political and economic measures, but not through force. The Organization of American States (OAS), composed of 21 American republics, was formed April 30, 1948, at the ninth Inter-American Conference held in Bogota, Colombia. The OAS was designated a regional grouping under the United Nations and coordinating body for all inter-American agencies. The OAS Charter, supplemented by the Rio Treaty, provided for collective action by member states against aggression or the threat of aggression.

Controversy in 1965 centered on interpretation of both the OAS Charter and the Rio Treaty. The Dominican intervention was declared by critics to be in violation of Articles 15 and 17 of the OAS Charter. Article 15 declared: "No state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, in the internal or external affairs of any other state." Article 17 provided that: "The territory of a state is inviolable; it may not be the object, even temporarily, of military occupation or of other measures of force taken by another state, directly or indirectly, on any grounds whatever."

Statements by President Johnson

Following are a few excerpts from the President's statements on the U.S. role in the Dominican Republic.

April 27. "Fighting has occurred among different elements of the Dominican armed forces and other groups. Public order in the capital has broken down. Due to the gravity of the situation, and the possible danger to the lives of American citizens,... I ordered the evacuation of those who wish to leave .... It is our hope...that a peaceful settlement of the internal problems can be found."

April 28. "The United States Government has been informed by military authorities in the Dominican Republic that American lives are in danger. These authorities are no longer able to guarantee their safety...I have ordered...the necessary American troops ashore...to give protection to hundreds of Americans who are still in the Dominican Republic and escort them safely to this country."

May 2. "The revolutionary movement took a tragic turn. Communist leaders, many of them trained in Cuba,...joined the revolution. They took increasing control. And what began as a popular democratic revolution...very shortly moved and was taken over and really seized and placed into the hands of a band of Communist conspirators...The American nations cannot, must not, and will not permit the establishment of another Communist government in the Western hemisphere."

May 4. U.S. intelligence officials "had the names and addresses and experience and numbers and background of some 58" Communists.

May 28. "We are members of an inter-American system.... The tragedy of the past four weeks ...renews our common resolution to accept common responsibility in dealing with common dangers.

"...A well-trained, disciplined band of Communists was prevented from destroying the hopes of Dominican democracy."

June 1. "Prior to our intervention we consulted with 14 Latin American nations.... The Communists did not...originate this revolution, but they joined it...and in a good many places they were in charge of it.

"...the lives of our citizens were in danger. Men were running up and down the corridors of the Ambassador Hotel with tommy guns shooting out windows, through the roof, and through the closets. Our citizens were under the beds and in the closets trying to dodge this gunfire. Our ambassador, as he was talking to us, was under his desk."

June 17. "...some 1,500 innocent people were murdered and shot, and their heads cut off, and six Latin American embassies were violated and fired upon over a period of four days before we went in. As we talked to our ambassador to confirm the horror and tragedy and the unbelievable fact that they were firing on Americans and the American Embassy,...he had a thousand American men, women and children assembled in the hotel...pleading with their President for help to preserve their lives.

"We didn't start that. We didn't intervene. We didn't kill anyone. We didn't violate any embassies. We were not the perpetrators."

Critics also cited the provisions of Article 6 of the Rio Treaty, which called for OAS consultation on measures to be taken to meet aggression.

Justification for the U.S. action in 1965 was found in Article 19 of the OAS Charter, which stipulated that "measures adopted for the maintenance of peace and security in accordance with existing treaties do not constitute a violation of the principles set forth in Articles 15 and 17;" and Article 3 of the Rio Treaty, which stated: "An armed attack against an American state shall be considered as an attack against all the American states, consequentially, each one of the said contracting parties undertakes to assist in meeting the attack in the exercise of the inherent right of self-defense recognized by Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations."

The OAS had never before used troops to meet aggression, and the creation in 1965 of a multilateral force by the OAS Council was therefore an unprecedented action. The United States, itself, had last used force in the Dominican Republic in 1916, when it set up an eight-year military occupation of that country in order to quell constant revolutions. In contrast, U.S. troops were stationed in Haiti and Nicaragua for 20 years, leaving in 1934. When a crisis occurred following the assassination of Dominican dictator Rafael Trujillo in 1961, the United States, instead of intervening, asked the OAS to send a special investigating committee to the republic.

Fulbright's Dominican Statement

Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) Sept. 15 criticized U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic as a "grievous mistake" characterized "initially by over-timidity and subsequently by over-reaction." He said U.S. actions had been the result of "faulty advice given to the President by his representatives in the Dominican Republic at the time of acute crisis," and that "on the basis of the information and counsel he received, the President could hardly have acted other than he did." Fulbright also said U.S. statements had been "characterized by a lack of candor."

Speaking for more than an hour on the Senate floor, Fulbright said he considered it his duty to express his "personal conclusions" drawn from closed hearings held by the Foreign Relations Committee. (The Committee took testimony on the situation in the Dominican Republic in executive sessions April 30, May 3 and 21, and on July 14-16, 19, 23 and 29, but issued no report. It published in July a document entitled, "Background Information Relating to the Dominican Republic," containing a chronology, pertinent treaty excerpts, and other relevant documents.)

Fulbright said, Sept. 15: "The United States did not take advantage of several opportunities in which it might have changed the course of events. The reason appears to be that, very close to the beginning of the revolution, U.S. policymakers decided that it should not be allowed to succeed. This decision seems to me to have been based on exaggerated estimates of Communist influence in the rebel movement in the initial stages and on distaste for the return to power of Juan Bosch or of a government controlled by Bosch's party...."

Fulbright said the explanation by President Johnson that U.S. Marines had been landed in the Dominican Republic to protect American lives "was more a pretext than a reason for the massive U.S. intervention that began on the evening of April 28....reports of widespread shooting that endangered American lives turned out to be exaggerated."

"The United States intervened...for the purpose of preventing the victory of a revolutionary force which was judged to be Communist-dominated. On the basis of Ambassador Bennett's messages to Washington, there is no doubt that the threat of Communism rather than danger to American lives was his primary reason for recommending military intervention.

"The question of the degree of Communist influence is therefore crucial, but it cannot be answered with certainty. The weight of evidence is that Communists did not participate in planning the revolution -- indeed, there is some indication that it took them by surprise -- but that they very rapidly began to try to take advantage of it and to seize control of it. The evidence does not establish that the Communists at any time actually had control of the revolution.... The Administration, however, assumed almost from the beginning that the revolution was Communist-dominated, or would certainly become so, and that nothing short of forcible opposition could prevent a Communist takeover."

Fulbright took note of articles of the OAS Charter which he said stipulated that, with one exception, "all forms of forcible intervention are absolutely prohibited among the American States." He said, "The United States thus intervened in the Dominican Republic unilaterally -- and illegally."

REACTION. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, rose after Fulbright spoke to express his "complete accord with the position" expressed by Fulbright.

Another Committee member, Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.), took issue with Fulbright, saying U.S. action in the Dominican Republic had been "simply a matter of whether this country was going to stand aside and risk another Cuban-type Communist takeover, or whether we were going to move on the theory that this looked very much as though it might be a Communist takeover...."

The only White House statement regarding Fulbright's speech was made Sept. 15 by Presidential Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers. He said, "I have talked to a number of officials in Government, career and otherwise, who simply do not believe the Senator's conclusions are justified."

In what was reported by some newspapers to be a statement of the Administration's position, Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) Sept. 16 called U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic an "unavoidable necessity" and said Fulbright suffered from "an indiscriminating infatuation with revolutions of all kinds -- national, democratic or Communist." Dodd charged that Fulbright had ignored a number of facts that supported the Administration's action. Dodd earlier had charged that the Committee brochure on the situation in the Dominican Republic quoted extensively from newspapers "that were critical of Administration policy" and ignored favorable and supporting press reports.

In the House, Rep. Armistead I. Selden Jr. (D Ala.) Sept. 23 agreed with Dodd's criticism and appended to his remarks a list of 77 "Communists participating in the Dominican rebellion."

House Resolution

The House Sept. 20, by a 312-52 roll-call vote, adopted under suspension of the rules a resolution (H Res 560) which in effect endorsed the unilateral use of force by any Western Hemisphere country to prevent a Communist takeover anywhere in the Hemisphere. The resolution mentioned no countries, but appeared tailored to give approval to situations such as the U.S. intervention. The resolution was opposed by 49 Northern Democrats and three Republicans. (For voting, see chart p. 1004)

The resolution, which expressed the "sense of the House," did not require Senate action or Presidential approval and did not have the force of law. The State Department, worried about repercussions from such a resolution, yet chary of offending the staunchest Congressional defenders of its Dominican policy, said it was "in accord with the objectives" of H Res 560. Numerous Latin American countries therefore looked on the resolution as a quasi-official U.S. endorsement of unilateral military intervention, a discouraging turnabout, in their eyes, in U.S. hemispheric policies. Many promptly voiced strong condemnation of the House action.

H Res 560 stated that "the intervention of international Communism, directly or indirectly, however disguised, in any American State, conflicts with the established policy of the American Republics for the protection of the sovereignty of the peoples of such states and the political independence of their governments...." It expressed the sense of the House that, "In any such situation any one or more of the high contracting parties to the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance may...take steps to forestall or combat intervention, domination, control and colonization, in whatever form, by the subversive forces known as international Communism and its agencies in the Western Hemisphere."

In support of H Res 560, of which he was sponsor, Rep. Armistead I. Selden Jr. (D Ala.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee, said the Rio Treaty had been designed "essentially to confront traditional forms of direct aggression. But in the two decades since the end of World War II, it has become increasingly apparent that the threat to the security of the Western Hemisphere lies in Communist subversion, rather than in armed intervention across frontiers."

Selden said "the Department of State generally agrees with the objectives of the proposed resolution and so stated in its testimony before the Subcommittee on Inter-American Affairs." However, he said the Department witness had suggested certain amendments "to make clear that the House does not intend to say that a mere threat of subversion, standing alone, justifies the unilateral use of armed force...." Selden said he "assured the Department of State that the legislative intent would be clear in this respect...."

In opposition to the resolution, Donald M. Fraser (D Minn.) said it was "very badly worded and is open to unfortunate interpretations which perpetuate the image which I am afraid this country has in Latin America of engaging in clumsy-handed intervention in the affairs of other states."

Jonathan B. Bingham (D N.Y.) said the resolution contained no requirement "that there be a collective finding that a situation of 'subversive domination or threat of it' exists. Apparently each state is free to judge that for itself." Bingham said he regretted that the resolution had been brought up under suspension-of-the-rules procedure, which prohibited amendments. He said, "It would have been easy to amend it so as to make it essentially unobjectionable...."

Committee Action, -- The Subcommittee on Inter-American Affairs of the House Foreign Affairs Committee held hearings Aug. 31 and Sept. 1 on several resolutions pertaining to subversive intervention in Latin America. H Res 560, introduced Sept. 1 by Selden, was approved the same day by the Subcommittee and reported by the full Committee (H Rept 983) Sept. 13.

In its report, the Committee said H Res 560 was intended to support the President in any action he deemed necessary "to prevent in a timely manner Communist subversion in the hemisphere" and to support action by any members of the OAS "in the exercise of individual or collective self-defense to forestall or combat Communist subversive aggression in the Western Hemisphere."

REACTION. State Department Press Officer Robert J. McCloskey Sept. 21 said the Department "generally agrees with the sentiment expressed in the original resolution, but the Department thought the resolution should be modified to conform to U.S. policies and inter-American treaties and resolutions." McCloskey said, "Not all of the changes that the Department requested were made in the resolution.... The Department questions some of the resolution's language...."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) Sept. 23 termed the resolution, "particularly unfortunate" and called for clarification of the "confusion" over U.S. foreign policy growing out of the Dominican crisis.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), chairman of the American Republics Affairs Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Sept. 28 said the House resolution was a "clear perversion" of the 1947 Rio Treaty. On Sept. 29 he introduced a resolution (S Res 150) which supported U.S. treaty commitments for collective defense action in the Western Hemisphere.

Strong opposition to the House-passed resolution also grew in Latin America. Peru, Chile and Colombia passed resolutions condemning the House action and other Latin American officials spoke out against the House resolution.

Rep. Don Edwards (D Calif.), chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action, Sept. 25 termed President Johnson's foreign policy "sick". He said Mr. Johnson seemed committed to a foreign policy "in avid pursuit of the cold war." Edwards said he and others had warned the State Department of serious Latin American resentment of the House resolution "but there was silence and even tacit approval." He said the White House could have urged the House Speaker to postpone action on the Selden resolution.

In a letter to Rep. Robert L. Leggett (D Calif.) Jan. 11, 1966, Assistant Secretary of State Jack H. Vaughn said that the Department intended that Secretary Rusk's address Nov. 22 at the Rio de Janeiro meeting of foreign ministers "stand as the single, authoritative expression of U.S. policy." In the speech Rusk said the United States would continue to intervene, if necessary, to defend the hemisphere from Communism but would prefer to have collective support from other nations, through an OAS peacekeeping force.

STATE APPORTIONMENT PLAN LOSES IN SENATE

S J Res 66 -- Baseball bill reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 451) July 15, 1965.

S J Res 2 -- Proposed constitutional amendment on legislative apportionment substituted for text of S J Res 66 by the Senate on a 59-39 roll-call vote Aug. 4. (See p. 1063)

S J Res 66 -- Rejected Aug. 4, as amended, on a 57-39 Senate roll-call vote (seven votes less than the necessary two-thirds majority). (See p. 1063)

S J Res 103 -- Ordered reported by Senate Judiciary Committee Sept. 8.

The struggle in Congress over apportionment of state legislatures, a struggle precipitated by the Supreme Court three years before, reached a climax in the Senate Aug. 4, 1965, when a proposed constitutional amendment to bypass the Court's rulings went down to defeat. The measure failed by only seven votes of receiving the two-thirds majority necessary to pass a constitutional amendment.

The proposed amendment (S J Res 2) would have permitted states to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population, namely, geography and political subdivisions.

The defeat was the second in as many years for opponents of the Court's finding that the Constitution guaranteed representation in state legislatures on the basis of substantial equality of population -- the "one-man, one-vote" rule.

Yet within days of the Aug. 4 setback, the seeds of still another showdown on the issue -- in 1966 -- were firmly planted by the principal advocate of the proposed amendment, Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.); he successfully forced a new bill (S J Res 103) out of committee and onto the Senate calendar for consideration in 1966. His chief adversary in the battle, fellow Illinoisian Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), vowed another strong fight against the new measure. Douglas, with a nucleus of Northern and Eastern liberal Democrats, won the 1965 Senate engagement.

A heavy lobbying campaign preceded the Senate vote and civil rights aspects emerged as important in the closing days of debate; some Senators feared the proposed amendment might be used to disenfranchise Negroes by racial gerrymandering.

Unlike 1964, the issue was not joined in the House at all in 1965. Proponents of the amendment preferred to await Senate action, and the House Judiciary Committee Aug. 5 cancelled further hearings on reapportionment legislation after the Senate vote. Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) was an avowed foe of the legislation.

These developments in Congress occurred against a backdrop of continuing pressure from state and federal courts to carry out the Supreme Court dictates. Hundreds of lawsuits around the nation, some of them years old, were pressed by local interests demanding reapportionment; in many instances, the suits were fought vigorously by entrenched political interests.

These legal battles, which flooded the courts when the Supreme Court opened the gates of jurisdiction in 1962, raised in some states almost as many problems as they sought to settle. For the number and complexity of suits, sometimes following divergent and seemingly contradictory careers in state and federal courts within the same state, gave the surface of the problem an appearance of chaos.

Disputes arose as to how much leeway courts had in approving reapportionment plans, or in fashioning their own. In some states, legislatures approved several reapportionment plans and left to the courts the job of approving the appropriate one: New York gave the courts a choice of four plans (and state and federal courts disagreed as to their validity) and Indiana's legislature produced no less than eight plans.

The Supreme Court in 1965 continued to accept for review some reapportionment cases, but they were generally "second-generation" in nature, involving the constitutionality of proposed new schemes, rather than the unconstitutionality of existing ones. The Court refused to review a case alleging malapportionment at the county level, and it shied away from reviewing cases alleging racial gerrymandering -- at least for the time being.

Despite the confusion in the courts and legislatures, and despite major efforts mounted in Congress, the pattern of state legislative apportionment across the nation in 1965 was steadily -- if imperfectly -- rewoven to the Supreme Court's design. Complaints by urban interests of rural domination in legislatures gave way to complaints by rural interests of urban vindictiveness and to their warnings of big city political machines taking over state legislative machinery.

For the first time in the 20th Century, state legislatures were beginning more clearly to reflect on a population basis the living patterns of the citizenry. The central issue in Congress, an issue replete with implications for the political tensions between urban and rural interests, between white and Negro and between Republicans and Democrats, was whether states should be permitted to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population. It was to this end that Dirksen gathered his forces in 1965 for a battle that in some ways was a fight to preserve the traditional rural power base of the Republican party, as well as to preserve the rights of states to fashion their individual destinies.

Background

REFERENCE -- Court Reapportionment Decree Challenged (1964 Almanac p. 383).

For many years the Supreme Court followed a policy of refraining from reviewing suits challenging the apportionment of state legislatures. The Court took the position, not without criticism and not without dissent among its own members, that apportionment was a political matter and one not suitable for judicial scrutiny. The Court's view was summed up by Justice Frankfurter in Colegrove v. Green (1946) when he wrote that "courts ought not to enter this political thicket."

By 1962, however, the membership of the Court had changed significantly. Three Eisenhower appointees -- Chief Justice Warren and Justices Brennan and Stewart -- joined Justices Black, Clark and Douglas in finding in the 14th Amendment more requirements on the states than had the Court in prior years. In 1962, those six, opposed by Justices Frankfurter and Harlan (with Whittaker not participating), ruled in Baker v. Carr that courts had jurisdiction over suits challenging apportionment of state legislatures. That ruling was followed in 1963 by Gray v. Sanders and in 1964 by Reynolds v. Sims, in which the proposition of "one-man, one-vote" was laid down as the constitutional requirement for the apportionment of both houses of state legislatures.

These decisions evoked a strong reaction in Congress. In 1964 the House passed a bill denying federal courts jurisdiction over state reapportionment matters, and Dirksen attempted to attach to the foreign aid bill a rider requiring courts to delay reapportionment orders until Jan. 1, 1966. But Senate liberals launched a six-week filibuster and forced substitution of a non-binding "sense of Congress" resolution urging, but not requiring, courts to give state legislatures six months to act before reapportionment decrees were put into effect. The Senate accepted that as a rider to the foreign aid bill, but House-Senate conferees killed it at the urging of Dirksen and House conservatives who were irked at its mildness.

While the state reapportionment controversy became an issue in the 1964 Presidential campaign, it did so through the efforts of the Republican candidate, Barry Goldwater. President Johnson took no public position in the dispute.

1965 Court Decisions

The Supreme Court in 1965 limited itself to reviewing -- or refusing to review -- specific reapportionment plans or lower court orders; it avoided enunciating sweeping new doctrine on such aspects of the controversy as whether the "one-man, one-vote" rule extended to political subdivisions of states (such as counties) and whether allegations of racial gerrymandering would be readily entertained. (The Court had ruled previously that voting district lines could not be drawn in such a way as to discriminate against Negroes.)

Early in the year, on Jan. 18, the Court examined in Fortson v. Dorsey the Georgia 1962 Senatorial Reapportionment Act. Under the Georgia plan, 54 state senatorial districts were drawn as much as possible along county lines; 33 of the districts consisted of from one to eight counties each, and voters in these districts elected their Senators by district-wide vote. But the 21 remaining districts were allotted in groups of from two to seven among the seven most populous counties; voters in these districts did not elect Senators on a district-wide basis, but joined with voters in other districts of the county to elect all the county's Senators on a county-wide basis.

The Court by an 8-1 vote approved this arrangement, with only Justice Douglas dissenting. Justice Brennan, writing for the majority, found "no mathematical disparity" in the scheme; but Justice Douglas pointed out that in the county-wide election, a Senatorial candidate could win his own district but lose the election because of opposing votes from other districts in the county.

The same day, the Court remanded to a federal district court another Georgia case, Fortson v. Toombs, dealing with an interim arrangement for reapportionment. The brief opinion said the district court had a "wide range in moulding a decree" to deal with the situation in light of recent new elections.

On June 1, the Court handed down orders in four cases. It refused to stay a lower federal court's order calling for a special election of the New York legislature on Nov. 2. It affirmed the finding of a three-judge federal district court in California that that state's legislature was malapportioned(each county, regardless of population, had one Senate seat). The Court refused to act on the constitutionality of the Idaho reapportionment plan until a lower court heard the case. And the Court vacated the order of a three-judge federal district court in Illinois which had said that neither the state supreme court nor a state agency or political body could supervise reapportionment of the legislature if the legislature refused to do so itself.

As the 1965-66 term of the Court opened, the reapportionment issue quickly became an important one. On Oct. 11, the Court's first public work day, the Court agreed to review reapportionment cases from Hawaii (Burns v. Richardson) and New York (Lomenzo v. WMCA), and affirmed again a lower court order requiring the special election in New York. Issues in the cases accepted for review included the use of registered voters rather than citizen population to determine voting district populations, and the use of some multimember districts in a reapportionment scheme. The New York case also involved a plan of fractional voting by legislators.

The same day the Court dismissed "for want of jurisdiction" a New York case, Griffing v. Bianchi, in which residents of Suffolk County, N.Y., contended that the county's governing body, the Board of Supervisors, was elected on a malapportioned basis. The Court's action returned the case to a three-judge federal district court for possible further proceedings; the implications of the case, therefore, were uncertain.

Lobbies Active on Apportionment

Congress was under pressure in the summer of 1965 by both proponents and opponents of Dirksen's reapportionment amendment.

The proposal had profound implications for farmers, rural legislators, small businessmen, big city mayors, labor leaders and industrialists alike. The breadth of these implications produced a vigorous lobbying campaign in 1965 that eventually drew in many major organizations, and resulted in the founding of some unusual new ones -- as of the touring California legislators. For the most part, however, the major lobby groups were familiar names in Washington.

LEADING LOBBY GROUPS

Understandably, rural people, rural organizations and rural legislators were among the leaders of those working for the Dirksen amendment in 1965. Senatorial and House offices repeatedly told Congressional Quarterly that the major reason for the Dirksen amendment's strong support in Congress was the recognition by Members that rural people were deeply and genuinely afraid of being submerged in an urban majority if the "one-man, one vote" principle were strictly observed in apportionment of state legislatures. Moreover, rural members of the state legislatures were said to be among the most active groups in organizing support for the Dirksen amendment and related proposals. However, strong support for the Dirksen amendment was also reported from various persons and groups opposed on constitutional grounds to federal intervention in state apportionment matters.

Although many organizations and individuals took stands or testified on the Dirksen amendment in 1965, the major organizations actively lobbying and working for the amendment, according to a survey by CQ, were: the American Farm Bureau Federation; the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and its constituent local groups; the National Assn. of Manufacturers and its local groups; the American Retail Federation; an organization known as the National Commission on Constitutional Government, headed by various members of state legislatures favoring the Dirksen amendment; and a California organization known as the Citizens Committee for Balanced Legislative Representation, sponsored by California business groups. Also active on behalf of the Dirksen amendment were a number of leaders of the California legislature who toured the nation during the 1965 sessions of the state legislatures in an effort to get the latter to express support for the Dirksen amendment.

The major groups conducting active 1965 pressure campaigns against the Dirksen amendment, according to the CQ survey, were the AFL-CIO and constituent unions; the American Civil Liberties Union; Americans for Democratic Action; an amalgam of liberal organizations called the National Committee for Fair Representation; and, at a later stage in 1965, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. Many of the organizations working for or against the Dirksen amendment in 1965 said that their lobbying on it, during the early part of the year at least, had taken second place to other bills, such as the voting rights bill or the right-to-work repeal bill, but was nevertheless substantial.

BACKGROUND OF 1965 CAMPAIGN

The 1965 campaign for the Dirksen amendment got underway on a major scale only shortly before the 89th Congress convened in January. But its origins dated back to 1962. Following the March 26, 1962, Baker v. Carr ruling, a number of major proposals were advanced to modify the Court's powers over apportionment matters and over federal-state relations.

Many of the proposals emerged from meetings of groups of state officials connected with the Council of State Governments, an organization which is supported by contributions from state governments and which serves as an administrative agent and secretariat for various organizations of state officials, such as the Governors' Conference, the Assn. of State Attorneys General and the Assn. of State Chief Justices. (The Council of State Governments in 1965 had about 52 employees and a budget of $600,000, an official of the group told CQ July 29.)

Two of the groups connected with the Council of State Governments are the National Legislative Conference and the General Assembly of the States. The Council organizes periodic meetings of these groups, which are, in effect, loose convocations of state legislators and other state officials. The General Assembly meets every two years in December. Although the National Legislative Conference and General Assembly of the States meet under Council auspices and often adopt resolutions on various items, they speak only for themselves and do not set policy for the Council. Their resolutions are not binding on any state or state official and have no legal force.

In the autumn of 1962, the National Legislative Conference at its Phoenix meeting appointed a nine-man committee headed by W. Stuart Helm (R), then a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, to draft proposals on federal-state relations for presentation to the forthcoming General Assembly of the States.

Three proposals drafted by the Helm group were endorsed by the General Assembly of the States at its Dec. 6-7, 1962, meeting. These called for constitutional amendments to (1) institute a new procedure for amending the U.S. Constitution, under which receipt of petitions from two-thirds of the states for a constitutional amendment would have required Congress to submit the amendment to the states for ratification (without calling a constitutional convention, as now required); (2) to prohibit federal courts from intervening in state apportionment cases; and (3) to set up a "Court of the Union," consisting of all the state chief justices, to review U.S. Supreme Court decisions on federal-state relations.

Fate of 1962 Proposals. A number of state legislatures subsequently submitted petitions to Congress requesting that a constitutional convention be held to consider one or more of the three proposed amendments. (Article V of the U.S. Constitution provides, as one method of amending the Constitution, that a constitutional convention be held if two-thirds of the states petition Congress to do so. The Constitution has never been amended by this method.) Ultimately, according to the best information available to CQ, 12 states petitioned Congress on the proposed new procedure for amending the Constitution; 16 states petitioned Congress on the proposal barring federal court intervention in state apportionment cases; and 5 states petitioned on the Court of the Union proposal. None of the three proposals received the backing of the required two-thirds of the states.

1964 Congressional Action. In 1964 the apportionment issue moved directly to the floor of Congress following the Supreme Court's June 15 "one-man, one vote" decision in the Reynolds v. Sims case. To a far greater extent than any of the Court's earlier apportionment decisions, the Reynolds v. Sims decision aroused the fears of rural groups by explicitly stating that the Constitution required both chambers of a state legislature to be apportioned on a strict population basis, with the requirement enforceable in the federal courts. As a result, a bill sponsored by Rep. William M. Tuck (D Va.) denying federal courts jurisdiction over state apportionment cases (HR 11926) was passed by the House Aug. 19, 1964, by a 218-175 (R 122-35; ND 12-124; SD 84-16) roll call. But HR 11926 and related proposals ultimately died in the Senate. (1964 Almanac p. 383)

1965 Campaign for Dirksen Amendment

The 1965 campaign for the Dirksen amendment actually began late in 1964. The General Assembly of the States Dec. 3, 1964, at its biennial meeting, endorsed a constitutional amendment to permit one house of a state legislature to be apportioned on a basis other than population, provided the arrangement was approved in a statewide referendum.

This proposal was milder than the General Assembly's earlier proposals and the 1964 Tuck bill and was essentially the same as one suggested by Dirksen in 1964 and subsequently introduced by him again Jan. 6, 1965, as S J Res 2. With these actions, the stage was set for various groups to coalesce around the Dirksen amendment and wage a campaign for its enactment during the 89th Congress.

The strategy underlying the campaign, as it evolved during the early months of 1965, called for three separate types of efforts, the combined effect of which, it was hoped, would be to force favorable Congressional action on the Dirksen amendment. One effort involved getting the state legislatures to petition Congress to call a national constitutional convention for the purpose of adopting the Dirksen amendment. The second involved a grass-roots lobbying campaign conducted all over the country to popularize the Dirksen amendment and to get local groups to contact their Congressmen with a request for its passage. The third involved direct lobbying in the nation's capital for Congressional passage of the Dirksen amendment. Each of these three efforts is described separately below.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION CALL

A determined drive was waged by many state officials and several organizations in 1965 to get the state legislatures to petition Congress for a constitutional convention to adopt the Dirksen amendment. Under Article V of the U.S. Constitution, petitions would have to be received from at least two-thirds of the states (34 states) in order to hold a constitutional convention.

The major groups active in the convention call drive were the National Commission on Constitutional Government (see below for description), local units of the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., local units of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, local units of the American Farm Bureau Federation and other farm groups, and touring groups of California state legislators. Their activities took the form of direct discussions with members of state legislatures to persuade them to adopt the convention call resolutions, letter-writing campaigns, and the organization of drives of local people and groups along the same lines.

The National Commission on Constitutional Government was headed by members of a number of state legislatures. Although not incorporated under that name until early 1964, the group actually was formed in January 1963 as a private volunteer organization known as the "Dual Sovereignty Committee" to work for the three proposed constitutional amendments recommended by the 1962 General Assembly of States.

The public rationale behind the drive for a constitutional convention was that, in the absence of action by Congress, it was necessary to force the holding of a convention to adopt an amendment on reapportionment. But there were other motives behind the drive.

A number of opponents of the Dirksen amendment, as well as some of its supporters, said that the real purpose of the convention call was not so much to bring about a convention as to use the threat of a convention to pressure Congress to pass the Dirksen amendment. Fear of a constitutional convention was not confined to opponents of the Dirksen amendment; it was widely recognized that once a convention was called, there was no way of telling what it might do. Should it become a runaway convention, it might go far beyond the aim of its sponsors.

Several observers said that while 34 valid petitions were necessary to call a convention, it was assumed that pressure on Congress to act would become irresistible once 25 or 30 states had filed petitions.

Chamber, Farm Bureau Activities. Various opponents of the Dirksen amendment said local units of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the American Farm Bureau Federation were unquestionably the most active groups, among affiliates of national organizations, working to get the state legislatures to petition Congress for a constitutional convention.

A spokesman for the national office of the Chamber said it had been very active in urging local chambers to work for a convention call.

The Farm Bureau, both by its own account and that of others, was waging an all-out campaign both for action by the state legislatures to request a constitutional convention and for pressure on local Congressmen to support S J Res 2 in Congress. A Farm Bureau spokesman July 28 said, "The campaign for the Dirksen amendment has been the No. 1 issue for the Farm Bureau since last January. In the long run, the reapportionment issue is more important to farm people than any one year's farm bill. This fight will have effects for many years to come." He said the AFBF's "basic" lobbying operation consisted of "encouraging our people to write their Congressmen, working on (Capitol) Hill and in the localities too."

Other Groups. Local units of the nation's two other general farm organizations, the National Grange and National Farmers Union, also were reported active in attempts to get state legislatures to petition for a constitutional convention. Although the NFU's national president, James G. Patton, voted against the Dirksen amendment at the NFU's national convention early in 1965, the convention delegates March 17 voted to endorse a reapportionment amendment by a tally of 112,540 to 89,447. The Washington, D.C. offices of the Grange and NFU were not conducting heavy lobbying for the Dirksen amendment, but many of their state affiliates were active both in the convention call campaign and in contacting Congress on S J Res 2.

Local affiliates of the National Assn. of Manufacturers also reportedly were actively exerting pressures on the state legislatures.

Convention Call Status. Under Article V of the Constitution, petitions from 34 states would be needed to call a constitutional convention. The procedure had never been used in the history of the nation; all amendments to the Constitution were adopted by the alternative method of passage by Congress and ratification by three-fourths of the states.

As the 1965 campaign for a constitutional convention progressed, there was dispute as to exactly what constituted a valid call or memorial (petition to Congress to act), how long such a call or petition remained valid and how many states had taken action binding on Congress.

The House Judiciary Committee said that as of Dec. 14 presumably valid calls for a constitutional convention had been received from 20 states: Ala.; Ariz.; Ark.; Fla.; Idaho; Kan.; Ky.; La.; Md.; Minn.; Miss.; Mo.; Mont.; Nev.; N.C.; Okla.; S.C.; S.D.; Texas; Va.

By other counts, however, the number was higher. The National Chamber of Commerce said that in addition to the 20 states above, eight more had passed valid convention calls: Ga.; Nev.; N.H.; N.M.; Tenn.; Utah; Wash.; Wyo. In addition, the Chamber said that 13 more states had taken some action, such as passage by one house but not the other of a convention call, passage of a convention call by one house and a memorial by the other, or simply passage of a memorial, which lacked the force of a convention call. The 13 were: Alaska; Calif.; Colo.; Conn.; Ind.; Iowa; N.D.; Ore.; Pa.; R.I.; Vt.; W.Va.; Wis. Thus, the Chamber said, a total of 41 states had taken some action or another indicating a desire for a constitutional amendment on reapportionment. (The House Judiciary Committee said that Aug. 5 it was informed that the Illinois Senate passed a convention call measure, but the state House rejected it, thus resulting in no valid call. That presumably brought the Chamber total to 42 states.)

The lack of agreement on the number of valid convention calls and memorials gave some indication of the complexity of this method of convening a constitutional convention. At the close of 1965, the drive for a convention was faltering, as only two states, Kentucky and Nebraska, filed presumably valid calls after the Aug. 4 defeat of the Dirksen amendment on the Senate floor. Some of the existing calls were a year or more old, and in some instances, such as in New Hampshire, the state legislatures meanwhile had proceeded to reapportion themselves along the lines of the "one-man, one-vote" rule.

GRASS-ROOTS PRESSURE FOR S J RES 2

In addition to local organizations of the major farm, retail and business groups lobbying for the Dirksen amendment, a large new group came into being in 1965. That was the Citizens Committee for Balanced Legislative Representation, formed in California about Feb. 1, 1965, under the sponsorship of business and farm groups. It was yet another indication of the particularly sensitive situation in California, where rural interests strongly feared a takeover of the state legislature by Los Angeles area legislators. (In 1964, 10.7 percent of the state's population theoretically could elect control of the state Senate: the smallest senatorial district had 14,294 persons, the largest (Los Angeles) 6,038,771.)

The Citizens Committee at its inception retained the California public relations firm of Whitaker and Baxter, which gained fame from 1949-53 for its nationwide campaign on behalf of the American Medical Assn. against the Truman Administration's national health insurance proposals. In 1960 and 1962, Whitaker and Baxter ran campaigns in California against reapportionment of the state legislature through initiative movements, and, in 1964, in favor of a referendum to end railroad featherbedding.

Clem Whitaker Jr., head of the firm, July 29 told CQ that members of the executive committee of the Citizens Committee for Balanced Legislative Representation included the presidents of the following groups: California Agricultural Council; California Farm Bureau Federation; California Manufacturers Assn.; California Chamber of Commerce; California Grape and Tree Fruit Assn.; League of California Cities; California county supervisors' organization; California State Automobile Assn.; and California Retailers Assn. Whitaker said the group included over 1,000 businessmen, civic leaders and farm organizations.

DIRECT LOBBYING FOR S J RES 2

The third major part of the campaign for S J Res 2 was direct lobbying of Congressmen in Washington, D.C. Heaviest direct lobbying for S J Res 2, according to many sources, was coming from the American Farm Bureau Federation. Offices also reported receiving delegations of state legislators and officials in favor of S J Res 2, and communications from spokesmen for chambers of commerce and manufacturers' associations.

The Citizens Committee for Balanced Representation (above) also retained the law firm of O'Connor, Green, Thomas and Walters of Washington, D.C., and Minneapolis as its lobbyist in the nation's capital. The firm registered with the Clerk of the House June 9 as a lobbyist for the Citizens Committee, specifying that passage of the substance of S J Res 2 was its objective in lobbying.

1965 Campaign Against Amendment

According to CQ's survey, the 1965 lobbying campaign against S J Res 2 was conducted early in the year primarily by four groups: organized labor, the American Civil Liberties Union, Americans for Democratic Action and the newly organized National Committee for Fair Representation. Although some civil rights groups also were active early in the year, it was not until late June that the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights (a loose, ad hoc group of 100 organizations interested in civil rights) formally undertook lobbying responsibility in Washington, D.C., against S J Res 2.

Several sources said the civil rights groups were relatively late in coming to active opposition to the Dirksen amendment because they didn't believe it would reach the floor early in the year, they were preoccupied with lobbying for the voting rights bill (S 1564) and, in a few cases, were not at first clearly convinced that the Dirksen amendment was a major hazard to minorities.

Like many of the rural groups which believed the Dirksen amendment would allow them to retain control of at least one chamber of state legislatures, labor unions and many other opponents of S J Res 2 also had a direct interest in it. Apportionment of legislatures on a "one-man, one-vote" basis would, in most cases (though not all), tend to shift power to urban and suburban areas where unions, minority groups and their liberal allies were strongest.

National Committee Formed. The organized 1965 campaign against S J Res 2 began in March, when spokesmen for unions, the ACLU, the ADA and several other groups met in the nation's capital to discuss a united effort against S J Res 2. The result was the formation of the National Committee for Fair Representation, headed by ACLU Washington representative Lawrence Speiser and Royce Hanson, the secretary-treasurer, a professor of government at American University, Wash., D.C., and leader of the apportionment fight in Maryland.

The National Committee in April and May engaged in a drive to recruit organizations to affiliate and on June 4 issued the first of a sporadic series of "News Bulletins" on the issue of the Dirksen amendment. The bulletins maintained a running fire of criticism of S J Res 2, and sought to stimulate opposition. Speiser July 28 said the following organizations had affiliated with the National Committee:

Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America (AFL-CIO); American Civil Liberties Union; American Ethical Union; American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFL-CIO); American Jewish Congress; American Newspaper Guild (AFL-CIO); American Veterans Committee; Americans for Democratic Action;

B'nai B'rith Women; Committee on Political Education (COPE) of the AFL-CIO; Delta Sigma Theta; AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department; International Ladies Garment Workers Union (AFL-CIO); Jewish War Veterans; Labor Zionists; National Assn. of Negro Business and Professional Women's Clubs; National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice; National Jewish Welfare Board; National Council of Jewish Women; Textile Workers Union of America (AFL-CIO); United Presbyterian Church, office of Church and Society; Union of American Hebrew Congregations; United Auto Workers (AFL-CIO); Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; YWCA National Board; Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Speiser said the National Committee did not engage in direct lobbying as such, devoting most of its efforts to stimulating lobbying and other action by member organizations and to encouraging letter-writing and other grassroots activities outside the nation's capital. The National Committee ceased recruiting when the Leadership Conference agreed to take over lobbying responsibility.

Leadership Conference Decision. During May hearings before the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee and again in June hearings before the House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 5, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.), Burke Marshall (former head of the Justice Department civil rights division), Clarence Mitchell (the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People's Washington, D.C., representative) and James Farmer (head of the Congress of Racial Equality) all made statements claiming, in effect, that passage of S J Res 2 would be particularly hurtful to Negroes and other urban minorities by permitting rural interests to retain control of one chamber of the state legislature and use it to block needed social legislation for the cities and suburbs.

Subsequently, on June 21, a meeting of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights agreed to take over the responsibility for lobbying against the Dirksen amendment, with different member groups dividing among them the chores of seeing Congressmen.

Although many of the groups in the Leadership Conference did see a number of Congressmen and conduct letter-writing campaigns, as was also the case with groups in the National Committee for Fair Representation (many organizations belonged to both the Leadership Conference and National Committee, it should be noted), their lobbying up to the end of July was sporadic, several sources told CQ. The same was true of the AFL-CIO, whose constituent unions have about 13 million members and thousands of paid union officials all over the country, as well as numerous lobbyists in Washington, D.C., making the unions by far the strongest potential lobbying force against S J Res 2. The reason was the preoccupation of the unions with pushing for House passage of the right-to-work repeal bill (HR 77) and the medical-care-for-the-aged bill (HR 6675), and the preoccupation of most of the civil rights groups and unions with pushing for the voting rights bill (S 1564).

Spokesmen also said they simply didn't expect S J Res 2 to come up "so soon."

One legislator on whom labor and civil rights lobbying concentrated heavily, and may have had a substantial effect, was Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Javits came from a state where Republicans were strongest in rural upstate areas, but where there were very strong urban labor and civil rights organizations. Javits' office said he had been subjected to much pressure, many visits from different organizations for or against S J Res 2 and had received many letters for and against. Early in the year, Javits' position appeared to be favorable to the general substance of S J Res 2, if modified somewhat, but he later shifted his position, saying he was troubled by the civil rights aspects of S J Res 2. He finally said he would oppose S J Res 2 unless it was substantially modified. Javits' unwillingness to support S J Res 2 without substantial changes created an apparent 8-8 deadlock in the Senate Judiciary Committee, preventing the Committee from reporting the bill at its regular meeting July 20 (no vote was actually taken). It was this deadlock which caused Dirksen to attempt to bring S J Res 2 to the floor without Committee approval by attempting to add it to a minor bill on the floor. (See Senate Floor Action)

Conference of Mayors. Although it is not a lobbying organization, the position of the U.S. Conference of Mayors was said to have had a substantial impact on Capitol Hill. A spokesman for the cities, the Conference came out strongly against S J Res 2. Several Congressional offices said many communications were being received from mayors of cities connected with the Conference, and Members were inclined to pay attention.

1965 Congressional Action

Unsuccessful in their efforts to alter the course of state legislative reapportionment in 1964, Sen. Dirksen and Rep. William M. Tuck (D Va.) moved quickly in the opening days of the first session of the 89th Congress to keep the issue alive.

On Jan. 6, 1965, Dirksen introduced S J Res 2, proposing to amend the Constitution to permit states to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population. The bill was co-sponsored by 37 Senators, including several Democrats and all Senate Republicans except Clifford P. Case (N.J.) and Javits.

Tuck Jan. 5 introduced a bill (HR 1584) removing from the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review reapportionment cases (and from lower federal courts jurisdiction to hear them), as well as a bill (H J Res 121) corresponding to S J Res 2, proposing to amend the Constitution to permit states to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population.

Another bill (H J Res 2) was introduced Jan. 4 by Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas); it proposed a constitutional amendment declaring that nothing in the Constitution prevented a state from apportioning one house on factors other than population. Patman Feb. 24 filed a discharge petition (H Res 243) to force a House vote on his bill, but he gathered only 94 names, 124 short of the 218 required.

Although S J Res 2 in the Senate and H J Res 2 in the House became the centers of legislative attention, there were other proposals, such as bills (S J Res 37 and 38) introduced Feb. 2 by Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho) and the bill (S J Res 44) introduced by Javits, all of which were proposed amendments to the Constitution to permit state apportionment of one house on a non-population basis. In addition, Sen. Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) Jan. 15 introduced a bill (S 534) to deny federal courts jurisdiction over reapportionment cases, and Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) May 26 introduced a bill (S J Res 87) to amend the Constitution both to deny such jurisdiction and to require states to apportion only their more numerous house along population lines.

S J Res 2 underwent a number of changes and modifications before it was voted upon, but the basic outline of the Dirksen plan was clear from the beginning. The measure contemplated permitting states to apportion one legislative house on non-population factors by submitting to general referendum a proposed apportionment plan. Controversy developed over whether the legislature submitting such a plan must itself be apportioned along "one-man, one-vote" lines first (Dirksen reportedly balked at this suggestion from Sen. Birch Bayh, D. Ind.); how often the reapportionment plan must be resubmitted to the state's electorate (Dirksen agreed to require submission after each federal census), what factors constituted valid non-population factors (Dirksen agreed to use "geography and political subdivisions") and whether the electorate should be offered a specific reapportionment plan or simply be asked if a non-population plan was preferred (Dirksen agreed to the former). Dirksen's concessions, made in subcommittee, were intended to pick up support for the measure. Bayh, chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments, was instrumental in effecting these changes.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 3-5, 9-10, 17-18; April 27-29; and May 5-7, 14, 20 and 21 on proposals to amend the Constitution to permit states to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population.

TESTIMONY -- March 3 -- Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), a Subcommittee member, said his proposal, S J Res 2, would "not reverse or overturn" the reapportionment decisions of the Supreme Court, nor alter the jurisdiction or power of the Court in the apportionment field. "It would simply provide states with an alternative by reserving to the people of each state the right to apportion one house of their state legislature on factors other than population if a majority of the people of that state voting on that issue elected to do so.... We are confronted with a basic issue of free government here; a fundamental concept of free government is involved.... Shall the people themselves be allowed the right to determine the organic structure of their state government?... If the people are not permitted to make this decision, then who is to make it for them? If we deny this right then a major step in the process of fragmenting freedom has begun.... Freedom will flourish and can flourish only when the people retain free exercise of the powers of government." Dirksen said he was confident the states would approve an amendment and pointed out that the Oklahoma Legislature, even after a federal court had reapportioned it on a straight population basis, had petitioned Congress for a constitutional amendment along the lines of S J Res 2.

March 4 -- Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) enumerated several "concerns" regarding S J Res 2: (1) "What effect does S J Res 2 have on the right of judicial review?.... (It) appears to divest the courts of jurisdiction over apportionment cases, by vesting all power to apportion in the 'people' of the state." (2) "What does S J Res 2 mean when it permits apportionment of one house on 'factors other than population'?" Would factors like rainfall, wealth, race or religion be permissible? "No standards of reasonableness are embodied in the amendment. Does this amendment mean that a state could wholly ignore population in apportioning one house?" (3) "Does a majority vote in a referendum to apportion upon factors other than population adequately satisfy the concept of majority rule inherent in our Constitution and democratic system?.... As I read S J Res 2, it contains no provision whereby the majority's desire to apportion on factors other than population may be tested periodically. In a state where there is no initiative, there would be no mechanism for change."

Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.), opposing all the proposed amendments, said: "I am unable to cite a single argument, based on fundamental principles, against equal representation.... Even if the amendment were submitted directly to popular vote, I would oppose it because the right to an equal vote is, in my view, an inalienable right."

Charles B. Shuman, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said the apportionment issue is "not a question of the interests of rural versus city people, but of whether we are to maintain our time-tested system of representative government." He supported S J Res 2.

March 9 -- Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said he believed the Supreme Court's "one man, one vote" decisions were correct but that "questions of area resources, local government, geographic and economic interests may well be determining factors with the people of some states. This for me is the crux of the issue which faces this Committee: Is it the predominant view of the American public that the federal system should at least be made available to the states if the people of any state wish it?" Javits said that his own proposal (S J Res 44) was designed to require a referendum of all the people of a state at least every 10 years if a state wanted to permit deviation from population in one branch of the legislature. "It should be absolutely clear in the proposed constitutional amendment that all the existing constitutional provisions and interpretations which prohibit discrimination on account of race, color, religion or national origin shall remain in full force and effect notwithstanding any provision of the proposed amendment," Javits said.

Mayors Oppose Amendment

Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago, Ill., speaking on behalf of the U.S. Council of Mayors, said he was "unequivocally opposed to the proposed amendments which would seek to deny the democratic principle that one man's vote must be worth the same as another's.... All the proposed amendments seek to evade the judgment of the (Supreme) Court and to legitimize malapportionment."

March 10 -- Royce Hanson, American University professor, said, "Minority rights are best protected by equal representation of all the people. Then they are able to form naturally both electoral and legislative coalitions to advance their interests.... The essential point is that S J Res 2 permits a majority to pick the minority it prefers -- a kept or pet minority congenial to the system as it has been.... If I wanted to discriminate against Negroes, I would base Senate representation on either education or wealth. I believe either of these non-population factors could be approved by the electorates of some states today. S J Res 2 makes all these constitutional, whatever their discriminatory effect....

John A. Clem, on behalf of the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, said, "Underrepresentation of urban areas in state legislatures was a fundamental cause of the expansion of the Federal Government's role in urban development, but to cut through the delicate balance of geographic, economic and political relationships which bind society together by electing both houses of a state legislature by population is to abandon state affairs to the class and interest which happens to be in the majority."

March 1? -- Earl F. Morris, a member of the board of governors of the American Bar Assn. (ABA), testified for the ABA in favor of legislation generally following the lines of S J Res 2. The ABA's House of Delegates, meeting in New Orleans, Feb. 8 endorsed a constitutional amendment, Morris told the Subcommittee, that would permit apportionment of state legislatures to be based in part on geography, county and state lines, economic conditions, history and "other factors in addition to population." He said the vote in the House of Delegates was 115 for the resolution and 92 against it. The ABA thought that states should have the right to decide on the apportionment question, he said.

April 29 -- W.Y. Hicks Jr., executive secretary, the Liberty Lobby, said S J Res 2 "offers a wonderful opportunity for Congress to demonstrate its belief in the wisdom and powers of the people and their state governments -- to show its trust in the basic principles on which our Constitution is based."

Andrew J. Biemiller, director, department of legislation, AFL-CIO, said, "The AFL-CIO firmly supports the principle of 'one man, one vote' which has been vigorously affirmed in a number of recent decisions by the Supreme Court.... We are emphatically opposed to adoption of any of these proposed constitutional amendments." As an example of the impact of malapportionment, he cited action taken March 2, 1965, in the Missouri House, defeating a proposed $1 hourly minimum wage by a 68-83 vote. The 68 "yes" votes came from districts representing 2,676,935 persons, while the 83 "no" votes came from areas representing a population of 1,337,255.

SUBCOMMITTEE APPROVES BILL

The Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments June 23 approved an amended version of S J Res 2 by a 6-2 vote.

Senators voting for S J Res 2 were Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), James O. Eastland (D Miss.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), George A. Smathers (D Fla.), Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) and Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii). Those opposing the resolution were Subcommittee Chairman Birch Bayh (D Ind.) and Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.). Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) was absent.

As approved, S J Res 2 would permit one house of a bicameral state legislature to be apportioned on non-population factors provided the apportionment plan was approved by the citizens of a state in a popular referendum. After each 10-year federal census, the apportionment plan, or a new plan, would again be submitted to referendum.

The resolution also would permit "reasonable weight" to be given to factors other than population in the apportionment of unicameral state legislatures, provided the apportionment plan was approved by referendum. Only Nebraska currently had a unicameral legislature.

Before approving S J Res 2, the Subcommittee made three major changes. The new bill required voter approval of a non-population-based apportionment plan after each federal census, while the original bill required a referendum only at the time that the original apportionment was made; it required that a specific plan be submitted to a referendum, while the original bill could have been interpreted only to require a referendum on the question of whether one house of the legislature should be apportioned on a non-population basis; and it struck from the original bill language giving the "people" of a state the "right and power" to determine the "composition" and "apportionment" of their state legislature. Opponents of the resolution felt this language would preclude judicial review of state legislature apportionment.

FULL COMMITTEE STALEMATES

Although he had cleared the first hurdle in the Subcommittee, Dirksen still faced a vote in the full Senate Judiciary Committee (11 Democrats, 5 Republicans). He attempted July 14 to bring S J Res 2 to a committee vote by unanimous consent, but Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) objected, and the matter was put over a week.

On July 20 Dirksen tried again, but already his support was crumbling. The day before, apparently under heavy pressure from liberals and civil rights groups, Javits announced his opposition unless certain changes were made; and July 20 Committee member Edward V. Long (D Mo.) announced he would oppose Dirksen's bill. Dirksen later told the Senate, in a floor speech July 23, why he had not asked for a Committee vote July 20. As the Committee assembled he saw that Smathers, who had supported him in the Subcommittee, was absent, as were two other supporters, John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Hugh Scott (R Pa.). "The best I could get," with all members present, he told the Senate "was an 8-8 vote in the Committee." Dirksen avoided a vote, since a tie would have defeated his bill.

Lined up against Dirksen, his three Republican and four Southern Democratic supporters were Javits and seven Democrats: Bayh, Tydings, Dodd, Hart, Long (Mo.), Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) and Quentin N. Burdick (N.D.).

Dirksen Uses Baseball Bill

Contending July 23 that "pressure" was brought to bear, Dirksen said that he was "up against a stacked deck" in the Committee. He was not without other resources, however. As chairman, although a Republican, of the Subcommittee on Federal Charters, Holidays and Celebrations, a two-man subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee (McClellan being the other member), Dirksen saw a possible vehicle in a minor bill (S J Res 66) approved by that Subcommittee. The bill designated the week of Aug. 31 through Sept. 6 as "National American Legion Baseball Week."

The Judiciary Committee July 15 had reported the baseball bill (S J Res 66 -- S Rept 451), and Dirksen intended to use it as a vehicle for his proposed amendment. He had lost the committee battle, although as he told the Senate July 23: "But I say that one swallow flying low does not make a summer, and one battle does not make a war." Dirksen obtained the consent of Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), with whom he had worked closely on the 1964 apportionment debate, to call up the baseball bill, and he was ready to open his battle on the floor of the Senate.

Floor Action

Dirksen July 22 moved to call up S J Res 66, the baseball bill, and a motion to consider the bill was adopted by voice vote. Dirksen then proposed an amendment to S J Res 66 in the nature of a substitute, striking out language pertaining to Legion baseball and substituting the constitutional amendment language of his original bill, S J Res 2. Debate began July 22 on this motion, which required a majority vote. If his substitute were adopted, the amended bill (S J Res 66) then would be a proposed constitutional amendment, and would require a two-thirds vote for final passage.

Dirksen served notice that he was "playing for keeps" and that if the effort to substitute his proposed amendment for the baseball bill failed, he would "hook it on" other legislation, possibly including major Administration measures.

Debate progressed sporadically in the following days and was frequently interrupted while the Senate transacted other business. Both sides in the debate developed their arguments at length, but were careful not to obstruct the normal flow of legislation.

DEFEAT OF AMENDMENT

The Dirksen apportionment amendment, with slight modification, was substituted Aug. 4 for the baseball language in S J Res 66. The vote was 59-39. Immediately thereafter, the Senate voted on whether to pass the modified bill. As a proposed constitutional amendment, the bill needed a two-thirds majority to pass.

The Aug. 4 roll-call vote on passage of the Dirksen amendment embodied in S J Res 66 was 57-39, which was seven votes short of the required two-thirds majority. The vote breakdown: R 29-3; D 28-36 (ND 10-33; SD 18-3). Two Senators, Hayden (D Ariz.) and Symington (D Mo.), voted to substitute the Dirksen amendment for the baseball language but did not vote on the final roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 1063)

The Dirksen amendment permitted states to apportion one house of their legislature on the basis of "population, geography, and political subdivisions." The word "and" was substituted for "or" in a modification suggested by Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) shortly before the vote in an apparent effort to win support for the measure. These three factors were to be given "reasonable weight" in apportioning a unicameral state legislature, the word "reasonable" also having been substituted for "similar" at Hruska's suggestion. Any such reapportionment plan required a majority "vote of the people" for adoption, and an alternate plan based upon substantial equality of population was to be submitted at the same time. Two years following each federal census, the plan adopted must be resubmitted to popular vote, or another plan could be submitted, and again, an alternate population-based plan must accompany it. The last provision also was a Hruska modification agreed to by Dirksen.

The Senate Aug. 2 by unanimous consent agreed to limit debate and to schedule voting on the Dirksen amendment for Aug. 4. Debate opened Aug. 4 on a substitute amendment introduced July 22 by Javits which, while similar to the Dirksen amendment, required that any proposed reapportionment plan must bear "a reasonable relationship to the needs of the State," a provision Javits said ensured judicial scrutiny of the plan. Jack Miller (R Iowa) proposed an amendment to the Javits amendment to require that legislators elected from multi-member districts be elected from separate subdistricts based upon substantial equality of population. The Senate rejected the Miller amendment by voice vote and then rejected the Javits amendment by a 12-85 roll-call vote.

Also defeated was a proposal by J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.) that was designed to prevent populous areas from using their voting power to obtain, at the expense of less populated areas, more representatives than they were entitled to.

The Senate then, by a 59-39 roll-call vote, substituted Dirksen's amendment, as modified by Hruska, for the wording of S J Res 66 pertaining to "National American Legion Baseball Week." A majority vote was necessary to make the substitution. The final 57-39 roll call defeating the Dirksen amendment ensued.

PROVISIONS -- See box p. 532.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Aug. 4 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Substitute for wording of pending S J Res 66 new language proposing a constitutional amendment permitting states to apportion one house of their legislatures on the basis of geography, political subdivisions and population, requiring adoption of the reapportionment plan, or an alternate plan based upon substantial equality of population, by majority popular vote; and requiring resubmission of the plan, or a new plan, and the same alternative, to popular vote every 10 years. Roll-call vote, 59-39.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Aug. 4 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Add to pending Javits amendment (below) requirement that legislators from multi-member districts be elected from subdistricts based upon substantial equality of population. Voice vote.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Substitute for pending Dirksen amendment (above) language proposing a constitutional amendment permitting apportionment of one house of a state legislature on the basis of geography or political subdivisions as well as population if bearing a reasonable relationship to the needs of the state; requiring adoption of the reapportionment plan, or an alternate plan based upon substantial equality of population, by majority popular vote; and requiring resubmission of the plan or a new plan, and the same alternative, to popular vote every 10 years. Roll-call, 12-85.

J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.) -- Add to pending Dirksen amendment (above) a provision that people residing in "less populous geographical areas and political subdivisions" would have no less representation than they would have under a plan based upon substantial equality of population. Voice.

PROS AND CONS DEBATED

Throughout the Senate debate on Dirksen's amendment the central argument for the measure was that the people of each state should be permitted to decide for themselves the basis of representation in one house of their legislature. Paul J. Fannin (R Ariz.) July 23 said, "All this amendment does is restore to the people a right which the Supreme Court has wrongfully taken away from them." Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) July 28 argued, "The Dirksen amendment affirms the right of the people to decide how best to determine the composition of their own state legislatures."

Both sides found support for their arguments in the national trend toward an urban population. Dirksen July 23 said the "one-man, one-vote" principle carried to its logical conclusion would lead to tyranny and despotism; Milward L. Simpson (R Wyo.) referred the same day to "roughshod dominance by urban bosses," and Kuchel July 28 warned of the "haunting specter of unrestrained bossism."

But that argument, Walter F. Mondale (D Minn.) said July 27, cut both ways. Under the proposed amendment, he said, urban majorities easily could redraft districts to gain "unequal and superior representation." He said the amendment offered no protection to rural voters, but was a threat to them, adding, "The controversy here is not between rural virtue and urban iniquity...but between those who believe that men are entitled to equal representation regardless of their position, and those who feel that certain citizens should be given a greater influence in government than others."

The "federal-analogy" argument -- that the U.S. Senate is not apportioned on a population basis -- was used by Simpson and other supporters of the Dirksen proposal. They argued that what was constitutionally required for Congress should at least be constitutionally permissible for the states.

Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) countered with an analysis of the compromise agreement of 1789, in which the Virginia plan, apportioning both houses of Congress on a population basis, was rejected in favor of the New Jersey plan, providing for state representation in the Senate and popular representation in the House. Mondale July 27 noted that state governments are not established along federal lines; they do not consist of a federation of political subdivisions, but can create or abolish their political subdivisions at will. The composition of Congress is not analogous to that of a state legislature, he said.

Birch Bayh (D Ind.) July 26 said that while he opposed the Dirksen measure, he saw need for a "small bit of leeway" in the principle of absolute numerical equality of representation. This leeway, he said, might be necessary to provide effective representation to voters from outlying districts, inaccessible to their legislators, who might even be shielded by mountains or other obstacles such as distance from television coverage of their representatives.

Supporters of Dirksen's amendment argued that the Supreme Court's decisions on malapportioned legislatures had created chaos in many legislatures.

Racial Discrimination Seen

In the closing days of debate, opponents of the amendment stressed that it could be used to perpetuate discrimination against Negro voters by weighting white-dominated geographical areas or political subdivisions so as to maintain white control of at least one house of a state legislature. Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.) Aug. 4 said the "motivation" to disenfranchise Negroes persisted in some states and the amendment would provide the "opportunity." William Proxmire (D Wis.) July 30 said an extreme example of the amendment's potential discriminatory use would be for a state to establish a unicameral legislature and apportion it to assure majority membership from white districts. But John Sherman

Cooper (R Ky.) argued that Supreme Court decisions prohibited drawing voting district lines so as to discriminate against Negroes. Both sides in the debate agreed that drafters of the Dirksen amendment had no intention that it should be used to discriminate against Negroes.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), who led the opposition to the amendment, Tydings and Proxmire argued on a broader front that the amendment lent itself to preserving the status quo in any state. They said that malapportioned legislatures would be called upon to ratify the amendment, and then would draft the reapportionment plans to be submitted to the people, probably so wording the proposition that the "desired" result would be achieved.

Another key argument developed by opponents was that malapportioned legislatures had a history of failure to attend to urban problems, and that urban centers had hence turned to the Federal Government for assistance. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) Aug. 3 noted that the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, appointed by former President Dwight D. Eisenhower, warned in a 1955 report states do not give cities their rightful allocation of seats in the legislature the tendency will be toward direct federal-municipal dealings." McNamara and other opponents predicted that passage of the Dirksen amendment would confirm the Commission finding that continued rural domination of state legislatures, or at least rural veto power through control of one house, would lead to the breakdown of the traditional federal structure and to crystalization of the federal-municipal axis.

PRESIDENT REMAINS ALOOF

President Johnson took no public position on the Dirksen amendment and when asked about the matter at a press conference June 1, said that it was not a question for the President: "The President does not take action in connection with constitutional amendments. I have reviewed some of the proposals that have been made. I am generally sympathetic with the reapportionment that is taking place throughout the country in compliance with the Supreme Court's decision. I would not want to get into detailed discussion of individual programs...because a constitutional amendment doesn't require White House action. It is a matter for the representatives of the people to decide. In submitting it, the Congress takes that action. The people themselves have an opportunity to judge it."

On Aug. 3, however, the day before the Senate vote, Dirksen charged that Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey was actively encouraging opposition to the amendment. The implication was that the Vice President's activity had the sanction if not direction of the White House.

(An obvious exception to Mr. Johnson's hands-off position on constitutional amendments appeared early in 1965 when he endorsed proposals to clarify the constitutional problem of the Vice President's role if a President becomes disabled. Congress cleared the proposed 25th Amendment to the Constitution (S J Res 1) July 6. See story p. 573)

House

COMMITTEE -- House Judiciary, Subcommittee No. 5.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 23-25 and Aug. 4-5 on proposals to amend the Constitution to permit states to apportion one legislative house on factors other than population.

TESTIMONY -- June 23 -- Subcommittee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), supporting the Supreme Court's major 1964 ruling, said rural minorities had "been able to dominate the majority in most cities." He said New York City had gotten "no relief" when it sought help at Albany, the state capital. "When we want something we have to go begging like sycophants to the poobahs of podunk and the nabobs of squidunk. The situation is intolerable."

Rep. Edward Hutchinson (R Mich.) appeared in support of his own resolution (H J Res 137) which would go much further than S J Res 2 in that the federal courts would be prohibited from hearing cases on state legislative apportionment. Hutchinson said he would support a "milder" proposal, such as S J Res 2, however.

Rep. Barber B. Conable Jr. (R N.Y.) said recent federal court decisions had provided "too little flexibility in a representation formula, yet too much flexibility in drawing boundary lines of legislative districts. Gerrymandering is encouraged rather than discouraged." Conable said the size of an area, town and county units of government and social composition were just as important apportionment factors as population.

Rep. Jackson E. Betts (R Ohio) sought to answer supporters of "one-man, one-vote" who argued that "persons vote -- not rocks and stones." Betts said in any session of Congress, "The legislative pressures inevitably revolve around geographic centers in most instances. The cotton fields of the South, the coal mines of Appalachia, the money centers of the East, the reclamation problems of the West, the wheat plains in the Midwest -- these are where most issues are generated and fought." Betts said issues within states were more often than not generated along geographical lines and "the states should have the same right" as the Congress to base the apportionment of one house on geographical factors.

June 24 -- Rep. Bob Dole (R Kan.) told the members he was there "to plead the case for a minority group composed of all races, creeds and colors -- specifically rural Americans." Dole said the Congress had properly devoted much time to legislation protecting other minorities and he considered it "somewhat paradoxical that so many champions of this cause fail to lift a finger when the rights and the very life blood of rural America is going down the drain." Dole said, "Big city political bosses, labor leaders and other assorted equalitarians are pitted against a sincere but an unorganized and peaceful minority composed of farmers, small businessmen and others who believe their respective states still serve some useful purpose even in the 'Great Society'."

Howard M. Squadron, testifying for 38 member-agencies of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, said passage of a resolution like S J Res 2 would be a "clear invitation to engage in the most blatant kind of discrimination. Apportionment could be made on the basis not only of geography, but also of income, ownership of land, sex, religion or race."

Roger Fleming, a spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation, said the effect of the Supreme Court's "one-man, one-vote" rulings was to "undo the system of checks and balances that has existed in state governments. Area problems and minority interests may now be pushed aside by the power of the majority."

Chamber of Commerce, CORE Differ

June 25 -- Eldon W. Sneeringer, a spokesman for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, told the Committee that the Chamber recognized that "many states are now and have for some time been acutely malapportioned" but the issue was how the reapportionment would be carried out. Residents of states should be allowed to apportion their legislatures as they saw fit, he said, within the bounds of their state constitutions and the federal Constitution. But, he said, this right had been curtailed by recent Supreme Court decisions requiring both bodies of a bicameral legislature to be apportioned solely on the basis of population. He said that under the "one-man, one-vote" theory, it would be possible for minorities to control the state legislature if they were dominant in the state's urban areas. At the same time, areas with "vital" state resources but with few residents might be without representation or under-represented. Sneeringer said the fact that a great majority of the states had bicameral legislatures with one house apportioned on non-population factors attested that the system had "been a workable, effective plan of government. If the theory of bicameralism is unjust in a state legislature, it is also unjust in the Federal Government, where 266,000 Alaskans elect as many United States Senators as 17 million New Yorkers."

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, told the Committee that "the denial of equal representation to urban dwellers is most directly a denial of full citizenship to the Negro." Farmer said the proposed amendments would permit the "racists, the bigots, the reactionaries and the self-interested" to "connive to deny" Negroes equality. Farmer's testimony brought a sharp reaction from Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), ranking minority member of both the Subcommittee and the full Judiciary Committee. McCulloch, who had been an important supporter of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and who supported a constitutional amendment to permit states to apportion one house of their state legislatures on non-population factors, told Farmer, "You have indicted my state, the state of California and the state of New York. I challenge your statement in connection with Ohio. Has there been discrimination in connection with voting, transportation or welfare? Have you found rural legislatures unsympathetic in Ohio?" Farmer replied, "No, but my information is that they are more or less apathetic about the problems of the cities." Farmer also said that in some states there had been pressure on welfare recipients to refrain from civil rights activities.

COMMITTEE SUSPENDS HEARINGS

Chairman Celler ended the Subcommittee hearings Aug. 5, subject to call of the chair. He said that to continue the hearings would be futile in view of the "rigor mortis" that set in when the Senate defeated the Dirksen amendment on the previous day.

Efforts among Representatives to rally support for a constitutional amendment did not cease, however. Rep. Dole Oct. 13 announced on the House floor that a bipartisan "steering committee" was "making every effort possible to stir up some interest and enthusiasm" on the subject. Members of that informal group were four Democrats: Fuqua (Fla.), Ichord (Mo.), Johnson (Calif.) and Patman (Texas); and three Republicans: Baldwin (Calif.), Dole (Kan.) and King (N.Y.).

New Dirksen Bill

After the Aug. 4 defeat, Dirksen lost little time in preparing the groundwork for another effort to pass his proposed constitutional amendment on state legislative reapportionment. On Aug. 11 he introduced a new bill (S J Res 103) that was designed to placate some foes of his first measure (S J Res 2).

The changes, Dirksen hoped, removed concern among Senators about malapportioned legislatures which might perpetuate themselves, about use of unicameral legislatures to frustrate equality of voting power and about use of geography and political subdivisions in apportionment to dilute the voting strength of Negroes by means of racial gerrymandering.

The key changes were four in number: (1) when ratifying the proposed constitutional amendment, at least one house of a state legislature must be apportioned on the basis of equal population; (2) a reapportionment plan submitted to referendum by a unicameral legislature must be court-approved; (3) any reapportionment plan submitted to referendum must be accompanied by an alternative plan based on population; and (4) any reapportionment plan based on factors of geography and political subdivisions must be drawn "in order to insure effective representation in the state's legislature of the various groups and interests making up the electorate."

No hearings on S J Res 103 were held, it being generally agreed in the Senate that the evidence for and against the amendment had been amply developed and the issues fully explored in previous hearings and debate.

Committee Deadlock

The Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Judiciary Committee Aug. 26 approved S J Res 103 by a vote of 6-3. When the full Committee considered the bill Aug. 31, however, the vote was tied at 8-8, a repetition of the tie that blocked the reporting of S J Res 2 in July.

Voting to report the bill were four Republicans: Dirksen, Fong (Hawaii), Hruska (Neb.) and Scott (Pa.); and four Southern Democrats: Eastland (Miss.), Ervin (N.C.), McClellan (Ark.) and Smathers (Fla.). Voting against reporting the bill were one Republican, Javits (N.Y.), and seven Democrats: Bayh (Ind.), Burdick (N.D.), Dodd (Conn.), Hart (Mich.), Kennedy (Mass.), Long (Mo.) and Tydings (Md.).

Dirksen retaliated by objecting -- thus denying unanimous consent -- to Committee consideration of the Administration-backed immigration bill (HR 2580); using the same tactic that had been used against him in his effort to get S J Res 2 reported from the Committee, he was able to tie up the immigration bill for at least a week, and he threatened further delaying action if S J Res 103 were not reported.

Vote Switched to Clear Immigration Bill

The deadlock was broken Sept. 8 when Dodd, while emphasizing his opposition to the Dirksen bill, switched his vote in favor of reporting it; the Committee promptly ordered S J Res 103 reported, without recommendation. Dirksen relaxed his opposition to considering the immigration bill, the Committee reported it the same day and the measure eventually became law. (See story p. 459)

Dirksen said he would not attempt floor action on S J Res 103 in the remaining days of the 1965 session but was content to have it on the Senate calendar for consideration early in 1966. (It was not formally reported by the Committee in 1965 but this action was expected when Congress reconvened in 1966.)

BASEBALL BILL ENACTED

One piece of business remained unfinished from the reapportionment battle: the baseball bill that Dirksen had used as a vehicle for pushing S J Res 2 to a Senate vote. He had promised at that time that he would "take care of" the baseball matter later, and he kept his word. The Senate Aug. 10 and the House Aug. 11 passed by voice votes a new bill (S J Res 100) designating the week of Aug. 31 through Sept. 6 as "National American Legion Baseball Week." The President signed the bill (PL 89-133) on Aug. 23.

After the bill passed the Senate, an exchange took place among Majority Leader Mansfield, Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), sponsor of S J Res 100, and Dirksen:

"Mr. Mansfield. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether the ball game on this particular issue is now over.

"Mr. Mundt. It is one of those rare occasions when Washington wins the ball game.

"Mr. Dirksen. I could not tell. Perhaps the ball game has only begun."

Texts of Rejected Amendment and Dirksen's Revised Version

S J Res 2, in the modified form in which it was voted on Aug. 4 in the Senate (as S J Res 66):

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states within seven years from the date of its submission by the Congress:

Section 1. The people of a state may apportion one house of a bicameral legislature using population, geography, and political subdivisions as factors, giving each factor such weight as they deem appropriate, or giving reasonable weight to the same factors in apportioning a unicameral legislature, if in either case such plan of apportionment has been submitted to a vote of the people in accordance with law and with the provisions of this Constitution and has been approved by a majority of those voting on that issue. When a plan of apportionment based on factors of population, geography, and political subdivisions is submitted to a vote of the people under this Section there shall also be submitted, at the same election, an alternative plan of apportionment based upon substantial equality of population.

Section 2. Any plan of apportionment which has been approved under this article shall be resubmitted to a vote of the people, or, another plan may be submitted under the provisions of Section 1, at the November general election held two years following each year in which there is commenced any enumeration provided for in Section 2 of Article I, and upon approval by a majority of those voting thereon, such plan of apportionment shall continue in effect until changed in accordance with law and with the provisions of this Constitution.

S J Res 103:

That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several states within seven years of its submission to the states by the Congress, provided that each such legislature shall include one house apportioned on the basis of substantial equality of population in accordance with the most recent enumeration provided for in Section 2 of Article I:

Section 1. The legislature of each state shall be apportioned by the people of that state at each general election for Representatives to the Congress held next following the year in which there is commenced each enumeration provided for in Section 2 of Article I. In the case of a bicameral legislature, the members of one house shall be apportioned among the people on the basis of their numbers and the members of the other house may be apportioned among the people on the basis of population, geography, and political subdivisions in order to insure effective representation in the state's legislature of the various groups and interests making up the electorate. In the case of a unicameral legislature, the house may be apportioned among the people on the basis of substantial equality of population with such weight given to geography and political subdivisions as will insure effective representation in the state's legislature of the various groups and interests making up the electorate.

Section 2. A plan of apportionment shall become effective only after it has been submitted to a vote of the people of the state and approved by a majority of those voting on that issue at a statewide election held in accordance with law and the provisions of this Constitution. If submitted by a bicameral legislature the plan of apportionment shall have been approved prior to such election by both houses, one of which shall be apportioned on the basis of substantial equality of population; if otherwise submitted it shall have been found by the courts prior to such election to be consistent with the provisions of this Constitution, including this Article. In addition to any other plans of apportionment which may be submitted at such election, there shall be submitted to a vote of the people an alternative plan of apportionment based solely on substantial equality of population. The plan of apportionment approved by a majority of those voting on that issue shall be promptly placed in effect.

VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 1965

S 1564 -- Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 162) April 9, 1965.

● Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 77-19 roll-call vote May 26. (See p. 1042)

HR 6400 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 439) June 1.

S 1564 -- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House July 9 after HR 6400 was passed by a 333-85 roll call. (See p. 976)

● Conference report (H Rept 711) adopted by a 328-74 roll-call vote of the House Aug. 3 and by a 79-18 roll-call vote of the Senate Aug. 4. (See p. 984, 1063)

PL 89-110 -- Signed into law Aug. 6.

President Johnson Aug. 6 signed into law the most comprehensive voting rights legislation to gain Congressional approval in 95 years.

In a departure from the courtroom remedies of previous legislation, the Administration-backed measure (S 1564 -- PL 89-110) suspended the use of literacy tests or similar voter qualification devices and authorized the appointment of federal voting examiners to order the registration of Negroes in states and counties in which voter activity had fallen below certain specified levels. The legislation brought the federal registration machinery to bear on six Southern states (Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia), Alaska, 28 counties in North Carolina, three counties in Arizona and one county in Idaho.

Impetus for the Act came from a midwinter series of events in Selma, Ala., when state and local election officials interfered with Negro demonstrations against discriminatory voting practices. (See p. 538) On March 17, as events in Selma reached a climax, President Johnson submitted to Congress a far-reaching bill designed to "strike down restrictions to voting in all elections -- federal, state and local -- which have been used to deny Negroes the right to vote." Two days earlier, the President had gone before a special, televised joint session of Congress to urge swift enactment of voting rights legislation.

In broad terms, the 1965 Voting Rights Act suspended literacy tests and gave the Attorney General the power to appoint federal examiners to supervise voter registration in states or political subdivisions where a test or similar qualifying device was in force as of Nov. 1, 1964, and where fewer than 50 percent of voting age residents were registered to vote on that date or actually voted in the 1964 Presidential election.

Other provisions established criminal penalties for interference with voter rights, outlined a judicial recourse for delinquent state and local governments (through a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia which needed to determine that no racial discrimination in registration and voting practices had occurred for five years), and directed the Attorney General "forthwith" to institute proceedings against the use of state and local poll taxes as a qualification for voting. (Poll taxes were banned in federal elections by the 24th Amendment to the Constitution, which was ratified in 1964.)

A bipartisan effort, the bill grew out of conferences between Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), Senate Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.), Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, and Deputy Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

Comparison with Original Bill. As enacted by Congress in August, S 1564 was considerably broader than the original bill. While incorporating the major Administration provision -- the triggering formula for suspension of literacy tests and appointment of examiners in "massive discrimination" areas -- the final bill provided additional machinery for dealing with discriminatory poll taxes, authorized suspension of tests and appointment of examiners by federal courts in voting rights suits initiated by the Attorney General, and waived English language literacy requirements for persons who had completed the sixth grade in a school under the American flag where the language of instruction was other than English.

Key Issues. Congressional sentiment for a strong voting bill was evident from the outset of debate. The only question was the form the bill would take. In the Senate, debate focused on a move by liberals to arm the bill with a flat ban on use of poll taxes as a requirement for voting. In a crucial test May 11, the ban was rejected by a narrow 45-49 roll-call vote, and language similar to the poll tax provision in the final bill was subsequently adopted. With the poll tax issue resolved, the Senate May 25 adopted a debate-limiting cloture motion by a 70-30 roll call, setting the stage for passage the following day. (The vote for cloture was only the second time in history -- but the second time in two years -- that the Senate had voted to close off debate on civil rights legislation. See box p. 551)

In the House, debate centered on an attempt by Republicans to substitute their own bill (HR 7896) for the Administration measure (HR 6400). At one time, the GOP substitute appeared to stand a good chance of adoption, but it lost some GOP support when Southern Democratic opponents of voting rights legislation threw their support to HR 7896 as the less "objectionable" of the two bills. The House then rejected the GOP substitute and approved the Administration bill.

Implementation. Seeking and receiving voluntary compliance with the Act, the Justice Department appointed federal examiners in only 32 Southern counties by year's end. Justice Department officials said that between the signing of the bill and close of the year, local officials had registered approximately 160,000 new Negro voters in the five Deep Southern states covered by the Act -- Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina. Together with 79,593 Negroes listed by federal examiners, Negro registration in these states increased by 40 percent during the first five months of enforcement. (Registration information in other areas covered by the Act was not available.) The Justice Department early in 1966 stepped up appointment of examiners in an attempt to obtain maximum Negro registration by the 1966 party primaries.

Provisions of Voting Rights Act of 1965 (PL 89-110)

Following are the major provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (PL 89-110):

VOTING EXAMINERS

Authorized appointment by the Civil Service Commission of voting "examiners," federal officials who would determine an individual's qualifications to vote and would require enrollment of qualified individuals by state and local officials to vote in all elections: federal, state and local and delegates to party caucuses and state political conventions. Such appointment would be made whenever:

- A federal court, hearing a suit by the Attorney General charging a state or political subdivision with denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color, determined that examiners were needed to ensure voting rights. Authorized the appointment of as many examiners as was deemed necessary either during the course of a suit or as part of a final judgment finding voter discrimination.
- The Attorney General certified to the Commission that he had received meritorious complaints from 20 or more residents of a political subdivision of a state (such as a county, parish or other voting district) that they had been denied the right to vote under color of law on account of race or color, or that he had determined that general discrimination existed. Examiners would be appointed in these cases only if the area qualified statistically and otherwise as one practicing massive discrimination as defined under the triggering formula provided in the bill and had not exempted itself through the Act's provision for judicial relief (see triggering formula and appeal provisions below).

Triggering Formula. Made any state or political subdivision subject to the appointment of federal examiners if: (1) the Attorney General determined that a literacy test or similar device was used as a qualification for voting on Nov. 1, 1964; (2) and the Director of the Census determined that less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age residing in the area were registered to vote on that date or actually voted in the 1964 Presidential election.

Qualifications of Examiners. Authorized appointment of either private citizens or federal officials as examiners. Stipulated that federal officials could be appointed only when the Civil Service Commission consulted with the appropriate department or agency and secured individual consent. Stipulated that private citizens serving as examiners should be appointed, compensated and separated without regard to any civil service law, except the Hatch Act, which prohibits Government employees from engaging in partisan political activity.

Duties. Authorized examiners to interview applicants concerning their qualifications for voting and order appropriate state or local authorities to register all persons they found qualified to vote. Stipulated that the Civil Service Commission, after consultation with the Attorney General, would instruct examiners concerning state laws that would be applicable to the federal registration process. Provided that times, places and procedures for registering and the form for application and removal from eligibility lists would be prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission.

Stipulated that applications to examiners should be in such form as the Civil Service Commission might require and would contain allegations that the applicant was not presently registered to vote. Empowered examiners to administer oaths in processing applicants.

Instructed examiners to certify and transmit lists of qualified voters at least once a month to the offices of the appropriate election officials, with copies to the U.S. Attorney General, and to the attorney general of the state. Directed such election officials to add lists submitted by examiners to their own official rolls. Directed examiners to provide certificates of eligibility to each voter applicant listed.

Stipulated that any voting lists transmitted by examiners should be available for public inspection on the last business day of the month, and in any event, not later than the 45th day prior to any election. Stipulated that no federally processed voter applicant would be entitled to vote in any election by virtue of the Act unless his name was transmitted to appropriate state or local officials before the 45th day prior to such election.

Directed examiners to remove from eligibility lists federally processed applicants whose qualifications had been successfully challenged (see below) or had been determined by examiners to have lost their eligibility to vote under any state voting law still in effect.

Tenure of Examiners. Provided that the appointment of examiners under the automatic triggering formula would be terminated by the Attorney General or a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia, when a state or political subdivision had met certain standards stipulated under the Act's procedures for appeal of federal action (see Appeal Provisions, below).

Stipulated that the appointment of examiners under federal court order would be terminated only upon order of the authorizing court.

LITERACY TESTS

Suspended literacy tests or similar voter qualification devices when the Attorney General and Director of the Census determined that a state or political subdivision came within the scope of the Act's automatic triggering formula (above). Stipulated that such determinations were not reviewable in any court and were effective upon publication in the Federal Register. (Tests and devices would be suspended for applicants approaching state registrars as well as federal examiners.)

Authorized federal courts, hearing voting rights suits brought by the Attorney General, to suspend tests or devices that they found had been used for the purpose or "with the effect" of discriminating.

Defined "test or device" for purposes of the Act as any prerequisite for registration or voting which required a person to: (1) demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter; (2) demonstrate any educational achievement or his knowledge of any particular subject; (3) possess good moral character; or (4) prove his qualifications by the voucher of registered voters or members of any other class.

Provided that no test or device could be suspended if incidents of discrimination had been limited in number and effectively corrected by state and local action, the continuing effect of such incidents had been eliminated and there was no reasonable probability of recurrence.

Stipulated that a person could not be denied the right to vote because of inability to read or write in English if he demonstrated that he had successfully completed the sixth grade (or another grade level equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that was conducted in a language other than English.

APPEAL OF FEDERAL ACTION

Stipulated that any state or political subdivision in which tests or devices were suspended and examiners appointed under the Act's automatic triggering formula could have the tests or devices reinstated and the examiner process terminated by proving in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that no literacy tests or similar device had been used during the preceding five years for the purpose or with the effect of discriminating. Imposed an absolute prohibition against an exemption from the federal registration machinery (suspension of tests and appointment of examiners) for a period of five years after a finding by any federal court that a state or political subdivision had discriminated against voters.

Stipulated that if the Attorney General had no reason to believe that the petitioning state or local government had used its test or device to discriminate against voters, he could consent to the entry of a judgment freeing the petitioner from the bill.

Stipulated that even if the court freed a petitioner of the charge of discrimination, the court would retain jurisdiction for five years and could reopen the case upon the Attorney General's motion that the state or political subdivision had discriminated.

Also provided the following methods by which political subdivisions could free themselves from the appointment of federal examiners (however, these methods did not provide for reinstating suspended voting qualification tests and devices):

- By successfully petitioning the Attorney General that state and local election officials had enrolled all persons listed by federal examiners as qualified to vote and that there was no reasonable cause to believe that the right to vote would be denied or abridged on account of race or color.

- In the case of political subdivisions in which a Census Bureau survey shows that more than 50 percent of nonwhite voting age population residing in the area was registered to vote, by proving in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that the same voting condition existed (all eligible persons enrolled and no further discrimination) as political subdivisions petitioning the Attorney General had to show existed in their areas.

Provided that if the federal registration apparatus had been triggered by the order of a federal court in a case instituted by the Attorney General, the appointment of examiners could be terminated and tests and devices reinstated only upon order of the court.

Provided that no court except the federal district court for the District of Columbia (or a U.S. court of appeals in the case of a challenge to the decision of a hearing officer) could issue restraining orders or temporary or permanent injunctions against execution or enforcement of any provision of the Act, or issue declaratory judgments freeing a petitioning state or local government from the bill's coverage.

PRIOR APPROVAL REQUIREMENTS

Required that new voting laws enacted by state or local governments whose voter qualification laws had been nullified under the bill be approved by the Attorney General or federal courts before they could take effect. In the case of states and political subdivisions in which the automatic triggering formula had been invoked, the affected state or local government would be required to secure the approval of either the Attorney General or a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that the statute did not have the purpose and would not have the effect of discriminating against voters on account of race or color. If the petitioning government chose to submit the new law to the Attorney General and if he objected to it within a 60-day period, the petitioner could still seek the court's approval. In areas to which examiners had been appointed by federal courts in voting rights cases filed by the Attorney General, the petitioning state or local government would be required to secure the approval of either the Attorney General or the authorizing court.

Subpena Power of D.C. Court. Stipulated that in actions brought by state or local governments in the federal district court for the District of Columbia to obtain approval of new voting laws (or to free themselves from the bill's coverage), subpenas could be served in any judicial district of the United States, but not at distances greater than 100 miles from the District of Columbia without permission of the D.C. court, which could be secured only upon proper application and presentation of due cause.

CHALLENGES OF VOTERS

Authorized challenges, before hearing officers appointed by the Civil Service Commission, on the qualifications of any applicant listed by federal voting examiners as eligible to vote. Required that such a challenge be filed at offices designated by the Commission and within 10 days after the listing of the challenged person had been made public. Required that such challenge be decided within 15 days of the date it was filed, but provided that challenged voters could participate in any election held in the interim.

Authorized the Commission to subpena witnesses and documentary evidence and provided enforcement machinery in case subpenas were ignored. Provided that the decision of hearing officers could be appealed in a U.S. court of appeals within 15 days after the decision of the hearing officer was served upon the petitioning party.

Specifically provided that a challenge would not be basis for a prosecution under the Act's provisions authorizing criminal penalties for voter interference.

POLL TAXES

Included a Congressional declaration that the payment of poll taxes as a condition for voting in certain states denied or abridged the right to vote. Directed the Attorney General to institute "forthwith" in the appropriate federal district courts challenges of poll taxes used as a precondition for voting or against any substitute for such taxes, enacted after Nov. 1, 1964. Stipulated that Congress, in directing the Attorney General to proceed against such taxes, was acting under authority of the 14th and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. (The 14th Amendment prohibits deprivation of liberties without due process of law and guarantees equal protection of the law. The 15th Amendment prohibits denial or abridgment of the right to vote on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. Both amendments empower Congress to enforce their provisions by "appropriate legislation.")

Stipulated that during the period in which suits by the Attorney General were pending in the courts and following any decision ruling that a poll tax was constitutional, no citizen of a state or political subdivision in which the federal registration machinery (suspension of tests and/or assignment of examiners) was in effect could be denied the right to vote during the first year of his eligibility if he tendered payment of the tax for the current year to an examiner or appropriate state or local official at least 45 days prior to an election.

Authorized examiners to issue receipts for the payment of poll taxes. (Presentation of such receipts might be necessary to actually obtain the ballot for state and local elections in some states.) Directed examiners to transmit "promptly" all poll tax payments to the appropriate state or local officials together with the name and address of the applicant.

ENFORCEMENT MACHINERY

Authorized the Attorney General, upon notification by examiners that properly registered voters had been turned away from the polls, to seek court orders staying election results until persons entitled to vote had been allowed to do so and their ballots had been tabulated.

Provided penalties of up to $5,000 and/or five years' imprisonment upon conviction of any of the following: (1) intimidation, vote fraud or other interference with voting rights on the part of private citizens or public officials; (2) a refusal by public officials to allow a qualified voter to vote (whether or not he became qualified under the Act); (3) interference on the part of private citizens or public officials with persons aiding or urging others to vote or with persons exercising duties provided by the Act.

Provided penalties of up to $10,000 and/or five years' imprisonment upon conviction of falsifying or conspiring to falsify voting or registration information or buying votes (applicable only to federal elections, the election for the resident commissioner for Puerto Rico and elections in territories or possessions) or for making false or fraudulent statements before a federal examiner or hearing officer (applicable to any election).

Instructed the Attorney General to institute actions for injunctive relief when there were reasonable grounds to believe that any person was about to violate any provision of the Act.

Authorized the Civil Service Commission, at the request of the Attorney General, to appoint poll watchers in political subdivisions to which examiners had been assigned. Stipulated that private citizens, as well as federal officials, could be appointed.

Authorized poll watchers to enter and attend at any place at which voting or tabulation of votes was conducted in order to observe whether all persons qualified to vote were allowed to do so and that their ballots were properly tabulated. Directed such officials to report to the appropriate examiner, to the Attorney General and, if the federal registration machinery was triggered through court action, to the authorizing court.

Stipulated that all criminal contempt cases arising under the Act should be governed by the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1957. (That Act provided that the presiding judge in a voting rights case could decide whether the case would be tried by the court alone or by a jury. However, if he tried the case without a jury, the maximum penalty would be a fine of $300 and a jail term of 45 days; if he imposed a greater penalty, the defendant could demand a retrial with a jury.)

OTHER PROVISIONS

Directed the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense to make a complete study to determine whether state voting laws or practices discriminated against members of the Armed Forces who seek to vote. Required that these Cabinet members make a joint report to Congress, including their findings and recommendations, by June 30, 1966.

Stipulated that if any section of the Act or its application to any person or circumstances was ruled unconstitutional by the courts, the remainder of the Act and the application of its provisions to other persons not coming under the same circumstances would not be affected.

Authorized the appropriation of necessary sums to implement provisions of the Act.

Background

The 15th Amendment to the Constitution, the basis for the 1965 legislation, became effective in 1870. It provided that neither the Federal Government nor any state could deny the right to vote because of race, color or previous condition of servitude. In May of that year, Congress enacted a comprehensive piece of legislation to enforce the right to vote. This law repeated the essence of the Amendment, provided criminal penalties for state officials who failed to provide all citizens with equal opportunity to qualify to vote and punished violence, intimidation and conspiracies to interfere with registration or voting. In February 1871, Congress enacted a second statute authorizing federal supervisors of elections. Their duties included inspection of registration books and registration, poll watching on election day, counting ballots and certifying election results. However, enforcement of these statutes proved ineffective and they were largely repealed by 1894.

Civil Rights Acts passed by Congress in 1957, 1960, and 1964 provided Negroes with legal means to obtain the ballot for federal elections when confronted by discriminatory registration or voting practices. Another hurdle to the ballot for Negroes was removed in 1964 when the 24th Amendment, outlawing the use of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in federal elections, was finally ratified and became part of the Constitution. Following enactment of each measure, however, civil rights groups contended that further legislation was necessary to widen the scope of the laws to include state and local elections and to speed up the pace of litigation in voting rights suits.

1957 Civil Rights Act. The 1957 Act affirmed the right of a citizen to go to court for injunctions to protect his voting rights and empowered the Federal Government, through the Attorney General, to seek injunctions against obstruction or deprivation of those rights. The Act also created a federal Civil Rights Commission with subpena powers to investigate and report to the President and Congress on the violation of voting rights and established a new Civil Rights Division in the Justice Department. (1957 Almanac p. 553)

In its 1959 report, the Civil Rights Commission found that "substantial numbers of citizens qualified to vote under state registration and election laws are being denied the right to register," and "existing remedies...are insufficient to secure and protect the right to vote of such citizens." The Commission recommended that "some method...be found by which a federal officer is empowered to register voters for federal elections who are qualified under state registration laws but are otherwise unable to register." (1959 Almanac p. 293)

Later reports of the Commission in 1961 and 1963 also called for stiffer measures to eliminate voter discrimination. (1961 Almanac p. 394; 1963 Almanac p. 363)

1960 Act. The 1960 Civil Rights Act authorized the Attorney General, after winning a civil suit brought under the 1957 Act, to ask the court to hold another adversary proceeding and make a separate finding that there was a "pattern or practice" of depriving Negroes of the right to vote in the area involved in the suit. The court could then, on application from any Negro proving discrimination, issue an order that he was qualified to vote. In its most crucial provision, the 1960 Act authorized the courts to appoint referees to help Negroes register and vote, in order to insure implementation of these provisions. (1960 Almanac p. 185)

1962 Action. The Kennedy Administration in 1962 supported two proposals in the voting rights field -- a constitutional amendment outlawing the poll tax as a voting requirement in federal elections and primaries and a measure to make anyone with a sixth-grade education eligible to pass a literacy test for voting in federal elections. The poll tax amendment received Congressional approval and finally became the 24th Amendment when ratification of the required 38 states was completed in 1964. (Its only real effect was in the five states which still had a poll tax -- Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.) The literacy test bill, however, died in a 1962 Senate filibuster, with liberal civil rights forces variously laying the blame on the conservative Southern Democratic-Republican coalition, indifference of civil rights organizations, and lack of aggressive leadership by the Administration. (1962 Almanac p. 371, 404; 1964 Almanac p. 381)

NOTE: The Civil Rights Commission March 19, 1965, issued a similar report which showed rapid increases in Negro voter registration in states not covered by the Administration bill. The increases since 1956 were as follows: Tennessee from 29 to 69 percent; Florida from 32 to 63.7 percent; Texas from 37 to 57.7 percent, Arkansas from 36 to 49.3 percent. Registration in Virginia, which was covered by the bill, rose from 19 to 45.7 percent. Increases were not appreciable in other states covered by the bill.

1963 and 1964 Action. In his first Civil Rights Message of 1963, President Kennedy Feb. 28 called for expanded voting rights measures to correct the "two major defects" of the 1957 and 1960 Civil Rights Acts --"the usual long and difficult delay which occurs between the filing of the suit and the judgment of the court...(and) failure to deal specifically with...abuse of discretion on the part of local election officials who do not treat all applicants uniformly." Mr. Kennedy proposed the following remedies to voter registration practices: (1) Prohibit for federal elections all oral literacy tests, unequal application of voting registration requirements, and denial of the right to vote because of errors or omissions on records or applications if these were not material in determining whether a person was qualified to vote; (2) Where literacy tests were given, require the presumption of literacy for anyone with a sixth grade education in a public school or accredited private school where the instruction was primarily in English; (3) In areas where less than 15 percent of the Negroes were registered and a voting suit was pending in the courts, permit court-appointed referees to register Negroes who were qualified under state law; (4) Provide for preferential and expedited treatment of voting rights suits in federal courts.

President Kennedy June 19, 1963, called for a broadened civil rights bill in his second Civil Rights Message, but the voting rights proposals remained the same.

The bipartisan version of the civil rights bill (HR 7152) reported by the House Judiciary Committee Nov. 20, 1963, eliminated the temporary voting registrar formula in favor of special three-judge federal courts which would hear voting rights suits if requested by the Attorney General. (Three-judge court decisions are immediately appealable to the Supreme Court, bypassing the circuit court stage.) The other Kennedy proposals were retained in the reported form of the bill. (1963 Almanac p. 334)

The 1964 Civil Rights Act, signed into law by President Johnson July 2, included all the voting rights provisions of HR 7152. (1964 Almanac. p. 338)

By mid-March 1965, the Justice Department had pressed 70 voting rights suits under civil rights legislation. As a result, thousands of Negroes had gained the ballot. Civil rights forces, however, continued to register their long-standing complaints that the judicial processes for attaining the intent of the legislation had moved too slowly and that voting rights laws should be expanded to include state and local elections.

Selma Campaign

The 1964 Civil Rights Act was intended by its proponents to take the civil rights struggle "out of the streets and into the courts." In many respects -- notably public accommodations -- these intended results were accomplished with speed. However, in several states the Negro was still denied the right to vote, either by strict requirements set by local officials, through administration of a stiff literacy test, or -- if he appealed to a court -- through unfavorable court action or through litigation periods so slow that in effect he was denied his vote in the election in question.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, decided to take the voting rights movement back into the streets in Selma, Ala., beginning Jan. 18 to "dramatize" to the nation the existing bars to Negro voting in many Southern states. Through the Selma campaign, King and other civil rights leaders hoped to arouse the nation's conscience by pointing out these difficulties. A similar drive begun in Birmingham in 1963 led eventually to enactment of the 1964 Civil Rights Act through a gradual buildup of pressures on the President and Congress to take action.

King chose Selma for a number of reasons. By law, registration took place only two days a month in Dallas County, of which Selma was the county seat. The actual registration process was lengthy because of the detailed requirements involved. An applicant had to fill in more than 50 blanks, write from dictation a part of the Constitution, answer four questions on the governmental process, read four passages from the Constitution and answer four questions on the passages, and sign an oath of loyalty to the United States and to Alabama. Negro registration in Dallas County had lagged substantially behind white registration. Figures from the 1960 census showed that Dallas County was 57.6 percent Negro. Its voting-age population was 29,515 -- 14,400 whites and 15,115 Negroes. Yet when the Selma campaign began Jan. 18, of those 9,877 who were registered to vote, 9,542 were white and 335 were Negro. Between May 1962 and August 1964, only 93 of the 795 Negroes who applied to register were enrolled, while 945 of the 1,232 whites who applied were enrolled.

On April 13, 1961, the Justice Department had filed a suit to enjoin the Dallas County registrars from discriminating against Negro applicants. A Federal District Court Nov. 1, 1963, issued a permanent injunction against discrimination. In response to a motion for supplementary relief, stating that discrimination still prevailed, Federal District Judge Daniel H. Thomas Feb. 4, 1965, ordered the Board of Registrars to speed its voter registration processes, adding that if all those eligible and desiring to vote were not enrolled by July 1, he would appoint a voting referee under terms of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The civil rights leaders, dismayed by the results of previous court orders, continued to protest in the streets and in the courts. Negroes were joined by whites from all parts of the country. Clergymen of all faiths traveled to Selma to participate in the drive. The professed goal continued to be an agreement by the Board of Registrars to remain open every day until all Negroes who wished to vote were registered. However, a larger goal -- to arouse public sentiment in favor of a new voter rights law -- was also being effectively achieved. King made no secret of his hopes for the movement. He said Feb. 5, "We plan to triple the number of registered Negro voters in Alabama for the 1966 Congressional elections, when we plan to purge Alabama of all Congressmen who have stood in the way of Negroes." He added that "a state that denies people education cannot demand literacy tests as a qualification for voting."

Although the peaceful marches, by their size and frequency, attracted public attention, it was three violent actions which most aroused public sentiment. A 26-year-old Selma Negro, Jimmie Lee Jackson, who said he was shot in the stomach and clubbed by Alabama state troopers Feb. 18, died Feb. 26. A white Unitarian minister from Boston, Rev. James J. Reeb, 38, died March 11 of skull fractures inflicted when he was clubbed on the head by white men March 9 in Selma. And Alabama state troopers March 7, acting on orders from Gov. George C. Wallace (D), used tear gas, night sticks and whips to halt a march from Selma to Montgomery, the state capital, severely injuring about 40 marchers. Attorneys for civil rights groups immediately filed petitions with the U.S. District Court in Montgomery for a temporary restraining order against Wallace and the state troopers. On March 16, Negro leaders presented to the court a detailed plan for the proposed march. On March 17, Judge Frank M. Johnson issued the injunction requested by the Negro leaders. At the same time he denied a Justice Department request for an order to prohibit interference with civil rights demonstrations in addition to the march from Selma to Montgomery, and he denied a petition from Gov. Wallace for an injunction forbidding the march. In a strongly worded opinion accompanying the injunction, Judge Johnson said, "It seems basic to our constitutional principles that the extent of the right to assemble, demonstrate and march peaceably along the highways and streets in an orderly manner should be commensurate with the enormity of wrongs that are being protested and petitioned against. In this case the wrongs are enormous." Admitting that the order was going to the "outer limits" of what the Constitution allowed in peaceful assembly, the Judge added that "the wrongs and injustices inflicted upon these plaintiffs... have clearly exceeded...the outer limits of what is constitutionally permissible."

In addition to sympathy marches, demonstrations and sit-ins in every part of the country, there were calls for federal action from many groups and individuals. Republicans and Northern Democrats in both houses of Congress urged strong voting rights legislation. The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People March 8 called on the President to send troops to Selma to guard against recurrences of brutality against the marchers by state troopers. Several clergymen criticized the President for avoiding federal intervention to assure Negro voting rights as well as freedom from police brutality. The United Steel-

States Requiring Literacy Tests or Similar Devices

The 1965 Voting Rights Act provided for suspension of literacy tests or similar devices used to test voter qualification in affected areas if they required that the prospective voter:

(1) Demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand or interpret any matter, or
(2) Demonstrate educational achievement or knowledge on any subject, or
(3) Possess good moral character, or
(4) Prove his qualifications by the voucher of registered voters or members of any other class.

A Justice Department survey determined that the following states had such tests or devices as of Nov. 1, 1964:

* Alabama. Devices embodying all the voting criteria that would be suspended by the bill upon appointment of federal examiners. Applicants must be able to "read and write any article of the Constitution of the United States in the English language" and must possess "good character." A test devised by the State Supreme Court -- and challenged by the Justice Department -- contained understanding, interpretation, knowledge and voucher requirements.

* Alaska. The "ability to speak or read English unless prevented by physical disability," or proof of having voted in the general election of Nov. 4, 1924.

Arizona, California, Maine and Massachusetts. Ability to write one's name and read in English the U.S. Constitution. (In most cases Arizonans are required only to attest that they can read the Constitution. If the registrar is in doubt, the applicant then may be asked to read from other printed papers.)

Connecticut. Ability to read in English any part of the state constitution or statutes and "good moral character."

Delaware. Ability to read the state constitution and write one's name.

* Georgia. All but the voucher test. The applicant is required to read aloud from either the federal or state constitution and either write English, or demonstrate "good character and his understanding of the duties and obligations of citizenship." If he chooses the latter course, he is presented a standard list of questions on government.

Hawaii. Ability to "speak, read and write the English or Hawaiian language."

Idaho. A moral character test. Persons barred from voting include prostitutes, those who keep, live in, frequent, or "habitually resort to any house of prostitution or of ill fame," homosexuals of either sex, and persons who belong to organizations that advocate or aid persons in bigamy or polygamy.

* Louisiana. All the devices in the bill. An applicant must prove his ability to read and write, show good moral character, "understand the duties and obligations of citizens under a republican form of government," understand and interpret any section of the federal or state constitutions, and present two voters of his precinct to vouch for him.

* Mississippi. All devices but the voucher requirement. An applicant must prove his ability "to read and write any section of the constitution of this state and give a reasonable interpretation thereof to the county registrar...(and) a reasonable understanding of the duties and obligations of citizenship under a constitutional form of government." He must also show good moral character.

New Hampshire. Ability to "write and to read in such a manner as to show that he is not being assisted in so doing and is not reciting from memory."

New York and Oregon. The ability, except in the case of physical disability, to read and write the English language.

North Carolina. Ability to read and write in English any section of the Constitution.

* South Carolina. Ability to read and write any section of the state constitution or, proof of payment of all taxes due for the previous year on property assessed at $300 or more.

* Virginia. Application in one's own handwriting, "without aids, suggestions, or memorandum."

Washington. Ability "to read and speak the English language so as to comprehend the meaning of ordinary English prose."

Wyoming. Ability to read the state constitution.

* Indicates state literacy tests suspended under the Voting Rights Act. In addition, tests were suspended in 28 North Carolina counties, three Arizona counties and one Idaho county.

workers Union March 12 sent telegrams to Gov. Wallace asking him to protect the rights of all Alabamans and to President Johnson urging him to take all steps necessary to protect lives in Alabama. In front of the White House in Washington, pickets maintained a round-the-clock vigil. There were sit-ins at the Capitol, in the White House and during rush hour across Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House, as well as demonstrations at the Justice Department. It was against this backdrop that the Administration submitted to Congress its voting rights proposals.

PRESIDENT'S REQUESTS

In a televised address before an extraordinary joint session of Congress, President Johnson March 15 called for rapid enactment of strong voting rights legislation to "strike down restrictions to voting in all elections -- federal, state and local -- which have been used to deny Negroes the right to vote." The President declared that "...the time for waiting is gone...outside this chamber is the outraged conscience of a nation -- the grave concern of many nations -- and the harsh judgment of history on our acts." (For text, see p. 1365)

The Administration bill, submitted March 17, was accompanied by a letter from the President, noting that the legislation would "help rid the nation of racial discrimination in every aspect of the electoral process and thereby insure the right of all to vote." (For text, see p. 1367)

Basis and Scope. The Administration proposal was based on the 15th Amendment to the Constitution, which provided that no person shall be denied the right to vote "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude" and gave Congress the power to enforce its terms by "appropriate legislation."

In subsequent action on the measure, Congress retained and, in some cases, broadened the major Administration proposals.

Following are the major provisions of the original Administration voting rights bill and action taken on them by Congress:

Federal Registration Machinery. The key provision of the Administration bill was a voter registration process which called for the suspension of literacy tests or similar voter qualification devices and, in certain cases, the appointment of federal voting examiners to supervise the voter registration process in states and political subdivisions which failed to attain certain levels of voter activity. States and political subdivisions falling short of the bill's standards would be those in which literacy tests or similar devices were used as a qualification for voting on Nov. 1, 1964, and where the Director of the Census determined that less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age residing in the area were registered to vote on that date or actually voted in the 1964 Presidential election. If one condition but not the other existed in an area in November of 1964, the bill would not apply.

Federal examiners would be assigned when the Attorney General certified to the Civil Service Commission that discrimination against voters existed in a particular area to which the bill was applicable and that corrective federal action was necessary. The Attorney General would either make the certification on his own initiative or after receiving and deeming legitimate 20 or more written complaints from residents of an applicable area who claimed that they had been denied the right to vote on the grounds of race or color. The Civil Service Commission then would appoint as many federal examiners as were considered necessary to supervise voting registration in the political subdivision in which discrimination occurred.

This section of the bill, known as the "massive discrimination" trigger, was retained by Congress in the final version of S 1564.

Role of Examiners. Federal examiners were authorized to interview applicants concerning their qualifications for voting and order appropriate state or local authorities to register all persons they found qualified to vote. The Civil Service Commission, after consultation with the Attorney General, would instruct examiners concerning state laws that would be applicable to the federal registration process.

If state or local officials denied a federally processed applicant the right to vote, the Justice Department could go into a federal court and get an order impounding the ballots until persons entitled to vote had been allowed to do so and their ballots had been counted. These provisions were retained in the final bill.

Prior Approval Provisions. Before a state or local government whose voter-qualification law was nullified by the bill could enforce any new law, that government had to obtain prior approval in a three-judge court in the District of Columbia, with the right of direct appeal to the Supreme Court. Federal judges outside the District of Columbia thus were prohibited from hearing such cases. When asked during hearings March 18 before the House Judiciary Committee whether the intent of that provision was to exclude Southern judges from hearing such cases, Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach replied that the provision was added in order to simplify implementation of the Act. Katzenbach said otherwise three judicial circuits would be handling cases arising from the bill, and would establish different procedures in their adjudication. The final bill retained the Administration's prior approval provision but added language authorizing petitioning states or political subdivisions to secure approval of either the Attorney General or the D.C. court.

Appeal of Federal Action. A state or political subdivision in which the bill had been invoked would have judicial recourse. Such a state or political subdivision would be permitted to file suit in a three-judge federal court in the District of Columbia to the effect that there had been no discrimination against voters on the basis of race or color for a ten-year period preceding the filing of the suit. If such a case were successful, the Act would become inapplicable in the area represented by the petitioner. However, the Act could not be declared inapplicable in the case of any state in which a U.S. court had found voting discrimination in the preceding 10 years. Administration officials pointed out that past court judgments finding voter discrimination in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi cases ensured that the laws of those states could not be exempted for at least ten years. Judgments in suits regarding Georgia counties ensured that Georgia could not be exempted under the provisions of the bill for at least five years. Only Virginia and South Carolina, of the states covered by the bill, could technically seek exemption. The Government was prepared to introduce evidence that discrimination had in fact occurred in those states.

These provisions were modified in the final version to prevent the termination of the bill's applicability for five years following a finding of discrimination.

Penalties for Interference. Intimidation, vote fraud, or other interference with rights ensured by the bill would carry upon conviction a maximum fine of $5,000, maximum imprisonment of five years or both. Retained and broadened in final bill.

Poll Taxes. The bill did not go so far as to ban poll taxes in state and local elections. It provided, however, that no voter applicant could be denied the ballot for failure to pay a poll tax if he tendered payment to an examiner during the year of the election in which he wished to vote. The examiner was authorized to collect the tax and pass it on to state or local officials. An Administration spokesman said the poll tax provision of the bill would assuage situations in which such levies had to be paid as much as 19 months before an election. A similar provision was adopted as part of a much broader final poll tax section. (See p. 535)

BILLS INTRODUCED

The Administration proposals were introduced in the House March 17 (HR 6400) by Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and in the Senate the following day (S 1564) by 66 co-sponsors.

Douglas Bill. An alternative voting rights bill (S 1517) was introduced in the Senate by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and nine other sponsors. The bipartisan measure differed from the Administration bill in banning poll taxes and providing that the federal registration machinery could also be triggered in areas, with or without a literacy test, where less than 25 percent of voting-age Negroes (instead of less than 50 percent of the total voting-age population) were registered in 1964.

McCulloch Bill. Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), ranking minority member of the House Judiciary Committee, April 5 introduced a voting rights bill (HR 7112) backed by House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.), who had called for improvement of the Administration bill drafted in cooperation with Senate Minority Leader Dirksen. The House leadership bill:

Authorized appointment of a federal voting examiner within a district whenever the Attorney General received and considered meritorious 25 or more complaints from district residents alleging discrimination against race or color in registering or voting. If the examiner found that 25 or more had been denied the right to register or vote, he would register them.

Authorized examiners to consider a sixth-grade education evidence of literacy, and in other cases to administer state literacy tests, provided the tests were fair and non-discriminatory.

Permitted actions of a federal examiner to be challenged within ten days before a federal hearing officer appointed by the Civil Service Commission. The hearing officer would have ten days to render a decision.

When a hearing officer had determined that 25 or more persons in a voting district had been denied the right to vote because of race or color, a pattern or practice of discrimination would be established. The Civil Service Commission could then appoint as many additional examiners and hearing officers as necessary to register all other persons within the county who might be subject to discrimination. The decision of a hearing officer could be appealed in the local federal court of appeals, but the motion would have to be filed within 15 days of the hearing officer's decision.

Authorized registrants in a voting district in which a pattern of discrimination had been established to bypass local registrars if they had reason to believe they would be subject to coercion and intimidation. Officials acting under color of law to coerce and intimidate qualified voters would be subject to fines up to $5,000, imprisonment up to five years, or both.

Senate

Acting on the request of President Johnson for rapid action, the Senate bipartisan leadership March 18 moved that the Senate send the bill (S 1564) to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report the measure no later than April 9. The motion was adopted March 18 by a 67-13 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 1032)

The leadership's tactic was employed because the Committee, under Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.), had never willingly reported a civil rights bill. The Civil Rights Act of 1960 was reported from the Committee on the instructions of the Senate; the Senate voted to bypass the Committee altogether in considering the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1964 and the 1962 constitutional amendment barring payment of a poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections and primaries.

DEBATE -- Eastland said it was "an unheard of thing" to give his Committee only 15 days to study "a bill as far-reaching as this."

Strom Thurmond (R S.C.), Spessard Holland (D Fla.), Lister Hill (D Ala.) and John Stennis (D Miss.) attacked the Administration measure and said it should be studied more thoroughly in committee.

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), one of the principal sponsors of S 1564, said that 15 working days to clear the measure was time enough after 95 years of "trying to catch up with the 15th Amendment."

Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (D La.) said more than two weeks of committee study was necessary to ensure "a bill that would be more reasonable and more just, a bill that would seek to strike at discrimination where it exists, and not seek to punish or impose additional power in areas where no discrimination exists."

HEARINGS

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 23 - April 5 on the bipartisan-backed Administration voting rights bill (S 1564) and on S 1517, a second bipartisan measure.

TESTIMONY -- March 23 -- In a three-hour dialogue with Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), a member of the Committee, contended that sections of the Administration bill were unconstitutional or otherwise unfair:

- Ervin said the provision that areas affected by the measure would have to prove in court that "neither the petitioner nor any person acting under color of law" had discriminated against voters in the previous ten years was "too harsh." He pointed out that an entire state or subdivision might be penalized for the acts of a single person. The Attorney General agreed that the language of the bill might be changed to eliminate the chance that "one isolated instance of discrimination" would trigger the entire act.
- Ervin said the bill was an unconstitutional ex post facto law which presumed "rascality" on the part of local voting registrars. The effect of the measure, he said, would be to "punish" states and local governments for acts committed before the pending measure became law. He also said certain states would be judged guilty by the bill while others would be arbitrarily acquitted. Katzenbach answered that since infringements of Negro rights had been illegal for almost a century, areas to which the bill was applicable could be held accountable

Voting Bill Criticized for a Variety of Reasons

A variety of criticisms, from civil rights advocates as well as constitutional authorities and opponents of civil rights legislation, were made as Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate studied the Administration voting rights proposal.

Objections to the bill fell into the broad categories of constitutional questions, inadequacies of coverage, and practical problems posed by the measure. Virtually no one was prepared to accept the Administration bill as drafted.

Following is a summary of major objections to the measure, together with Administration rebuttals.

CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIONS

1. Contention: Congress has no constitutional power to abolish state prerogatives to set voter qualifications. A number of constitutional authorities, many of whom supported voting rights legislation, contended that the federal registration machinery provided by the bill would violate Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution, which provides that "electors (voters) in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature." (When the federal registration apparatus provided in the Administration bill was invoked, it would annul all state voting qualifications other than those pertaining to age, length of residence, conviction of a felony without subsequent pardon, and mental incompetence.) (For testimony, see p. 543)

Dr. Robert G. Dixon Jr., professor of constitutional law at the George Washington University Law School, told CQ March 30 that "there is a critical and indeed tragic problem of Negro voter discrimination in the South. A strong and broad federal law is needed and should reach discrimination wherever practiced. However, it should be directed squarely to the discriminatory application of literacy tests -- many of which are themselves concededly valid and have been upheld by the Supreme Court."

Administration Position. The 15th Amendment outlawing discrimination in voting, supersedes Article 1 of the Constitution with regard to state-enacted voter qualification laws when those laws violated the 15th Amendment. (See testimony p. 543)

2. Contention: The Administration bill is an unconstitutional ex post facto law and bill of attainder which "punished" states and localities for acts committed before the pending legislation became law. (See p. 541)

Administration Position. Rather than a form of "punishment," the federal registration apparatus was merely an effort to implement the 15th Amendment by establishing a formula for redressing instances of "massive discrimination." During hearings before committees of both chambers, Attorney General Nicholas de B. Katzenbach said that because infringement of Negro rights had been illegal for almost a century, areas to which the bill was applicable could be held accountable for the previous ten years.

INADEQUACIES

1. Contention: The triggering device set up by the bill would not reach "pockets of discrimination" in a number of states. (See p. 543, 557)

Administration Position. The Administration bill was aimed only at areas of "hardcore" discrimination. After enactment, Katzenbach maintained, the machinery provided by previous civil rights legislation could deal effectively with pocket discrimination because a task force of Justice Department attorneys would be freed from present cases in hardcore areas.

2. Contention: A comprehensive voting rights measure should eliminate the use of poll taxes altogether. Civil rights leaders and supporters of the bipartisan Senate bill (S 1517) contended in hearings that the poll tax was still a major obstruction to Negro registration in the Southern states in which the tax was still levied for state and local elections.

Administration Position. The 15th Amendment basis of the proposed act probably would not support a clause to outlaw poll taxes. For such a provision to stand up in court it would have to be proven that the tax had been used to discriminate against voters in violation of the 15th Amendment. (See p. 543)

3. Contention. The bill's requirement that Negro voters must first approach state or local registrars before they might obtain federal assistance could subject them to intimidation. During Congressional hearings, civil rights advocates were insistent that Negro voter registrants either be able to avoid state registrars or receive on-the-spot protection from intimidation under the bill.

Administration Position. Under terms of the bill, the Attorney General could waive the provision for attempted state registration in areas where Negroes were subjected to intimidation, long delays, or odd hours at which they must register.

PRACTICAL OBJECTIONS

1. Contention: It is unjust and pointless to require that states and localities seeking relief from the federal registration apparatus must come to a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia rather than similar federal courts in their own areas. (See p. 543)

Administration Position. It had been necessary to establish a single district for adjudicating such cases so that procedural complications would not arise. (See p. 543)

2. Contention: The bill's arbitrary formula brings under coverage a number of areas that have not discriminated against voters. Spokesmen for groups representing a wide divergence of political persuasions asserted during hearings that it was an over-sight of the bill to establish a formula that would include the state of Alaska and other localities which they said had obviously not been guilty of voter discrimination. The Justice Department had conceded that those areas were "special cases" and would probably be exempted from the measure.

for infringements of the previous ten years. He said the federal voter registration mechanism was not a form of "punishment" but only an effort to implement the 15th Amendment by establishing a formula for redressing instances of "massive discrimination."

● States and localities in which the bill is invoked should be able to seek recourse in nearby federal courts, Ervin said, rather than being required to bring their cases to the District of Columbia. He said he recognized certain advantages in requiring a three-judge federal court but asked why such panels could not be convened in various Southern cities. The Attorney General replied that the intent of the provision was to avoid procedural complications by bringing all the cases into one district. He said the choice of the "seat of government" for the court "seemed like a good way of doing it." Regarding Ervin's complaint that witnesses in some instances might have to travel "a thousand miles" to Washington, Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), a member of the Committee, interjected that it was often "easier for states to come to Washington than for some voters to walk a block down to their courthouse."

March 24 -- Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), a member of the Committee, called for a strengthening of the proposed Administration bill to include provisions abolishing all poll taxes and providing an additional triggering device that would ensure a wider application of the bill. The additional triggering mechanism, embodied in S 1517, of which Javits was a co-sponsor, would invoke the federal registration machinery in an area where less than 25 percent of Negro voting-age population, based on Civil Rights Commission figures, was registered or voted in the 1964 general election.

Attorney General Katzenbach said that he agreed with the intent of both suggestions; however, he added that it was uncertain whether either proposal could survive a legal challenge. If the poll tax were abolished under the 15th Amendment, Katzenbach said, it would have to be proved that the use of the tax was discriminatory. Such proof would be difficult to make, he said, because a number of Southern states used devices more effective than the poll tax to discriminate against Negro voters. Rather than add additional poll tax provisions to S 1564, the Attorney General suggested that a separate statute be adopted to eliminate the tax as a violation of the 14th Amendment. Turning to the 25 percent triggering mechanism Javits had proposed, Katzenbach said that the Administration had considered that approach but had rejected it because "we did not consider the (Civil Rights Commission) figures accurate.... We feared the figures might be litigated."

Resuming his attack of the day before, Senator Ervin contended that the Administration bill's provisions to strike down certain voter qualifications in states covered by the measure were unconstitutional. Pointing out that the Constitution empowered the states to fix voter qualifications, Ervin argued that Congress had no power to annul those provisions. Katzenbach retorted that he had "judicial support" in past court decisions to uphold his position that the 15th Amendment superseded Article 1, Section 2, which gives states the power to set their own voter qualifications. "Let me be crystal clear," Katzenbach said. "I have no desire to alter the Constitution. I have only a desire to enforce its provisions."

DIRKSEN TESTIMONY

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), another member of the Committee, said he would offer an amendment to reduce the requirement that a state or political subdivision must have a ten-year record of non-discrimination before coverage of the proposed law would lapse. Dirksen said the requirement should be set up on a "carrots and stick basis -- that there be some inducement" for compliance. Katzenbach countered that 10 years was "eminently reasonable." The Attorney General added: "Forty years is unreasonable, and I'd say somewhere between 10 and 40 years the law would be upheld." Something must be done, he said, if "past practices are to be cured -- not punished." Katzenbach, however, said that he was willing to amend the measure in order to clarify that areas covered by the bill would be able to free themselves of the federal registration machinery after 10 "clean" years, regardless of the date the bill took effect. The Attorney General explained that if a state had not discriminated for nine and one-half years before the bill's enactment date, it would be free of the law's provisions six months after enactment.

Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.) proposed that the lending of money to pay a poll tax be made a criminal violation. Eastland contended that large organizations such as the AFL-CIO spent thousands of dollars to cover the taxes. Katzenbach answered that the proposed legislation was not in any broad measure concerned with the poll tax.

March 25 -- Eastland contended that the Administration bill had been shaped so that the President's home state of Texas would not be brought under its terms. Katzenbach assured Eastland that specific exemption of Texas was not the intent of those who drafted the bill.

Eastland further contended that the measure would provide heavier criminal penalties for violation of the proposed law in several states than are provided for the same crime in other states. Dirksen replied that the criminal penalties of the bill would apply equally to all 50 states since the measure reiterated the 15th Amendment requirement that no voting qualification or procedure be imposed to deny or abridge the right to vote on account of race or color.

Katzenbach said that President Johnson was "terribly interested" in lowering the voting age to 18 and also wanted to eliminate the poll tax altogether. Katzenbach said he had advised the President, however, that both changes would require a constitutional amendment.

March 29 -- Charles J. Bloch of Macon, Ga., a former president of the Georgia Bar Association, contended that there were already sufficient laws on the books to deal with voter discrimination. Bloch also said the Administration bill was unconstitutional because Congress had no power to "presume" the guilt of the states covered by the bill by applying an "arbitrary percentage" to an "arbitrary past date."

March 30 -- Leander H. Perez, of Plaquemines Parish, La., contended that the Administration bill was a "hand-in-glove" part of a Communist conspiracy to control the Deep South by setting up "Negro rule." Dirksen retorted that the contention was "a reflection on the Senators and lawyers who participated" in drafting the measure. Dirksen added that Perez' charge had been "about as stupid as anything I ever heard." Perez replied that he considered the persons who had participated in the drafting of the bill "good American citizens" and that he hoped his remarks would not be taken as personal.

Perez told the Committee that he was representing Louisiana Gov. John J. McKeithen. However, McKeithen told the press that he had authorized Perez only to present his position that voter qualifications be left to the states.

March 31 -- A. Ross Eckler, acting director of the Census Bureau, said he did not consider it necessary for the Census to compile voter registration figures to determine whether a state or locality should come under the Administration bill. Eckler said that voting figures gave "completely responsible answers" to which areas should be covered by the measure.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), a member of the Committee, asked Eckler if this meant that a state could register 100 percent of eligible voters and still be covered by the bill if less than 50 percent voted in 1964. Eckler replied, "That's my interpretation."

Civil Service Commissioner John W. Macy Jr. said that he estimated only "about 100" federal voting examiners would be appointed under the proposed legislation. Macy said the examiners would have to be people of "maturity, unquestioned impartiality and integrity." The Commissioner said that local residents would be used wherever feasible and added that he hoped federal employees could be appointed for short-term tenures.

Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.) asked if Macy would appoint examiners from the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, which Eastland charged was Communist-influenced. Macy replied that examiners would not be subjected to "political tests" and that only "loyal qualified American citizens" would be appointed.

April 1 -- Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) called the Administration measure "hasty, stringent, and ill-advised legislation," which "carries with it more fundamental harm to our form of government than the little good that might be accomplished in the long run by its enforcement." Sparkman said he thought existing law could be broadly applied to deal effectively with voter discrimination.

April 5 -- Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) proposed an amendment to the Administration bill to provide federal penalties for fraudulent registration or voting. Williams said that while he strongly favored equal voting rights for all, he felt "just as strongly that this guarantee is meaningless if that vote is not counted properly, or if that vote is effectively cancelled by a vote that is illegally cast, or if another person illegally registers to vote."

ADMINISTRATION-DIRKSEN AMENDMENTS

The Administration, in consultation with the Senate Republican leadership, April 5 agreed to additional provisions suggested by critics of the bill. (See box, p. 542) These amendments:

- Authorized federal courts, in suits brought by the Attorney General, to order the appointment of federal voting examiners if needed to enforce the 15th Amendment and to suspend literacy tests and other devices used to discriminate against voters.
- Exempted from the bill's triggering mechanism a state or political subdivision where less than 20 percent of the voting-age public was non-white.
- Permitted federal courts, on suits filed by the Attorney General, to suspend indefinitely any state poll tax they determined had been used to discriminate against voters. (Non-discriminatory poll taxes would remain in force.)

These amendments were embodied in a substitute for the original Administration bill. Although a new text was submitted for consideration by the Judiciary Committee, the number of the bill, S 1564, remained unchanged.

BILL APPROVED

The Judiciary Committee April 9 reported a voting rights bill (S 1564 -- S Rept 162) substantially stronger than the one submitted by the Administration. The bill was ordered reported by a 12-4 vote. Voting against approval were four Southern Democrats: Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (Miss.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.), John L. McClellan (Ark.), and Olin D. Johnston (S.C.), who was absent but requested that he be recorded in opposition to the measure.

The major change approved by the Committee was the addition of a ban on the use of poll taxes in state and local elections. Other key amendments:

- Added a second "automatic" trigger which would provide for appointment of voting examiners to states and political subdivisions in which fewer than 25 percent of the voting-age persons of Negro race or any other race or color were registered to vote. (This was intended to cover areas where no discriminatory tests were used.)
- Authorized the use of poll watchers to observe election procedures in states and localities to which examiners had been assigned.
- Authorized examiners to order registration of applicants without requiring them to show they first had been turned down by local registrars within the past 90 days.
- Made private citizens, as well as public officials, criminally liable for interfering with voter rights.

These amendments were proposed by a nine-man liberal group on the Committee: Sens. Hart (D Mich.), Long (D Mo.), Kennedy (D Mass.), Bayh (D Ind.), Burdick (D N.D.), Tydings (D Md.), Fong (R Hawaii), Scott (R Pa.), and Javits (R N.Y.).

Two limitations, sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Dirksen, were written into the bill. These amendments provided:

- A reduction from 10 to 5 years in the period it would take a state or political subdivision to purge itself of a finding of discrimination.
- An "escape" provision for states and political subdivisions which could prove in court that their percentage of voting-age population voting in the most recent Presidential election exceeded the national average or that at least 60 percent of their voting age residents were registered to vote, in addition to proving that they had not discriminated.

The Committee, which had been under instructions from the Senate to report a voting bill by midnight April 9, completed action on the measure only minutes before the deadline. Because proponents of the bill were unable to reconcile differences on the poll tax and escape provisions, the committee bill went to the floor "without recommendation."

COMMITTEE STATEMENTS

In view of the tight deadline on reporting the bill, additional time was granted for submission of views. Individual views were submitted April 20 by opponents (S Rept 162 -- Part 2) and April 21 by proponents of the measure (S Rept 162 -- Part 3).

View of Opponents. Three Committee members from Southern states who had voted against S 1564 in committee adopted as individual views statements made during Senate hearings by two Southern attorneys -- Charles J. Bloch of Macon, Ga., and Thomas H. Watkins of Jackson, Miss. Signing the statement were Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.), Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and John L. McClellan (D Ark.).

The bill was unconstitutional, the statements contended, because Congress had no power to abolish state prerogatives to set voter qualifications as provided by Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution. The statements disputed the contention that the 15th Amendment took away the exclusive right of states to establish voting qualifications. They asserted that the 17th Amendment had reaffirmed the original language of Article 1, Section 2, providing that "the electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for the most numerous branch of the state legislatures."

Joint Statement of Proponents. The 12 non-Southern members of the Committee filed a statement supporting the bill as a strong measure "to eradicate once and for all the chronic system of racial discrimination which has for so long excluded so many citizens from the electorate because of the color of their skins, contrary to the explicit command of the 15th Amendment." They said that existing law could not solve the problem of voting discrimination because of "the intransigence of local officials and dilatory tactics, two factors which have largely neutralized years of litigating effort by the Department of Justice."

Because of differences of view, their report did not include endorsements of the bill's provisions outlawing state and local poll taxes and establishing an escape mechanism for states which could prove that they had attained adequate levels of voter activity. Committee members signing the statement were Dodd (D Conn.), Hart (D Mich.), Long (D Mo.), Kennedy (D Mass.), Bayh (D Ind.), Burdick (D N.D.), Tydings (D Md.), Dirksen (R Ill.), Hruska (R Neb.), Fong (R Hawaii), Scott (R Pa.), and Javits (R N.Y.).

Additional Views of Proponents. The same members of the Committee, except for Dirksen and Hruska, submitted additional views supporting the committee amendment which would abolish the poll tax.

They contended that poll taxes were discriminatory in placing "a far heavier economic burden on Negroes than on whites." According to the Census of 1960, they pointed out, median income for white families in Texas and Virginia was almost twice as great as that of non-white families, 2-1/2 times as great in Alabama and three times as great in Mississippi. "A Negro in Mississippi... whose income reaches the non-white state median would have to pay over 12 percent of one week's income in order to vote." The 10 members also based support for the poll tax amendment on a contention that the collection of such taxes had been undertaken in a "blatantly discriminatory manner."

The bipartisan group also endorsed a provision authorizing the appointment of federal voting examiners to states and voting districts in which less than 25 percent of the Negro voting-age population was registered to vote.

The group opposed a Dirksen amendment which provided an escape mechanism to states and voting districts which proved in federal court that their voter turnout in the 1964 Presidential election exceeded the 1964 national average (62 percent) or that their voter registration had risen above 60 percent of eligible voters, in addition to proving that they had not discriminated. The 10 members asserted that the amendment would have "the net effect of stimulating additional litigation sooner after the enactment of the bill than would have been the case" had it not been added.

Javits Additional Views. Javits submitted additional individual views endorsing an amendment that he had not been able to introduce in the Committee's sessions because of the time limitation on reporting the measure. The amendment, he said, provided that education in any language in an accredited school in any state, territory, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico be considered equivalent to education in English for the purpose of determining literacy.

Floor Action

The Senate May 26, by a 77-19 roll-call vote, passed S 1564 with amendments and sent it to the House. A debate-limiting cloture motion, adopted the day before by a 70-30 roll-call vote, set the stage for passage of the bill on the 25th day of debate. (For voting, see chart p. 1042)

Prior to passage, the Senate adopted, by a 78-18 roll-call vote, a leadership substitute for the version of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. In its major variation from the committee bill, the substitute dropped the controversial poll tax ban and provided instead for court tests of discriminatory levies. (For other details of substitute, see below)

In debate on the measure, Southern opponents of S 1564 argued vehemently that the bill was unconstitutional in circumventing a state's rights to impose its own voting criteria. But an expected filibuster never developed. Instead, the Southerners attempted to alter the bill's main provisions by proposing numerous amendments. None of the major amendments was adopted, and most were overwhelmed by margins of 2-1 and 3-1.

Much of the five week debate was consumed by the bill's supporters, who disagreed among themselves on the poll tax issue. One group of Senators pushed to retain the flat ban contained in the committee bill. Another group, which had the Administration's support, contended that a ban might be unconstitutional because of doubtful Congressional powers to impose such action. To ensure safe constitutional footing, this group proposed to direct the Attorney General to initiate court proceedings against such levies.

A crucial test on the ban issue came May 11 after Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) had deleted it from the leadership substitute and provided instead for court tests of discriminatory levies. By a narrow 45-49 roll-call vote, the Senate blocked a move by Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.) to write the ban back into the bill. On May 19, the Senate by a 69-20 roll call adopted another Mansfield -- Dirksen proposal adding a Congressional declaration that poll taxes infringed on the right to vote. (For voting, see charts p. 1037, 1039)

In further contrast to action on civil rights legislation in previous years, the leadership interspersed the debate on S 1564 on several days with routine business and never called early or late sessions until the day of passage. This procedure was criticized by a Northern Republican, Jack Miller (Iowa), who said before cloture was invoked May 25 that there had been no "concern on the part of the leadership for speeding up action." Miller submitted a detailed table indicating that opponents of the measure had used only 23-1/2 hours of debate time on the bill and amendments.

As the debate continued, however, Senate leaders tried to limit it and bring the bill to a vote. Mansfield three times sought unanimous consent to limit debate. Each time, his motion was blocked by Allen J. Ellender (D La.), a leader of the Southern faction. On May 21, a petition for a cloture motion was filed by Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), the bill's floor manager. It was signed by 29 Democrats and 9 Republicans (16 signatures were needed). Approval of the cloture motion four days later marked only the second time in its history -- but the second time in two years -- that the Senate had voted to close off debate on a civil rights statute. (See box, p. 551)

Following is a chronological account of highlights in floor action on S 1564:

DEBATE OPENS

Senate debate on the voting bill began April 22. Opening debate on the measure centered on the means by which states and localities could avoid being subject to the provisions of the bill, the constitutionality of a provision to suspend literacy tests in certain states and political subdivisions, and a proposed amendment to provide

Controversy Centers on Poll Tax Ban

A major controversy of the session resulted from an attempt by Congressional liberals to include a flat ban on poll taxes in the voting bill.

Sentiment for the ban increased during hearings on the measure, when civil rights leaders vigorously criticized the Administration bill for not prohibiting state and local poll taxes. Use of such levies, they said, had prevented thousands of low-income persons from participating in elections.

The Judiciary Committees of both House and Senate later reported bills with the ban. In the Senate, however, the provision was dropped when its constitutionality was questioned. Proponents of the ban attempted to restore it, but their amendment was rejected by a narrow 45-49 roll-call vote.

Outcome of the provision remained in doubt for two weeks while House-Senate conferees sought agreement on a final bill. A compromise provision was finally adopted when civil rights groups urged House conferees to drop the ban and agree to court tests of poll taxes.

BACKGROUND

The 1965 attempt to include a flat ban on poll taxes in the voting bill marked the first time that Congress had given serious consideration to prohibiting the tax in state and local elections. It was only after 30 years of futile efforts that anti-poll tax forces in 1962 gained approval for a constitutional amendment (ratified as the 24th Amendment in 1964) banning the tax in federal elections. Similar statutes had been passed by the House in 1942, 1943, 1945, 1947 and 1949, but the bills never came to a vote in the Senate. (1964 Almanac, p. 381)

Twenty-seven states in 1965 imposed a poll tax, but it was used as a voter qualification in only four Southern states -- Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.

Poll taxes as a requirement for voting in the United States occurred in two different eras. The levies were introduced in some states during the early days of the nation as a substitute for property qualifications, which had been enacted as voting prerequisites. The intent of the early levies was to enlarge the electorate. These taxes were gradually eliminated, and by the time of the Civil War, few states still had them.

During the second era of the poll tax, which began in the early 1890s, levies were imposed by Southern states as one of a number of devices to restrict suffrage. Poll taxes tied to the right to vote were adopted in 11 Southern states -- Florida (1889), Mississippi and Tennessee (1890), Arkansas (1892), South Carolina (1895), Louisiana (1898), North Carolina (1900), Alabama (1901), Virginia and Texas (1902) and Georgia (1908).

The levies were ostensibly adopted to "cleanse" elections of mass abuse, but the records of constitutional conventions held in five Southern states during the period contained statements praising the poll tax as a measure to bar the Negro as well as the poor white from the franchise. Many historians have asserted that these measures were taken to limit the popular base of agrarian revolution inspired by the Populist party.

Since the turn-of-the-century imposition of the poll taxes, seven Southern states dropped the levies. North Carolina, which repealed its poll tax with the granting of womanhood suffrage in 1920, was the first. Other states repealing the tax, all during periods of keen interest in political races, were: Louisiana (1934), Florida (1937), Georgia (1945), South Carolina (1951), Tennessee (1953) and Arkansas (1964). In each of the first six states to drop the tax, voter participation increased sharply in the next election following repeal, decreased in subsequent elections and then rose again. In a widely respected 1958 study entitled "The Poll Tax in the South," Frederic D. Ogden of the University of Alabama political science faculty estimated that 5 percent of the initial increase in each state could be attributed to the repeal of the poll tax.

Of the four Southern states which still levied poll taxes as a voter qualification, attempts had been made in all but Mississippi to repeal or alter them.

Constitutional amendments to repeal poll taxes were rejected by Virginia voters in 1949 and Texas voters in both 1949 and 1963. Alabama voters in 1953 amended the state constitution to reduce the cumulative effect of the poll tax from a maximum of 24 years and maximum payment of $36 to two years with a ceiling of $3. In May 1965, the Alabama State Senate voted overwhelmingly to approve a constitutional amendment repealing the tax. Action on a similar measure in the Alabama House was deferred until a later session. The Texas legislature in May 1965 approved a 1966 referendum to repeal the tax.

penalties for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes.

The voting rights proposal became the pending business of the Senate on April 13; unlike 1964, when a motion to take up the civil rights legislation then before Congress was not agreed to until the 16th day of debate, Southerners in 1965 did not attempt to delay immediate consideration of the voting bill itself. Debate on S 1564 was scheduled to begin April 21 after the Senate returned from an Easter recess, but was delayed another day when the Senate adjourned, after conducting little business, as a token of respect for Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), who died April 18. (1964 Alamanac, p. 357)

While debate continued on the floor, supporters of voting rights legislation attempted in meetings to resolve differences among themselves about controversial amendments to the bill that were added in the Judiciary Committee. The amendments were to:

- Outlaw poll taxes in state and local elections.
- Exempt from the bill's "massive discrimination" trigger a state or locality which could prove in federal court that its voter activity had reached certain specified levels and that it had not discriminated against voters.

The Senate leadership of both parties opposed the poll tax amendment after the Justice Department expressed doubt about its constitutionality. (President Johnson at his April 17 news conference said he was advised "by constitutional lawyers that we have a problem in repealing the poll tax by statute." He said he had asked the Attorney General to meet with Senate and House Members who were interested "and, if possible, take every step that he can within constitutional bounds to see that the poll tax is not used as a discrimination against any voter anywhere.")

The "escape" amendment was strongly opposed by some Senators who contended that it might enable Southern states to avoid the bill's requirements by increasing white voter registration.

STRATEGY SHAPED

Supporters of S 1564 began a series of conferences April 27 to resolve their differences. At the request of Senate Majority Leader Mansfield, Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey met with the supporters.

Whether or not the debate would develop into a long Southern filibuster against the bill was not yet clear. In the first week of debate, the Senate was convening at its normal hour of noon. Debate on one day was minimal as the Senate considered an appropriations bill.

Both sides were still shaping strategy throughout the week. It was generally believed that the proponents of the bill had more than enough votes to invoke cloture and bring the bill to a vote if the Southerners attempted to prevent action by filibustering. The powerful group of Southern Senators which -- until the 1964 civil rights cloture was invoked -- possessed extensive bargaining power to obtain changes in proposed civil rights laws, was considerably diminished in strength by 1965. Their long-time leader, Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), was ill and away from the Senate. In addition, there were indications that some Southerners might not oppose the bill. For instance, there were reports that George A. Smathers (D Fla.) and J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) might vote for a voting rights bill, although probably not the one reported from committee. Russell B. Long (D La.), majority whip, while opposed to the voting rights bill as reported from committee, told reporters that there was no reason for a Southern filibuster if two-thirds of the Senate were prepared to end debate by invoking cloture.

But indications of lengthy debate were present. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), the Southern leader in Russell's absence, promised at one point to talk against the bill "as long as God gives me breath." A spokesman in his office told Congressional Quarterly April 27 that while over-all Southern strategy had not yet been mapped out, the plan probably would be to take various amendments of the measure under "lengthy discussion" rather than filibuster the entire bill. He added, however, that no final decision on strategy would be made until backers of the proposed legislation had formed the united front they were seeking and had determined their own strategy.

DEBATE

Debate on S 1564 was initiated April 22 by Mansfield, followed by Dirksen.

Opening the debate, Mansfield said the legislation was necessary to fulfill a constitutional promise and "to redeem the rekindled hopes of millions of Americans." Dirksen added that it was "quite clear that additional legislation is needed if the unequivocal mandate in the 15th Amendment to the Constitution... is to be enforced and made effective and if the Declaration of Independence is to be made truly meaningful."

Suspension of Literacy Tests. Southern opponents of S 1564 argued that the bill was unconstitutional in suspending state-administered literacy tests and similar devices in areas to which federal voting examiners had been assigned. Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution, they said, had guaranteed the states the exclusive right to set voter qualifications, and the 17th Amendment (direct election of Senators) had reaffirmed that prerogative. The suspension of tests also was unconstitutional, they contended, in that the bill abolished the literacy requirement in various Southern states while leaving similar tests in other states undisturbed.

Proponents of S 1564 contended that the authority for the suspension of literacy tests as provided by the bill was based on "specific, expressly granted constitutional authority, delegated to Congress in no uncertain terms" by the 15th Amendment, which prohibits denials of the right to vote on account of race or color and grants Congress the power to enforce that prohibition by "appropriate legislation."

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) April 22 said that "as long as state laws or practices erecting voting qualifications do not run afoul of the 14th or 15th Amendment, they stand undisturbed. But when state power is abused, the Constitution calls a halt. There is no magic in the words 'voting qualifications.' " Hart also listed several reasons why he said it should be presumed that states and voting districts brought under the bill had violated the 15th Amendment through the use of tests and devices. These were: (1) the coincidence of low Negro voter activity and the use of literacy tests in states with large Negro populations; (2) the known adoption of various tests for the sole purpose of denying Negroes the ballot; (3) judicial findings of discrimination in violation of the 15th Amendment in these states; and (4) the known public policy of racial segregation in such states. "It follows," Hart said, "that it is not irrational for the Congress to conclude that suspension of such tests or devices in the affected areas is an appropriate measure for enforcing the 15th Amendment."

Judicial Recourse. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), an opponent of the bill, contended April 22 that the rapid appointment of federal voting examiners to states and voting districts in which the bill had been invoked would "condemn without judicial trial the states of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, and Virginia and 34 counties in North Carolina." Proponents of the measure countered that the bill was not "punitive," but merely set up a process for enforcing the 15th Amendment. If states and localities to which examiners had been assigned had not been guilty of discrimination, they said, such areas would be able to go into a federal court in the District of Columbia and obtain a declaratory judgment freeing them from the federal voting machinery.

"Clean Elections" Amendment. John J. Williams (R Del.) April 13 introduced the first floor amendment to S 1564. It provided for penalties of up to $10,000 in fines and/or five years in prison for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes. "If local officials do not or will not,...it becomes necessary for Congress to act," Williams said. He argued that election fraud was "a way of life in too many parts of the country today...." The amendment was adopted April 29 by an 86-0 roll-call vote after being modified by Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) to apply only to federal elections. Williams accepted the modification. An earlier vote had been delayed by Senators who wanted the Justice Department to appraise its constitutionality. Hart contended that the amendment as introduced, which applied to all elections, might subject the bill to judicial challenge because it was not based on the 15th Amendment, as were the other sections of S 1564. Hart supported the amendment as modified. (The Williams amendment later was embodied in the Mansfield-Dirksen substitute for the committee bill. See below) (For voting, see chart p. 1038)

MANSFIELD-DIRKSEN SUBSTITUTE

Majority Leader Mansfield and Minority Leader Dirksen April 30 introduced a revised voting rights proposal which deleted the controversial provisions of the Judiciary Committee's bill. These provisions banned state poll taxes and authorized a procedure that would free from the bill's federal voter registration apparatus any state or local government which could prove in federal court that at least 60 percent of its adult residents were registered.

The outright ban on the poll tax was opposed by the bipartisan Senate leadership on the grounds that it might be unconstitutional. Supporters of stronger legislation argued that the 60-percent "escape clause" should be eliminated because it would allow states to avoid the bill's requirements by sharply increasing their white registration.

The Mansfield-Dirksen version of the bill drew qualified praise from the group of Senators seeking stronger legislation; however, members of this group said they planned to propose amendments to strengthen the substitute, including one to ban poll taxes. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) said the "leadership substitute is stronger and better-balanced than the original legislation sent to Congress. But it is our intention to improve it."

The Mansfield-Dirksen substitute became the pending business of the Senate April 30 as a proposed amendment to the amended version of S 1564 that was reported by the Judiciary Committee. The Mansfield-Dirksen amendment was open to further amendments, which would be voted upon first. These further amendments would be disposed of before the Mansfield-Dirksen amendment was voted on.

Southern opponents of voting rights legislation continued to press their attacks on the bill throughout the second week of debate. Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) April 30 called the bill "grossly unjust and vindictive in nature." Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) May 3 said that "if we destroy the provisions of the Constitution...with regard to the fixing of voter qualifications," which he contended the bill would do, "we have a totalitarian state in which there will be despotism and tyranny."

Cloture Proposal. The Senate bipartisan leadership meanwhile indicated on May 4 that an early cloture motion to end debate might be filed. Mansfield announced that he and Dirksen had come to the "tentative conclusion" that they might file the cloture motion on May 10. Under Senate rules, the motion would automatically go to a vote on May 12. If cloture were invoked, each Senator would be limited to one hour of debate on the bill. (For later cloture action, see p. 550)

Mansfield May 5 said, however, that "developments," such as votes on amendments, would determine whether the cloture motion would be introduced early in the week of May 10. Dirksen May 6 added that if the Senate adopted an amendment abolishing state poll taxes he himself would "find it hard" to vote for cloture. Dirksen opposed the poll tax ban on the grounds that Congress had no constitutional authority to eliminate such taxes.

Mansfield's May 4 announcement that he and Dirksen might move for early cloture came after Allen J. Ellender (D La.) had blocked a leadership request for a unanimous consent agreement to limit debate on the bill and its amendments. Ellender noted that only "four or five" Southern opponents of the bill had spoken on the version of the measure reported by the Judiciary Committee and that there had been "very little" debate on the Mansfield-Dirksen substitute. He contended that it would be "in bad grace" to limit debate at that point.

The agreement would have provided four hours of debate on the major pending amendments to the bill, two hours of debate on any other amendments, six hours of debate on the bill itself prior to voting on passage and such additional time as might be added by later agreement.

KEY AMENDMENT REJECTED

Enforcement. The Senate May 6, by a 25-64 roll-call vote, rejected a key Southern amendment which would have altered the intended enforcement procedures set up by the bill. The amendment, introduced by Sam J. Ervin Jr.(D N.C.), would have struck out the bill's automatic triggering formulas and substituted a system authorizing the appointment of federal voting examiners only after the U.S. District Court in the area in question had made a finding of discrimination in that area. Voting against the amendment were five Southern Democrats: Bass (Tenn.); Gore (Tenn.); Harris (Okla.); Monroney (Okla.); and Yarborough (Texas). (For voting, see chart p. 1036)

The Senate April 30, by voice vote, adopted the first amendment to the Mansfield-Dirksen substitute -- a proposal by J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) and John L. McClellan (D Ark.) which provided that no federal voting examiners could be appointed until 30 days prior to the first primary or general election in calendar 1966, in any state which had amended its constitution or enacted a law ordering a complete new registration of voters. The amendment stipulated, however, that only states whose electorate had ordered the re-registraton between Nov. 1, 1964, and March 1, 1965, would be covered. This would grant Arkansas an exemption from the bill until the specified date. Arkansas voters on Nov. 3, 1964, adopted an amendment to the state constitution outlawing poll taxes and ordering a complete re-registration.

POLL TAX BAN DEFEATED

During the third week of debate, a crucial test came on the poll tax issue. After several days of heated discussion, the Senate May 11, by a 45-49 roll-call vote, defeated an amendment to ban such levies as a condition for voting in state and local elections. (For voting, see chart p. 1037)

Defeat of the amendment, which was sponsored by Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.), removed an important block to agreement among Members who supported the bill and unified the drive to passage.

Before the vote on Kennedy's proposal, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) read a letter from Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach opposing the amendment. Katzenbach said that the voting rights bill would be construed by the courts as a Congressional finding of evidence that the poll tax had been used to discriminate against voters. Inclusion of the Kennedy amendment, the letter contended, would only present "constitutional risks" because it was not clear whether Congress had the power to legislate a ban on such taxes.

A coalition of 25 Republicans and 24 Democrats voted to reject the ban. Voting for the amendment were five Southern Democratic Senators: Bass (Tenn.); Gore (Tenn.); Harris (Okla.); Long (La.); and Yarborough (Texas). Only six Republicans voted for the proposal: Boggs (Del.); Case (N.J.); Fong (Hawaii); Javits (N.Y.); Kuchel (Calif.); and Smith (Maine). A total of 39 Democrats voted in favor. Among Northern Democrats, the division was 34-9 in favor of the amendment. One of the amendment's 39 co-sponsors, Edward V. Long (D Mo.), voted against the measure.

Poll Tax Debate. Backers of the Kennedy anti-poll tax amendment contended that the outright ban of the tax was justified because the tax represented "in a broad enough area and in enough circumstances an abridgement upon the right to vote." Imposition of the tax, they said, was not a qualification for voting but rather a "burden upon the right to vote," which they contended was clearly in violation of the 15th Amendment to the Constitution.

Supporters of the bill who favored judicial proceedings against the poll tax countered that a Congressional ban might be unconstitutional because the mere imposition of the tax was not discriminatory; Congress, therefore, would have no authority to ban the payment of such taxes as a qualification to vote. Discrimination, they contended, resulted from the prejudicial application of the tax, which should be contested through the federal courts. Opponents of the amendment further asserted that the constitutional footing of the poll tax ban was "all the more infirm because of the fact that we have deemed it wisest to abolish the poll tax in federal elections by the route of constitutional amendment."

Debate Limitation Request

As the third week of debate drew to a close, Mansfield again sought to limit debate on the bill as he unsuccessfully had done May 4. Although Mansfield and Dirksen May 4 had indicated they might file a cloture petition during the third week of debate, they sought instead to limit debate by agreement. Mansfield May 12 requested unanimous consent to limit debate to one hour on each amendment and six hours on the bill itself, but the request was again blocked by Ellender. While opposed to the general limit on debate, Ellender said he would "not object to a limitation of debate on amendments as they are offered." A total of 71 amendments were pending on May 12, although many were duplicates.

After Mansfield's motion to limit debate was blocked, Dirksen revealed that he had made a "nose count" to determine what the sentiment of the Senate was regarding cloture. "...If we have not the votes," he said, "obviously we cannot invoke cloture." He did not specifically say the votes were not available. Dirksen also noted that the leadership had considered offering tabling motions to every amendment. Such motions are not debatable. "However, for the moment at least, we have backed away from that," he said.

OTHER AMENDMENTS, BILL CHANGES

As debate on the bill continued through the third and fourth weeks, the Senate by decisive margins continued to reject Southern-sponsored amendments. These amendments were considered under unanimous consent agreements which limited debate and set a specific time for a vote. Obtaining this type of agreement was the strategy followed by the leadership in handling the voting rights bill. The Senate May 12, by a 28-62 roll-call vote, defeated a Southern amendment which shifted the jurisdiction in judicial proceedings, arising from the bill's triggering formulas, from the three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia to the federal district court for the district in which the capital of a delinquent state was located or such political subdivision was situated. This amendment, introduced by Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), pertained to both the judicial procedures for seeking relief from the provisions of the bill and for court review of a new voting law prior to its taking effect in states and voting districts whose voter qualification laws had been nullified by the proposed act. (For voting, see chart p. 1037)

The Senate May 13 rejected, by a 19-66 roll-call vote, an amendment by John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) that deleted language which required a federal examiner to place on a list of eligible voters any person meeting state law qualifications not inconsistent with the U.S. Constitution or U.S. law. His amendment required the person to be put on the list if he simply met state law requirements. (For voting, see chart p. 1038)

The Senate May 13 rejected, by a 34-44 roll-call vote, an amendment by Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) to specify that a Government court challenge of poll taxes would have to be based on the use of the tax to deny or abridge the right to vote because of race or color. The bill already directed the Attorney General to undertake court action against enforcement of any poll tax which, as a condition of voting in a state or local election, denied or abridged the right to vote. Prouty's amendment added the stipulation that the court challenge would be only of poll taxes that were used for racial discrimination in voting. In offering the amendment, Prouty said that the Vermont poll tax on voting in town meetings was "not susceptible to the objections to poll taxes raised in these debates" and should not be covered by the bill.

(Opponents of the poll tax said that extensive discrimination occurred in the other four states that levied poll taxes as a requirement for voting -- Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.)

The Senate also rejected two important Southern amendments which would have altered or deleted key sections of the bill. Rejected May 14, by a 14-53 roll-call vote, was a proposal by Sam J. Ervin (D N.C.) to prevent the suspension under the bill's provisions of literacy tests or similar voting requirements that were administered fairly and required only that a voter be able to read and write in English any section from either the state or U.S. Constitution. Rejected May 17, by a 19-60 roll-call vote, was an amendment by Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) to eliminate language in the bill which required states or political subdivisions which had become subject to the bill's provisions to obtain approval of a proposed new voting law from the Attorney General and, if he disapproved, from the court having jurisdiction, before the change could go into effect. (For voting, see chart p. 1038)

Unanimous Consent Changes

The bipartisan leadership May 17 obtained a unanimous consent agreement to modify the pending Mansfield-Dirksen substitute bill to include:

- A stipulation that if the courts upheld the constitutionality of poll taxes, voter applicants in states or voting districts where the bill's provisions had become effective could not be denied the right to vote if they paid the current year's poll tax to the examiner at least 45 days before an election.

- A provision giving the Attorney General discretion to require voter applicants coming before federal examiners to allege that they had been denied the right to vote by state officials within the past 90 days.

POLL TAX DECLARATION VOTED

During the fourth week of debate, the Senate accepted important amendments adding a Congressional declaration that poll taxes infringed on the constitutional right to vote and authorizing the appointment of poll watchers to observe election procedures in states and political subdivisions to which federal examiners had been assigned. Both amendments were approved May 19. The poll tax proposal, sponsored by Mansfield and Dirksen, was accepted by a 69-20 roll-call vote, while the poll watchers amendment, offered by Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii), was approved by a 56-25 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 1039)

Approval of the poll tax declaration ended two weeks of debate about alternate methods to provide relief from discriminatory use of these taxes, which had divided the supporters of the bill.

Poll Tax Provisions. Approval of the Mansfield-Dirksen changes in the wording of the poll tax provision left only one difference in the version finally included in the leadership's bill and the flat ban on poll taxes provided in an amendment by Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.) which was rejected by a 45-49 roll-call vote on May 11. The wording included in the bill did not contain an outright ban on poll taxes.

The change in wording adopted May 17 by unanimous consent agreement included the provision of the Kennedy amendment which extended the time for the payment of poll taxes if federal courts upheld the constitutionality of the levies. The amendment voted into the bill May 19 embodied the Kennedy amendment's Congressional declaration that the poll tax infringed on the right to vote. The Kennedy amendment, like the poll tax provision contained in the leadership's bill, also directed the Attorney General to institute suits against the enforcement of such taxes.

Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach, who had opposed the Kennedy amendment on grounds that Congress might not have the constitutional authority to ban poll taxes, endorsed the new language providing the Congressional poll tax declaration. In a letter to Mansfield, which the Majority Leader read into the record before the May 19 vote on the measure, Katzenbach said, "Without question, this declaration and the direction to bring suit encompass the 14th and 15th Amendments as well as any other provisions of the Constitution which might be relevant to an adjudication of the constitutionality of the poll tax. This solemn declaration of Congress should be very important in guiding the courts to a resolution of the ultimate constitutional question."

Supporters of stronger voting rights legislation expressed confidence that final Congressional action on the bill would include an outright ban on poll taxes. The measure approved May 12 by the House Judiciary Committee included a flat ban, and the provision was endorsed by House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.).

Judiciary Committee Chairman James O. Eastland (D Miss.), an opponent of the bill, contended May 18 that supporters of the Congressional declaration against the poll tax had not shown "one scintilla" of proof to sustain the basis for the amendment; he said Congress had not been presented "evidence" of the use of the poll tax to deny the right to vote.

Throughout hearings on the bill, Eastland said, Katzenbach "repudiated the argument of those who sponsor the amendment." Eastland said the Attorney General had testified that "he could not support an amendment to a bill prohibiting the use of a state poll tax as a requirement to vote, for the reason that he had no evidence that such requirement had been used in a discriminatory manner."

Cloture Petition, Third Debate Limit Request

Mansfield May 19 indicated that the bipartisan leadership would file a cloture petition on May 21. Before announcing the leadership move, however, Mansfield for the third time requested unanimous consent to limit debate on the bill. Ellender, a leader of the Southern bloc of Senators opposing S 1564, blocked the motion as he had the other two May 4 and 12.

Under Senate rules, the cloture petition was automatically to go to a vote the following week, on May 25. Dirksen May 20 asserted that the leadership would have "sufficient votes" to invoke cloture.

'AMERICAN FLAG' AMENDMENT

The Senate May 20, by a 48-19 roll-call vote, accepted an amendment sponsored by Robert F. Kennedy

(D N.Y.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) which specified that a person cannot be denied the right to vote because of an inability to read or write in English if he demonstrates that he has successfully completed the sixth grade (or another grade level equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that is conducted in a language other than English. The amendment was directed primarily at natives of Puerto Rico who had moved to New York City. (Dirksen May 20 said he feared that approval of the Kennedy "American flag" and Fong "poll watchers" amendments would cause the Supreme Court to rule the entire voting rights bill unconstitutional.) (For voting, see chart p. 1039)

CLOTURE VOTED, BILL PASSED

The Senate May 26, by a 77-19 roll-call vote, passed S 1564 with amendments and sent it to the House. A debate-limiting cloture motion, adopted May 25 by a 70-30 roll-call vote, set the stage for passage of the bill on the 25th day of debate. Approval of the cloture motion marked only the second time in its history -- but the second time in two years -- that the Senate had voted to close off debate on a civil rights issue.

Civil Rights Cloture Votes

Of the 31 cloture votes taken since Rule 22 was adopted in 1917, 13 were on civil rights legislation. The first 11 failed. On only four of these were the supporters of cloture able to produce a simple majority in favor of the motion. The 13 civil rights cloture votes:

Issue	Date	Vote	Yea Votes Needed
Anti-lynching	Jan. 27, 1938	37-51	59

* Between 1949 and 1959 the cloture rule required the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Senate membership rather than two-thirds of those Senators who voted.

1 Fair Employment Practice Commission.

In addition to these cloture votes on civil rights bills, the Senate has twice voted on cloture motions to stop filibusters against proposed changes in the filibuster rule. Each was rejected:

Rule 22	Sept. 19, 1961	37-43	54
Rule 22	Feb. 7, 1963	54-42	64

Prior to passage, the Senate May 26 adopted, by a 78-18 roll-call vote, the Mansfield-Dirksen substitute for the version of the bill that had been reported by the Judiciary Committee. The only Senator changing positions on the two votes was John G. Tower (R Texas), who voted for adoption of the substitute but against passage of the bill.

President Johnson later in the day called Senate action "triumphant evidence of this nation's resolve that every citizen must and shall be able to march to a polling place and vote without fear or prejudice or obstruction...."

Voting for passage was a coalition of 30 Republicans and 47 Democrats. Among Democrats voting for the measure were five from Southern states -- Ross Bass (Tenn.), Albert Gore (Tenn.), Fred R. Harris (Okla.), A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.) and Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas). Of these, Monroney, Yarborough and Bass, then a House Member, voted in favor of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (which passed by a 73-27 roll-call vote). Gore voted against the 1964 measure and Harris was not yet a member of the Senate. Three Southern Democrats who had indicated they might support voting rights legislation -- J.W. Fulbright (Ark.), Senate Majority Whip Russell B. Long (La.) and George A. Smathers (Fla.) -- voted against the measure.

In addition to Gore, three other Members of the Senate in 1964 who opposed the Civil Rights Act in that year voted for the voting bill in 1965: Norris Cotton (R N.H.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) and Milward L. Simpson (R Wyo.). No Senators who voted for the 1964 legislation opposed the 1965 bill.

Two Republicans joined 17 Southern Democrats in opposing passage. Both Republicans -- Tower and Strom Thurmond (S.C.) -- voted against the 1964 civil rights bill. A Northern Democrat who voted against the 1964 Act, Robert C. Byrd (W.Va.), was paired against the voting rights bill with Howard W. Cannon (D Nev.), who favored the measure. Two Northern Democrats who were absent, Alan Bible (Nev.) and Frank Church (Idaho), announced that they would have voted in favor of the bill.

On the May 25 cloture vote, 23 Republicans and 47 Democrats voted in favor. With all 100 Senators present and voting, 67 votes were needed. Nine Republicans joined 21 Democrats in opposing cloture. The Republicans were Wallace Bennett (Utah), Paul J. Fannin (Ariz.), Hickenlooper, Jack Miller (Iowa), George Murphy (Calif.), Simpson, Thurmond, Tower and Milton R. Young (N.D). Also voting against the motion were four Northern Democrats -- Bible, Byrd, Cannon and Carl Hayden (Ariz.). The five Southern Democrats who voted for passage -- Bass, Gore, Harris, Monroney and Yarborough -- also voted in favor of cloture.

(Comparing the cloture votes, Hickenlooper, Cannon and Miller voted for cloture in 1964 but opposed it in 1965; Gore opposed cloture in 1964 but supported it in 1965.)

Approval of the cloture motion marked only the seventh time such a move had succeeded since the cloture procedure was adopted in 1917. It was the third time in four attempts, however, that cloture had been invoked since 1962. (For list of all cloture votes since 1917, see p. 590.)

PROVISIONS -- Following are the major provisions of S 1564, as passed by the Senate:

Authorized appointment by the Civil Service Commission of voting "examiners," federal officials who would determine an individual's qualifications to vote and would require enrollment of qualified individuals by state and local officials to vote in all elections -- federal state and local. Such appointment would be made whenever:

- A federal court, hearing a suit by the Attorney General, charging a state or political subdivision with denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color, determined during the course of the suit that examiners were needed to ensure voting rights or delivered a final judgment finding voting discrimination.
- The Attorney General certified to the Commission that he had received complaints from 20 or more residents of a political subdivision of a state (such as a county, parish or other voting district) that they had been denied the right to vote on account of race or color, or that he had determined that general discrimination existed. Examiners would be appointed in these cases only if the area qualified statistically and otherwise as one practicing massive discrimination as defined under the triggering formulas provided in the bill. (See next item)

Triggering Formulas. Made any state or political subdivision subject to the appointment of federal examiners if: (1) a literacy test or similar device was used as a qualification for voting on Nov. 1, 1964, and (a) the Director of the Census determined that less than 50 percent of the persons of voting age residing in the area were registered to vote on that date or actually voted in the 1964 Presidential election, and also (b) more than 20 percent of the persons of voting age, according to the 1960 Census, were non-white; or, (2) notwithstanding the criteria of (1), the Director of the Census, in a survey conducted at the request of the Attorney General, determined that less than 25 percent of the voting age population of the Negro race or any other race or color, was registered to vote.

Qualifications of Examiners. Stipulated that to the extent practicable, examiners should be residents of the area to which they were appointed. Stipulated that persons other than federal officials serving as examiners should be appointed, compensated and separated without regard to the civil service laws.

Duties. Authorized examiners to interview applicants concerning their qualifications for voting and order appropriate state or local authorities to register all persons they found qualified to vote. Stipulated that the Civil Service Commission, after consultation with the Attorney General, would instruct examiners concerning state laws that would be applicable to the federal registration process. Provided that times, places and procedures for registering and the form for application and removal from eligibility lists would be prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission.

Stipulated that examiners would require applicants to submit allegations that they were not presently registered to vote and such additional allegations as the Attorney General might require, including one that, within 90 days of the application, the applicant had been denied the opportunity to register by a state or local official.

Instructed examiners to certify and transmit lists of qualified voters at least once a month to the offices of the appropriate election officials, with copies to the Attorney General and to the attorney general of the state. Stipulated that no federally processed voter applicant could be listed after 45 days prior to any election in which he wished to vote.

Tenure of Examiners. Stipulated that the appointment of examiners would be terminated by the Attorney General or a federal court, under the bill's procedures for appeal of federal action, when the delinquent state or political subdivision had corrected incidents of past discrimination and there was no reasonable cause to believe that such incidents would recur. (For appeal machinery, see below)

LITERACY TESTS

Suspended literacy tests or similar voter qualification devices when the Attorney General and Director of the Census determined that a state or political subdivision came within the scope of the Act's automatic triggering formulas (above). Stipulated that such determinations were not reviewable in any court and were effective upon publication in the Federal Register. (Tests and devices would be suspended for applicants approaching local registrars as well as federal examiners.) Stipulated that tests or devices suspended under the triggering formulas could be reinstated only after the delinquent state or political subdivision had obtained exemption from coverage under the bill's provisions for judicial recourse. (See below).

Authorized federal courts, hearing voting rights suits brought by the Attorney General, to suspend tests and devices that it found had been used for the purpose of denying or abridging the right to vote on racial grounds. Stipulated that such tests and devices would remain suspended for such "definite and limited" period as the court deemed necessary.

Defined "test or device" for purposes of the Act as any prerequisite for registration or voting which required a person to: (1) demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand or interpret any matter; (2) demonstrate any educational achievement or his knowledge of any particular subject; (3) possess good moral character; or (4) prove his qualifications by the voucher of registered voters or members of any other class.

Provided that no test or device could be suspended under the automatic triggering formulas, however, if incidents of discrimination had been limited in number and promptly and effectively corrected by state and local action, the continuing effect of such incidents had been eliminated and there was no reasonable probability of recurrence. Stipulated that a person could not be denied the right to vote because of inability to read or write in English if he demonstrated that he had successfully completed the sixth grade (or another grade level equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that was conducted in a language other than English.

APPEAL OF FEDERAL ACTION

Stipulated that any state or political subdivision in which the federal registration machinery (suspension of tests and/ or appointment of examiners) had been invoked under the bill's automatic triggering formulas could free itself of coverage by proving in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that (1) the effects of denial or abridgment of the right to vote, if any, had been effectively corrected by state or local action and (2) that there was no reasonable cause to believe that any literacy test or similar device sought to be used by the petitioning state or local government would deny or abridge the right to vote on account of race or color.

Stipulated that if the Attorney General under such proceedings determined that he had no reason to believe that the petitioning state or local government had used its test or device to discriminate against voters, he could consent to the entry of a judgment freeing the petitioner from the bill.

Provided that a final judgment rendered by any federal court during the five years, preceding an appeal, in which the petitioning state or political subdivision was found to have discriminated, could be introduced as prima facie evidence, sufficient to raise a presumption of fact or establish the fact, against the petitioner. Also stipulated that even if the court freed a petitioner of the charge of discrimination, the court would retain jurisdiction for five years and could reopen the action upon the Attorney General's motion that the state or political subdivision had discriminated.

Also provided additional escape mechanisms for political subdivisions, as follows:

- Relief by successfully petitioning the Attorney General that state and local election officials had enrolled all persons listed by federal examiners as qualified to vote and that there was no reasonable cause to believe that the right to vote would be denied or abridged on account of race or color.
- Relief, in the case of political subdivisions in which a Census Bureau survey had determined that more than 50 percent of non-white voting age population residing in the area was registered to vote, by proving in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that the same voting condition existed (all eligible persons enrolled and no further discrimination) as political subdivisions petitioning the Attorney General had to show existed in their areas.

Provided that if the federal registration apparatus had been triggered by the order of a federal court in a case instituted by the Attorney General, the appointment of examiners would be terminated only upon order of the court.

Provided that no court except the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia (or a U.S.Court of Appeals in the case of a challenge to the decision of a hearing officer) could issue restraining orders, or temporary or permanent injunctions against execution or enforcement of any provision of the Act, or issue declaratory judgments freeing a petitioning state or local government from the bill's coverage.

PRIOR APPROVAL REQUIREMENT

Required that new voting laws, enacted by state or local governments whose voter qualification laws had been nullified under the bill, be approved by the Attorney General or federal courts before they could take effect. In the case of states and political subdivisions in which the automatic triggering formulas had been invoked, the delinquent state or local government would be required to secure the approval of either the Attorney General or a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that the statute did not have the purpose and would not have the effect of discriminating against voters on account of race or color. If the petitioning government chose to submit the new law to the Attorney General and he objected to it, the petitioner could still seek the court's approval. In areas to which examiners had been appointed by federal courts in voting rights cases filed by the Attorney General, the petitioning state or local government would first be required to submit the new law for the Attorney General's approval. If the Attorney General, within a 60-day period, filed objection to the statute in the court holding jurisdiction (not necessarily the District of Columbia court), the new law could not be enforced until approved by the court.

In case of approval under either procedure, subsequent action could still be taken to strike down new voting statutes if enforcement deviated from the law's intent.

Subpena Power of D.C. Court. Stipulated that in actions brought by state or local governments in the federal district court for the District of Columbia to obtain approval of new voting laws (or to free themselves from the bill's coverage), subpenas could be served in any judicial district of the United States, but not at distances greater than 100 miles from the District of Columbia without permission of the D.C. court, which could be secured only upon proper application and presentation of due cause.

CHALLENGES OF VOTERS

Authorized challenges, before hearing officers appointed by the Civil Service Commission, on the qualifications of any voter applicant listed by federal voting examiners as eligible to vote. Authorized the Civil Service Commission to subpena witnesses and documentary evidence and provided enforcement machinery in case subpenas were ignored. Provided that the decision of hearing officers could be appealed in the appropriate federal court of appeals within 15 days after the decision of the hearing officer was served upon the petitioning party.

POLL TAXES

Included a Congressional declaration that, in view of evidence presented, the payment of poll taxes as a condition for voting in certain states denied or abridged the right to vote. Directed the Attorney General to institute "forthwith" court action against the enforcement of poll taxes or any substitute for such taxes enacted after Nov. 1, 1964, which had the purpose or effect of denying or abridging a person's right to vote.

Stipulated that during the period in which suits by the Attorney General were pending in the courts and after any decision ruling a poll tax constitutional, no citizen of a state or political subdivision covered by the "massive discrimination" provisions of the bill could be denied the right to vote for the failure to pay a poll tax if he tendered payment of the tax for the current year to an examiner at least 45 days prior to an election. Provided that the examiner would transmit the payment to the appropriate state or local official together with the name and address of the applicant.

ENFORCEMENT MACHINERY

Authorized federal examiners, upon determining that properly registered voters had been turned away from the polls, to go into a U.S. District Court and get an order impounding the ballots until persons entitled to vote had been allowed to do so.

Provided that intimidation, vote fraud, or other interference with voting rights on the part of private citizens or public officials, would carry upon conviction a maximum fine of $5,000, a maximum prison sentence of five years, or both. Provided penalties of up to $10,000 in fines and/or five years imprisonment for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes (applicable only to federal elections).

Instructed the Attorney General to institute actions for injunctive relief when there were reasonable grounds to believe that any person was about to engage in any act or practice prohibited by the bill.

Authorized the Attorney General to initiate actions to permit federally approved voter applicants to vote whenever, at least 20 days prior to an election, he received a complaint signed by 20 or more such applicants to the effect that they had not been registered.

Authorized the Attorney General to appoint poll-watchers in political subdivisions to which examiners had been assigned. Authorized such persons to enter and attend any place at which voting or tabulation of votes was conducted in order to observe whether all persons qualified to vote were allowed to do so and that their ballots were properly tabulated. Stipulated that private citizens, as well as federal officials, could be appointed.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Directed the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense to make a complete study to determine whether state voting laws or practices discriminated against members of the Armed Forces who seek to vote. Required that these Cabinet members make a joint report to Congress, including their findings and recommendations, by June 30, 1966.

Stipulated that if any section of the bill or its application to any person or circumstances was ruled unconstitutional by the courts, the remainder of the bill and the application of its provisions to other persons not coming under the same circumstances would not be affected.

Stipulated that no federal voting examiners could be appointed until 30 days prior to the first primary or general election in calendar 1966 in any state whose electorate, through constitutional amendment or enactment of any new law, had ordered a complete new registration of voters between the dates of Nov. 1, 1964, and March 1, 1965. (The provision was added to the bill to assist Arkansas.)

Authorized the appropriation of whatever sums necessary to implement provisions of the bill.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

April 29 -- John J. Williams (R Del.) -- as modified by Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Provide for penalties of up to $10,000 in fines and/or five years imprisonment for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes; applicable only to federal elections. (Original Williams amendment applied to state and local, as well as federal, elections.) Roll-call vote, 86-0.

April 30 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- Stipulate that no federal voting examiners could be appointed until 30 days prior to the first primary or general election in calendar 1966, in any state whose electorate, through constitutional amendment or enactment of a new law, had ordered a complete new registration of voters between the dates of Nov. 1, 1964, and March 1, 1965. Voice vote.

May 19 -- Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Add to the bill a declaration of Congress that, in view of the evidence presented, the requirement of the payment of poll taxes in certain states as a condition of voting denied or abridged the right to vote; in addition, direct the Attorney General to institute court action against the enforcement of any poll tax or any substitute for a poll tax enacted after Nov. 1, 1964. (The amendment was a substitute for a section which directed the Attorney General to institute court action against the enforcement of poll taxes.) Roll call, 69-20.

Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) -- Authorize the Attorney General to assign poll-watchers in political subdivisions to which federal examiners were assigned; authorize such officials to enter and attend any place at which voting or tabulation of votes was conducted, in order to observe whether all persons entitled to vote were allowed to do so and that their ballots were properly tabulated. Roll call, 56-25.

May 20 -- Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) -- Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Specify that a person can not be denied the right to vote because of an inability to read or write in English if he demonstrates that he had successfully completed the sixth grade (or another grade level equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that is conducted in a language other than English. Roll call, 48-19.

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- as modified by Norris Cotton (R N.H.) -- Stipulate that the Attorney General may consent to a judgment by a court freeing states and political subdivisions from the federal registration machinery if he determined that literacy tests or similar devices were not being used to discriminate against voters at the time the state or local government brought action to free itself of coverage. (The amendment was a substitute for language making the Attorney General's consent mandatory if he determined that a test or device had not been used in the petitioning state or political subdivision during five years preceding the filing of such an action. The original Ervin amendment made the consent of the Attorney General mandatory when he had determined that the petitioning government was not using discriminatory tests or devices at the time the action was filed.) Voice.

May 24 -- Gordon Allott (R Colo.) -- Stipulate that in actions brought in the federal district court for the District of Columbia by state or local governments seeking to free themselves from the federal voting machinery, subpenas could be served on witnesses in any judicial district of the United States but not at a greater distance than 100 miles without permission of the court. Voice.

John G. Tower (R Texas) -- Order a complete study by the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense to determine whether state voting laws or practices discriminate against members of the Armed Forces who seek to vote; require these Cabinet members to make a joint report to Congress, including their findings and recommendations, by June 30, 1966. Voice.

Norris Cotton (R N.H.) -- Stipulate that suspension of literacy tests or similar devices under proceedings instituted by the Attorney General, separate of the bill's automatic triggering formulas, should be for "definite and limited" periods, as determined by the courts. Voice.

May 25 -- Russell B. Long (D La.) -- as modified by Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Allow political subdivisions with more than 50 percent of voting age Negroes registered to free themselves from coverage by proving in the federal district court in the District of Columbia: (1) that all persons ordered registered by examiners had been placed on voting lists; (2) and that there was no longer reasonable cause to believe that persons would be denied the ballot on grounds of race or color. (The original Long amendment authorized political subdivisions of entire states that had come under the bill -- without regard to the 50-percent stipulation -- to free themselves from coverage by proving in court that they had remedied any discrimination against voters.) Voice.

May 26 -- Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) -- Delete language exempting aliens and persons in active military service and their dependents from the population count used to compute percentages of voter registration and turnout as elements of the bill's primary triggering formula. Voice.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Authorize political subdivisions covered by the bill to petition the Attorney General to request the Director of the Census to take a survey to determine whether the percentage of non-white persons registered to vote in the area was sufficiently high to allow the local government to institute a court action to free itself of coverage; authorize the federal district court for the District of Columbia to require such survey to be made by the Director of the Census when requested by the Attorney General or to require the survey if the Attorney General had arbitrarily or unreasonably refused to request it. Voice.

Mansfield - Dirksen -- Substitute for the version of the bill reported April 9 by the Senate Judiciary Committee revised language which included a Congressional declaration that state poll taxes discriminated against the right to vote and dropped certain provisions allowing states to free themselves from the bill. Roll call, 78-18.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

May 6 -- Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Delete sections of the bill establishing "automatic" triggering formulas for suspension of literacy tests and/or the appointment of federal voting examiners and a system of judicial review of new voting laws enacted by state or local governments that had come under the provisions of the bill; substitute for the deleted wording a provision authorizing the appointment of federal examiners (but not suspension of tests) when the federal court in the area in question had made a finding that the state or political subdivision had discriminated against voters. Roll-call vote, 25-64.

May 11 -- Edward M. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Prohibit the collection of a poll tax as a condition for registration or voting in state or local elections and authorize enforcement machinery; stipulate that if the Congressional ban on poll taxes were upset in court, no person could be denied the right to vote during the period of a year after the entry of a final judgment in such an action because of his failure to pay a poll tax or to make timely payment if he had paid the tax due for one year, within a period of 45 days prior to an election; delete Section 9 of the bill, which authorized the Attorney General to institute proceedings for relief against enforcement of poll taxes as a condition for voting when such tax had the purpose or effect of denying a person the right to vote. Roll call, 45-49.

May 12 -- Ervin -- Shift the jurisdiction in certain judicial proceedings arising under the bill from the federal district court in the District of Columbia to the federal district court for the district in which the capital of a petitioning state was located or a petitioning political subdivision was situated. Roll call, 28-62.

May 13 -- John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- Delete language which required a federal examiner to place on a list of eligible voters any person meeting state law qualifications not inconsistent with the U.S. Constitution and U.S. law and to require instead that the person be placed on the list if he simply met state law qualifications; delete other wording which directed the Civil Service Commission, after consultation with the Attorney General, to instruct examiners about applicable state law in regard to qualifications required for listing and loss of eligibility to vote. Roll call, 19-66.

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- Specify that Government court challenges of poll taxes, which the bill directed the Attorney General to undertake, be based on the use of the taxes to deny or abridge the right to vote because of race or color. (The amendment added the race or color stipulation.) Roll call, 34-44.

May 14 -- Ervin -- Stipulate that nothing in the proposed law could be construed to invalidate or suspend literacy tests or other voting requirements applying equally to all citizens of all races and requiring only that applicants read and write in English any section of the state or U.S. constitutions. Roll call, 14-53.

May 17 -- Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) -- Delete sections of the bill which required states or political subdivisions which had become subject to the bill's provisions to obtain approval of a proposed new voting law or any similar change in voting procedures from the Attorney General and, if the Attorney General disapproved, from the court having jurisdiction before the change could go into effect. Roll call, 19-60.

May 24 -- Ervin -- Permit the federal district court for the District of Columbia to shift cases filed by state and local governments for relief from the federal registration machinery, from its jurisdiction to the jurisdiction of federal courts in the petitioners' own areas. Roll call, 32-49.

John G. Tower (R Texas) -- Authorize the Attorney General to initiate investigations of voting practices in counties or states whenever he received 25 or more written complaints from residents of such areas alleging that they had been denied the ballot and, if such an investigation revealed a pattern or practice of discrimination, authorize the appointment of federal voting examiners to order the registration of voters in the area. (The amendment substituted this procedure for the automatic triggering formulas in the bill.) Roll call, 29-49.

May 25 -- Jack Miller (R Iowa) -- Substitute for the bill's automatic triggering formulas a procedure authorizing the appointment of examiners when the Attorney General proved in federal district court for the District of Columbia that a state or political subdivision maintained a literacy test or similar device and/or had unacceptable levels of voter activity, as defined by the bill. Roll call, 30-66.

Ervin -- Require that a person applying to a federal examiner to be registered to vote include an allegation that he had been denied registration or had been found not qualified to vote because "of his race or color." (The amendment added the quoted words to the provision, which was already in the bill.) Roll call, 26-74.

Ervin -- Excuse from the federal registration machinery any political subdivision in which 95 percent of persons applying for registration in the 1964 Presidential election were literate and were registered by election officials. Roll call, 21-70.

Ervin -- Exempt states or political subdivisions from the federal registration machinery when the Attorney General certified that past denials of the right to vote had been corrected by state or local action and that there was no reasonable cause to believe that any test or device sought to be used by such state or local government would be used for the purpose or would have the effect of discriminating against voters. Roll call, 28-63.

Ervin -- Stipulate that jurisdiction of the federal district court in the District of Columbia over proceedings brought by states or political subdivisions to free themselves from the bill's coverage would terminate if judgment were rendered in favor of the petitioning state or local government. (The amendment altered a provision which authorized the court to retain jurisdiction for five years in all cases brought by state or local governments to free themselves of the federal registration machinery.) Roll call, 25-68.

Ervin -- Delete language in the bill which stipulated that a determination by the Attorney General or Director of the Census that voter activity in states or political subdivisions had fallen below certain levels would be final and effective upon publication in the Federal Register. Voice.

Ervin -- Stipulate that a state or political subdivision covered by the "massive discrimination" provisions could free itself from the bill's coverage by proving in the district court in the District of Columbia that it was not discriminating against voters at the time of its appeal to the court. (The amendment was a substitute for language which required petitioning state or local governments to prove that they had corrected the effects of past discrimination and that there was no reasonable cause to believe that there would be discrimination against voters in the foreseeable future.) Roll call, 26-69.

Ervin -- Eliminate from the bill's triggering section the requirement that voter turnout of a state or political subdivision in the 1964 Presidential election had to be more than 50 percent of the voting age population in order to avoid coverage of the "massive discrimination" provisions. Roll call, 31-64.

Ervin -- Provide for judicial review by federal courts of a decision of the Attorney General to reject the petition of a political subdivision to free itself of the federal registration machinery; stipulate that if the court found the political subdivision was no longer discriminating against voters, the court would enter a judgment terminating the appointment of federal voting examiners in the area and restoring literacy tests (unless tests had been suspended on a statewide basis). Roll call, 24-72.

Ervin -- Eliminate language stipulating that only the federal district court for the District of Columbia or a federal court of appeals would have jurisdiction to issue any judgment freeing a delinquent state or local government from the federal registration machinery, or issue restraining orders or temporary or permanent injunctions under the bill. Roll call, 20-75.

John Stennis (D Miss.) -- Instruct the Attorney General, upon request of appropriate state or local governing authorities, to institute proceedings for relief against demonstrations by persons other than those who had been denied the right to vote within the area of the demonstration. Roll call, 17-74.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary, Subcommittee No. 5.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 18 -- April 1 on the bipartisan-backed Adminstration voting rights bill (HR 6400) and 121 other measures dealing with voting rights.

TESTIMONY -- March 18 -- Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), chairman of the full Committee, opened the hearings with a statement calling for summary passage of the Administration bill. Celler said "the legalisms, stratagems, trickery, and coercion that now stand in the path of the Southern Negro when he seeks to vote must be smashed and banished." He said any effort to obstruct rapid passage of the bill would be "inexcusable," and promised night hearings if necessary.

William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee, predicted that it would report a "good bill" but did not indicate whether he would push for major changes in the Administration bill.

Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach said the judicial remedies to voter registration set up by past legislation had been "tarnished by evasion, obstruction, delay, and disrespect." The Attorney General cited a history of "intimidation, discouragement and delay" in Selma, Ala., and elsewhere, which he said illustrated the need for strong and rapid corrective action.

The Attorney General said a 1961 voting rights suit against Dallas County, Ala., of which Selma is the seat, had not produced an order barring a complex literacy test until February 4, 1965. After four years of litigation, Katzenbach said, only 383 of 15,000 voting-age Negroes in Dallas County had been registered. Katzenbach also recounted the difficulty of obtaining judgments in voter intimidation suits in which he said the Justice Department had presented "substantial proof" of intimidation on the part of Dallas County Sheriff James Clark and other local officials. Two of the suits had been dismissed and the others not yet decided.

The proper corrective measure, Katzenbach said, was a "new approach, an approach which goes beyond the tortuous, often ineffective pace of litigation...a systematic, automatic method to deal with discriminatory tests, with discriminatory testers, and discriminatory threats." The Attorney General said the Administration bill would "translate" the intentions of past voting rights legislation "into ballots."

Katzenbach said HR 6400 was constitutional in implementing the "explicit command of the 15th Amendment that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged by any state on account of race or color." He noted that "the Constitution itself expressly says with respect to the 15th Amendment: 'The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.'"

Katzenbach said the alternative remedy of guaranteeing fair administration of existing literacy tests rather than abolishing them was "unrealistic." He pointed out that 30 states conducted elections without literacy tests and said there was no "evidence that the quality of government in those states falls below that of states which impose -- or purport to impose -- such a requirement."

In reply to criticism that the bill was too broad and would be inapplicable to pockets of lesser discrimination, Katzenbach said the target of the Administration measure was "massive discrimination." He said the bill would be effective against areas practicing rank discrimination while existing legislation could be invoked in other instances.

Areas covered by the bill as presently written, Katzenbach said, would be the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia, Alaska, 34 counties in North Carolina and one county in Arizona. He said all except the first four states might win exemption by proving that they had not discriminated against voters during a ten-year period preceding the suit. (In subsequent testimony, Katzenbach added to this list one country in Idaho and one in Maine. For states and counties actually affected, see p. 533)

'AUTOMATIC' TRIGGER CRITICIZED

March 19 -- Subcommittee members Lindsay and William C. Cramer (R Fla.) argued that the Administration bill was not broad enough to cover numerous areas in which Negroes were discriminated against and at the same time invoked penalties on areas which did not discriminate. Pointing to counties in Florida where less than 5 percent of voting-age Negroes were registered, Cramer said the Negroes would have no recourse under the bill because Florida did not have a literacy test or similar device. Lindsay said that in Newton County, Arkansas, 78.8 percent of whites were registered and not one Negro. He pointed out that HR 6400 would not affect the county because Arkansas did not have a literacy test.

Cramer said the Administration bill would not cover a county that excluded all but one Negro out of a voting-age population of 3,500 but had 4,000 of 4,500 eligible whites registered and voting. He said that such registration figures would be patent proof of discrimination, but the Administration bill would not provide remedies because more than 50 percent of the voting-age population was registered and voted.

Attorney General Katzenbach conceded that the bill could not eliminate all discrimination, but would free enough Justice Department attorneys from cases in areas covered by the bill to allow them to deal with pockets of discrimination, such as those mentioned by Cramer and Lindsay, under the Civil Rights Acts of 1957, 1960 and 1964.

William M. McCulloch objected to an Administration provision permitting federal examiners to be sent into states to which the bill was applicable. McCulloch said he didn't want to see "a horde of carpetbaggers" descend on the South. Katzenbach replied that it would be preferable to appoint local residents but said the provision should be broad enough to allow appointment of outsiders if local persons were subjected to excessive pressures.

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University and a member of the Civil Rights Commission since it was established in 1957, said the Administration bill should not require complainants to make an attempt to register before the federal registration apparatus could be invoked. "In some areas," he said, "just attempting to vote is tantamount to suicide."

March 23 -- Celler, commenting on a variety of proposals to broaden the Administration bill, said that he did not want the measure "freighted down" with changes that might make passage difficult. Among the proposals were one by Rep. Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) to provide for new state and local elections in areas where there was voter discrimination, and one by Rep. Sidney R. Yates (D Ill.) to implement the 14th Amendment by providing for reduction in the Congressional representation of states that discriminate against Negroes. Yates March 18 introduced a bill (HR 6264) providing for such reduction if states continued discriminatory voting practices.

March 24 -- Roy Wilkins, executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), said that although the Administration bill went "further than any other bill ever introduced on this subject," it still was "not enough." Wilkins called for a strengthening of the measure "to such a degree that it will not be necessary in the next two years or four years or seven years to come back and add another patch in an effort to guarantee the basic American right to vote...."

Wilkins said a sufficient bolstering of the bill would include: (1) an added provision eliminating poll taxes for state and local elections; (2) elimination of the bill's requirement that a voter applicant must first attempt to register before state officials before he may obtain federal assistance; (3) expansion of the federal registration apparatus to cover any area in which voter discrimination exists; (4) broader provisions to protect Negro registrants and voters from intimidation.

Following Wilkins' testimony, McCulloch asked the civil rights leader whether he thought the legislation should be redrafted to cover "festering pockets" of discrimination in states not covered by the bill. When Wilkins answered that he did, McCulloch asked him to draft proposed new language for the measure.

Joseph L. Rauh, counsel for the Civil Rights Leadership Conference, contended that Congress had ample power under the 15th Amendment to abolish all poll taxes. Rauh said if such taxes were used to deny Negroes the ballot, it was as proper to ban them as it was to ban literacy tests or similar devices.

Two Southerners, Rep. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) and former Rep. Brooks Hays (D Ark.), endorsed the measure. Hays said, "It's because I love the South that I want to see these (voting) doors opened. I believe the South will be happier when they are." Hays, a White House aide, had been defeated in 1958 after an attempt to mediate the Little Rock school desegregation crisis.

March 25 -- George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, called for a broadening of the Administration bill to prevent the "night stick or night riders" from interfering with Negro voting attempts. "...A bill aimed solely at literacy tests and other formal legalistic barriers to registration will not do the whole job," Meany said.

Herman Badillo, vice president of the Legion of Voters, Inc. of New York City, called for elimination of New York State's English language requirement for voters. Badillo contended that the New York literacy test had resulted in widespread voter discrimination against Spanish-speaking Americans. Of 480,000 eligible voters of Puerto Rican extraction living in New York City, Badillo said, only 150,000 were registered to vote. "It is interesting to note that service in the Armed Forces is not limited to Americans literate in English," Badillo said, observing that one of every 42 U.S. casualties in the Korean War was a Puerto Rican.

Celler said he strongly opposed literacy tests himself, but had determined that the New York test was not administered on a discriminatory basis.

CONSTITUTIONAL OBJECTIONS RAISED

March 29 -- Virginia Attorney General Robert Y. Button contended that the Administration bill was "merely one step in a scheme for ultimate federal control of all state and local elections." "Today, it is a select minority of states which Congress is gleefully and impetuously grinding under its heel," Button said, "Tomorrow, in different circumstances, it could be other states, anywhere in the country." Pointing to the 1961 Civil Rights Commission report, which "found no discrimination in Virginia because of color," Button contended that his state's low (41 percent) voting figure in the 1964 general election could not be attributed to discrimination.

Rep. Howard H. Callaway (R Ga.) proposed an alternative voter rights plan that would be broader in application than the Administration measure. Under the Callaway proposal: (1) When an agreed number of complaints of voter discrimination were received from any state, a three-judge circuit court would appoint an examiner to conduct hearings on the complaints; (2) If the examiner were convinced of the validity of the complaints, he would ask the court for an order requiring that the complainants be registered; (3) The complainants would have to be registered within seven days, and they would retain their status as registered voters during any appeal. Callaway said the Administration bill was discriminatory because it allowed some states to retain literacy tests while striking them down in others on the assumption that they had been used to deny Negroes the ballot.

March 30 -- Rep. Armistead I. Selden Jr. (D Ala.) said the Administration bill would violate the constitutional powers of states to fix their own voter qualifications, and South Carolina Attorney General Daniel R. McLeod called the bill "a product of political panic."

March 31 -- Rep. John Dowdy (D Texas) said a source "for whom I have high regard" had told him that Attorney General Katzenbach had told Senate leaders that he had shown the Administration bill to Chief Justice Earl Warren and four associate justices and that they had "enthusiastically approved" it. Katzenbach immediately issued a statement labeling Dowdy's charge "utterly false."

Sidney Zagri, legislative counsel of the Teamsters Union, criticized the "piecemeal approach" of the Administration bill. He said the Attorney General's power could be abused for political purposes. Zagri said that the measure should be expanded to deal with all states where voter discrimination exists; should outlaw poll taxes for all elections; and should provide for new elections in areas where there had been voter discrimination.

Rep. John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.) said that the triggering formula of the Administration bill "reflected a double standard." Buchanan, however, endorsed a section of the bill which declared illegal any voting barrier based on race or color, and said he hoped to be able to support some version of the measure which was effective but still constitutional.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), said the bill should include authorization of federal voting examiners in any area where 20 or more valid complaints of discrimination had been made. Farmer also called for the outlawing of poll taxes and said that previous criminal convictions should not be allowed as a basis for denying registration. He explained that "freedom fighters," who had participated "in the dramatic demonstration of the necessity for this bill," would be denied the ballot unless this provision was changed.

April 1 -- Civil rights leaders Roy Wilkins and Joseph Rauh Jr. returned to submit nine amendments they had suggested during the previous week's hearings.

Committee Chairman Celler said that Wilkins and Rauh had "apparently...written a completely new bill which would make our work more complicated and difficult."

BILL APPROVED

Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Judiciary Committee April 9 approved an amended version of HR 6400 and voted 10-1 to send the measure to the full Committee. (The Committee declined to identify the lone Subcommittee member who voted against referral.) The Subcommittee version retained the major provisions of the original Administration bill and added new language as follows:

- Authorized federal courts, in suits brought by the Attorney General, to order the appointment of federal voting examiners if needed to enforce the 15th Amendment and to suspend literacy tests and other devices used to discriminate against voters.
- Authorized the Attorney General to appoint poll watchers to observe election proceedings in areas to which examiners had been appointed.
- Banned poll taxes as a condition for voting in state and local elections.
- Prohibited the intimidation of persons who engaged in activities to encourage persons to vote and of persons who had been assigned powers and duties under the bill.
- Amended Title I of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (PL 88-352) to cover state and local, as well as federal, elections. (Title I barred unequal application of voting registration requirements and also: (1) required that all literacy tests be administered in writing unless approved as non-discriminatory by the Attorney General; (2) prohibited denial of the ballot because of an applicant's immaterial errors or omissions on his application form; (3) and made a sixth grade education, if in English, a rebuttable presumption of literacy.) The provision stipulated that the amended Title, as it related to literacy requirements, would apply only to the extent that such requirements were not suspended by HR 6400.
- Made private citizens, as well as public officials, criminally liable for interfering with voter rights.

The full Judiciary Committee May 12, by voice vote, ordered reported a version of HR 6400 which retained all the amendments of the subcommittee bill and embodied additional amendments. The amendments approved by the full Committee:

- Deleted a requirement that a person making a voter registration application before a federal examiner allege that he had been turned down by a state registrar within the past 90 days.
- Stipulated a Congressional finding that the payment of poll taxes as a requirement for voting violated the 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution.
- Prohibited intimidation of any person seeking to vote, whether or not his right to vote was secured by any provision of the bill.

HR 6400 was formally reported June 1 (H Rept 439).

Majority Views. The committee report said the federal registration apparatus provided by HR 6400 was necessary because of the "intransigence" of state and local officials in enforcing previous voting laws and "repeated delays" in the judicial process. Judicial relief under these statutes, the report asserted, "has had to be gauged not in terms of months -- but in terms of years." The report cited numerous instances in which discriminatory literacy tests and similar devices had been barred by the courts, only to reappear in different forms, necessitating further adjudication.

It had become necessary to suspend literacy tests in "hard core" areas of discrimination rather than require their fair administration, the report said, because the latter approach would "simply freeze the present disparity created by past violations of the 15th Amendment." While federal examiners would be administering tests fairly to Negroes, the report contended that state registrars would "follow their traditional practice of registering all white applicants without making them take tests or regardless of their performance, or lack of it, on the tests."

The report found constitutional authority for the flat ban on poll taxes (as well as for the bill itself) in Section 2 of the 15th Amendment, which delegated to Congress the power to enforce by "appropriate legislation" the Amendment's Section 1 guarantee of the right to vote regardless of race or color. Evidence presented Congress, the report said, had made clear that poll taxes had "nothing in common" with the "true (voter) qualifications" which states were authorized to establish under Article 1, Section 2, of the Constitution and the 17th Amendment. Such taxes, the report contended, had been designed only to keep Negroes away from the polls. The removal of other obstacles to voting such as literacy tests, the report added, might cause the poll tax to "rise in significance as a discriminatory deterrent to voting by Negroes." The report also asserted that the fact that Congress proposed abolition of poll taxes in federal elections by a constitutional amendment (ratified as the 24th Amendment in 1964) did not evidence any lack of Congressional power to abolish the poll tax in state and local elections by statute."

The report also said that the appointment of examiners to states or political subdivisions where literacy tests had been suspended was made discretionary with the Attorney General, because of instances in which affected areas may have made "substantial efforts" to rectify the effects of past discrimination. Under such circumstances, the report contemplated that the Attorney General would not appoint examiners.

Republican Views. The report contained a statement of Republican views signed by 8 of the 11 GOP members of the Committee: McCulloch (Ohio), Poff (Va.), Cramer (Fla.), Moore (W.Va.), MacGregor (Minn.), King (N.Y.), Hutchinson (Mich.) and McClory (Ill.). The Republicans criticized HR 6400 as a "hastily contrived, patchwork response to the nation's demand for social justice." The "cumbersome mechanisms" of the bill, they said, involved "grave constitutional risks" which should not be taken. Instead, the Republicans recommended their own bill (HR 7896), which they indicated would be sent to the Rules Committee as a substitute for HR 6400. The GOP measure authorized the appointment of examiners in any political subdivision from which the Attorney General received 25 or more meritorious complaints of voter discrimination. It retained non-discriminatory state voting standards and directed the Attorney General to institute proceedings against the enforcement of discriminatory poll taxes.

Minority Views. A statement of minority views was submitted by three Southern Democrats -- Basil L. Whitener (N.C.), John Dowdy (Texas) and Robert T. Ashmore (S.C.). The primary criticism of the minority was directed at the bill's triggering formula, which the three Democrats called "arbitrary and unjustifiable." The minority also criticized the flat ban on poll taxes without an adequate Congressional finding that such taxes were discriminatory. It termed "unconscionable" the Attorney General's "veto power" over new voting laws in states and political subdivisions whose voter qualifications were suspended by the bill.

Additional Views. Robert McClory (R Ill.), who signed the statement of Republican views, said he preferred the inclusion of a flat ban on the poll tax in the Republican substitute for the Committee bill.

John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) endorsed HR 6400 but criticized the failure of the bill to assign responsibility for its implementation to an administrative agency and to authorize machinery to enforce the 1st Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech, of the press, of peaceful assembly and of the right to petition the Government for redress of grievances.

William T. Cahill (R N.J.) also endorsed HR 6400 but suggested that the Civil Rights Commission be empowered to implement the rights granted by the bill. Cahill also said the venue rule, by which certain proceedings arising under the bill could be heard only by a federal court in the District of Columbia, set a "dangerous precedent" which "may yet come back to haunt us."

Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) said that while HR 6400 fell short of providing all necessary remedies to voter discrimination, it adopted "positive principles" which "put the world on notice that Congress intends the right to vote to be universal."

Individual Views. Edwin E. Willis (D La.) contended that the bill itself was "discriminatory" in "stripping the powers" of six Southern states to fix voter qualifications while others were allowed to retain their voting laws. Willis also asserted that the federal registration machinery was unnecessary in certain political subdivisions which came under the bill, because these areas had already attained high levels of Negro voter activity.

William M. Tuck (D Va.) asserted that HR 6400 reached a "crest in the flood of federal intrusions into matters constitutionally reserved to the states." Tuck contended that the "ill-conceived" triggering formula of the bill could "only have been arrived at by first determining that literacy tests of certain Southern states should be suspended and then coming up with a mathematical ratio that would accomplish this...."

BAN SPARKS SENATE CRITICISM

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) June 1 predicted that if the House approved a measure embodying an outright ban on the poll tax, "...the Senate will almost certainly send that bill to conference." Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) June 2 said he agreed with Mansfield. (During Senate consideration of S 1564, a similar voting bill, an amendment to impose the ban was rejected by a 45-49 roll-call vote. The Senate instead provided for court tests of such levies. See Senate section, above)

RULES COMMITTEE ACTION

Floor debate on HR 6400, reported June 1, was delayed for five weeks while the bill remained lodged in the House Rules Committee, under Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.). In the interim, Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) initiated proceedings to have the bill discharged under the 21-day rule, but the procedure became unnecessary when an open rule (H Res 440) was granted July 1. Under terms of the rule, 10 hours of debate were authorized for the bill and amendments and a GOP voting bill (HR 7896) could be offered as a substitute for the version reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Floor Action

The House July 9, by a 333-85 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of the Administration voting bill (HR 6400). Following passage, the House substituted the provisions of HR 6400 for a similar bill (S 1564) passed May 26 by the Senate, passed the amended S 1564 by voice vote and sent the measure to conference. (For voting, see chart p. 976)

Prior to passing HR 6400, the House rejected by a 171-248 roll-call vote a motion by Harold R. Collier (R Ill.) to recommit the bill to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to report back a Republican substitute (HR 7896). The GOP bill provided remedies to discrimination on a county-by-county basis rather than statewide as provided by HR 6400. (See below) The GOP substitute was rejected earlier by a 166-215 teller vote.

The House accepted only one amendment to HR 6400. It provided penalties for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes in federal elections. Numerous other amendments were rejected.

President Johnson later in the day called House passage of the measure "not only a victory for the American Negro and the Democratic party" but "a victory for every American who believes the strength of our democracy rests on the right of every citizen to share in its direction." The President also praised the House for rejecting the GOP substitute, which he said "would have seriously damaged and diluted the guarantee of the right to vote for all Americans." (For Republican reaction, see p. 562)

Voting for passage of HR 6400 were 112 Republicans and 221 Democrats. Three Southern Republicans, Cramer (Fla.), Carter (Ky.) and Belcher (Okla.), and 33 Southern Democrats voted in favor of the bill. The Southern Democrats voting in favor of passage were Bennett, Fascell, Gibbons, Pepper and Rogers (Fla.); Mackay and Weltner (Ga.); Chelf, Farnsley, Natcher, Perkins, Stubblefield and Watts (Ky.); Boggs and Morrison (La.); Albert, Edmondson, Jarman, Johnson and Steed (Okla.); Anderson, Evins, Fulton and Grider (Tenn.); Brooks, Cabell, de la Garza, Gonzalez, Pickle, White, Wright and Young (Texas) and Jennings (Va.). Most of the Southern supporters represented urban areas with sizable Negro populations.

Opposing HR 6400 were 24 Republicans and 61 Democrats. Of the bill's opponents, only eight Republicans and one Democrat, Paul C. Jones (D Mo.), represented Northern states. The Northern Republicans voting against HR 6400 were James B. Utt and H. Allen Smith (Calif.); Collier and John N. Erlenborn (Ill.); George V. Hansen (Idaho); H.R. Gross (Iowa); Robert C. McEwen (N.Y); and Durward G. Hall Jr. (Mo.).

Twenty-one Republicans joined 227 Democrats in opposing recommittal. Voting in favor of the recommittal motion were 115 Republicans and 56 Democrats, 54 of them from Southern states. The only Northern Democrats voting for the motion were Walter S. Baring (Nev.) and W.R. Hull Jr. (Mo.). All 19 Southern Republicans voted in favor of the recommittal motion.

As passed by the House, HR 6400 differed from the Senate-passed bill in several major respects:

(1) The House version provided a flat ban on the use of poll taxes as a requirement for voting in state and local elections. The Senate version directed the Attorney General "forthwith" to institute proceedings against such levies.

(2) The "massive discrimination" trigger in the Senate bill exempted states or political subdivisions in which less than 20 percent of voting age population was non-white.

(3) The Senate version contained provisions which: (a) provided an additional triggering formula to bring the federal registration machinery to bear on states and political subdivisions in which less than 25 percent of the voting age population of the Negro race or any other race or color was registered to vote, and (b) waived English language literacy requirements for persons educated through the sixth grade in a school under the American flag where instruction was in a language other than English. (See p. 552)

DEBATE

Opening the debate July 6, Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), floor manager of HR 6400, said adoption of the bill would eliminate the "legal dodges and subterfuges" that had rendered previous voting rights legislation inadequate. The provisions of the committee bill, Celler said, authorized remedies that were "impervious to all legal trickery and evasion."

Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.), a leading opponent of civil rights legislation, replied that the bill was an "unconstitutional" vendetta against the former Confederate states and was "dripping in venom." The effect of the bill, Smith said, would be to set up the Attorney General as a "czar" over states' rights and voting rights with "almost unlimited power to investigate, to prosecute and to try and convict sovereign states...."

Choice of Bills. Debate intensified as the House GOP leadership sought to substitute its own bill (HR 7896) for the stronger version reported by the Judiciary Committee. Deleting the controversial poll tax ban and automatic trigger, the GOP substitute provided an attractive alternative to supporters of voting rights legislation who feared the constitutionality of those provisions. In its major sections, HR 7896 directed the Attorney General to institute proceedings against the enforcement of discriminatory poll taxes and authorized the appointment of voting examiners when the Attorney General received 25 or more meritorious complaints of voter discrimination in any political subdivision.

William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), chief sponsor of the substitute, said July 9 that the "automatic" triggering formula which invoked the federal registration machinery under HR 6400 was "pure fantasy -- a presumption based on a presumption" that would not provide the necessary remedy to voter discrimination. McCulloch also attacked HR 6400 as a violation of a state's right to determine the qualifications of its voters. Judiciary Committee Chairman Celler replied that the Republican substitute increased "the gap between black and white."

Edward Hutchinson (R Mich.) said July 7 that HR 7896 provided a remedy "sufficient to eradicate the evil we want to root out" without "tearing down our cherished governmental systems in the process."

Opponents, however, argued that only the blanket triggering formula in HR 6400 provided a strong, rapid remedy to massive discrimination. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) said the "widespread campaign" to bar Negroes from the polls was a system which "breeds on itself and can be undone only by strong measures" such as those embodied in HR 6400. James C. Corman (D Calif.)

argued that the Republican substitute invited state legislatures to "circumvent" the federal registration machinery by "its failure to place a moratorium on legislative action."

Rank-and-file GOP support for HR 7896 appeared to be holding firm until a Southern Democrat, William M. Tuck (Va.), urged in a July 7 floor speech that Members opposed to civil rights legislation support HR 7896 as the less "objectionable" of the two bills. Republican defections from support of HR 7896 began as Members feared that alignment with Southerners for the GOP bill would be taken as alignment against civil rights.

House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.) July 8 estimated that Tuck's call for Southern support of HR 7896 had added at least 15 Republicans to the list of supporters of the committee bill. Before Tuck's appeal to the Southerners, McCormack said, proponents of HR 6400 had counted on the backing of only 10 Republicans. Of these, only three had publicly announced their support -- John V. Lindsay (N.Y.), candidate for mayor of New York, William T. Cahill (N.J.) and Charles McC. Mathias (Md.).

Several Members from Southern states received standing ovations when they announced before the passage vote that they would support HR 6400. Majority Whip Hale Boggs (D La.) said he backed the measure because "the fundamental right to vote must be a part of the great experiment in human progress under freedom which is American." George W. Grider (D Tenn.) said that in supporting the bill he spoke for a "new South" which he said was "preserving the best of our proud past but (was) looking to the future." Charles L. Weltner (D Ga.) said that if the bill was a "drastic measure...the problem is drastic, and the need is drastic."

Amendments. The House July 9, on a 136-132 teller vote and 253-165 roll-call vote, accepted an amendment by William C. Cramer (R Fla.) to provide stiff criminal penalties for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes in federal elections. Such violations would be punishable by fines of up to $10,000 and/or five years imprisonment.

Although a spate of amendments to HR 6400 were introduced, Cramer's was the only one accepted. Two amendments which were initially approved on non-record votes were later rejected on roll calls. One of them, a proposal by Jacob H. Gilbert (D N.Y.) to waive English literacy requirements for persons educated through the sixth grade in a school under the American flag, was tentatively approved twice, by a 110-74 standing vote and a 125-94 teller vote, before it was rejected by a 202-216 roll call. The other was a proposal by Hale Boggs (D La.) to provide a means of judicial relief for political subdivisions which had registered at least 50 percent of their voting age Negroes, could prove they had complied with the orders of federal voting examiners and could convince the court that they would not "backslide" into discriminatory practices. It was tentatively approved by a 123-77 teller vote before being rejected by a 155-262 roll call.

Most of the other amendments defeated by the House were aimed at deleting or altering the main provisions of the bill.

PROVISIONS -- The bill contained the major provisions of the original Administration bill plus several committee amendments and the Cramer floor amendment. (See President's Requests, p. 540; Bill Approved, p. 558; and Amendments, above.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

July 9 -- Robert McClory (R Ill.) -- Delete a provision of the Republican substitute (HR 7896) directing the Attorney General to institute proceedings against the enforcement of discriminatory poll taxes; insert new language imposing a flat ban on the use of poll taxes as a qualification for voting in any election. (Amendment was offered to the pending GOP substitute bill and thus was negated when the Republican bill later was rejected.) Standing vote, 82-33.

William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Add language to HR 6400 providing for criminal penalties of up to $10,000 in fines and/or five years imprisonment for falsifying voting or registration information or buying votes; applicable only to federal elections. Teller vote, 136-132, and roll-call vote, 253-165.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

July 9 -- Walter Rogers (D Texas) -- Delete language in the Republican substitute (HR 7896) establishing procedures for a federal registration machinery, providing for a system of judicial recourse by affected political subdivisions and banning the use of poll taxes as a voter qualification; substitute a provision making it unlawful to deny an applicant the ballot when he was qualified to vote by non-discriminatory state standards consistent with federal law and swore or affirmed that he would support and defend the U.S. Constitution. The amendment also provided criminal penalties of up to $10,000 in fines and/or five years imprisonment for false or deceptive subscription to the oath and made such subscription by a member of the Communist party or a Communist front organization prima facie evidence of falsification and intent to deceive. Standing vote, 65-183.

(The following amendments applied to HR 6400, the amended Administration bill.)

William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) -- Substitute HR 7896, as amended by Robert McClory (R Ill.) to impose a flat ban on poll taxes, for the provisions of HR 6400. Teller vote, 166-215.

Rogers -- Add to the provisions of HR 6400 language similar to that of the rejected Rogers amendment to HR 7896. (The amendment did not change the provisions of HR 6400 except to require the loyalty oath and to add the penalty clause.) Standing, 89-152; teller, 88-148.

Basil L. Whitener (D N.C.) -- Delete the "automatic" trigger and judicial recourse provisions; substitute language making the federal registration machinery apply uniformly throughout the country, providing for recourse against the federal registration machinery in the federal district court of the petitioner's district and stipulating that no affected state or local government could purge itself for a two-year period following a finding of discrimination in a voting rights suit. Voice vote.

Jacob H. Gilbert (D N.Y.) -- Stipulate that a person could not be denied the right to vote because of inability to read or write English if he demonstrated that he had successfully completed the sixth grade (or any other grade equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that was conducted in a language other than English. Accepted by a 110-74 standing vote and 125-94 teller vote; later rejected by a 202-216 roll-call vote.

McCulloch -- Delete a provision of the bill authorizing persons whose voter qualifications were challenged to vote while final determination of the challenge was pending; substitute language authorizing provisional voting in such instances and providing for an impounding of ballots until voter eligibility had been determined, when the number of ballots cast provisionally was sufficient to affect the results of an election. Teller, 115-166.

Hale Boggs (D La.) -- Allow political subdivisions with more than 50 percent of voting age Negroes registered to free themselves from the bill's coverage by proving in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia: (1) that all persons ordered registered by federal examiners had been placed on voting lists; (2) and that there was no longer reasonable cause to believe that persons would be denied the ballot on grounds of race or color. Accepted by a 123-77 teller vote; later rejected by a 155-262 roll-call vote.

Whitener -- Delete provisions (1) allowing challenged voter applicants to vote while final determination of the challenge was pending; (2) requiring delinquent state and local governments to gain court approval of new voting laws; (3) banning poll taxes; and (4) stipulating that all criminal cases arising under the bill should be governed by the provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1957, which did not provide for jury trials; substitute language barring the tabulation of the vote of a challenged applicant until a federal court had overruled the challenge and authorizing jury trials for criminal cases arising under the bill when either party asked for a jury. Voice.

John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- Stipulate a Congressional finding that: (1) the effective exercise of the right to vote required protection of the rights to freedom of speech, press, the right to peaceably assemble and to petition the Government for redress of grievances and (2) that state and local officials had often reinforced denial of the right to vote by suppressing these related rights; authorize the Attorney General to institute proceedings for preventive relief when persons acting under color of law suppressed, threatened to suppress, or allowed others to suppress these rights. Standing 89-91, and teller 119-134.

Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) -- Delete the judicial recourse and "prior approval" provisions; substitute language (1) authorizing affected governments to go into a three-judge federal court in their own district for a judgment terminating the federal registration process; (2) stipulating that a petitioning government need only prove that the effects of past discrimination have been effectively corrected and are not likely to recur; and (3) authorizing the Attorney General to file suit in a three-judge federal district court in the appropriate district for a declaratory judgment that a new voting law enacted by a delinquent government had the purpose or would have the effect of discriminating against voters. Standing, 64-92, and teller, 125-141.

Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) -- Substitute for the bill's "automatic" triggering formula new language triggering the federal registration machinery in any state that used a literacy test or similar device in qualifying its electorate. Voice.

Howard H. Callaway (R Ga.) -- Add language exempting aliens, non-residents, persons in penal institutions and persons in active military service and their dependents (not registered to vote in the state or political subdivision) from the population count used to compute percentages of voter registration and turnout under the bill's primary triggering formula. Voice.

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Delete a provision authorizing federal courts hearing voting rights suits to suspend the use of literacy tests or similar devices that it had found discriminatory; substitute language authorizing courts to enjoin the use of such discriminatory voting requirements. Voice.

JOHNSON-GOP EXCHANGE

Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) and ranking GOP member of the Judiciary Committee, William M. McCulloch (Ohio), July 12 strongly criticized President Johnson's July 9 statement that Republicans had tried to "dilute" the voting rights bill. The two Republicans said the President was "obviously sensitive" to his own 'Lyndon Come Lately' Congressional record on civil rights." Before 1957, they said, the President "voted against civil rights 100 percent."

President Johnson July 13 told a news conference that he did not "single out" the House GOP leadership for criticism when he praised the House for passing the voting bill. The President said, however, that " people are allowed to comment on the relative merits of legislation before or after a vote."

In response to a question on his Congressional voting record, the President acknowledged that he was currently more interested in the issue of civil rights than he had been in past years. Mr. Johnson added that he wanted to provide all the leadership he could to solve racial problems "in the time that I am allowed."

The President also said that he would like to see poll taxes repealed for all elections, but did not indicate how it should be done.

Conference Action

Compromises on most of the differences in the House and Senate versions of the voting bill were worked out at early meetings of the conference committee. A stumbling block to rapid agreement was posed by a provision to abolish the poll tax as a voting requirement in state and local elections. Agreement on a compromise bill was finally reached on July 29 after civil rights groups urged House conferees to drop a House provision imposing a flat ban on the poll tax. The final poll tax provision, similar to language in the Senate bill, provided a Congressional finding that the tax was an abridgment of the right to vote and directed the Attorney General to initiate court action against the enforcement of such levies.

The conference report on S 1564 was filed Aug. 2 (H Rept 711). On major differences between the House and Senate versions, conferees took the following actions:

Literacy Tests. Accepted the House formula for suspending literacy tests and similar devices and authorizing federal registration machinery in states and political subdivisions which used a test or device as a voter qualification on Nov. 1, 1964, and had less than 50 percent of voting age residents registered to vote on that date or actually voting in the 1964 Presidential election. The Senate version of the trigger limited federal action to states and political subdivisions which both met the House criteria and had a non-white voting age population that numbered at least 20 percent of the total persons of voting age in the area, according to the 1960 census.

Dropped a Senate provision, not in the House bill, which provided for suspension of tests in any state or political subdivision and the appointment of federal voting examiners when the Director of the Census, at the request of the Attorney General, determined that less than 25 percent of the voting age population of the Negro race or any other race or color was registered to vote in the state or subdivision.

Agreed to a Senate provision authorizing a federal court hearing a voting rights suit brought by the Attorney General under the bill to suspend all tests and devices in a delinquent area. The House version authorized suspension of only such tests or devices actually found to discriminate.

Adopted a House provision, not in the Senate bill authorizing federal courts in voting rights suits brought by the Attorney General to suspend tests or devices when they were used "with the effect" of discriminating even if not for such purpose.

Accepted Senate language stipulating that no person could be denied the right to vote because of inability to read or write in English if he demonstrated that he had successfully completed the sixth grade (or another grade level equivalent to whatever level of education a state demands) in a school under the American flag that was conducted in a language other than English. There was no comparable provision in the House bill.

Judicial Relief. Agreed to a House provision establishing an absolute prohibition against the lifting of a suspension of tests and devices for five years after the entry of a federal court finding that a state or political subdivision had discriminated against voters. The Senate bill suspended tests and devices until the effects of discrimination had been effectively corrected and there was no reasonable cause to believe that the petitioning state or local government would "backslide" into discriminatory registration practices.

Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, authorizing relief in the case of political subdivisions which had registered at least 50 percent of their voting age Negroes when they could prove in a three-judge federal district court in the District of Columbia that they had complied with all orders of federal voting examiners and that there was no reasonable cause to believe that there would be future denials of the right to vote.

Prior Approval Requirement. Accepted a Senate provision, not in the House bill, stipulating that a judgment by the three-judge court in Washington approving a new voting law enacted by a state or local government whose voter qualification laws had been nullified under the bill would not bar a subsequent lawsuit to enjoin enforcement of the new law.

Poll Taxes. Agreed to language similar to a provision in the Senate bill, which (1) provided a Congressional declaration that the use of poll taxes denied or abridged the right to vote and (2) directed the Attorney General "forthwith" to institute court action against the enforcement of any poll tax used as a precondition for voting or any substitute for such taxes enacted after Nov. 1, 1964. Added to the provision new language asserting that Congress, in sending the Attorney General into court to challenge the levying of poll taxes, was acting under authority of both the 14th and 15th Amendments to the U.S. Constitution. The House bill contained a flat ban on the use of poll taxes as a voting requirement in any election.

Other Provisions. Rejected a Senate provision, not in the House bill, permitting the Attorney General to require that an applicant appearing before a federal examiner allege that he had been denied the ballot by a state registrar within the preceding 90 days.

Accepted House provisions, not in the Senate bill, prohibiting intimidation of a person "for urging or aiding" any person to vote, bringing criminal penalties to bear on officials who denied any qualified voter the right to vote (as well as persons qualified under the Act), and stipulating that the federal registration process covered party caucuses and state political conventions as well as federal, state and local elections and party primaries.

Agreed to a Senate provision, not in the House bill, permitting the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia to issue subpenas at distances greater than 100 miles in cases brought under the bill's "massive discrimination" provisions.

Final Action

The conference report (H Rept 711) was adopted by the House Aug. 3, by a 328-74 roll-call vote, and by the Senate Aug. 4, by a 79-18 roll call. (For voting, see charts p. 984, 1063)

House. Prior to approval of the conference report on S 1564, the House rejected, by a 118-284 roll-call vote, a motion by Robert C. McEwen (R N.Y.) to recommit the report to the conference committee with instructions to House conferees to insist upon adoption of House amendments eliminating a provision of the Senate bill. That provision authorized political subdivisions to free themselves of the federal voting machinery when they had registered at least 50 percent of their voting age Negroes and could prove in federal court that there was no evidence of discrimination in the registration and voting process. The conferees agreed to retain the provision, and it was included in the final bill.

The recommittal vote came after a debate in which proponents of stronger legislation criticized the concessions made by the House conferees as "weakening" and "watering down" the voting bill and rendering it only "half a loaf." Supporters of the compromise bill retorted that the measure was the strongest possible under the circumstances.

To explain the reasoning behind the concessions, William C. Cramer (R Fla.) asked the bill's manager, Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), for permission to read a "confidential" letter which Cramer said Celler had circulated among the conferees on July 29 just before final agreement was reached. Celler refused on grounds that it would breach a confidence. It was reported later that the letter was from Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach to Celler and said that the proposed conference agreement "was recently discussed" with civil rights leader Martin Luther King and that King had "indicated that the conference bill should be speedily enacted into law and that such prompt enactment is the overriding consideration."

Voting to adopt the conference report were 111 Republicans and 217 Democrats. Thirty-seven of the Democrats favoring adoption were from Southern states. Nine Members who voted against the original House bill voted in favor of the conference report. Those switching positions included seven Members from Southern states -- Brock (R Tenn.), Duncan (R Tenn.), Herlong (D Fla.), Mahon (D Texas), Patman (D Texas), Quillen (R Tenn.) and Trimble (D Ark.). The other two Members changing votes were Collier (R Ill.) and Erlenborn (R Ill.).

Opposing the conference report were 20 Republicans and 54 Southern Democrats. Three Republicans who had voted for the original House bill -- Davis (R Wis.), Fino (R N.Y.) and Michel (R Ill.) -- changed their position to "nay" on the conference report.

Senate. After a brief and routine debate, the Senate adopted the conference report and sent the voting bill to the President.

Voting to approve the report were 30 Republicans and 49 Democrats, six of them from Southern states. Southerners favoring the measure were Bass (D Tenn.), Gore (D Tenn.), Harris (D Okla.), Monroney (D Okla.), Smathers (D Fla.) and Yarborough (D Texas). All except Smathers had voted for the original Senate bill.

Voting against final approval were one Republican, Thurmond (S.C.), and 17 Democrats. Sixteen of the Democrats opposing the measure came from Southern states; the other was Robert C. Byrd (W.Va.) who in the past had voted with the Southern bloc against civil rights legislation.

In a surprise visit to the Capitol after Senate approval Aug. 4, President Johnson praised the "patriotic and selfless" cooperation of Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) in securing passage of the bill as an action worthy of worldwide appreciation. The President said the measure brought "within our immediate vision the day when every American can enter a polling booth without fear or hindrance."

BILL SIGNED

President Johnson Aug. 6 signed into law the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (S 1564 -- PL 89-110).

At the signing ceremony, broadcast by nationwide television from the U.S. Capitol rotunda, President Johnson said that the Act would "strike away the last major shackle" of the Negro's "ancient bonds."

After his speech, Mr. Johnson moved to the President's Room off the Senate chamber to sign the bill. Abraham Lincoln had used the same room on Aug. 6, 1861, to sign a bill freeing slaves who had been pressed into service of the Confederacy.

Implementation

Poll Tax. In the first move to implement the new Act, the Justice Department Aug. 7 filed a suit aimed at striking down the Mississippi poll tax. Similar actions were filed Aug. 10 against the Alabama, Texas and Virginia poll taxes. Oral arguments in the Texas case were heard Dec. 1. Arguments in the other cases were scheduled for early 1966.

Literacy Tests. The Justice Department Aug. 7 suspended literacy tests and similar voter qualification devices in the seven states and most of the separate political subdivisions covered by the Act. Tests were suspended in Alabama, Alaska, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Virginia; 26 North Carolina counties, and one county in Arizona. Tests were subsequently suspended in two additional counties in Arizona, two in North Carolina and one in Idaho.

Federal Examiners. Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach Aug. 9 designated nine counties and parishes for the appointment of federal examiners to process Negro voter applicants and order their registration. Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy the same day dispatched examiners to each area: four Alabama counties -- Dallas (Selma), Hale, Lowndes and Marengo; three Louisiana parishes -- East Carroll, East Feliciana and Plaquemines; and two Mississippi counties -- Leflore and Madison.

Later in 1965 examiners were dispatched to 23 additional counties and parishes, including six Alabama counties -- Autauga, Elmore, Greene, Montgomery, Perry and Wilcox; two Louisiana parishes -- Ouachita and West Feliciana; thirteen Mississippi counties -- Benton, Bolivar, Clay, Coahoma, Desoto, Hinds, Holmes, Humphreys, Jeff Davis, Jefferson, Jones, Neshoba and Wathall; and two South Carolina counties -- Clarendon and Dorchester.

Justice Department officials said in early 1966 that examiners in these areas had processed and ordered the registration of 79,593 Negro voter applicants by the close of 1965. Officials said there had been no incidents of violence and in most cases local registrars had cooperated with examiners.

Other Developments

VOTING RIGHTS SUITS

Supreme Court Test. The U.S. Supreme Court Nov. 5, by a 6-3 vote, granted a motion by South Carolina for permission to file an original suit against the United States to test the validity of the Voting Rights Act. At the same time, the Court unanimously denied the Justice Department's motions for permission to file such suits against Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Acceptance of the single case, South Carolina v. Katzenbach, promised to speed up a ruling on the constitutionality of the statute. The suit was brought against Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach for purposes of proper legal form.

In its suit, filed Sept. 29, South Carolina sought to enjoin Katzenbach from enforcing the Act on grounds that the law unconstitutionally invaded states' rights to set voter qualifications. In its countering suits, the Justice Department had sought to enjoin Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi from failing to observe provisions of the Act.

The Justice Department Nov. 19 formally answered the South Carolina complaint. Solicitor General Thurgood Marshall signed the answer, a short document which denied South Carolina's charges that Congress exceeded its constitutional powers in passing the Act and that the Act presumed the state to be using its literacy tests to discriminate against Negroes.

Oral arguments in the suit were scheduled for Jan. 17-18, 1966. "Friend of the court" briefs supporting the Justice Department position were filed by 20 states -- California, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia and Wisconsin. Filing briefs supporting South Carolina's contention were five Southern states -- Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia.

Virginia Poll Tax Suit. Virginia Oct. 13 filed its brief in Harper v. Virginia State Board Elections, a case attacking the constitutionality of poll taxes for state elections. The Justice Department had filed a brief as amicus curiae (friend of the Court) on behalf of Annie E. Harper, who brought the suit, asking the Court to strike down all poll taxes as an unconstititional tax on the right to vote.

Katzenbach in the Justice Department brief noted that Congress in the Voting Rights Act of 1965 declined to outlaw state and local poll taxes partly on the basis of Miss Harper's pending suit, preferring Court determination to legislation. In addition, he noted that the Act directed him "forthwith" to bring legal action to challenge poll taxes, and he said he chose the Harper case as the most available vehicle. His argument was that the "principle of a tax on the right to vote is constitutionally indefensible." Alabama, Mississippi and Texas also had poll taxes, and Vermont required a tax for voting in certain meetings. Virginia's poll tax was $1.50 per year, cumulative with interest and penalties for nonpayment.

"American Flag" Decision. A federal district court in the District of Columbia Nov. 15, by a 2-1 vote, held unconstitutional the provision of the Voting Rights Act which secured the right to vote of persons who were illiterate in English but were educated in a school under the American flag and who otherwise met state voting requirements. The court majority said Congress had "no power to legislate" over voter qualifications imposed by states.

The decision was limited to Section 4(e) of the Act, and the court noted that the section was "entirely dissociated" from other provisions. Section 4(e) was aimed at securing the right of Puerto Rican citizens to vote in New York, although its applicability was nationwide. It provided that persons illiterate in English but who had completed sixth grade in an American flag school could not be disqualified from voting by state literacy requirements.

Two New York residents brought the suit, Morgan v. Katzenbach, in the District and a special three-judge district court was convened. The suit sought an injunction against enforcement of the provisions on grounds that suspension of the state literacy test would permit thousands of otherwise disqualified Puerto Ricans to vote in New York, thus diluting the plaintiffs' votes.

The court majority, consisting of District Judges Alexander Holtzoff and Joseph C. McGarraghy, found that "traditionally and historically the qualifications of voters has been invariably a matter regulated by the states. This subject is one over which the Congress has no power to legislate." They found no explicit constitutional power authorizing Congressional legislation in the field, and concluded that power over voter qualification was a 10th Amendment power, one reserved to the states. Previous Congressional efforts to alter voting requirements, the majority said, were limited to proposing Constitutional Amendments: the 15th, to enfranchise Negroes; the 19th, extending suffrage to women; and the 24th, barring state poll taxes in federal elections.

The lone dissenter, Circuit Court Judge Carl McGowan, said the court need proceed no further than Article IV, Section 3 of the Constitution to find Congressional power to enact the American flag provision. That power, he said, stemmed from Congress' authority to "make all needful rules and regulations" in respect to American territories. Since Puerto Rico was a territory, and since Congress sanctioned schools teaching only Spanish there, it followed that Congress could secure the right to vote to Puerto Ricans choosing to move to the mainland, the judge said.

Alabama Suit. A three-judge federal district court in Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 23 nullified a state court injunction which restrained six county probate judges from registering voters already certified by federal registrars under terms of the Act. The ruling thus legally freed the county probate judges to add federally certified voters to state voter rolls.

The court said that it presumed the Act to be constitutional and valid, and it noted that jursidiction over declaratory judgments on the Act was vested exclusively by Congress in federal courts in the District of Columbia. Thus a state court injunction interfering with implementation of the Act must be without effect, the court said. The court retained jurisdiction over the case to protect the county probate judges from any punishment for violating the terms of the state court injunction, although it said it foresaw no attempt at such punishment.

GOP CIVIL RIGHTS STATEMENT

The Republican Coordinating Committee Sept. 2 adopted a statement on civil rights which went substantially beyond the civil rights plank in the 1964 Republican platform. The statement, formulated by the Committee's task force on Human Rights and Responsibilities, outlined the following major proposals:

- Additional legislation to eliminate vote fraud.
- "Immediate and full" implementation of the Attorney General's authority under the 1964 Civil Rights Act (PL 88-352) to bring about a speedy desegregation of all schools.
- "Full and energetic" use of technical aids and services authorized by PL 88-352 to ease difficulties encountered by Southern school districts as they desegregate.
- An "accelerated" effort to implement the PL 88-352 bans on discrimination in employment and in public accommodations and public facilities.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL AGENCIES

President Johnson Sept. 24 ordered a reorganization of functions in various federal agencies and Departments involved in civil rights activities.

The shifting of activities, based on recommendations by Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, was designed to eliminate the confusion and duplication of a structure produced under a series of Executive Orders and civil rights acts. Under the plan, each officer and employee of the Federal Government who administered a federal program would bear full responsibility for enforcing the ban against discrimination in his own area.

The major body to be shifted was the Community Relations Service, a mediation group under the Department of Commerce. It was to be transferred to the Department of Justice, bringing under a single department the authority to decide whether mediation or legal action should be employed to resolve a given dispute. This feature of the plan could not take effect until 1966, however, because the President first had to submit a reorganization plan to Congress.

Other features, all of which were put into effect by the Executive Order:

- Eliminated the President's Committee on Equal Employment policies in the Federal Government and among Government contractors. Supervision of federal employment practices was reassigned to the Civil Service Commission, while responsibliity for ensuring non-discrimination by Government contractors was vested in the Secretary of Labor. Supervision of fair job practices in private employment remained the task of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

- Eliminated the President's Council on Equal Opportunity created Feb. 5 by Executive Order. The Council was a coordinating arm of federal civil rights policies, particularly those involving possible withdrawal of aid funds under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. With Title VI questions moving into the enforcement stage, coordination would be the responsibility of the Justice Department.

- Shifted the clearinghouse and data-gathering functions of the Community Relations Service to the Civil Rights Commission, which already performed similar fact-finding tasks.

NEGRO RIOTS

Just as the machinery of the Voting Rights Act was going into motion in the South, a wave of racial violence swept three non-southern cities -- Los Angeles, Chicago and Springfield, Mass.

Los Angeles. The rioting in Los Angeles was the first to erupt and the last to subside. Touched off Aug. 11 when a white California Highway Patrolman stopped a weaving car and gave its Negro driver a sobriety test, violence raged for six days before a combined force of 15,000 California National Guardsmen and 1,000 law enforcement officers was able to restore order.

At the height of the rioting, Negroes rushed at will through streets of the predominantly Negro Watts district, throwing bottles, setting fire to buildings and stores, and saturating the area with gunfire. The six days of terrorism left 34 dead, 856 injured and damage approaching $200 million. More than 3,100 were arrested on charges ranging from murder to disturbing the peace.

In terms of death and destruction, the Los Angeles riot was the worst racial disorder in the nation's history. Sociologists attributed the major cause of the violence to massive unemployment. At the time of the Aug. 11 outburst, 34 percent of the population in the Watts district was unemployed.

Chicago. Chicago's worst racial rioting in 13 years broke out Aug. 11 when a runaway fire engine killed a Negro woman bystander in a predominantly Negro West Side neighborhood. In a two-day battle between police and Negroes, 80 persons were injured and 123 arrested. A force of 2,000 Illinois National Guardsmen was called to the alert over the weekend to prevent a recurrence of violence.

Springfield, Mass. Rioting in Springfield erupted Aug. 13 after 24 civil rights demonstrators were arrested for blocking the City Hall steps in an around-the-clock vigil protesting alleged police brutality. Until the early morning hours of Aug. 15, mobs roared through the city, setting fire to several white-owned stores. Forty Negroes and four whites were arrested.

Reaction, McCone Commission. President Johnson Aug. 14 described the Los Angeles rioting as "tragic and shocking." He said, "To resort to terror and violence...strikes from the hand of the Negro the very weapon with which he is achieving his own emancipation." Mr. Johnson added, however, that it was "not enough simply to decry disorder. We must also strike at the unjust conditions from which disorder largely flows...."

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D), who returned to Los Angeles from a vacation in Europe, said Aug. 15 that Los Angeles rioting had done "irreparable harm" to the civil rights movement. Brown said he was in complete accord with the methods used by National Guard and police authorities to end the disorders. Brown Aug. 19 appointed a panel of eight members headed by former Central Intelligence Director John A. McCone to investigate the causes of the riots and determine measures to prevent their recurrence. (See report, below)

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.) Aug. 15 called for a prompt Congressional investigation of possible subversive influences in civil rights groups as a result of the riots. Stressing the importance of avoiding a "witch hunt," Ford said the inquiry should be "aimed at some legislative purpose." (By the end of 1965, no steps had been taken to begin the inquiry.)

Under Secretary of Commerce LeRoy Collins, sent by President Johnson to confer with Los Angeles officials, Aug. 23 announced that an agreement had been reached on establishment in Los Angeles of a new citywide anti-poverty agency. The new administrative body would be called the Economic and Youth Opportunities Agency. Collins said the agency had been approved by federal and local officials.

Los Angeles Aid. President Johnson Sept. 2 approved $29 million in federal projects for Los Angeles to help prevent a recurrence of riots such as those that broke out Aug. 11 in the Watts district. The projects -- approximately 45 in number -- would be implemented through various state and local government units and private welfare groups. Mr. Johnson acted after the Presidential Task Force to Coordinate Los Angeles Rehabilitation Programs, which he appointed after the riots, issued its interim report. The task force had been instructed to report on making "available the best programs now known to wipe out the causes of violent outbursts such as those witnessed in Los Angeles...." The task force, headed by Deputy Attorney General Ramsey Clark, recommended various educational training and health programs.

Watts Report. The McCone Commission Dec. 6 reported on its investigation of the Los Angeles riots, urging a "revolutionary attitude" toward city problems and calling for many costly, wide-ranging programs to improve jobs, education, and police-community relations for Negroes and Mexican Americans in that city.

While no single cause was pinpointed, the report found a sense of despair and a "spiral of failure" among Negroes who migrated to Los Angeles during and after World War II and complacency within the white community about conditions of Negro life. In the 12 months preceding the riots, the report identified three "aggravating events" -- exhortations by national civil rights leaders for greater civil disobedience, passage of Proposition 14 to repeal California's fair housing law in 1964 and publicity about Los Angeles' anti-poverty programs which "did not live up to their press notices."

As the immediate cause of the riots, the report pointed to the arrest of a 21-year-old Negro on a reckless driving charge Aug. 11. The report also said it "gave considerable attention to the reporting of inflammatory incidents which occurred in the initial stage" of the riots, and called for "restraint" by news media.

CIVIL RIGHTS OVERSIGHT

Subcommittee No. 5 of the House Judiciary Committee, which had jurisdiction over civil rights matters, Oct. 13 designated a special three-man group to report by Jan. 30, 1966, on the need for continuing Congressional oversight of the effectiveness of the Voting Rights Act.

One of the questions to be considered by the group was whether the Judiciary Committee should ask the House for subpena power and investigating funds.

The group, known as the Ad Hoc Advisory Committee on Voting and Civil Rights, had Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.) as its chairman and Reps. James C. Corman (D Calif.) and Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) as its other members. On Oct. 26-28 they held a series of conferences with representatives of federal and private agencies interested in civil rights matters. Participants included Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach and John Doar, Assistant Attorney General, Civil Rights Division, Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz, Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel, Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy Jr., Under Secretary of Commerce LeRoy Collins, and representatives of the Office of Economic Opportunity, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Census Bureau, the Departments of Agriculture, Defense and Interior, the Civil Rights Commission, Americans for Democratic Action, the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the American Civil Liberties Union, the AFL-CIO and the American Jewish Committee.

FEDERAL RACE GUIDELINES

Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach Dec. 27 issued "Guidelines for Enforcement of Title VI," referring to that title of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which required desegregation of federally aided facilities and programs.

Copies of the Guidelines were sent to heads of 21 departments and agencies having enforcement responsibilities under Title VI, and Katzenbach said a training program for agency compliance officers would begin within 45 to 60 days.

In a letter accompanying the Guidelines, the Attorney General said: "There should be no mistaking the clear intent and effect of the Guidelines -- Title VI must and will be enforced. Assistance will be refused or terminated to noncomplying recipients and applicants who are not amenable to other sanctions."

The Guidelines placed a strong emphasis on voluntary compliance, and urged federal officials to exhaust all possibilities of obtaining voluntary compliance before resorting to the "ultimate sanctions" of the law -- terminating or withholding federal funds because of the failure of the state or local agency to meet the desegregation requirements.

The Guidelines noted that under Section 602 of the Title, the "ultimate sanctions" could not be invoked until the federal agency concerned determined that voluntary compliance could not be obtained, failed in alternative methods of carrying out the assistance programs, afforded the applicant a hearing and completed other procedures, including notifying the appropriate Congressional committee 30 days before cutting off funds. The last two requirements were added to the Act in floor amendments in the House. (For description of the Act, see 1964 CQ Almanac p. 338.)

As alternative methods of obtaining enforcement, the Guidelines mentioned court enforcement (of federal property rights, other sections of the Act or other laws, for example); administrative action through other federal or state agencies or by bypassing the "recalcitrant" state agency; and prompt and clear efforts to obtain voluntary compliance at the outset of every noncompliance situation.

On new applications for federal aid, the Guidelines said that when the required assurance of nondiscrimination in the program was not filed by the applicant, action "should" be deferred until Section 602 procedures were completed. If the federal agency had grounds to believe that the assurance was untrue or was not being honored, the agency head "may" defer action on the pending application until completion of Section 602 procedures, the Guidelines said.

In the case of a new application for a long-term program, the Guidelines said, deferral was "less appropriate because of the opportunity to secure full compliance during the life of the assistance program." Under such circumstances, the Guidelines suggested paying out funds to the applicant "for short periods only, with no long-term commitment of assistance given."

For applications for continuation or renewal of long-term, existing programs, the Guidelines also found deferral of funds inappropriate until Section 602 procedures were completed. Again, however, the device of short-term, periodic payments combined with insistence on compliance could be used. The Guidelines suggested, too, that, in cases of short-term, special projects, agency heads suspend normal procedures and attempt to gain rapid compliance, including notifying the Justice Department for possible use of court proceedings.

The Guidelines said that the same procedures applied for any subgrantees of federal funds; normally these were state agencies which received and in turn disbursed federal funds. The federal agency involved had responsibility for informing the subgrantee of its responsibilities, the Guidelines said.

The Guidelines said that the Justice Department should be notified "in advance" of applications on which action was to be deferred, hearings scheduled or refusals or termination of federal aid contemplated. The Department also was to be kept advised of other enforcement actions, the Guidelines said.

Federal Aid Cutoff Prompted Limited School Desegregation

The opening of the 1965-66 academic year marked a milestone in efforts to end public school segregation in southern and border states. It also underlined the difficulty of bringing about integration in some areas on more than a token scale.

By the time most classes had begun, approximately 89 percent of the school districts in the 17 southern and border states had met the federal requirement of integrating at least four classes, making the districts eligible to continue receiving federal aid payments. By Oct. 1, Negro enrollment in integrated schools in these areas had increased by 56 percent over 1964. These statistics taken alone, however, were misleading. This was because many of the newly integrated schools and districts had only a few Negroes attending classes with white students. Thus, while the percentage of integrated school districts was high, the actual number of Negro children attending integrated classes was, by comparison, low.

Background

The basis for desegregation of public elementary and secondary schools was Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (PL 88-352). Title VI barred discrimination against any person because of his race, color or national origin under any program or activity receiving federal assistance. It directed each federal agency or department extending financial assistance through grants, loans or most kinds of contracts to issue rules or regulations, to be approved by the President, to carry out the purposes of the Title. It also required that to enforce the Title, agencies had first to seek voluntary compliance. If that was not forthcoming, agencies were authorized, after giving opportunity for hearing and after giving the appropriate committees of Congress 30-day notices, to cut off aid to the recipient or political entity. (1964 Almanac p. 340)

HEW Regulations. Regulations implementing the provisions of Title VI for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) were printed in the Federal Register Dec. 4, 1964, and became effective 30 days later. They stipulated that elementary or secondary schools or school systems would be deemed to have satisfied the requirements of Title VI if the school or school system: (1) was subject to a U.S. court order for desegregation and provided assurance that it would comply with the order, including any future modifications, or (2) submitted a desegregation plan, which would be approved by the commissioner of education as being adequate to accomplish the purpose of the Civil Rights Act, and provided "reasonable assurance that it will carry out such a plan...." The regulations listed 25 state-administered continuing programs and 69 other programs to which the regulations applied. The regulations stated that the fact that a program or activity was not listed did not mean, if Title VI was otherwise applicable, that such a program was not covered.

Statement of Policy. In April 1965, the Office of Education released a statement of policy to serve as the basic guideline for the commissioner in implementing Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The five-page document was entitled "General Statement of Policies under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 Respecting Desegregation of Elementary and Secondary Schools."

The statement opened: "Title VI of the Civil Rights Act prohibits the extension of federal financial assistance to any dual or segregated system of schools based on race, color or national origin. To be eligible to receive or to continue to receive such assistance, school officials must eliminate all practices characteristic of such dual or segregated school systems."

Under its discussion of plans for the desegregation of schools, the statement set the fall of 1967 as the final target date for the extension of desegregation to all grades. It said, "Every school system beginning desegregation must provide for a substantial good faith start on desegregation starting with the 1965-66 school year, in light of the 1967 target date." The statement stipulated that such a "good faith start" should provide that desegregation would be extended to a minimum of four grades (or five grades in certain school systems) for the 1965-1966 school year. The statement said "the grades covered must include the first and any other lower grade, the first and last high school grades, and the lowest grade of junior high where schools are so organized."

The statement provided three methods of compliance with its desegregation requirement:

ASSURANCE OF COMPLIANCE -- The statement stipulated that a Form 441 that would qualify a school system for federal financial assistance could not be executed by a school system in which (a) pupils' race, color or national origin was a factor in their assignment, reassignment or transfer to a particular school or class; (b) teachers or other staff remained segregated; (c) any activity, facility or other service provided or sponsored by a school system was segregated; or (d) there remained "any other practices characteristic of dual or segregated school systems."

COURT ORDERS -- The statement stipulated that a court order, to be acceptable, must direct desegregation of the system. It was not sufficient for the order merely to direct school authorities to admit certain named persons or to fail to require the elimination of a dual or segregated system of schools based on race, color or national origin. School districts submitting final court orders were required to include copies of the order, together with an initial compliance report indicating the present state of compliance and the district's program for continued compliance.

DESEGREGATION PLANS -- School systems could also remain eligible for federal assistance by submitting a desegregation plan providing for the assignment, reassignment and transfer of pupils on the basis of geographic attendance areas, freedom of choice granted to pupils and their parents or guardians or a combination of the two. The statement said that while "the responsibility to eliminate segregation rests with the school authorities and is not satisfied by rules and practices which shift the burden... (to) persons previously discriminated against," desegregation of a school system could be initiated by a "free choice" plan meeting certain specified requirements. Among the specifications were those for announcement procedures to notify students and their parents of their freedom of choice of schools and criteria to be followed in case pupil placement selections would result in the overcrowding of specific schools.

Status of Desegregation

Viewed according to the number of school districts in the southern and border states that have met the requirements of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, progress toward school desegregation in those areas has been rapid. As the accompanying chart shows, a total of 4,491 districts out of the 5,044 in the two regions -- or 89 percent -- had met the requirements, as of Sept. 7, by submitting an acceptable Form 441, court order or desegregation plan.

The Office of Education, from which these figures were obtained, listed border states as Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee and West Virginia, and Southern states as Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia.

However, the statistical picture drawn by the figures on the chart was misleading. While the number of desegregated school districts had shown a dramatic increase in response to implementation of Title VI, the rise in the actual number of Negroes attending classes with whites, particularly in the South, was by no means as substantial.

During the 1964-65 school year, 66,135 Negroes -- 2.25 percent of the total Negro enrollment in the 11 Southern states -- attended classes with white students. Although enrollment increased to a level of 216,000 for the 1965-66 school year, it still comprised only 7.5 percent of the number of Negro pupils in those states. (Other, non-Government groups which followed desegregation progress placed the figure at about 5 percent.) In addition, some Negroes counted as attending integrated schools were enrolled at predominantly Negro schools with only a few white students. It was believed that many school districts which refused to comply received relatively small amounts of federal aid and apparently decided that the loss of funds would not be difficult to overcome.

Chicago School Controversy. U.S. Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel Oct. 1 announced that up to $34 million in federal funds would be withheld from the Chicago school system on grounds of "probable" racial discrimination in violation of Title VI. Keppel Oct. 5, however, reversed the decision following objections from Members of Congress, Chicago school officials and others.

The decision to freeze the funds resulted from an investigation by the Office of Education into a complaint filed in July by the Chicago Coordinating Council of Community Organizations, a group of 75 civil rights organizations. Reversal of the decision came after a meeting between Frank M. Whiston, president of the Chicago Board of Education, and Under Secretary of HEW Wilbur J. Cohen. Reportedly, Whiston consented to a three-point agreement, including the appointment of a group to study the Coordinating Council's complaints.

Noncompliance. U.S. Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel during the period of Sept. 13-17, 1965, deferred funds and sent hearing notices to 65 school districts charging probable noncompliance with Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. At that time, about 25,000 school districts received federal aid for education. All 65 districts which had failed to file papers with the Office of Education promising compliance with the Act were located in six Southern states: Alabama, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Georgia. Covington County, Miss., Oct. 26 became the first school district to appear at U.S. Office of Education hearings in Washington to face charges of noncompliance with Title VI. Spokesmen said it did not discriminate.

New Federal Civil Rights Laws Urged at Planning Conference

A planning session for the 1966 White House Conference on Civil Rights met in Washington Nov. 17-18. Participants urged increased enforcement of existing federal civil rights laws and enactment of new measures to attack problems of ghetto life and to protect civil rights workers in the South.

The session was convened at the direction of President Johnson to plan for the major conference, scheduled for the spring of 1966, and to suggest ideas for possible inclusion in the President's legislative proposals to the 2nd session of the 89th Congress.

The consensus of the 200 civil rights leaders and experts on Negro life appeared to be that the Government was not fully prosecuting its responsibilities under existing law. Specific areas discussed were school desegregation provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and voting registration provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. In addition, session participants expressed impatience with the reluctance of the Administration to use federal officers to protect civil rights workers in the South under terms of existing law.

President Johnson Nov. 16 took the initiative at a White House reception for the planning session participants. He said he would propose to Congress in January a law aimed at eliminating all-white juries in state trials in the South, that he would ask the Civil Rights Commission to study "de facto" segregation in schools nationwide (a request he made Nov. 17) and that he expected "immediate results" from a Justice Department directive to all federal agencies to "ferret out" discrimination in federal assistance programs without waiting for complaints.

Considerable discussion at the session was given to a report by former Assistant Secretary of Labor Daniel P. Moynihan which traced the breakdown of the family as a social unit within much of the Negro community. The report, made public by the Labor Department in September, had been a subject of controversy among civil rights leaders.

Background

The planning session had not been contemplated at all when President Johnson June 4 announced in a commencement address at Howard University that a White House Conference on Civil Rights would be convened in the fall of 1965 to explore the theme: "To Fulfill These Rights." The President detailed the complexity and consequences of racial discrimination and called upon the Conference to propose programs by which the Negro could move "beyond opportunity to achievement." (For partial text of the speech, see next page.)

Within a few weeks of the President's June address, Vice President Humphrey and several White House aides (including Lee C. White, the President's special counsel, and then special assistant to the President, Richard N. Goodwin) began informal discussions on the proposed Conference. Various Administration officials as well as visiting civil rights and church leaders were also consulted on an informal basis. From these sporadic talks emerged the realization that the problems outlined by the President were too large and complex to discuss without substantial planning, and without precise understanding of goals. A Conference could have been convened hastily, one Administration source told CQ, but probably would have served little purpose. "And we could not afford a failure," he added.

The idea of a planning session evolved from these staff talks, and President Johnson Oct. 5 announced this decision, saying: "Because of the gravity, scope and importance of this issue, it is apparent that it cannot be considered in an effective way without more extensive preparations." He described the session, however, as the one he had proposed in his Howard University address, adding that a "larger" conference would be held in the spring of 1966.

Planning for the planning session, in turn, was minimal. After the President Oct. 5 announced its top organizers, staff and secretarial help were assembled hurriedly in the following week and the group was given temporary space in a new federal office building near the White House. Actual participants in the planning session had not all been chosen and cleared with the White House less than two weeks before it was to begin.

The first progress report to the President from the planning session's organizers was issued Oct. 23. It characterized the meeting as the "first step" toward carrying out the President's pledge in his June 4 address.

PROPOSALS

Following agreed-upon procedure, the planning session did not adopt formal recommendations. Numerous proposals were offered, however, and were submitted in bulk form to the White House. Major proposals would:

- Provide a $100 billion "Freedom Budget" to attack the problems of ghetto life. The proposal was made by the session's honorary chairman, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and an AFL-CIO vice president.
- Implement a Nov. 14 recommendation of the Civil Rights Commission to use federal officers to prevent racial violence and protect civil rights workers. The proposal urged more vigorous federal voting registration and new laws to "reform" the jury system in areas practicing "segregated justice."
- Step up implementation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to pressure school systems into desegregating by the threat of withholding federal financial aid.
- Lower the voting age to 18 nationally; increase federal registrars to about 600 and provide them with mobile units and such public facilities as schools and libraries for registering Negroes; require compulsory registration for receipt of housing and welfare aid, and begin Government programs to stimulate registration instead of simply making registration possible.
- Open all schools to students in a community, discourage the "myths" of neighborhood schools and infallible tests and offer incentives to cities to build schools in the city core and on the border of city and suburb.
- Overhaul the jury system in segregated courts to include jury selection by computer and use of federal jury registrars.
- Match jobs with workers instead of vice-versa. The proposal was offered by Labor Secretary W. Willard Wirtz, who said that present approaches were not supplying jobs for the poor and unskilled.

Partial Text of President's Civil Rights Address at Howard

Following is a partial transcript of President Johnson's June 4 speech at Howard University, in which he announced plans for the White House Conference on Civil Rights:

. . . Nothing in any country touches us more profoundly, and nothing is more freighted with meaning for our own destiny than the revolution of the Negro American.

In far too many ways American Negroes have been another nation: deprived of freedom, crippled by hatred, the doors of opportunity closed to hope.

In our time change has come to this nation too. The American Negro, acting with impressive restraint, has peacefully protested and marched, entered the courtrooms and the seats of government, demanding a justice that has long been denied. The voice of the Negro was the call to action. But it is a tribute to America that, once aroused, the courts and the Congress, the President and most of the people, have been the allies of progress.

Thus we have seen the high court of the country declare that discrimination based on race was repugnant to the Constitution, and therefore void. We have seen in 1957, 1960, and again in 1964, the first civil rights legislation in this nation in almost an entire century. . . . .

The voting rights bill will be the latest, and among the most important, in a long series of victories. But this victory -- as Winston Churchill said of another victory for freedom -- "is not the end. It is not even the beginning of the end. But it is, perhaps the end of the beginning." . . . . .

The number of Negroes in schools of higher learning has almost doubled in fifteen years. The number of non-white professional workers has more than doubled in ten years. . . . But for the great majority of Negro Americans -- the poor, the unemployed, the uprooted and the dispossessed -- there is a much grimmer story. They still, as we meet here tonight, are another nation. Despite the court orders and the laws, despite the legislative victories and the speeches, for them the walls are rising and the gulf is widening. . . . . .

NEGROES TRAPPED IN POVERTY

First, Negroes are trapped -- as many whites are trapped -- in inherited, gateless poverty. They lack training and skills. They are shut in slums, without decent medical care. Private and public poverty combine to cripple their capacities.

We are trying to attack these evils through our poverty program, through our education program, through our medical care and our other health programs and a dozen more of the Great Society programs that are aimed at the root causes of this poverty.

We will increase, and we will accelerate, and we will broaden this attack in years to come until this most enduring of foes finally yields to our unyielding will. But there is a second cause -- much more difficult to explain, more deeply grounded, more desperate in its force. It is the devastating heritage of long years of slavery; and a century of oppression, hatred and injustice.

For Negro poverty is not white poverty. Many of its causes and many of its cures are the same. But there are differences -- deep, corrosive, obstinate differences -- radiating painful roots into the community, and into the family, and the nature of the individual.

These differences are not racial differences. They are solely and simply the consequence of ancient brutality, past injustice, and present prejudice. They are anguishing to observe. For the Negro they are a constant reminder of oppression. For the white they are a constant reminder of guilt. But they must be faced and they must be dealt with and they must be overcome, if we are ever to reach the time when the only difference between Negroes and whites is the color of their skin.

Nor can we find a complete answer in the experience of other American minorities. They made a valiant and a largely successful effort to emerge from poverty and prejudice.

But the Negro, like these others, will have to rely mostly on his own efforts. But he just can not do it alone. For they did not have the heritage of centuries to overcome, and they did not have a cultural tradition which had been twisted and battered by endless years of hatred and hopelessness, nor were they excluded -- these others -- because of race or color -- a feeling whose dark intensity is matched by no other prejudice in our society.

Nor can these differences be understood as isolated infirmities. They are a seemless web. They cause each other. They result from each other. They reinforce each other.

Much of the Negro community is buried under a blanket of history and circumstance. It is not a lasting solution to lift just one corner of that blanket. We must stand on all sides and we must raise the entire cover if we are to liberate our fellow citizens.

One of the differences is the increased concentration of Negroes in our cities. More than 73 percent of all Negroes live in urban areas compared with less than 70 percent of the whites. Most of these Negroes live in slums. Most of these Negroes live together -- a separated people.

Men are shaped by their world. When it is a world of decay, ringed by an invisible wall, when escape is arduous and uncertain, and the saving pressures of a more hopeful society are unknown, it can cripple the youth and it can desolate the man.

There is also the burden that a dark skin can add to the search for a productive place in society. Unemployment strikes most swiftly and broadly at the Negro, and this burden erodes hope. Blighted hope breeds despair. Despair brings indifference to the learning which offers a way out. And despair, coupled with indifference, is often the source of destructive rebellion against the fabric of society.

There is also the lacerating hurt of early collision with white hatred or prejudice, distaste or condescension. Other groups have felt similar intolerance. But success and achievement could wipe it away. They do not change the color of a man's skin. I have seen this uncomprehending pain in the eyes of the little Mexican-American schoolchild that I taught many years ago. But it can be overcome. But, for many, the wounds are always open.

'YEARS OF DEGRADATION'

Perhaps most important -- its influence radiating to every part of life -- is the breakdown of the Negro family structure. For this, most of all, white America must accept responsibility. It flows from centuries of oppression and persecution of the Negro man. It flows from the long years of degradation and discrimination, which have attacked his dignity and assaulted his ability to provide for his family.

This, too, is not pleasant to look upon. But it must be faced by those whose serious intent is to improve the life of all Americans.

Only a minority -- less than half -- of all Negro children reach the age of 18 having lived all their lives with both of their parents. Probably a majority of all Negro children receive Federally aided public assistance sometime during their childhood.

The family is the cornerstone of our society. More than any other force it shapes the attitude, the hopes, the ambitions, and the values of the child. And when the family collapses it is the children that are usually damaged. When it happens on a massive scale the community itself is crippled.

So, unless we work to strengthen the family, to create conditions under which most parents will stay together -- all the rest: schools, and play grounds, and public assistance, and private concern, will never be enough to cut completely the circle of despair and deprivation.

There is no single easy answer to all of these problems. Jobs are part of the answer. They bring the income which permits a man to provide for his family. Decent homes in decent surroundings and a chance to learn -- an equal chance to learn -- are part of the answer. Welfare and social programs better designed to hold families together are part of the answer. Care for the sick is part of the answer. An understanding heart by all Americans is another big part of the answer. And to all these fronts -- and a dozen more -- I will dedicate the expanding efforts of the Johnson Administration.

But there are other answers still to be found. Nor do we fully understand even all of the problems. Therefore, I want to announce tonight that this fall I intend to call a White House conference of scholars, and experts, and outstanding Negro leaders -- men of both races -- and officials of Government at every level.

FAIR EMPLOYMENT

HR 10065 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 718) Aug. 3, 1965.

Congress in 1965 did not complete action on a bill (HR 10065) broadening and strengthening Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which prohibited employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

The fair employment bill was reported by the House Education and Labor Committee Aug. 3 and was cleared for floor consideration when the House Sept. 13, by a 259-121 roll-call vote, adopted an open rule under the special 21-day procedure. This procedure was used because the bill had been before the Rules Committee for 21 days without being granted a rule. (See story p. 585; for voting, see p. 1000)

Floor action was scheduled for Oct. 13, but was postponed until the 1966 session because of the controversial nature of the bill and the leadership's effort to adjourn Congress as soon as was possible.

HR 10065 was the Education and Labor Committee's version of a bill (HR 9222) sponsored by the Committee's Chairman Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.). The committee bill was supported by civil rights groups, but not by the Administration.

Background

The 1964 Civil Rights Act provided that, beginning July 2, 1965, employers in industry who employed 100 persons or more for 20 or more weeks a year would be covered by the provisions of Title VII, as well as unions with 100 or more members, union hiring halls and employment agencies. The following year industries and unions with 75 or more workers would be covered and by the fifth year those with 25 workers would be covered. The title established an Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to enforce the section and investigate alleged violations. No complaint could be filed with the EEOC until 60 days after it had been presented to a state fair employment agency. If the EEOC failed within 60 days to solve the problem through voluntary cooperation of the employer or union, the complainant could file a civil suit. (1964 Almanac p. 340)

The Senate May 26 confirmed President Johnson's nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. as chairman of the EEOC.

Powell June 10, 1965, following committee approval of a bill to repeal the "right-to-work" Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley law, said he would not support repeal unless a bill strengthening federal curbs on racial discrimination were passed. Powell did not hold to this threat, but June 21 he introduced HR 9222, to extend immediate coverage to all businesses or labor unions employing eight or more persons for 20 or more weeks a year; to give the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission power to issue "cease and desist" orders, which would be enforceable in court; and to reduce the authority of state fair employment commissions by eliminating the 60-day period during which a state has jurisdiction and the federal agency does not.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The General Labor Subcommittee of the House Education and Labor Committee July 26 approved HR 9222 with amendments. The amendments extended Title VII coverage to businesses with 100 or more employees on enactment of the bill. (This change had no practical effect because Title VII, as enacted in 1964, already covered businesses of this size, effective July 2, 1965. However, the Subcommittee amendments also provided that Title VII would apply to businesses with 50 or more employees beginning July 2, 1966, and to businesses with eight or more employees beginning July 2, 1967. Title VII as enacted in 1964 never covered businesses with fewer than 25 employees and applied to firms of that size only after July 2, 1968.)

The Subcommittee amendments did not change the provision in HR 9222, as introduced by Powell, extending Title VII coverage on enactment of the bill to unions with eight or more members. This section did change Title VII which, as enacted in 1964, provided the same size definition for unions as was provided for businesses.

Following subcommittee approval, the amended HR 9222 was reintroduced as a clean bill, HR 10065. The House Education and Labor Committee July 27 approved HR 10065 without change. HR 10065 was reported Aug. 3 (H Rept 718).

Majority Views. The Committee report said that the "evidence before the Committee makes it abundantly clear that job opportunity discrimination permeates the national social fabric -- North, South, East and West." It noted that "employment practices commonly failed to conform to the written tradition and professed position of our nation as regards the venerable principles of liberty, equality of opportunity and the immutable dignity of man."

Minority Views. Rep. Dave Martin (R Neb.) called the legislation "premature," contending that "changes in the law may very possibly be necessary, but they most certainly cannot be ascertained after only 2½ weeks of experience." (Title VII became effective July 2, 1965.)

Rep. Glenn Andrews (R Ala.) termed the bill "ill-timed and unnecessary." He said, "I reject the principle that to be touched at all by government is to become automatically clothed with a public interest requiring that the individual touched become a vassal to whatever the majority may demand. When an individual risks his own capital and employs eight people, his capital, and his alone, is at stake and it is not a matter of public concern that he fail or not fail. The prerogative should be entirely his and whomever he hires is an important part of his success or failure."

Major Provisions. Extended the coverage of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act (outlawing employment practices based on grounds of race, color, religion, sex or national origin) to businesses with 100 or more employees effective on enactment of the bill, to businesses with 50 or more employees effective July 2, 1966, and to businesses with eight or more employees effective July 2, 1967. Extended Title VII coverage to unions with eight or more members effective on enactment of the bill. Empowered the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue "cease and desist" orders (enforceable in court requiring employers or unions to halt illegal employment practices and to take required affirmative action such as reinstating or hiring employees) to carry out the purposes of Title VII. (Under Title VII as enacted in 1964, the Commission's powers were limited to investigation and conciliation of alleged illegal employment practices. If conciliation failed, the aggrieved individual had to bring a civil law suit to stop the objectionable practice.)

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT ON PRESIDENCY

S J Res 1 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 66) Feb. 10, 1965.

● Passed, amended, by the Senate on a 72-0 roll-call vote Feb. 19. (See p. 1029)

H J Res 1 -- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 203) March 24.

S J Res 1 -- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House after H J Res 1 had been passed on a 368-29 roll-call vote April 13. (See p. 952)

● Conference report (H Rept 564) agreed to by the House by voice vote June 30 and by the Senate on a 68-5 roll-call vote July 6. (See p. 1055)

● Sent to the General Services Administration, for transmittal to the states, July 7.

Congress in 1965 proposed an amendment to the Constitution to provide for the exercise of Presidential power in the event of the President's disability and for the filling of a vacancy in the Vice Presidency. If ratified by three-fourths of the states, it would become the 25th Amendment to the Constitution.

The proposal ended a decade of Congressional consideration of the issue of Presidential disability and was intended to settle 175 years of doubt about the Constitution's machinery for dealing with temporary or permanent incapacitation of the President. The proposed amendment made no fundamental change in the constitutional scheme of Presidential succession. Rather, it was designed to clarify an area of uncertainty in accord with the apparent intentions of the framers of the Constitution.

By the end of 1965, 13 states out of the 38 necessary for final ratification had acted favorably on the measure. By its own terms, the amendment required final ratification by July 6, 1972, following the tradition that constitutional amendments must be ratified within seven years or fail of ratification. The amendment would be the first since the 24th Amendment, proposed Aug. 27, 1962, became effective Jan. 23, 1964. That amendment prohibited the levying of poll taxes in federal elections.

In brief, the proposed 25th Amendment provided for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President and for the Vice President to become Acting President upon the President's own decision that he was disabled.

Further, it provided that the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet or other body designated by Congress could declare the President disabled, whereupon the Vice President would become Acting President. It established procedures for dealing with disagreement between the President and Vice President over the former's ability to perform his duties, the final resolution lying with Congress.

The Senate and House considered identical bills (S J Res 1, H J Res 1) but each passed a differing version. Changes in each instance were relatively minor, directed more at clarifying and tightening provisions of the original bill than at substance. The major difference between the House and Senate versions was over a time limit for decision by Congress in the event that the Vice President and majority of the Cabinet challenged a formal declaration by the President that his disability had ended. The House insisted a time limit must be set, and its position prevailed in conference.

The amendment was cleared for submittal to the states on July 6.

Opposition in the House was minimal and scattered over various points of argument. Late opposition arose in the Senate, which had approved the proposed amendment unanimously in 1964 and 1965. Some Senators feared that language permitting Congress in the future to set up a body to determine with the Vice President the extent of disability of the President might invite a power struggle for the Executive post. Some said the Vice President might "shop around" for support among either the Cabinet or the body designated by Congress, drumming up votes to declare the President disabled.

Conceding that any provision of the Constitution was open to interpretation, supporters of the measure held that in an emergency, in an atmosphere of national crisis, the nation's leaders could be expected to act in the highest interests of the people, rather than out of personal ambition.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the states, S J Res 1 proposed an amendment (the 25th) to the Constitution replacing Article II, Section 1, Clause 5 and providing that:

The Vice President shall become President on the removal from office, death or resignation of the President.

If the Vice President's office is vacant, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office when confirmed by a majority vote of the House and Senate.

Whenever the President informs Congress that he is unable to perform his duties, the Vice President shall become Acting President and remain so until the President informs Congress that the disability has ended.

Whenever the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet or other body designated by Congress inform Congress that the President is disabled, the Vice President shall immediately become Acting President.

As soon as the President informs Congress that no disability exists, he shall resume his powers unless within four days the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet or other body designated by Congress inform Congress that the President is disabled.

In that event, Congress shall resolve the issue within 21 days. If the House and Senate determine, by two-thirds vote, that the President is disabled, the Vice President shall continue as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume his powers.

Background

REFERENCES -- Congress and the Nation p. 1436; 1964 Almanac p. 405.

The proposed 25th Amendment found its origin in decisions taken in the closing days of the Constitutional Convention. On Sept. 7, 1787, delegates to the Convention settled on the language of Article II, Section 1, Clause 6, which said:

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or at his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected."

While some authorities continued to refer to this passage as Clause 6, Congress considered it to be Clause 5, because the 20th Amendment (1933), dealing with the electoral college, superseded Clause 3 of the Article, even though it did not specifically repeal it.

The original language of the Clause generated debate in the Convention about what would happen if the President was disabled. John Dickinson of Delaware Sept. 7, 1787, told his fellow delegates the language was "too vague" and asked: "What is the extent of the term 'disability', and who is to be the judge of it?"

Despite the ambiguity of the Clause, its language included the phrase "act as President," which appeared to establish precedent for the "Acting President" title used in the proposed 25th Amendment. It was settled in 1841, when Vice President John Tyler succeeded President William Henry Harrison, that a Vice President should become President, and not Acting President, on the death of the Chief Executive.

STATUTES ON SUCCESSION

Congress provided three times for succession to the Presidency. By the Act of March 1, 1792, it provided for succession (after the Vice President) to the President pro tempore of the Senate, then to the House Speaker; but if those offices were vacant, states were to send electors to choose a new President. Corwin commented in "The Constitution of the United States" that "it is unlikely that Congress ever passed a more ill-considered law" since it violated the separation of powers concept and since it was doubtful that either the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker was an "officer" in the sense of Clause 5 language.

That law stood until passage of the Presidential Succession Act of Jan. 19, 1886, which changed the line of succession to the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury and so on through the Cabinet.

Sixty years later, the Act of July 18, 1947, (still in force) placed the Speaker and the President pro tempore of the Senate ahead of Cabinet officers in succession after the Vice President.

The United States has been without a Vice President 16 times, for a total of almost 40 years, either when the elected Vice President succeeded to the Presidency, died or, on one occasion (John C. Calhoun), resigned. The country has never been without both a President and a Vice President. (See table of Incompleted Terms of Presidents and Vice Presidents, 1964 Almanac p. 407)

PRESIDENTIAL DISABILITIES

Over the years, two serious disabilities occurred in the Presidency. President James A. Garfield lingered near death for 80 days after being shot in 1881, and President Woodrow Wilson was virtually incommunicado for months after suffering a stroke in 1919. In neither case did Vice Presidents Chester A. Arthur (under Garfield) or Thomas R. Marshall (under Wilson) take any action toward assuming the office of the Presidency for fear that they would appear to be attempting to usurp its powers.

President Dwight D. Eisenhower had a heart attack in September 1955, an operation for ileitis in June 1956 and a mild cerebral occlusion in November 1957. Vice President Richard M. Nixon presided over meetings of the Cabinet and of the National Security Council during the periods of Mr. Eisenhower's disability. (1957 Almanac p. 681)

President Eisenhower's illness prompted Congress to consider the issue of disability in 1956, 1957 and 1958. When it took no action, Mr. Eisenhower and Nixon in 1958 agreed between themselves on the transfer of power temporarily to the Vice President as Acting President in the event of the President's disability. The change was to take place after the Vice President engaged in "such consultation as seems to him appropriate under the circumstances."

Text of Proposed Amendment

Following is the text of the constitutional amendment proposed by S J Res 1.

Section 1. In case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice President shall become President.

Sec. 2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, the President shall nominate a Vice President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both houses of Congress.

Sec. 3. Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice President as Acting President.

Sec. 4. Whenever the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the Executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within forty-eight hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within twenty-one days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within twenty-one days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

President John F. Kennedy and Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson made the same agreement in 1961, adding that "consultation" should include the Cabinet. President Johnson and Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.) also made the same agreement following Mr. Kennedy's assassination, and the practice was followed by President Johnson and Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey. (For text, see box)

The legality of the arrangement was questioned by some, and it was never tested in the courts.

SENATE ACTS ON DISABILITY

Congress next considered the disability question in 1964, spurred by the assassination of President Kennedy Nov. 22, 1963, and aware that President Johnson had suffered a severe heart attack in 1955 and that the next in line of succession was Speaker McCormack, then 72 years old.

The Senate Sept. 29, 1964, passed 65-0 a bill (S J Res 139) which paralleled in all major respects the provisions of the amendment submitted to the states in 1965. The 1964 bill, however, omitted a time limit for Congress to resolve disputes between the President and Vice President over Presidential disability and it did not include provision for a recall of Congress once it had adjourned. (See text of S J Res 1, p. 574, and summary of S J Res 139 in 1964 Almanac, p. 405.)

The House took no action on S J Res 139, partly out of concern that to do so might be taken as an insult to the Speaker by implying that he was unfit to assume the Presidency because of his age. The election of President Johnson and Vice President Humphrey in 1964 for full four-year terms relieved that tension and cleared the way for Congressional action on the issue in 1965.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) Jan. 4, 1965, and Sen. Birch Bayh (D Ind.) and others Jan. 6 introduced identical bills (H J Res 1, S J Res 1) which, in turn, were identical to the Senate-passed bill (S J Res 139) of 1964.

Presidential Endorsement

President Johnson Jan. 28 sent to Congress a message urging passage of S J Res 1 and H J Res 1 and calling for reform in electoral college voting. (For text see p. 1407)

The transmittal of the message followed several days of Presidential illness and of some confusion. The President was inaugurated Jan. 20 and entered the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md., Jan. 23 with a severe head cold. On Jan. 21, White House Press Secretary George E. Reedy announced that the President and Vice President had reached no such agreement on the transfer of power as had existed between President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon. A few days of confusion ensued until Jan. 27, when Reedy announced that such an agreement had been reached even before Inauguration Day, but that it had not been signed because there was "no necessity for a great, binding contract." (For text of agreement, see box)

The following day, Mr. Johnson's message called for reform of three "defects" in the Constitution: Presidential disability, a vacancy in the Vice Presidency and electoral college voting.

Warning of the dangers of uncertainty in the event the President was disabled, Mr. Johnson said: "A nation bearing the responsibilities we are privileged to bear for our own security -- and the security of the Free World -- cannot justify the appalling gamble of entrusting its security to the immobilized hands or uncomprehending mind of a Commander-in-Chief unable to command."

As to a vacancy in the Vice Presidency, Mr. Johnson said that the office must "at all times" be occupied by a person who was ready and able to fill the Chief Executive's duties. "Its occupancy on a full-time basis is imperative," he said.

The President specifically endorsed S J Res 1 and H J Res 1, urging Congress to "approve them forthwith for submission to ratification by the states."

ELECTORAL COLLEGE REFORMS

On the subject of electoral college reforms, the President submitted to Congress a draft constitutional amendment requiring that the electoral votes of a state be cast for those persons receiving the greatest number of votes for President and Vice President -- and "for no one else." Under existing law, Presidential and Vice Presidential electors were not legally bound to vote for the candidates winning their respective states.

The President also proposed the following other revisions in the electoral college system: that if the President-elect dies after the November election but before the Jan. 20 inauguration, the Vice President-elect should become President when the new term begins; that if the Vice President-elect dies during the same period, the President-elect, upon taking office, should follow the procedures for filling the Vice Presidency

Text of Agreement

The White House Oct. 5 issued the following statement on the Presidential disability agreement between President Johnson and Vice President Humphrey. The agreement was the same one, announced Jan. 27, that was made between Mr. Johnson and the Vice President prior to the Jan. 20 inauguration.

The following procedures, which are identical to the procedures adopted by President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon as well as President Kennedy and Vice President Johnson, have been agreed upon by President Johnson and Vice President Humphrey:

(1) In the event of inability the President would -- if possible -- so inform the Vice President, and the Vice President would serve as Acting President, exercising the powers and duties of the Office until the inability had ended.

(2) In the event of an inability which would prevent the President from so communicating with the Vice President, the Vice President, after such consultation as seems to him appropriate under the circumstances, would decide upon the devolution of the powers and duties of the Office and would serve as Acting President until the inability had ended.

(3) The President, in either event, would determine when the inability had ended and at that time would resume the full exercise of the powers and duties of the office.

outlined by S J Res 1 and H J Res 1; and that if the President-elect and Vice President-elect both die during this same period, "Congress should be made responsible for providing the method of selecting officials for both positions."

Under existing law, if the President-elect and/or Vice President-elect dies after the November election but before the electoral college casts its votes, the electoral college is free to choose any replacements since it is not legally bound to vote for the candidates winning in each state. However, if the President-elect dies after the electoral college casts its votes but before the inauguration, the Vice President-elect would become President. (Barring ratification of the amendment proposed in S J Res 1, if the Vice President-elect dies, that office would remain vacant.) If both the President-elect and Vice President-elect die during this same period, the House Speaker elected by the new Congress would become President, as prescribed by the Presidential Succession Act of 1947.

No action was taken on the proposal in 1965.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- Jan. 29 on a bill (S J Res 1) proposing to amend the Constitution to provide for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President and for the Vice President to become Acting President in the event of the President's inability to perform the duties of his office. (The Subcommittee had held two days of hearings in 1963 and six days of hearings in 1964 on similar proposals. The Senate passed a proposed inability amendment on Sept. 29, 1964. See 1964 Almanac p. 406, 408)

S J Res 1 was introduced Jan. 6 by Subcommittee Chairman Birch Bayh (D Ind.) and others.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 29 -- Acting Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach testified in support of S J Res 1, reaffirming his opinion "that the only satisfactory method of settling the problem of Presidential inability is by constitutional amendment." Stressing the need for a "lasting and complete solution," Katzenbach noted that such informal inability "understandings" as those concluded by the Eisenhower-Nixon, Kennedy-Johnson, Johnson-McCormack and Johnson-Humphrey Administrations had gone far "toward establishing a settled practice" but "leave much to be desired...and make no provision for the situation that would exist if the President and Vice President were to disagree on the question of inability."

As the factual situations with which S J Res 1 was designed to deal were "numerous and complex," Katzenbach said, inevitably sections would "raise problems of ambiguity for some observers." To "minimize" ambiguity, Katzenbach gave his interpretation of five conceivably ambiguous provisions of the resolution: (1) Congress' majority vote confirming the nomination of a new Vice President and two-thirds vote resolving disagreement over termination of Presidential inability meant the votes of "those Members in each house present and voting, a quorum being present"; (2) Should a President voluntarily declare his own inability he would immediately resume his duties upon his written declaration that the inability had ended, and procedures providing for Congressional resolution of disagreement over termination of inability would be applicable only to instances where the President had been declared disabled without his consent; (3) A President, declared disabled without his consent, could resume his duties immediately, provided the Vice President concurred in the President's decision; (4) Transmission to a recessed or adjourned Congress of the written declarations of a President declaring his inability ended and of a disagreeing Vice President would operate to convene a special session of Congress to deal with the matter; and (5) The language requiring Congress to "immediately decide" the issue of disagreement between the President and Vice President over whether inability had ended meant that if a decision was not reached by Congress "immediately," the duties of the office would revert to the President.

(According to a Subcommittee spokesman, all of Katzenbach's interpretations were generally accepted by the Subcommittee, with the exception of the last interpretation. The Senate and House versions of the amendment subsequently disagreed on this issue. In the conference version of S J Res 1, Congress was given 21 days to decide whether a President's inability had ended, if it were challenged by the Vice President.)

Bar Assn. and CED Support the Bill

Representing the Committee for Economic Development (CED), Marion B. Folsom, former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare (1955-58), supported several of the provisions of S J Res 1, but objected to others. Folsom's objections were shared by Sen. Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.). Specifically, Folsom said the CED recommended the following modifications and clarifications: (1) Congressional confirmation of the nomination of a new Vice President should be through a joint session of Congress. Folsom said this would allow for "expeditious" action and would avoid the "unfortunate effects" of disagreement between the House and Senate meeting separately. (2) The initiative in determination of an undeclared Presidential inability should lie with the Cabinet, with the Vice President concurring, rather than vice versa. (The CED also opposed Congressional authority for creation of any alternative group to the Cabinet.) This, he said, would avoid the possibility of the Vice President being subject to suspicion of usurpation. (See Brownell response, below) (3) Termination of inability should be decided by the Cabinet, subject only to Presidential concurrence, rather than be submitted to Congress for a decision. Folsom said that under the language of S J Res 1, a President could declare his inability ended, "against the judgment of the Vice President supported by the entire Cabinet and a unanimous vote of the Senate, if only one-third of the House...were to agree with the President."

Folsom also testified that the CED supported a return to the terms of the Presidential Succession Act of 1886, which placed the Cabinet, rather than the House Speaker and Senate President pro tempore, next in the line of succession to the Presidency following the Vice President.

Representing the American Bar Assn. (ABA), Herbert Brownell, former Attorney General (1953-57), fully supported S J Res 1. In response to modifications proposed by Folsom (see above), Brownell said: Congress might object to the unorthodox procedure of meeting in joint session; the initiative in determination of Presidential inability, under S J Res 1, could be taken by either the Vice President or the Cabinet; and Congress, as the representative of the people, should have a decision-making role in an issue of termination of Presidential inability in order to remove any suspicion of a "coup d'etat" initiated by the Vice President.

Others testifying Jan. 29 either in support of S J Res 1 or a slightly modified version were: Sen. Jack Miller (R Iowa); Rep. Willard S. Curtin (R Pa.); Pennsylvania Supreme Court Judge Michael Musmanno; Prof. Robert L. Deasy, Providence College (R.I.); and Martin Taylor, representing the New York State Bar Assn.

BILL REPORTED

The Subcommittee Feb. 1 recommended S J Res 1 to the full Committee without amendment. The full Committee Feb. 10 reported the bill (S Rept 66) with technical amendments relating to transmittal of a President's written declaration of disability to Congress and to Congressional consideration of a disagreement between the Vice President and the President over the latter's disability.

The Committee amendments: (1) specifically designated the Senate President pro tempore and House Speaker to receive a President's written declaration that he was disabled and a Vice President's written declaration that Presidential inability had not terminated, and (2) provided that in the event the President and Vice President disagreed over termination of inability, Congress would "immediately proceed to decide," rather than just "immediately decide," the issue. The latter provision was designed to convene a special session of Congress in the event such an issue arose after Congress adjourned. (See Katzenbach interpretation, above)

Majority Views. The report said: "This amendment seeks to remove a vexatious constitutional problem from the realm of national concern. It seeks to concisely clarify the ambiguities of the present provision in the Constitution (Article II, Section 1, Clause 5). In so doing, it recognizes...the necessity to maintain continuity of the Executive power of the United States." Rebutting arguments that Congress should deal with the continuity problem by statute rather than by constitutional amendment, the report said, "We must not gamble with the constitutional legitimacy or our nation's Executive Branch .... Only a constitutional amendment can supply the necessary air of legitimacy."

Individual Views. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Sen. Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.), ranking Republican on the Committee, submitted separate individual views. They both urged that Congress adopt a broad constitutional amendment to establish Congress' unchallengeable right to legislate and then enact a statute to deal specifically with the problem of Presidential continuity. Dirksen said a statute would remove "the fear that we may embed in the Constitution procedures which may not turn out to be workable. If they are in a statute we can change them."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Feb. 19, by a 72-0 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of S J Res 1 and sent it to the House. (For voting, see chart. p. 1029)

Prior to passage, the Senate accepted two amendments by voice vote and rejected four others -- one, a complete substitute for S J Res 1, lost on a 12-60 roll-call vote.

In its major provisions, S J Res 1 provided that the Vice President would assume the "office" as well as the "duties and powers" of the President in the event of the latter's removal, death or resignation; in the event of the President's inability to carry out his duties, the Vice President would become Acting President.

The bill provided that if a vacancy in the office of Vice President occurred, the President would nominate a candidate for that office, subject to confirmation by a majority vote of both the House and Senate.

S J Res 1 spelled out the following procedure to deal with Presidential inability. The President could voluntarily declare his own inability and allow the Vice President to exercise the "powers and duties" of the Presidency as Acting President (the President could immediately resume his duties upon declaring his inability ended). If the President failed or was unable to declare his own inability, the Vice President, with the concurrence of a majority of the Cabinet (or another body specified by Congress), could declare the President disabled and immediately become Acting President. In such a case the President could resume his duties upon declaring his inability ended, unless the Vice President (who would still be Acting President) and a majority of the Cabinet disagreed, and transmitted their written opinion to Congress within seven days. Then, Congress would "immediately proceed to decide," by a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate acting separately, whether the President was able to resume the powers and duties of his office; meanwhile, the Vice President would continue to serve as Acting President.

During debate Feb. 19, there was general agreement that the constitutional authority to deal with Presidential succession and inability should be clarified. It was also agreed that the office of Vice President, which had been vacant a total of more than 37 years in the nation's history, should always be filled and that solving these problems required compromise and the formation of a "consensus." Debate centered primarily on (1) contingencies not covered by S J Res 1, such as what would happen if both the President and Vice President were disabled; (2) whether the language of S J Res 1 was specific enough to avoid delay in implementing its procedures; and (3) whether a constitutional amendment or a statute was the best method of prescribing procedures to determine Presidential inability.

In addition to adopting the committee amendments, the Senate also adopted, by voice vote, a floor amendment by Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.). It lengthened from two to seven days the period during which the Vice President and Cabinet could challenge a President's declaration that his inability had ended. Hruska said that additional time was necessary for the Vice President and Cabinet members to consider whether the President had recovered, particularly if some of these persons were traveling and had to return to Washington. The bill's floor manager, Birch Bayh (D Ind.), accepted the amendment.

The major amendment rejected was proposed by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.). The amendment, a substitute for S J Res 1, was rejected by a 12-60 roll-call vote (R 12-13; D 0-47). Instead of dealing with procedures for the determination of Presidential inability in a constitutional amendment, Dirksen proposed adoption of broad constitutional language to assure the authority of Congress to legislate on questions of inability. His proposal specifically allowed the Vice President to assume the powers and duties of a disabled President, but it left to Congress the authority to specify how the beginning and end of a disability would be determined. Dirksen argued that "we do not legislate in the Constitution. We try to keep the language simple." Opponents argued that only a constitutional amendment would provide the clear-cut authority necessary to assure Presidential continuity. Sam J. Ervin (D N.C.) also argued that a "power-hungry" Congress, by providing for Presidential inability by statute, might "take charge of the Presidency."

DEBATE -- Feb. 19 -- Bayh -- S J Res 1 "is an effort to guarantee continuity within the Executive Branch of Government. It is designed to provide that we shall always have a President physically and mentally alert. Second, and of equal importance, it is to assure that whoever the man be, there will be no question as to the legality of his authority to carry out the powers and duties of the office."

Hruska -- "It would be rather awkward, it seems to me, to overburden the Constitution with procedural details, better and more flexibly prescribed by statute, in an effort to foresee and imagine every possible eventuality and to meet every conceivable contingency."

Ervin -- S J Res 1 "provides the most practical and workable solution of this problem... It provides a very easy and painless process by which...disability can be established."

John Stennis (D Miss.) -- S J Res 1 "represents a consensus of legal and constitutional authorities."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Feb. 19 -- Birch Bayh (D Ind.) -- In the case where the President and Vice President disagreed over termination of Presidential inability, require that "the Vice President and a majority" of the Cabinet (rather than "the Vice President, with the concurrence of a majority" of the Cabinet) transmit their written challenge to "the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House..." (rather than "to the Congress"). Voice vote.

Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) -- Allow seven days (rather than two as provided in S J Res 1 as reported) during which the Vice President and the Cabinet or another body specified by Congress might challenge a President's declaration that his inability had ended and submit the issue to Congress for a decision. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Feb. 19 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Substitute for the wording of S J Res 1 new language proposing a constitutional amendment which states that the Vice President shall become President upon the removal, death or resignation of the President and that the Vice President shall become Acting President during a period of Presidential inability, but stipulating that Congress "may by law" provide for other cases of removal, death, resignation or inability of the President and/ or Vice President, as well as provide for determination of the commencement and termination of any inability. Roll-call vote, 12-60.

Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) -- Provide a procedure whereby a vacancy in the office of the Vice President would be filled by a vote of the electoral college. Voice.

Ross Bass (D Tenn.) -- (Substitute for pending Pastore amendment, below) -- Require that Congress "immediately" consider the nomination of a new Vice President. Voice.

John O. Pastore (D R.I.) -- Stipulate that whenever Congress considered the confirmation of a new Vice President or the issue of termination of Presidential inability, "no other business shall be transacted" until such issues were decided. Voice.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 9, 10, 16 and 17 on H J Res 1 and 31 similar proposals to amend the Constitution to provide for filling a vacancy in the office of Vice President and for the Vice President to become Acting President in the event of the President's inability to perform the duties of his office.

H J Res 1 was introduced Jan. 4 by Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.).

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 9 -- Sen. Birch Bayh (D Ind.) testified in support of the Senate bill and H J Res 1. In response to questions raised by Committee members who feared that the bills did not fully provide for all contingencies -- such as inability of both President and Vice President -- Bayh agreed that the Constitution should not be amended in a "hit or miss fashion" and that an amendment should "leave no doubt." However, he argued that the more complicated a constitutional amendment was made, the more difficulty there would be in having it ratified.

Rep. William M. McCulloch (R Ohio), the Committee's ranking Republican and sponsor of a slightly modified version (H J Res 119) of H J Res 1, said Congress should act "with all deliberate speed," but added that in writing a constitutional amendment "undue haste could lead to oversight, imperfection and regret."

Acting Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach urged approval of H J Res 1 to avoid "uncertainty, confusion and dissension at the very time of crisis." Katzenbach's testimony was substantially the same as that he gave on S J Res 1 Jan. 29.

Feb. 10 -- Several Representatives testified in support of their proposed constitutional amendments, which were either identical or similar to H J Res 1. The Representatives and their bills: Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), H J Res 129; John S. Monagan (D Conn.), H J Res 158; Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.), H J Res 183; William S. Moorhead (D Pa.), H J Res 219; and Rodney M. Love (D Ohio), H J Res 236.

Representing the Committee for Economic Development, Marion B. Folsom urged modifications of H J Res 1 similar to those he presented in Senate testimony.

Feb. 16 -- Martin Taylor, representing the New York State Bar Assn., urged the Committee to avoid writing detail into a constitutional amendment. He argued instead that specifics dealing with the problem of Presidential continuity be handled by statute.

Feb. 17 -- Lewis F. Powell Jr., president of American Bar Assn., and Herbert Brownell, former Attorney General (1953-57), said the Association supported H J Res 1. Powell said he had talked with state legislators in a number of states and found that they appeared to prefer a detailed amendment along the lines of H J Res 1.

BILL REPORTED

The Committee March 24 reported H J Res 1 (H Rept 203) with amendments. The bill was similar to the Senate-passed S J Res 1, but differed in certain procedural aspects and in relation to Congressional consideration of a disagreement between the Vice President and the President about the latter's disability.

Majority Views. The report said the Committee had adopted language to clarify the right of a President who voluntarily declared his own inability to resume his powers and duties immediately upon declaring his inability ended. It said, "To permit the Vice President and the Cabinet to challenge such an assertion of recovery might discourage a President from voluntarily relinquishing his powers in case of illnesses."

The report said other Committee revisions would require Congress, if not in session, to reconvene to decide on a question of disagreement between the President and Vice President over the termination of inability and set a definite time limit of 10 days on the period in which Congress must make a decision. "In this highly charged area there is no room for equivocation or delay," the report said.

Other Views. In "additional views," Rep. Edward Hutchinson (R Mich.) objected to the vagueness of several provisions of the bill. He said the bill "offers no hint that the determination of inability shall be based on medical or psychiatric evidence," so that a President might claim inability in order to avoid the responsibility of making an unpopular decision. To safeguard against this, he proposed that Congress be authorized to determine what constituted inability.

In "dissenting views," Rep. Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) opposed the provision allowing the President to fill a vacancy in the Vice Presidency. He said that because a national election, in which the President would be looking for an attractive running mate, would not be involved, the President might "hesitate in seeking a vigorous and aggressive Vice President."

Changes from Senate Bill. As reported, H J Res 1 differed from S J Res 1, the Senate-passed version, as follows:

- H J Res 1 provided that the Vice President would discharge the powers and duties of a President who voluntarily declared his own inability only until the President transmitted to Congress a written declaration stating that his inability had ended. This procedure was assumed, but not explicitly stated, by S J Res 1.
- H J Res 1 allowed the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet only two days, rather than seven days as under S J Res 1, in which to challenge the contention of a disabled President that his inability had ended.
- H J Res 1 provided that in the event of disagreement between the President and the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet over the termination of Presidential inability, Congress, if not in session, would immediately assemble to decide the issue within 10 days. S J Res 1 provided only that Congress would "immediately proceed to decide" such an issue; it did not place a time limit on the period in which a decision had to be made.

FLOOR ACTION

The House April 13, by a 368-29 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of H J Res 1, and then substituted the text of H J Res 1 for that of S J Res 1, which was passed by the Senate Feb. 19. (For voting, see chart p. 952) S J Res 1 then was passed by voice vote and sent to conference with the Senate.

Prior to passage, the House accepted by voice vote an amendment by Richard H. Poff (R Va.) stipulating that if Congress were not in session it would convene "within 48 hours" to decide a dispute between the President and Vice President about the President's inability. The amendment was approved by the bill's floor manager, Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.).

The House rejected four other proposed amendments and, by voice vote, a motion by Rep. Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) to recommit (kill) the bill.

Differences from Senate Version. H J Res 1, as passed by the House, differed from S J Res 1, as passed by the Senate, in the following respects:

- H J Res 1 provided that in the event of disagreement between the President and the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet over the termination of Presidential inability, Congress, if not in session, would assemble within 48 hours to decide the issue within 10 days. S J Res 1 provided only that Congress would "immediately proceed to decide" such an issue and did not place a time limit on the period in which Congress had to assemble or a decision had to be made. The time-limit difference was widely believed to be the most controversial divergence between the two bills.
- H J Res 1 specified that the Vice President would discharge the powers and duties of a President who voluntarily declared his own inability only until the President transmitted to Congress a written declaration stating that his inability had ended. The specific provision for the President to transmit a declaration that he was no longer disabled was not included in S J Res 1, although the supporters of the Senate proposal assumed that the same or similar procedure would be followed under S J Res 1 wording.
- H J Res 1 deleted Section 5 of S J Res 1, combining its provisions with Section 4 and thereby making Section 4 a single section dealing with Presidential inability.
- H J Res 1 allowed the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet two days, rather than seven days as under S J Res 1, in which to challenge the contention of a disabled President that his inability had ended.

Speaker's Succession Debated

April 13 -- Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) -- Proposed an amendment to delete authority for the President to nominate a Vice President to fill a vacancy in that office. He said the bill's provision (Section 2) would result in "a phenomenon which has not bothered or plagued our country heretofore; namely, the problem of palace intrigue. The system we now have has the Speaker of the House succeeding to the Presidency. This succession is a good one."

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- Section 2 "is in real effect a slap at the Members of the House of Representatives, a slap at our elected leadership...."

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- "I favor Section 2 because we must be practical. We must realize, whether we like to or not that great changes are taking place, have taken place within the past 30 years... I have lived for 14 months...(as successor) to the occupant of the White House... I can assure you...that a matter of great concern to me was the vacuum which existed in the subject of determining inability of the occupant of the White House if and when that should arise."

Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) -- "I hope there will be enough judgment, sound judgment, in a sufficient number of legislatures in the several states...to ensure that this amendment will never become a part of the Constitution."

Poff -- We make "no claims that this bill is foolproof or that it covers every hypothetical case which might present itself to the inventive mind.... Rather, we assume that the American form of government with its system of checks and balances is so structured, that the freedom of the American press is so secure, and that the conscience of the American electorate is so sensitive and its power so effective that rogues in public office are foredoomed to exposure and swift retribution."

Celler -- "This is by no means...a perfect bill. No bill can be perfect. Even the sun has its spots. But nonetheless, this bill has a minimum of drawbacks. It is well-rounded, sensible, an efficient approach toward a solution of a perplexing problem...."

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

April 13 -- Richard H. Poff (R Va.) -- Stipulate that Congress, if not in session, shall assemble "within 48 hours" to decide a dispute between the President and Vice President over termination of Presidential inability. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

April 13 -- Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) -- Delete Section 2, which allowed the President, when there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, to nominate a new Vice President subject to confirmation by Congress. Standing vote, 44-140.

Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) -- Substitute for Section 2 language permitting Congress to provide "by law" for the case of a vacancy in the office of Vice President and for the case of removal, death, resignation or inability both of the President and Vice President. Voice.

Arch A. Moore Jr. (R W.Va.) -- Insure that a President, declared disabled by the Vice President and majority of the Cabinet, may always resume his powers and duties immediately upon declaring his inability ended, and insure that if there is disagreement between the President and Vice President over termination of inability, the Vice President would not become Acting President unless his challenge was upheld by Congress. Standing, 58-122.

H.R. Gross. (R Iowa) -- Require that Congress confirm the nomination of a new Vice President by roll-call vote. Standing, 92-102; teller vote, 115-130.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees on S J Res 1 took two months to resolve their differences. The chief difficulty was in deciding whether to set a time limit for decision by Congress in the event a Vice President and majority of the Cabinet challenged a formal assertion by the President that his inability had ended. The House had set a 10-day time limit, the Senate none. In conference meetings House conferees, fearful that a Senate filibuster might hold up action in a critical period when the Government was in jeopardy, insisted on a time limit. Senate conferees finally agreed to a 21-day time limit.

The conference committee June 29 reported a compromise version of S J Res 1 (H Rept 554) which was filed in the House that day. The report was re-referred to conferees June 30 for a correction in typing and was filed as a new report (H Rept 564) in the House and Senate that day. Following are four areas in which the House and Senate versions of S J Res 1 differed and the conference agreements:

● The House version allowed the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet two days, rather than seven days as under the Senate version, in which to challenge the contention of a disabled President that his inability had ended. House and Senate conferees compromised, setting four days during which the Vice President could make his challenge.

● The House version provided that in the event of disagreement between the President and the Vice President and a majority of the Cabinet over the termination of Presidential inability, Congress, if not in session, would assemble within 48 hours to decide the issue within 10 days. The Senate version provided only that Congress would "immediately proceed to decide" such an issue and did not place a time limit on the period in which Congress had to assemble or a decision had to be made. The Senate conferees agreed to the House amendment requiring Congress to assemble within 48 hours to consider a challenge. In addition, the House in effect won its point of putting a specific time limit on the period in which a decision had to be made; Senate conferees agreed to a 21-day period.

● On the two remaining differences, Senate conferees accepted the House version. This specified that a President who voluntarily declared his own inability was to transmit a formal declaration to Congress when his inability had ended (it was implied but not spelled out in the Senate version). The other provision merely merged two Senate provisions on inability into one section of the bill.

ACTION -- The House June 30 by voice vote and with little debate adopted the conference report (H Rept 564) on S J Res 1. The Senate the same day debated the bill but after objections were raised, deferred action until July 6. It adopted the report July 6 by a 68-5 roll-call vote, thus clearing the proposed contitutional amendment for ratification by the states. (For voting, see chart p. 1055)

Senators voting against adoption of the report were Albert Gore (D Tenn.), Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.), Walter F. Mondale (D Minn.) and John G. Tower (R Texas).

In the Senate debate June 30, Gore, McCarthy and Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) raised questions concerning a provision allowing the Vice President "and a majority of either the principal officers of the Executive departments (the Cabinet) or such other body as Congress may by law provide" to declare the President disabled. The provision had not been in dispute during previous floor action on S J Res 1.

Gore said the language was ambiguous, raising the possibility that if Congress created another "body", the statute might be interpreted as giving the new group "authority and power to deny to a majority of the Cabinet powers" vested in the Cabinet by S J Res 1.

Sen. Birch Bayh (D Ind.), floor manager of the bill, said the "either/or" language was intended to vest exclusivity in one or other of the bodies. He said that if Congress created another body, "the Cabinet loses the responsibility and it rests solely in the other body."

During debate July 6, Gore renewed his fight to send S J Res 1 back to conference. He contended that by allowing Congress to create a second body, the amendment would permit the Vice President to " 'shop around' " between the Cabinet and the other body to find which group was sympathetic to his view that the President was disabled. Gore's position was supported by McCarthy, who stated that he also had "serious reservations" about the language.

Bayh argued that the legislative intent was that as soon as Congress created another body, that body "shall supersede the Cabinet." Bayh's view was supported by Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), who also said that the language of the amendment was not perfect, but was the result of "perseverence, patience and willingness to compromise." Ervin added, "We had more cooks with more zeal concerned with preparing this 'broth' than any piece of proposed legislation I have ever seen... I am of the opinion that (S J Res 1) is the very best possible resolution on the subject obtainable in the Congress of the United States...."

S J Res 1 was formally transmitted to the General Services Administration on July 7 for certification and transmittal to the states for ratification.

By the end of 1965, 13 states, out of the three-fourths (38) necessary for final ratification, had approved the proposed 25th Amendment. They were: Neb. (July 12); Wis. (July 13); Okla. (July 16); Mass. (Aug. 9); Pa. (Aug. 18); Ky. (Sept. 15); Ariz. (Sept. 22); Mich. (Oct. 5); Ind. (Oct. 20); Calif. (Oct. 21); Ark. (Nov. 4); N.J. (Nov. 29); and Del. (Dec. 7).

Ratification Procedure

The Constitution and federal statute prescribe a rigid procedure for ratifying proposed constitutional amendments.

Under Article 5 of the Constitution, amendments may be proposed either by Congress by a two-thirds vote of both chambers or by a national convention called by Congress. Under the latter method, a convention is convened upon application of two-thirds of the state legislatures. No national convention has ever been called.

Amendments proposed, either by Congress or by a convention, become part of the Constitution only after they have been ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states, or by conventions in three-fourths of the states. Congress is empowered to determine whether the states shall ratify through their legislatures or through state conventions. Congress also is empowered to determine the length of time during which states may deliberate on ratification. By precedent, Congress has required ratification of amendments by the states within at least seven years.

The procedure for submitting proposed constitutional amendments to the states for ratification is set forth in 1 U.S.C. 106(b). The procedure provides that upon approval by Congress a proposed amendment must be transmitted to the General Services Administration (GSA), where it is certified, signed by the GSA Administrator and transmitted to each governor with a letter requesting that the state act. As each state acts on the amendment, the action must be certified and notification returned to the GSA. When the necessary three-fourths of the states have notified the GSA Administrator of ratification, the amendment is published in the Federal Register along with the Administrator's certification of adoption and a list of the ratifying states.

LBJ Operation

The issue of temporary Presidential disability was raised late in 1965 when Mr. Johnson Oct. 5 announced that on Oct. 8 he would undergo surgery for removal of his gall bladder.

The matter clearly was one of highest concern to the President himself in announcing the pending operation. After describing the necessity for surgery and the steps taken to ensure proper diagnosis, the President stated that he had consulted with the Vice President, members of the Cabinet, Congressional leaders and former President Eisenhower and assured the public that doctors "expect there will be minimal time during which I will not be conducting business as usual."

The President went on to refer to his pre-election agreement with Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey concerning the devolution of duties and powers of the Presidency in the event of Mr. Johnson's disability. He noted that the agreement was virtually the same as that made by his predecessors since Mr. Eisenhower and former Vice President Richard M. Nixon originated the practice in 1958. Finally, the President assured the public that the Vice President, top Cabinet officers ("particularly the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense") and the White House staff would remain in communication with the Vice President, that the Vice President would be in Washington, D.C., on the day of the operation and that Mr. Humphrey and the top Cabinet officers were fully informed on all major policy matters.

The White House Oct. 5 re-issued the text of the agreement between Mr. Johnson and the Vice President. It was identical to the agreement made public Jan. 27. (See text p. 575)

While the President was described as in good health and the operation as routine, Mr. Johnson had a medical history which included a massive heart attack, suffered July 2, 1955, when he was Senate Majority Leader. He took a six-month leave from those duties to recover, describing the attack as one "as bad as you can have and still live." A heavy smoker before the attack, Mr. Johnson gave up tobacco and went on a "reasonably" low calorie diet.

Mr. Johnson's Oct. 8 gall bladder operation was performed by a team of eight doctors at the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md. It lasted two hours and 15 minutes. In addition to removing Mr. Johnson's gall bladder, the doctors found two kidney stones and removed one of them. Tests showed no indications of malignancy, doctors said, adding that the operation was a "complete success". Five hours after the operation began, Mr. Johnson walked a few steps beside his hospital bed and later in the afternoon conferred with staff members. The next day he was signing legislation and attending to other Presidential matters, but for more than two months he remained on a restricted work schedule.

The President left the hospital Oct. 21 and after two days at the White House flew on Oct. 23 to his ranch in Texas to recuperate. He remained there, except for a trip Nov. 14-19 to Washington, until Dec. 13, when he returned to Washington for a series of conferences with foreign leaders. He spent the Christmas holidays at the ranch in Texas. By the end of 1965, Mr. Johnson's recovery appeared to be satisfactory and virtually complete.

STEPS TAKEN TO FOLLOW UP WARREN COMMISSION REPORT

With little fanfare, Congress and the Executive Branch in 1965 moved steadily to carry out most of the recommendations of the President's Commission on the Assassination of President Kennedy (the "Warren Commission"), such as making Presidential assassination a federal crime and strengthening the Secret Service.

In related 1965 action, Congress also passed and sent to the states a proposed constitutional amendment to define more clearly the role of the Vice President in the event the President were unable to perform the duties of his office and to provide for filling a vacancy in the office of the Vice President, such as existed when Vice President Johnson succeeded to the Presidency following the Nov. 22, 1963 slaying of President Kennedy. (For story, see p. 573)

The Warren Commission, appointed by President Johnson Nov. 29, 1963, and headed by Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl Warren, was directed to investigate all circumstances relating to the assassination of President Kennedy and to report its findings and conclusions to the President. In addition to establishing that Lee Harvey Oswald shot President Kennedy, the Commission's Sept. 27, 1964, report criticized current procedures for protecting the President and recommended numerous measures to improve those procedures. (1963 Almanac p. 66; 1964 Almanac p. 975)

Among the Commission's major recommendations on which positive action was taken in 1965 were: overhaul of Secret Service facilities for better advance detection of potential threats to the President, improvement of Secret Service protective measures in the planning and conducting of Presidential motorcades, formalization of Secret Service relationships with local law enforcement agencies, enlargement of Secret Service personnel and resources, development of closer liaison between the Secret Service and other federal agencies, adoption of better procedures for the dissemination of State Department information pertaining to defectors returning to the United States, and enactment of legislation making the assassination of a President a federal crime.

In addition, Congress enacted legislation allowing the Federal Government to acquire all items of evidence considered during the Warren Commission investigation, authorizing Secret Service agents to make arrests without a warrant, and extending the period in which Secret Service protection was available to former Presidents and their widows.

Assassination Legislation

Two Administration bills (HR 6097, HR 9545) directly related to President Kennedy's assassination and the Warren Commission's investigation were enacted during 1965. HR 6097, making the assassination of a President a federal crime, was recommended by the Commission and drafted by the Justice Department. HR 9545, authorizing the acquisition of assassination evidence, was also drafted by the Justice Department and was supported, though not specifically recommended, by the Commission.

FEDERAL CRIME

HR 6097 (PL 89-141) made it a federal crime to kill, kidnap or assault the President or other high federal officials and prescribed penalties for violation of the law. Because the murder of a President was not currently a federal crime (as was the murder of federal judges, U.S. attorneys, marshals and many other federal enforcement officials), neither the Secret Service nor the FBI had jurisdiction over Oswald after he was captured and charged with shooting President Kennedy. According to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover in March 4 testimony before the House Treasury-Post Office Appropriations Subcommittee, had the assassination of a President been a federal crime on Nov. 22, 1963, Oswald would have been taken into federal custody and would not have been shot to death in a Dallas County jail on Nov. 24, 1963.

The House and Senate passed HR 6097 with little controversy. The only dissenting comment came during House debate from Rep. Phillip Burton (D Calif.), who said he favored the objectives of the bill, but opposed inclusion of capital punishment provisions. Moreover, the only significant difference between the House and Senate versions of the bill was a provision added by the Senate committee stating that violations of the Act were to be investigated by the FBI. The FBI could request help from any federal, state or local agency, including the armed forces. The House version had not singled out a specific federal agency to be in charge of investigations.

The House Judiciary Committee June 9 reported HR 6097 (H Rept 488) after holding hearings on more than 50 related measures. The House June 21 passed the bill by voice vote. The Senate Judiciary Committee July 21 reported the bill (S Rept 498) with an amendment, and the Senate July 23 passed the bill by voice vote as amended. The House Aug. 12 concurred by voice vote in the Senate amendment, clearing HR 6097 for the President's signature Aug. 28.

Provisions. As signed into law, HR 6097 (PL 89-141):

Made it a federal crime to kill, kidnap or assault the President, President-elect, Vice President, the officer next in the order of Presidential succession, the Vice President-elect or any individual who was "acting as President." Penalties for killing any of these individuals would range from imprisonment for up to three years and/or a fine of up to $1,000 (for manslaughter) to the death penalty (for murder).

Provided that the crime of kidnapping any official listed above would be punishable by imprisonment for any term of years or, if the person kidnapped was killed, by up to a maximum of death.

Provided that attempts to kill or kidnap any official listed above would be punishable by imprisonment for any term of years or life.

Provided that assault on any person listed above would be punishable by a fine of up to $10,000 and/or imprisonment of up to 10 years.

Authorized the Attorney General to pay up to $100,000 for information and services "concerning a violation" of the Act.

Provided that federal investigative or prosecutive jurisdiction over violation of the Act would "suspend" state and local jurisdiction until federal action was ended.

Provided that the Federal Bureau of Investigation would have investigative jurisdiction over violations of the Act and that the agency could request the assistance of any federal, state and local agencies, including the armed forces.

EVIDENCE

HR 9545 (PL 89-318) authorized the Federal Goverment to acquire and preserve items of evidence pertaining to the assassination of President Kennedy. The best known item involved was the rifle used to assassinate the President. This was currently in the possession of the Goverment. Certain other items of physical evidence also were covered by the bill, such as the .38 caliber revolver involved in the death of Dallas Patrolman J.D. Tippitt, cartridges and other exhibits.

In its report on the bill (H Rept 813), the House Judiciary Committee said that "in the years ahead allegations and theories concerning President Kennedy's assassination may abound. To eliminate questions and doubts, the physical evidence should be securely preserved. A failure to do so could lead to loss, destruction, or alteration of vital evidence and in time might serve to encourage irresponsible rumors undermining public confidence in the work of the President's (Warren) Commission."

The report also noted that "one private party" in Denver, Colo., had filed suit against the Attorney General for possession of the assassination rifle and the revolver used in Tippitt's death, claiming to have purchased all right, title and interest in the items from Oswald's wife, Mrs. Marina N. Oswald. The "private party" was later identified as John L. King, a Denver oilman, who reportedly paid $10,000 for the items. The effect of HR 9545, the report said, would be to deny the plaintiff possession of the items; but it would afford due process of law by providing a procedure for recovering just compensation.

(Proceedings in the Denver suit against the Attorney General were stayed pending the outcome of another suit initiated by the United States in Dallas, in which the Government brought liable and forfeiture action to seize the rifle and revolver. The federal claim was based on the fact that Oswald bought the arms under an assumed name, thus causing false entries to be made in the required federal record in violation of the Federal Firearms Act. A Dallas federal judge Feb. 21, 1966, upheld the federal claim and added that the Government did not need to recompense either King or Mrs. Oswald since the weapons had already fallen into federal possession as soon as Oswald purchased them in violation of federal law.)

HR 9545 was reported (H Rept 813) by the House Judiciary Committee Aug. 19 and passed by the House by voice vote Sept. 7. The Senate Judiciary Committee Oct. 4 reported the bill (S Rept 851), and the Senate Oct. 18, by voice vote, cleared it for the President's signature. The President signed the bill into law Nov. 2.

Provisions. As signed into law, HR 9545 (PL 89-318):

Declared that the national interest required the United States to acquire all right, title and interest in certain items of evidence considered by the Warren Commission.

Authorized the Attorney General to designate, by publication in the Federal Register, which items of evidence should be acquired and preserved by the Federal Government.

Limited the Government's authority to acquire evidence to a one-year period following enactment of the Act.

Provided that, once acquired, the evidence was to be placed under the jurisdiction of the General Services Administration.

Provided that individuals could seek though federal court action to obtain "just compensation" for items of evidence acquired by the Government for which they claimed ownership.

Secret Service Protection

The Warren Commission report was critical of the Secret Service, as well as of other federal agencies concerned with Presidential protection, for "insufficient liaison and coordination of information." It also said the Secret Service arrangements for the "identification and elimination of possible sources of danger to the President," prior to President Kennedy's assassination, were "seriously deficient." As a result, the Commission recommended measures for improving protection of the President, many of which were based on suggestions of the Secret Service itself in an August 1964 report to the Commission.

In response to the Commission's recommendations, President Johnson Sept. 27, 1964, named a four-man committee headed by Treasury Secretary Douglas Dillon, the Cabinet officer responsible for the Secret Service, to advise him on "execution of the recommendations." The Dillon Committee submitted a formal report to the President in February 1965 and then disbanded. Although the report was not made public, the Committee had previously disclosed that it had rejected a Commission recommendation to create a post of special assistant to the Treasury Secretary to be charged with supervision of the Service and other recommendations, on which the Commission had not taken a position, to transfer the Service's investigative functions to the FBI and to limit the Service's responsibility only to physically safeguarding the President.

In addition, the Dillon Committee Nov. 27, 1964, announced that it had recommended a $3-million plan for modernization of the Secret Service during fiscal 1966 and the immediate appointment of 75 additional personnel -- 50 agents, 20 clerical assistants and 5 automatic data processing (ADP) consultants. The Budget Bureau promptly approved a fiscal 1965 deficiency reapportionment of $810,000 for the Service to increase its personnel and to launch an ADP feasibility study.

Following is a detailed rundown on the major 1965 actions relating to the Secret Service:

SECRET SERVICE BUDGET

The President's fiscal 1966 Budget called for an appropriation of $8,750,000 for the Secret Service -- an increase of only $440,000 over fiscal 1965 appropriations. Most of the increase was for the 75 additional personnel provided in the fiscal 1965 deficiency reapportionment.

During hearings before the House Treasury-Post Office Appropriations Subcommittee Feb. 15, however, Dillon requested a fiscal 1966 Secret Service appropriation of $12,627,000 -- $3,877,000 above the President's requests. Dillon said the increase was based on the recommendations of his Committee and would provide $2,187,000 for the employment of 183 additional agents and 76 additional clerical and administrative assistants, $541,000 for additional support costs and $1,149,000 for additional equipment, including two Presidential armored vehicles.

The fiscal 1966 Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill (HR 7060) was passed by the House April 5 carrying the full $12,627,000 request. The Senate passed HR 7060 June 8, appropriating $12,105,000. The Senate reduced Secret Service funds by $522,000 on the recommendation of Treasury Secretary Henry H. Fowler, who had replaced Dillon March 25. The Senate Appropriations Committee said Fowler "withdrew the....$522,000 for two Presidential armored vehicles. It was made clear to the Committee that the President did not approve the original request for these vehicles and that if they were built he would not use or condone their use in his protection." The House and Senate June 28 adopted the conference report (H Rept 550) on HR 7060 that upheld the Senate reduction. (See story p. 213)

SECRET SERVICE ACTIONS

In testimony before the House Appropriations Subcommittee Feb. 23, Secret Service Chief James J. Rowley said the funds in HR 7060 would enable the Service to modernize its operations as well as improve on changes in procedures already effected administratively in line with the recommendations of the Warren Commission and the Dillon Committee.

Rowley cited the following examples:

Personnel. He said approval of the 259 additional positions in HR 7060 would increase total service employment to 920 -- 644 agents and 276 clerical and administrative assistants. Rowley said the 183 new agents would all be assigned to the Service's 65 field offices to assist in the Service's investigative and counterfeiting activities. The number (which is classified information) of agents personally assigned to the President and the 225-man White House Police would not be enlarged, Rowley added.

Motorcade Protection. Rowley testified that since President Kennedy's assassination the Service had "completely revised" preparations made in advance of Presidential trips. He said the Service had conducted numerous surveys designed to pinpoint dangerous locations in most of the nation's major cities and had instituted a new system of building inspections along motorcade routes.

Criteria and Liaison. Rowley said the Service had developed specific "criteria" which it transmitted to other federal agencies concerning the procedures to be used in furnishing the Service with information pertaining to potential as well as actual threats to the President. Such agencies included the FBI, CIA, the State Department and Military and Naval Intelligence. The criteria was also provided to state and local authorities. Rowley said that a formal agreement setting forth the new criteria had already been consummated with the FBI and that agreements were being negotiated with other parties.

(Regarding the Warren Commission recommendation that the State Department improve its procedures for disseminating information relating to returned defectors, the Department June 26 told Congressional Quarterly that it had definitely "tightened-up" its procedures.)

Rowley told the Subcommittee that the Nov. 22, 1963, assassination "opened a new vista to us, that included subversives, defectors, and so forth." Previously, he said, the Service primarily investigated only known actual threats to the President, most of which were relayed from the White House mailroom. However, as a result of the new criteria and improved liaison, Rowley said, the Service's Protective Research Section was currently receiving about 6,000 pieces of information monthly "from sources outside of the Service" and that during fiscal 1965 about 14,000 pieces of information would be forwarded to the Service's regional offices for "priority investigation." He said this new influx of information compared with only 125 pieces received in September 1963.

Modernization, Advance Detection. Rowley explained that the employment of five ADP consultants was done in order to advise the Service on transferring its files from manual to computer operation. The first phase of an ADP feasibility study had already been launched, he added. He said the consultants "will program the operation so that if the President is going, say, to the Midwest or Far West, you would press the button and determine what dangerous persons we have in the file that would require immediate attention, and those (agents) that would be in the field... would be the ones who would proceed to investigate or locate and neutralize such persons." Rowley said the Service's files currently contained 130,000 names, 240,000 index cards and 55,000 dossiers. A special index, known as the "trip" file, contained 800 names of persons considered most dangerous. This file had grown from 200 to 800 names "in the last year," he said. He added that there were about 550 daily manual searches in the indexes, or an annual total of approximately 150,000 searches.

Reorganization. The Treasury Department Nov. 10 announced that the Secret Service would be reorganized into four divisions: protection forces to guard the White House, Vice President, former Presidents and Mrs. John F. Kennedy and her children; a protective intelligence unit to handle threats to those guarded; an investigations section to carry out the agency's work against counterfeiting and forgery; and an administrative division to handle budgetary, personnel and similar problems.

SECRET SERVICE LEGISLATION

In addition to approving more funds for Secret Service activities, Congress in 1965 also enacted two Administration bills (HR 6294; S 2420) aimed at broadening the Service's protective functions.

Arrests. HR 6294 (PL 89-218) authorized Secret Service agents to make arrests without a warrant for federal offenses which were committed in their presence or which they had "reasonable grounds to believe" had been or were being committed. The arrest authority was currently exercised by FBI agents and U.S. marshals. Administration spokesmen contended that it was "anomalous" for the Service to have authority to protect the President without being authorized to arrest anyone who harmed or threatened to harm him.

HR 6294 was requested by the Treasury Department, approved by the Justice Department and supported, though not specifically recommended, by the Warren Commission. The bill was passed by voice votes of the House May 3 and the Senate Sept. 17. The President signed the measure into law Sept. 29.

Protection. S 2420 (PL 89-186) authorized the Secret Service to protect a former President and his wife during the former President's lifetime and to protect the widow and minor children of a former President for four years after he left or died in office, unless the protection was declined. The bill extended the protection offered former Presidents and their wives from the "reasonable period" provided in existing law, which had been interpreted to mean six months. It also extended for two years the protection afforded Mrs. John F. Kennedy in 1963 (PL 88-195), which was due to expire Dec. 11, 1965. (1963 Almanac p. 386)

S 2420, also requested by the Treasury Department, was passed by voice votes of the Senate Aug. 18 and the House Sept. 7. The bill was signed into law Sept. 15.

HOUSE RULES CHANGES ENHANCE MAJORITY RULE

On the opening day of the 89th Congress, Jan. 4, 1965, House Democrats put through three changes in the rules of the House which had the effect of placing more control over the flow of legislation in the hands of the majority leadership. The most important of the new rules removed much of the power of the House Rules Committee; it provided that if the Committee did not grant a rule (a special resolution) for consideration of a bill by the House within 21 days of a request for a rule by the committee which reported the bill, the Speaker could permit the legislative committee to call up the rule for adoption by a majority of the House.

The second change curbed the power of the Rules Committee to block the sending of a House-passed bill to conference with the Senate. Under the old rules, objection by a single Member of the House could prevent a bill from going to conference. The leadership then had to ask the Rules Committee for a rule permitting the bill to go to conference, and the rule had to be adopted by a majority of the House. Under the new rule, the Committee was bypassed; a bill could be sent to conference simply by majority vote.

The third change removed the power of a single House Member to demand an engrossed copy of a bill -- thus delaying action for about a day -- before a final vote could be taken on passage of the bill.

The three changes were adopted after a 224-201 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 932)

Adoption of the 21-day rule was the latest in a series of steps to curb the power of the Rules Committee, where for many years conservative Southern Democrats and Republicans had been in a position to block or delay legislation sought by the Democratic majority. When the Kennedy Administration replaced the Eisenhower Administration in 1961, House Democrats, led by then Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), enlarged the membership of the Committee and filled the new seats in such a way as to give Administration supporters a one-vote majority. But Administration forces on the Committee did not always hold together, and several Kennedy bills were lost there. Furthermore, Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.) still controlled the Committee's meeting schedule and agenda, and therefore was still in a position to cause delays in consideration of bills he opposed.

The efficacy of the 21-day rule in smoothing the path to House passage of "Great Society" measures was indicated by the fact that no major bill on which the Administration sought action in 1965 was buried in the Rules Committee. The 21-day rule was used infrequently (six times in all), but most observers believed that the threat of its use was instrumental in bringing about the release of several major measures from the Committee.

Function of the Rules Committee

The Rules Committee had long stood as a strategic gateway between the legislative committees and the floor of the House for a small but important part of the House's legislative business. The power of the Committee lay in its role of setting the agenda and allotting time for debate on those important and usually controversial bills that were not disposed of by the more routine procedures of the House. Thus the Committee had the power to prevent or delay bills it opposed from reaching the House floor.

The only ways of getting around the Rules Committee were (1) the discharge petition, which requires 218 signatures to free a bill from a committee, (2) Calendar Wednesday, a day on which committee chairmen or members they designate may, in turn, call up bills reported by their committees that had not been granted a rule and (3) suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority. Although all three methods were used on occasion to get around Rules and other committees, they were beyond the direct control of the Speaker and were not often successful.

There had been frequent controversies over what functions the Rules Committee should perform in its strategic position: whether it should serve merely as a clearinghouse for legislative business, be the agent of the majority leadership, or be a super-legislator, editing the work of the other legislative committees. A basic question was whether the fate of important and highly controversial legislation should be decided by a small handful of men or by the majority of the entire House. On the other hand, the Rules-Committee route of legislation was sometimes defended as providing parliamentary efficiency in the 435-Member House.

It was also argued that the Rules Committee was of unique service in blocking expensive or ill-advised bills which most House Members would like, but could not afford, to oppose openly on the floor.

Before 1910, the Rules Committee functioned as an arm of the leadership in deciding what legislation could be brought to the floor. But in the Progressive revolt that year against Speaker "Uncle Joe" Cannon, the Committee was made independent of the leadership. By the late 1930s, the Committee had come to be dominated by a coalition of conservative Democrats and Republicans which continued in control of the Committee during most of the following years.

Blocked Legislation. At the time the Kennedy Administration took office, the Rules Committee was dominated by such a coalition. Four Republicans and two conservative Democrats combined against six other Democrats to cause a tie which blocked major bills advanced by liberals. Civil rights and social welfare issues were most often blocked by the conservatives on the Committee.

Major examples of the Committee's power in these matters were: a general aid-to-education bill in 1960 which was denied a rule allowing the House to agree to a House-Senate conference; the tabling of three bills, en bloc, in 1961 that would again have provided federal aid to schools; and the killing of legislation to set up an Urban Affairs Department when the Committee opposed the prospective naming of Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, as its Secretary. (1960 Almanac p. 237; 1961 Almanac p. 406; 1962 Almanac p. 380)

Legislation to aid depressed areas also was a victim of the Rules Committee. Area development bills, first proposed in 1955, died in the House in 1956 and again in 1959 when the Committee refused to clear the measures for floor action. A depressed area bill was passed in 1960 when Calendar Wednesday was used to bypass Rules -- but it was vetoed by President Eisenhower. The bill was finally enacted in 1961 under President Kennedy after the Rules Committee had been enlarged. (1961 Almanac p. 249)

The threat or anticipation of obstruction by the Rules Committee could also be effective in modifying a bill in order to get a rule, without the Committee's actually having to exercise its opportunities to block and delay. (Conversely, the threat of using the 21-day procedure could force through the Rules Committee legislation that might otherwise be held up.)

Efforts to Curb Rules Committee

1949. A "21-day" rule, different in one major aspect from the one adopted in 1965, was adopted when the 81st Congress convened Jan. 3, 1949. It provided that the chairman of a legislative committee, which had favorably reported a bill and had requested a resolution from the Rules Committee for House consideration, might bring the resolution directly to the floor for adoption if the Committee had failed to grant a rule within 21 calendar days of the request. The rule made it mandatory that the Speaker recognize the Member calling up the 21-day resolution. (The 1965 rule, on the other hand, left the use of the 21-day rule entirely to the discretion of the Speaker.)

Two years later, after the Democrats lost several seats in the mid-term elections, the House repealed the 21-day rule. (1949 Almanac p. 577; 1951 Almanac p. 336)

1959. At the beginning of the 86th Congress in 1959, a group of House Democratic liberals sought Speaker Rayburn's support for a change in House rules that would break the conservative grip on the Committee. Following a conference with the Speaker, the group issued a statement saying that Rayburn had assured them that bills reported by legislative committees would reach the House floor and therefore they would not press for a rules change that year. The record of the 86th Congress showed, however, that Rayburn often could not deliver on his promise.

During the 86th Congress, the Rules Committee blocked or delayed several bills which subsequently were tabbed priority measures of the new Kennedy Administration: depressed areas, education, housing and minimum wage legislation. With all of these set as key measures by the new Kennedy Administration, the Democratic leadership decided that the Rules Committee roadblock could not be permitted to stand.

1961. The House Jan. 31, 1961, by a narrow margin, adopted a resolution to enlarge the Rules Committee's membership from 12 to 15 for the 87th Congress. This was won after a hard struggle to break the conservative hold on the Committee's power and gave Speaker Rayburn and the Kennedy Administration a delicate but favorable 8-7 majority on most issues that came before the Committee. The plan was chosen by Speaker Rayburn over several others proposed, including a "purge" of an anti-Administration Committee Democrat, as the least "painful." By raising the number of Democratic members from eight to ten (GOP from four to five), it permitted the appointment to the Committee of two pro-Administration Democrats. However, the Administration forces failed to hold together on some key bills, including school aid and the housing department, where such cross-issues as aid to private schools, or race issues, divided the normally pro-Administration Democrats.

1963. The temporary expansion of the Rules Committee obtained in 1961 was made permanent Jan. 9, 1963, thus assuring a continued 8-7 liberal majority on the Committee on most issues.

New Changes Proposed

1964. Following the Democratic sweep in the Nov. 3 elections, several suggestions were made for Congressional reform. The 1964 Democratic platform had pledged that, "The Congress of the United States should revise its rules and procedures to assure majority rule after reasonable debate and to guarantee that major legislative proposals of the President can be brought to a vote after reasonable consideration in committee."

Speaker of the House John W. McCormack (D Mass.) Nov. 4 said he might propose reinstitution of a 21-day rule to permit bypassing of the Rules Committee.

DSG Proposals. Members of the liberal-oriented House Democratic Study Group (DSG) Dec. 4 circulated its proposals for reforms of House procedure. Among the recommendations were the following:

- "To support an amendment to the House rules to provide a '21-day rule,' by which the Speaker may recognize the committee chairman (or the ranking majority member of the committee who favors the bill) to call up the measure for House consideration if it has been before the Rules Committee for 21 days or more without having been granted a rule."
- "To support an amendment to the House rules to provide that the Speaker may recognize the committee chairman (or ranking majority member of the committee who favors the bill) to offer a privileged motion to send to conference by majority vote a bill that has been passed by the House and Senate so that differences between the two versions of the measure may be resolved."
- "To support an amendment to the House rules to provide that the Speaker may recognize a Member to call up a bill under the discharge rule when a discharge petition on the measure shall have been signed by at least 175 Members of the House." Currently, the rules provide that a bill may be brought to the floor if 218 Members sign the discharge petition, regardless of whether the Speaker favors the bill.

GOP Reforms. The House Republican Conference Dec. 16 adopted a resolution appealing to House Democrats to avoid "headlong" adoption of "regressive and reactionary" changes in the rules transferring "life and death" power over legislation from the Rules Committee to the Speaker. The author of the resolution, Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R N.Y.), said Republicans were neutral on the proposals for a 21-day rule and a 175-signature discharge petition, but were opposed to giving the Speaker sole discretion to call up bills under the new rules. The Conference also adopted several of its own proposals for the reform of House procedures:

- To give the ranking minority members of a committee equal debate time with that controlled by the committee chairman on any conference report;

- To continue efforts to obtain more generous allowance for minority staffing on legislative committees;
- To adopt a rule forbidding House consideration of non-germane amendments added by the Senate to a House bill;
- To develop and adopt a rule allowing any Member sponsoring an amendment five minutes' time to explain it, regardless of other limitation (this proposal would, in effect, prevent the House from shutting off debate);
- To demand that the House observe a full five-day legislative week and eliminate what the Republicans termed a Tuesday-to-Thursday working week in order to end long annual sessions.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

Democratic Members of the House caucused Jan. 2, 1965, and by a 189-71 vote approved three rule provisions giving the Speaker greater procedural power. Two of the rule changes were proposed by the DSG and backed by McCormack. The third, aimed at the dilatory tactics of demanding an engrossed copy of a bill, reportedly was proposed by the Speaker himself.

FLOOR ACTION

The House Jan. 4, by voice vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 8) reinstituting the rules of the 88th Congress with an amendment incorporating all three of the proposals adopted by the Democratic caucus. The important vote was on a motion to move the previous question, thereby preventing amendments to the resolution and ending debate on it. This motion, made by Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.), was adopted by a 224-202 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 932) Adoption of H Res 8 by voice vote followed.

The roll call on the 1965 rules changes was closer than had been generally expected in the heavily Democratic House (the line-up: 295-140). The votes of 16 Republicans for the rules changes were crucial on the 224-202 vote. Also supporting the leadership were 185 Northern Democrats and 23 Southern Democrats. Voting against the leadership were 75 Southern Democrats, 123 Republicans, and 4 Northern Democrats. In 1961, the vote to enlarge the size of the Rules Committee was a narrow 217-212; but in 1963 the vote to make the enlargement permanent was 235-196.

H Res 8 made the following changes in the House Rules:

21-Day Rule. The most important of the new rules was the 21-day procedure whereby a chairman, or any other member, of a committee which had favorably reported a bill could bring a rule (permitting House action on the bill) directly to the floor for adoption by a majority vote. This was permitted on the second or fourth Monday of the month, if the Rules Committee had not granted clearance for the bill within 21 calendar days after a resolution to call up the bill had been filed by the legislative committee. Discretion remained with the Speaker to recognize the member from the committee, so that it was highly unlikely, if not impossible, for a bill to come up successfully through this procedure without leadership approval.

Conference Rule. The second rule adopted permitted the Speaker, at his discretion, to recognize a Member to offer a motion that would permit the sending of a bill to conference by majority vote. The action had first to be approved by the committee with jurisdiction over the bill. Previously, to send a bill to conference with the Senate required either unanimous consent of the House or majority consent to a rule obtained from the Rules Committee. In the absence of a rule or unanimous consent, the only other way to send a bill to conference was under suspension of the rules, which required approval by a two-thirds majority.

Engrossing a Bill. The third rules change removed the power of a single Member to demand an engrossed copy of a bill before it was passed. This is the final copy of a bill with the text as amended by floor action and certified by the Clerk of the House. Members opposed to a bill sometimes demanded an engrossed copy to delay action, usually overnight, while it was printed.

The House action Jan. 4 made the three changes a permanent part of the House rules. They would not have to be approved separately at the beginning of the next Congress, though they could be altered or eliminated then.

DEBATE -- The rules resolution was introduced by Albert on behalf of the Democratic caucus. Albert said the purpose of the 21-day and conference procedure amendments was "to expedite the business of the House and to make available other methods of handling legislative business." He said the amendments would not change "any of the rules governing the Committee on Rules or other procedures, all of which are left intact." He said the engrossed bill privilege "has long been considered an anachronism in the law."

Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.), Rules Committee chairman, opposed the 21-day rule as "unworkable." He objected primarily to the amendment altering the procedure by which a bill is sent to conference. Smith said the change would reduce the opportunities to debate Senate amendments to House bills and would permit the Speaker to send to conference a bill containing a Senate amendment unrelated to the bill originally passed by the House.

Speaking for the House Republican Conference, Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), ranking minority member of the Rules Committee, said the amendment went beyond the previous 21-day rule in giving the Speaker discretion to "call up a bill or not call up a bill." Brown said "the Committee on Rules has had the power of life-and-death control over a bill -- yes or no. Now you take it away from the Committee on Rules and give it to the Speaker."

In support of the resolution, McCormack said, "it is a strengthening of the rules of the House in the direction of the individual Member having an opportunity to pass upon legislation...." McCormack said he could not conceive of a Speaker "exercising his discretion but as a matter of high trust and as a matter of complete equity and fairness to all members involved." He said the Speaker's discretionary authority under the 21-day rule amendment was a "reasonable provision."

Use of the 21-Day Rule

The House successfully used the 21-day rule procedure six times during 1965 to bypass the Rules Committee. Five of the cases involved issues opposed by the Committee in the past: labor, civil rights and federal spending. Of the six bills brought up under this rule, five passed the House and three became public law in 1965. Although the resolution was adopted on the sixth bill, the legislation itself was not actually called up on the House floor.

The first two bills for which the 21-day rule was adopted were:

HR 77 -- To repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act which permitted states to enact "right-to-work" laws banning the union shop. Reported by Education and Labor June 22 (H Rept 540), a resolution to call up HR 77 was filed by the Committee June 23 and adopted July 26. The resolution was adopted by voice vote after the important vote was taken to move the previous question -- barring further amendments and closing debate -- which was adopted on a 248-171 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 982). The bill passed the House July 28 on a 221-203 roll-call vote but failed to pass the Senate when the leadership Oct. 11 was unable to break a filibuster on calling up the bill for debate. (For story, see p. 818)

HR 9022 -- To aid school construction in areas affected by major disasters. Reported by Education and Labor July 1 (H Rept 587), a resolution to call up HR 9022 was filed July 15 and adopted Aug. 24 by voice vote. The bill was passed by the House Aug. 30 and was signed into law Nov. 1 (PL 89-313). (For story, see p. 306)

In a stormy 12½-hour session which lasted until 12:31 a.m. Sept. 14, the House Sept. 13 adopted rules on four more bills:

HR 10065 -- Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1965, to broaden Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, barring any discrimination in employment, to extend coverage and strengthen enforcement powers. Reported by Education and Labor Aug. 3 (H Rept 718), a resolution was filed Aug. 9 and adopted on a 259-121 roll-call vote Sept. 13. (For voting, see charts p. 1000, 1002) The bill was not subsequently called up on the House floor. (For story, see p. 572)

HR 7371 -- To amend the Bank Holding Act of 1956 to bring the duPont estate of Florida under its provisions. Reported by Banking and Currency June 21 (H Rept 534), a resolution was filed Aug. 4 and adopted on a 201-171 roll-call vote Sept. 13. (For voting, see chart p. 1002) The bill passed the House Sept. 23, but did not clear the Senate in 1965. (For story, see p. 856)

HR 9460 -- To establish a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities. Reported by Education and Labor July 14 (H Rept 618), a resolution was filed July 15 and adopted on a 260-114 roll-call vote Sept. 13. (For voting, see chart p. 1002). The bill was passed by the House Sept. 15 and was signed into law Sept. 29 (PL 89-209). (For story, see p. 621)

HR 10281 -- Government employees' salary increase. Reported by Post Office and Civil Service Aug. 16 (H Rept 792), a resolution was filed Aug. 19 and adopted on a 289-84 roll call Sept. 13. (For voting, see chart p. 1002) The bill later passed the House and Senate and was signed into law Oct. 29 (PL 89-301). (For story, see p. 649)

In the Sept. 13 session, seven quorum calls and 11 roll-call votes on procedural matters delayed action on the rules until long after the normal adjournment hour.

The House Democratic leadership Sept. 9 had scheduled action for Sept. 13 on seven rules under the 21-day procedure. The three rules not considered Sept. 13 were for HR 6183, providing a mid-decade census of population, unemployment and housing; HR 7372, dealing with investment company exemptions from the Bank Holding Company Act; and S 408, dealing with federal financial assistance to natural disaster victims. None of these was brought up in 1965. (See next page)

This scheduling by the leadership prevented consideration of bills concerning the District of Columbia, which also could be called up on the second and fourth Mondays. The effect was to prevent the House District of Columbia Committee from bringing to the floor Sept. 13 its D.C. "home rule" bill two weeks before a broader Administration home rule plan could be considered. However, the leadership stated that it had been its intention to discharge these seven bills regardless of the home rule issue.

Debate. The Democratic leadership's decision to permit action on the 21-day resolutions touched off a series of vocal attacks and dilatory maneuvers by Republicans, aided by some (but often not a majority of) Southern Democrats, which Majority Leader Carl Albert called an "obvious filibuster against the consideration of legislation which has been duly programmed by the majority and by the Speaker of the House."

Opponents criticized the leadership for "circumventing" the Rules Committee and for deliberately precluding a vote on the D.C. bill. There was also criticism that the Democrats did not allow sufficient time to debate the substantive issues of some of the bills for which rules were being sought, particularly the employment discrimination measure.

Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) contended that the objections, at that point, were to the procedure used in bringing up the bills, not necessarily to the bills themselves. The scheduling of the resolutions, said Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.), was "an unnecessary and regrettable slap in the face" to the Rules Committee. Chairman Smith of the Rules Committee contended that "never in my time has there been a Committee on Rules that has reported out as much business for the Administration and has turned down less stuff that the Administration has wanted than the Committee on Rules has during the present session of the Congress.... Why should we be kicked around in this way by picking up all the garbage out of the Rules Committee in instances in which the 21 days have expired and dumping it on the floor of the House on one day?"

Albert replied that "I thought the 21-day rule issue had been settled in January last; that this procedure was a legitimate and bona-fide method of calling up legislation...." Asked by D.C. Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D S.C.) if it was "not a fact that these bills were scheduled for District Day," Albert denied this was the case. The resolutions, Albert said, "were scheduled to be called today because today is the day on which their consideration is in order under the 21-day rule.... These matters are of the highest privilege. They rank in privilege with resolutions considered under discharge petitions. They rank in privilege ahead of bills reported from the great Committee on the District of Columbia.... There was no relation at all between programming these rules and any business that the gentleman...might have had from (his) Committee."

There was little debate on the substantive issues of the bills involved. Only one -- on the Arts and Humanities Foundation -- was an Administration bill. The pay raise bill in question was opposed by the Administration in the form in which it had been reported, although the President strongly endorsed his own less expensive measure.

Rep. Paul J. Krebs (D N.J.) Sept. 30 made the observation that "on Sept. 13, 1965, excluding the cost of the pay of the reading clerks, the parliamentary clerks, the parliamentarian, the tally clerk...and all of the other employees of the Capitol, the taxpayers of the United States paid out of the Treasury for excessive quorum calls and excessive roll calls the frightening sum of $254,000 for one day of roll calls that were designed not for their original and salutary purpose but for the purpose of thwarting the legislative process."

Bills Pending at Adjournment

When the first session of the 89th Congress adjourned Oct. 23, there were 13 bills awaiting Rules Committee clearance for floor consideration. Only five were Administration-backed bills.

Three of the remaining bills were opposed by the Administration.

The Rules Committee is one of the few Congressional committees that does not publish a "calendar" listing each piece of legislation referred to it and action taken. The Committee does, however, keep a running list and card file of its activities, and these may be checked in the Committee room.

Following were the 13 bills before the House Rules Committee at adjournment, according to the Committee's records:

HR 2452 -- To extend the benefits of the Annual Sick Leave Act, the Veterans' Preference Act and the Classification Act to employees of agricultural county committees. Reported by Post Office and Civil Service May 25 (H Rept 375). Rules hearings held July 15 and action deferred. The bill was Administration-opposed.

HR 6125 -- To amend laws relating to the National Air Museum of the Smithsonian Institution. Reported by House Administration Sept. 21 (H Rept 1042), with Administration approval.

HR 6183 -- To provide for a mid-decade census of population, unemployment and housing. Reported by Post Office and Civil Service Aug. 12 (H Rept 780) and originally scheduled for 21-day rule action. (See above)

This bill was opposed by the Administration. In part it was felt that it was too late for a census in the 1960s; and the Bureau of the Budget, in a letter to the Committee recommending against enactment, stated that sample surveys were preferable to a mid-decade census as a more efficient expenditure of time and money.

HR 7372 -- To amend the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 to remove the exemption for investment companies (e.g., Financial General Corp.). Reported by Banking and Currency July 26 (H Rept 680).

Provisions of HR 7372 were included in another bill, HR 7371, by a floor amendment by Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.). HR 7371 was itself discharged from the Rules Committee under the 21-day rule. (See above)

HR 8330 -- To amend the 1958 National Defense Education Act to delete the loyalty oath and criminal disclosure provisions. Reported by Education and Labor May 28 (H Rept 431). (See story, p. 273)

The bill introduced by Rep. Ogden R. Reid (R N.Y.) was endorsed by a letter from the U.S. Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel to the Committee reporting the bill. However, it was a highly controversial issue and Democratic forces did not put any weight behind it.

HR 9020 -- To amend the Administrative Expense Act of 1946 to provide travel costs for applicants to Government jobs. Reported by Government Operations Aug. 2 (H Rept 710), approved by Administration.

HR 9713 -- To establish a Freedom Commission and Freedom Academy. Reported by Un-American Activities July 20 (H Rept 629). The bill was not approved by the Administration. (See story, p. 720)

HR 10027 -- To amend the National Labor Relations Act with respect to strikes at the sites of construction projects. Reported by Education and Labor Sept. 21 (H Rept 1041). (See story, p. 832)

The bill was reported from the Education and Labor Committee late in the session and was expected to be taken up early the next year. It had Administration approval. A similar bill was blocked by the Rules Committee in 1960.

HR 10263 -- To authorize the payment of annuities to secretaries of federal justices and judges on par with annuities of Congressional employees. Reported by Post Office and Civil Service Aug. 17 (H Rept 801). The bill was requested by the Judicial Branch.

HR 10329 -- To establish a program to determine the practicability of the adoption by the U.S. of the metric system of weights and measures. Reported by Science and Astronautics Aug. 24 (H Rept 850). Rules hearings held Sept. 9, action deferred. (See story, p. 928)

This bill had been gathering strength over the past few years but was still heavily opposed by small manufacturers in the U.S. who would bear the brunt of the cost of a changeover.

HR 10518 -- To amend the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act to extend its protection to additional employees and to raise the federal minimum wage. Reported by Education and Labor Aug. 25 (H Rept 871). (See story, p. 858)

The bill was postponed by Administration forces until the next session. It was on the President's program.

HR 10622 -- To establish a federal sabbatical program to improve the quality of teaching in the nation's elementary or secondary schools. Reported by Education and Labor Sept. 2 (H Rept 954). (See story, p. 273)

Objection to the provisions contained in this bill centered on the question of whether there weren't already too many programs for teachers.

S 408 -- To study methods of helping to provide assistance to victims of future natural disasters. Passed Senate Jan. 28. Reported by the House Banking and Currency Committee July 21 (H Rept 632). The bill was approved by the Administration and was originally scheduled for 21-day rule action. (See above)

Action on S 408 became moot when its provisions were incorporated Oct. 13 in a larger disaster relief bill (HR 11539). (See story p. 676)

THREAT OF SPENDING CURBS

Early in the 1965 session Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.) threatened to assert Rules Committee power over House committees' spending plans, but later backed down from the threat. Smith Feb. 16, during House consideration of resolutions authorizing funds for committee investigations, announced that his Committee had scrapped the plan to set limitations on committee spending before the House approved the funds. Ordinarily, the spending limits were approved by the House Administration Committee and were sent to the floor without change by the Rules Committee. At an earlier Rules Committee meeting, Smith had indicated that the Committee would examine the funds approved by the House Administration Committee.

Smith said the chairman of the various committees and the House Administration Committee had made clear to him that they felt the Administration Committee "should have the authority both to authorize and to appropriate funds, which seemed to us a little unusual," but he said the Rules Committee, "after mature consideration," did not feel that "this matter was of great enough importance to cause a big ruckus in the House amongst the Committee on Rules and the chairmen of the legislative committees." Smith said the House investigation funds had climbed from $2,689,000 in the 83rd Congress (1953-54) to $8,-112,000 in the 88th Congress (1963-64).

The Rules Committee in 1963 voted to place curbs on the use of Government funds for overseas travel by House Members -- "junketing." The resolutions restricted 10 committees to activities within the United States and authorized 5 to use committee and counterpart funds abroad -- but limited them to the per diem allowance applied to federal employees. (1963 Almanac p. 383)

SENATE CLOTURE RULE

A bipartisan group of liberal Senators, following a biennial pattern, in 1965 attempted to ease the Senate cloture rule (Rule 22), and again the group was unsuccessful. The 1965 effort, however, was not blocked by a filibuster, as were the earlier attempts to reduce the power of the filibuster. Instead, two resolutions intended to liberalize Rule 22 were referred to the Rules and Administration Committee and the 1965 fight was over when the Committee reported the resolutions adversely.

Liberal Senators, whose chief purpose in trying to ease Rule 22 was to make passage of civil rights legislation easier, found in 1964 and 1965 that they had the votes to impose cloture on civil rights bills even under the two-thirds majority requirement of the existing rule. In 1964 the Senate voted for cloture to shut off debate on the Civil Rights Act. (1964 Almanac p. 368) On May 25, 1965, a cloture motion limited debate on the Administration-backed voting rights bill (S 1564). These were the first times in the history of Rule 22 that cloture was successfully invoked to close off debate on civil rights legislation.

Another 1965 attempt to invoke cloture failed Oct. 11, however, when the Senate rejected a cloture motion in debate over the bill (HR 77) to repeal Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act. It was the 32nd cloture vote under Rule 22, only seven of which were successful. (See adjoining box)

The 1965 attempt to liberalize Rule 22 was marked by little bitterness compared with former efforts. Having discovered that what they lacked mostly in earlier Congresses was votes, liberal Senators in 1965 waged their war against the filibuster less hard than in other years.

Background

REFERENCE -- 1963 Almanac p. 373.

The existing provisions of Rule 22 permitted limitation of debate by vote of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting, two days after a cloture petition was submitted by 16 Senators. Thereafter, debate was limited to one hour for each Senator on the bill itself and on all motions and amendments affecting it. No new amendments could be offered except by unanimous consent. Amendments that were not germane to the pending business and amendments and motions clearly designed to delay action were out of order. The rule applied both to ordinary business and to motions to change the Senate rules.

Rule 22 was first adopted by the Senate in the opening days of the 65th Congress on March 8, 1917, by a 76-3 roll-call vote, following a furore over the "talking to death" in the Senate of President Woodrow Wilson's proposal to arm American merchant ships before U.S. entry into World War I. Cloture was successfully invoked four times between 1919-27, then not again until the 1962 debate on the communications satellite bill. (1962 Almanac p. 378)

In its original form, Rule 22 required the votes of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting to invoke cloture. Over the years, however, a series of rulings and precedents made Rule 22 virtually inoperative by holding that it could not be applied to debate on procedural questions. In 1948 President pro tempore Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) ruled that cloture could not be used on a motion to proceed to consideration of an anti-poll tax bill. Vandenberg conceded that "in the final analysis the Senate has no effective cloture rule at all."

Cloture Votes, 1919-1965

There have been 32 cloture votes since Rule 22 was adopted in 1917, only seven of which have been successful. The first to succeed on a civil rights issue was in 1964 and the second was on the Voting Rights Act of 1965. (See p. 533)

* Between 1949 and 1959 the cloture rule required the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Senate membership rather than two-thirds of those Senators who voted.

The Truman Administration, pressing for passage of a broad civil rights program, backed a change in the cloture rule in 1949. The best that Senate liberals could obtain at the end of a long and bitter floor fight was a "compromise" requiring the votes of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership to invoke cloture, but allowing cloture to operate on any pending business or motion with the exception of debate on motions or proposals to change the Senate rules themselves, on which it would not operate. Formerly, Rule 22 could be used in attempts to move for Senate rules changes.

Ten years later, Rule 22 was revised to apply to debate on motions to change Senate rules, and once again cloture could be imposed by two-thirds of those Senators present and voting. This 1959 revision, in which the then Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson reached a consensus among liberals, conservatives and Southerners, also added the following language to Senate Rule 32: "The rules of the Senate shall continue from one Congress to the next Congress unless they are changed as provided in these rules."

'Continuing Body' Debated. This language was directed at a key question the Senate had wrestled with for years: whether the Senate was a continuing body which operates under rules carried over from Congress to Congress, or whether it may adopt new rules by general parliamentary procedure -- majority vote -- at the beginning of each new Congress. (The House, all of whose members, unlike Senators, are elected every two years, adopts its rules at the opening of each Congress.)

Southerners argued that the fact that only one-third of the Senate is elected every two years was conclusive proof that the Senate is a continuing body. The new language added to Rule 32 in 1959 buttressed their position.

Liberals contended, on the other hand, that it was unconstitutional to prevent a majority from changing the rules at the outset of each new Congress. They based their contention on Article 1, Section 5 of the Constitution which states that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." According to the liberals, this language meant that each chamber in each new Congress could change its rules by majority vote.

For years the liberals hoped to obtain from the Senate's presiding officer a ruling that at the convening of a new Congress Senate rules could be adopted by majority vote.

In 1957 Vice President Richard M. Nixon gave an "advisory opinion" that the Senate could adopt new rules "under whatever procedures the majority of the Senate approves," and could not be bound by any previous rule "which denies the membership of the Senate the power to exercise its constitutional right to make its own rules." But Nixon said this was a personal opinion and that the question of the constitutionality of the ruling could be decided only by the Senate. In 1959 and 1961 Nixon repeated the gist of that "advisory opinion." The Senate, however, never took a vote on the question Nixon posed. (1963 Almanac p. 374)

In 1963, after Southerners had filibustered for 14 days, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) Jan. 28 offered a motion "under the Constitution that without further debate" the presiding officer should submit to the Senate for a vote Anderson's long-pending motion to take up his proposed change in Rule 22. Anderson's Jan. 28 motion, in effect, called upon then Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson to rule that a majority vote could cut off debate on a proposed rules change.

But Johnson declined to make such a ruling. He said it was a matter of constitutional interpretation and that since 1803 such matters invariably had been decided by the Senate itself. Johnson then put before the Senate the following question: "Does a majority of the Senate have the right under the Constitution to terminate debate at the beginning of a session and proceed to an immediate vote on a rule change, notwithstanding the provisions of the existing Senate rules?"

Since this question was subject to debate, it left the liberal bloc approximately where it had been before. That is, liberals were still faced with the task of persuading two-thirds of the Senate to break the filibuster.

The Senate Jan. 31 voted 53-42 to table (refuse to consider) the constitutional question posed by Johnson. Support for the tabling motion came from Southerners, some small-state Senators who were otherwise normally members of the liberal bloc, and a majority of the Senate's Republicans. Opposition to the tabling motion came from a bipartisan group of Senators, mostly from the large states.

Seven days later, the Senate failed by 10 votes to impose cloture on the 24-day filibuster and the issue was dropped for the year. (1963 Almanac p. 373)

1965 Dispute

The 1965 fight to ease Rule 22 was expected to produce a filibuster as in previous years. But the prospect of a long debate that would have tied up action on President Johnson's legislative program was averted when two resolutions aimed at easing Rule 22 were referred to the Rules and Administration Committee after only two days' debate. Under the unanimous consent agreement the Rules Committee was directed to report the resolutions on March 9, at the end of about two months. Senators seeking to change Rule 22 were assured that the delay in Senate action on their proposals would not prevent later consideration of the proposals. The Committee reported the resolutions adversely, ending the 1965 fight.

Following was the sequence of events leading up to the referral of the resolutions to the Committee:

Jan. 6. The attempt to amend Rule 22 got underway when Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) introduced a resolution (S Res 6), co-sponsored by Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.), to permit a three-fifths majority of the Senators present and voting to shut off debate. Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) introduced a substitute proposal (S Res 8) requiring a majority vote of the entire Senate membership (51 votes) to end a filibuster. Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) objected to immediate consideration of the resolutions, which automatically delayed further action for one day under Senate rules.

Jan. 7. The Senate returned to the issue during the "morning hour," the period set aside for consideration of usually routine business. When S Res 6 (Anderson's proposal) was again taken up, Dirksen moved that the resolution be sent to the Committee on Rules and Administration. (Douglas attempted, without success, to get the floor and have his resolution considered along with S Res 6, so that "whatever action was taken with respect to the Anderson proposal would also apply" to S Res 8.)

Anderson moved to amend Dirksen's motion so as to instruct the Rules and Administration Committee to report S Res 6 "and any other proposed amendments to Rule 22" to the Senate on Jan. 25. Anderson's amendment also stipulated that "all rights in existence at the opening of Congress shall be deemed preserved." This wording, which was at the heart of the controversy that followed, was intended to assure the liberals that their position of "not acquiescing" in Rule 22 would be protected, and their right to try to amend the rule would be kept alive despite the lapse of time when the resolution was in committee. The liberals feared that if the Senate were organized while Anderson's resolution was still under consideration in the Committee, it could be held that they had accepted all of the Senate Rules, including Rule 22, and that the resolutions to amend Rule 22 could be declared out of order.

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) objected to Anderson's amendment as being out of order on two points. He argued, first, that the reference to "other proposed amendments" instructed the Committee with respect to resolutions which were not yet pending before the Senate. Russell also said the provision to preserve existing rights was, in effect, instructing the Senate itself, which was not permissible.

Russell's objections went to Senate President pro tempore Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), who was presiding at the time, for a ruling. Hayden ruled that the first part of the amendment was instructions to the Committee and was, therefore, in order. The provision to preserve existing rights, Hayden said, was instructions to the Senators themselves and was not in order. This ruling, however, was not heard by leaders of the fight to amend Rule 22.

Shortly after Hayden's ruling, the morning hour expired and both Anderson's resolution and Douglas' substitute automatically went on the Senate calendar. (The calendar is an agenda or list of pending business.) Once on the calendar, either could be brought before the Senate only by the adoption of a motion to proceed to its consideration. Such a motion is debatable and could be filibustered by opponents of a change in Rule 22.

Anderson moved to proceed to consideration of S Res 6, but before the motion could be considered, the Senate temporarily moved to other business. When the Senate resumed discussion of Rule 22, Douglas said he had "heard it rumored" that Hayden had ruled "in an inaudible voice that the last clause" of Anderson's amendment to Dirksen's committal motion -- relating to preservation of rights -- was not in order. Douglas said he thought that no one "except those at the desk, heard the ruling made," and that had they heard it, those supporting Anderson's amendment would have appealed the ruling to the Senate.

Douglas and others protested the ruling, but without success. The Senate soon after recessed until the following day. (At a news conference called by Douglas, the reporter for the Congressional Record, the verbatim transcript of proceedings, said he did not hear Hayden's ruling. But the clerk of the Senate Journal, the official summary of proceedings, said he did hear it and would record it in the Journal. Information in the Journal takes precedence over any conflicting material in the Record. However, the ruling also was printed in the Record for Jan. 7.)

Jan. 8. When the Senate returned to the rules issues, the pending question was Anderson's motion to consider S Res 6. (Dirksen's motion and Anderson's amendment to it were no longer the immediate question before the Senate.) However, further action on Anderson's motion to take up S Res 6 did not occur. Mansfield asked unanimous consent to refer both S Res 6 and S Res 8 to the Rules and Administration Committee, with instructions that the Committee report on the resolution on March 9, 1965. Anderson asked if the proposal "would protect all existing rights," to which Mansfield replied, "Yes, of course." Mansfield's motion was then adopted by unanimous consent.

Asked what had led to the agreement to postpone action for two months, Anderson told reporters, "We just got reasonable, all of us."

RULES CHANGES DISAPPROVED

The Rules and Administration Committee March 3 voted 5-4 to report the two resolutions adversely, recommending against their adoption by the Senate. Voting against the rules changes were the Committee's Southern and Western Democrats and a Midwestern Republican: Sens. Jordan (D N.C.), Hayden (D Ariz.), Cannon (D Nev.) Byrd (D Va.) and Curtis (R Neb.). Voting for changes in Rule 22 were two Northern Democrats and two Republicans: Sens. Clark (D Pa.), Pell (D R.I.), Cooper (R Ky.) and Scott (R Pa.).

The reports recommending no action on the rules changes were filed on the March 9 deadline (S Res 6 - S Rept 75; S Res 8 -- S Rept 74).

Majority Views. The Committee said supporters of S Res 6 cited no precedent for a three-fifths vote to determine decisions in Congress. However, S Rept 75 said two-thirds votes were common procedure in Congress and were required by the Constitution in such matters as overriding a President's veto, expelling Congressional Members and proposing Amendments to the Constitution.

S Rept 74 said there was "no defensible reason why 51 percent of the Senators should always and under all circumstances have the right to impose their will on the other 49 percent." The report continued, "Bare or simple majorities do not necessarily have special or greater insight into the public interest. Democracy thus is not a system in which 51 percent of the people imposes its will on the other 49 percent. It is rather a system in which the aim of the political processes is to accommodate differences and to maximize agreement."

Minority Views. Sens. Hugh Scott (R Pa.) and Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), in identical minority views in both reports, said they deplored the decision of the Committee "by a bare majority not to report favorably to the Senate any resolution to amend" Rule 22. They said S Res 8 would provide "ample opportunity for extended and full debate" and would not change Rule 22 into a "gag rule." They said they would fight on the Senate floor for adoption of S Res 8 and, failing that, would support adoption of S Res 6.

Individual Views. In identical views in both reports, Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) said a three-fifths vote would redress "the balance between majority-minority viewpoints and offers a better accommodation of all the interests involved." He said the current requirement of a two-thirds vote to end a filibuster gave the minority too much power but that a majority vote would not give the minority sufficient protection against arbitrary action by the majority.

Sen. Cooper also said that existing rules providing one hour of debate for each Senator after cloture had been invoked did not permit sufficient time for discussion. He said he proposed an amendment to S Res 6 to provide an additional 100 hours of debate after cloture had been invoked and that the amendment was supported by four members (including Cooper) of the nine-member Committee.

JOINT COMMITTEE SET UP TO STUDY CONGRESS

H Con Res 4 -- Reported by House Rules Committee (H Rept 131) March 3, 1965.

S Con Res 2 -- Reported by Senate Rules and Administration Committee (S Rept 71) March 4.

- Adopted by the Senate by an 88-0 roll-call vote March 9. (See p. 1031)
- Adopted by the House by voice vote March 11.

Congress in 1965 established a Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress to study the operation and organization of Congress. Establishment of the Committee represented the first major attempt at Congressional reform since 1945.

The membership of the Joint Committee was set at 12, evenly divided between Senate and House members. The establishing resolution (S Con Res 2) gave the Committee specific authority to study and make recommendations on a variety of subjects, including the relationship between the two chambers and between Congress and other branches of Government; the employment and pay of Members of Congress and Congressional employees; and the structure of and relationship between committees.

There was little opposition to establishment of the Joint Committee, but certain Members of both houses failed in attempts to remove a provision prohibiting any recommendations by the Committee on the rules, parliamentary procedure, practices and precedents of the Senate or the House. The Committee, however, in an April 13 statement interpreting the scope of its authority, noted that the same restriction had been placed on the 1945 Joint Committee that wrote the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. The statement also disclosed that the Committee felt the restriction applied "only to the recommendations the Committee could make" and not "to the scope of the study authorized."

Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), vice chairman of the 1945-46 Committee, was named co-chairman of the 1965 Joint Committee along with Rep. Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), a close associate of House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.). Although Sen. Monroney's credentials as a reform architect were well established, a number of prime reform backers, including Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), Rep. Richard Bolling (D Mo.) and Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.), were not named to the Committee. However, two of the Republicans who had strongly supported reform in recent years, Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), were given Committee seats.

The Committee held hearings on Congressional reform between May 10 and Sept. 23, taking testimony first from Members of Congress and then from political scientists, representatives of various organizations and persons with special interests in or knowledge of reform.

An interim report was issued July 8, but the Committee confined itself to listing recommendations made by witnesses before the Committee. The recommendations covered the areas of committee chairmen's powers and seniority rights, committee jurisdictions and meeting rules, committee staffing, office staffing and workload, Congressional housekeeping functions, research services, various proposals for coordination of fiscal policy work in Congress, scheduling of Congressional sessions, floor rules, electronic aids and television, lobby law, election campaigns and ethics.

The Committee was expected to make its final report in early 1966.

PROVISIONS -- As adopted by the Senate and House, S Con Res 2:

Established a Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress composed of six Senate Members (appointed by the President of the Senate) and six House Members (appointed by the Speaker). The membership of each chamber would be evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats. The Committee could make recommendations only on a majority vote of the Members from each chamber, acting separately.

Authorized study of and recommendations on the organization and operation of each chamber; the "relationship" between the two chambers and between Congress and other branches of the Government; the employment and pay of Members of Congress and Congressional officers and employees; and the structure of and relationship between the standing, special and select committees. Specified that the Committee's work would not be limited to these subjects.

Prohibited the Committee from making any recommendation about the rules, parliamentary procedure, practices and/or precedents or the consideration of any matter on the floor of either chamber.

Authorized the Committee to operate during the 89th Congress and authorized $150,000 to cover expenses through Jan. 31, 1966.

Provided that the Committee submit its first report within 120 days after final approval of the resolution.

Background

1946 Reorganization. Even before the end of World War II, a great debate began on how to reorganize Congress so that it would be better able to cope with its increased workload and with the mushrooming Executive Branch.

In February 1945 Congress set up a Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress -- the LaFollette-Monroney Committee. On the basis of the Committee's recommendations, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 was enacted.

The Act raised Congressional salaries, banned certain types of private bills and required lobbyists to register and report their spending.

The number of standing committees was reduced by more than half in each chamber. Each committee was authorized to acquire professional staff and was directed to exercise "continuous watchfulness" on the execution by administrative agencies of laws whose subject matter fell within its jurisdiction.

In an effort to regain some of the initiative in fiscal policy lost to the Executive Branch, the Act called for a legislative budget of estimated total receipts and expenditures, drawn up by the House Ways and Means, Senate Finance and both Appropriations Committees. It was to include a ceiling on total appropriations for each year.

Questions directly involving the distribution of power within Congress were largely excluded from the Reorganization Act. The LaFollette-Monroney Committee heard evidence but made no recommendations on proposals to select committee chairmen on some basis other than seniority and to restrict the power of the House Rules Committee. The issue of limitation of debate in the Senate was beyond the Committee's jurisdiction. All of these issues remained in dispute in ensuing years.

Criticism. The 1946 Act had mixed results. Although the number of standing committees remained essentially the same after the 1946 changes, subcommittees proliferated and the number of committee staff members increased. The legislative budget, with no provision for enforcement, was abandoned after three experiments with it. The private bills eliminated in the Act reduced the Congressional workload, but the number of private immigration bills increased greatly. The lobby registration requirement, lacking teeth and subject to confusion of interpretation, also failed to meet its purpose.

The political and structural shortcomings of Congress drew increasing criticism. Political scientists, journalists and legislators themselves questioned the organization and procedures of Congress. Liberals especially called for Congressional reforms. However, it appeared that many of the liberals sought changes in Congress as a means of helping to get certain legislative programs through rather than for the purpose of making Congress a smoother operating body.

1953-64 Developments. During the Eisenhower years (1953-61), liberals in both parties found themselves at the mercy of a conservative coalition of Southern Democrats and Republican traditionalists, lodged behind ramparts of seniority and inflexible procedures. The coalition succeeded in blocking most liberal initiatives, even when these had been endorsed by President Eisenhower.

In the 1958 elections Democrats picked up 13 seats in the Senate and 47 in the House, giving them 2-to-1 majorities in both chambers. Most of the newcomers fell into the liberal wing of the party, giving impetus to formation of the Democratic Study Group (DSG) in the House in 1959 and rising criticism of institutional roadblocks to progressive measures. The issue assumed new significance with the election of President Kennedy, whose program was anathema to the conservative coalition. In a dramatic confrontation Jan. 31, 1961, House liberals managed to penetrate one of the coalition's bastions -- the Rules Committee -- and win a paper majority by enlarging its membership from 12 to 15. (1961 Almanac p. 402)

The victory proved to be somewhat illusory, however. Mr. Kennedy's New Frontier proposals continued to meet with obstruction and delay at the hands of well-entrenched opponents, and Congress appeared to be grinding to a halt at the time of the President's assassination Nov. 22, 1963.

Also in 1963, Sen. Clark and 29 co-sponsors introduced a resolution (S Con Res 1) calling for a 14-member committee of Senators and Representatives to study Congressional reform. An alternative plan (S 177), calling for a mixed commission of Members and Presidential appointees, was proposed by Sen. Case.

The Senate Rules Committee Sept. 19, 1963, reported S Con Res 1 after amending it to bar the proposed committee from recommending changes in Senate or House rules and to cut the membership to 12, divided evenly between the two parties and chambers. An effort to bring the measure to a vote was abandoned Dec. 6 when Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) objected to consideration so long as Sens. Clark and Case insisted on seeking to delete the restriction respecting rules changes. No action was taken on the measure in 1964. (1963 Almanac p. 377; 1964 Almanac p. 68)

1965 Developments. The Democrats' overwhelming election victories in 1964 spelled a clear message to liberal reformers: assured of majority strength in the 89th Congress, the time had come for a frontal attack on the system of rules and precedents by which a determined minority might continue to thwart a progressive President's program. The DSG persuaded House Speaker McCormack to agree to strip two Goldwater supporters of their committee seniority, to increase the ratio of Democratic seats on most committees, to revive the 21-day rule for rescuing legislation blocked in the Rules Committee and to institute a new rule permitting a majority to send bills to conference. These changes were approved by the House Jan. 4. (For story, see p. 585)

The DSG also won the Speaker's support for establishing a Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress. McCormack designated Rep. Madden to sponsor the joint committee proposal. Madden introduced H Con Res 4 Jan. 4. Two days later Sen. Monroney and 55 co-sponsors introduced a companion measure (S Con Res 2). Sen. Case sponsored a separate proposal (S 1208) to establish a commission with private citizens to study Congressional organization.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Rules and Administration.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 24 and March 1 on S Con Res 2.

ACTION -- Reported S Con Res 2 without amendment (S Rept 71) March 4. The report said S Con Res 2 "establishes a reasonable basis for constructive and expeditious development of needed Congressional reforms." It said that the Senate and the House, rather than a joint committee, were the proper bodies to suggest changes in rules and related matters. It said inclusion of these subjects in the study would "diminish the effectiveness of the study and lessen the prospects for achieving any significant reform."

Sens. Clark and Hugh Scott (R Pa.), in minority views, opposed the prohibition against recommendations on rules, noting that "the rules, parliamentary procedure, practices, precedents and floor action of both houses constitute the strong and endless redtape which bind the Congress and prevent action when action is needed. There is not much else worth investigating."

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate March 9 adopted S Con Res 2 by an 88-0 roll-call vote after rejecting an amendment by Clark to remove from the resolution the stipulation that the Committee could not make any recommendations about "rules, parliamentary procedure, practices and/or precedents" or "the consideration of any matter on the floor" of either the House or the Senate. Clark's amendment was defeated by a 29-58 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 1031)

Twenty-five Democrats and four Republicans voted for Clark's amendment. The four were Case, Hiram L. Fong (Hawaii), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) and Scott. Twenty-five Republicans and 33 Democrats opposed the amendment.

Clark contended, during two days of debate on the resolution, that the committee could do little to improve Congressional operation and organization unless there was a revision of the rules and other items mentioned in the restriction. Clark March 8 said "the real position of the majority" was a desire to avoid recommendations, "which might conceivably overthrow the balance of power in the Senate, which is now exercised by the minority bipartisan group which I have chosen to call the Senate establishment."

Monroney March 9 said there was a choice between "Congressional reorganization within the authorization of this (resolution) or no reorganization at all." Monroney argued that Clark's amendment would prevent the joint committee from making "a single proposal which could command uniform support and stand any chance of passage."

Monroney March 8 said Clark and other critics of S Con Res 2 overemphasized the importance of restriction. He said the joint committee could do valuable work in studying such areas as improved methods for Congress to handle federal spending proposals (perhaps through use of electronic data processing equipment), the committee system and the proliferation of subcommittees since 1946 and the individual Member's workload.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

March 9 -- Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Delete language in S Con Res 2 which prohibited the Joint Committee from making recommendations on the rules, parliamentary procedure, practices and/or precedents or the consideration of any matter on the floor of either chamber. Roll-call vote, 29-58.

ACTION -- Reported H Con Res 4 without amendment (H Rept 131) March 3.

FLOOR ACTION

The House March 11 adopted H Con Res 4 by voice vote. The House then by voice votes adopted S Con Res 2 and tabled H Con Res 4. The two resolutions were identical. The House's adoption of S Con Res 2 concluded action on the measure, since Presidential approval of a concurrent resolution is not required.

As in the Senate, floor debate in the House centered on the provision preventing the Committee from making recommendations on rules, parliamentary procedures, practices and precedents of the two chambers. Opponents of the restriction argued that the Committee could accomplish no meaningful work unless it could make recommendations about Senate and House rules, procedures and related matters. Richard S. Schweiker (R Pa.) called the resolution "woefully inadequate" and Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) argued that "even innocuous things, such as electric voting, joint hearings of House and Senate committees, and important matters like questions of ethics...would require modification" of House rules and practices.

Madden said the proposed Committee was not prevented from holding hearings on any Congressional reorganization problem or proposal. He suggested that such hearings would help publicize possible changes. "No rules of the House can be changed unless public opinion and Members of the House want them changed," Madden argued. "This Joint Committee is not going to change the rules of the House, whether they have the permission to do so or not, because only the House itself can change the rules."

Committee Makeup, Hearings

Membership. McCormack March 11 appointed the following House Members to the Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress: Democrats Madden, Jack Brooks (Texas) and Ken Hechler (W. Va.) and Republicans Curtis, Robert P. Griffin (Mich.) and Durward G. Hall (Mo.). Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey March 15 appointed the following Senators to the Committee: Democrats Monroney, John J. Sparkman (Ala.) and Lee Metcalf (Mont.) and Republicans Case, Karl E. Mundt (S.D.) and J. Caleb Boggs (Del.).

Sen. Monroney was the "ideal" sponsor for the Joint Committee. As a member of the House in 1945, he had been vice chairman of a similar 12-man panel headed by Sen. Robert M. LaFollette (Progressive Wis. 1925-47) that wrote the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Although not prominently identified with the reform movement in recent years, Monroney's credentials were acceptable to liberals as well as conservatives; and it was no surprise that he was named to head the six-man Senate contingent.

The choice of Rep. Madden as the ranking House member reflected a sharper division. The Speaker's basic rationale called for a member of the Rules Committee, which would have to pass upon the ultimate recommendations of the Joint Committee. But the Rules Committee member most prominently identified with the reform movement was Rep. Bolling, a close lieutenant of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas 1913-61), who opposed McCormack's succession. Bolling also wrote a book, "House Out of Order" (published in 1964), excoriating the establishment headed by McCormack. The selection of Madden (who was senior to Bolling on the Rules Committee) gave the Speaker a trusted voice on the Joint Committee. Other members assigned:

- Sparkman, a Southern moderate with considerable seniority.
- Metcalf, a liberal who was a leader of the DSG before entering the Senate in 1961.
- Mundt, a conservative and a Representative when the House passed the Legislative Reorganization Act. Mundt was designated by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), who served on the LaFollette-Monroney Committee as a Representative.
- Case, an outspoken liberal who had supported revision of the Senate cloture rule, public disclosure of Members' finances and legislative reform generally.
- Boggs, a moderate elected to the Senate in 1960 after six years as Representative and eight as Governor of Delaware. Boggs and Case were co-sponsors of S Con Res 1 in 1963.
- Brooks, a moderate who was close to President Johnson.
- Hechler, a political scientist with extensive government experience and a DSG member since entering the House in 1959.
- Curtis, a progressive long identified with legislative reform in general and the problem of minority staffing in particular. Curtis was asked to serve by Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford Jr. (Mich.).
- Griffin, a moderate and a close ally of Ford.
- Hall, a conservative supporter of Ford.

Staff. Unlike the LaFollette-Monroney Committee, which employed George B. Galloway as staff director, the Monroney-Madden Committee (which designated both men as co-chairmen) decided against having a staff director.

Instead, each of the four delegations was authorized to pick its own professional staff member. Those named:

● W. DeVier Pierson, a 33-year-old attorney from Oklahoma City, designated as chief counsel by Sen. Monroney.

● Former Rep. George Meader (R Mich. 1951-65), who was defeated for re-election in 1964, named to serve as associate counsel by Rep. Curtis at Minority Leader Ford's suggestion. Meader, 57, served as counsel of two Senate investigating committees before entering the House: the wartime Truman Committee and the Fulbright panel that probed the Reconstruction Finance Corp. in 1950.

● Melvin W. Sneed, an assistant director of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations and former staff member of two Congressional committees and the U.S. Office of Education, named by Sen. Mundt to serve as staff assistant.

● Dr. Nicholas A. Masters, 36-year-old professor of political science at Pennsylvania State University, picked by Reps. Madden and Brooks to be research consultant.

HEARINGS

The Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress held hearings between May 10 and Sept. 23 on ways to improve the operation and organization of Congress.

TESTIMONY -- May 10 -- In opening remarks, Sen. Monroney recalled his role as vice chairman of the 1945 joint committee that wrote the LaFollette-Monroney Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and stated that "the need for reorganization is as apparent to all of us now as it was 20 years ago."

Remarks by Sen. Monroney and other members of the Committee confirmed their understanding that the proviso in S Con Res 2 barring them from recommending changes in the rules, practices and precedents of either Senate or House did not prevent the Committee from taking testimony regarding such matters, and that they would in fact welcome discussion of these aspects of the legislative process.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) was the first witness. Legislative bodies throughout the world were in retreat before increasingly powerful executives, he said, and "history is not on our side." Moreover, he said, Congress and its leaders "are no longer in tune with intelligent opinion in the nation." Clark, a leading critic of Senate rules and practices, then reviewed the package of reforms he had been proposing since 1960.

These included steps to circumscribe the right of Senators to demand quorum calls; prohibit a Senator from holding the floor for more than three hours; permit a non-debatable motion invoking germaneness until the pending measure was disposed of; make non-debatable a motion to take up a measure; prohibit non-germane amendments; add to Appropriations subcommittees (as ex-officio members) more members of the legislative committees directly concerned; and institute in the Senate the rule of the previous question (observed by the House), permitting a majority to shut off debate. Clark also proposed that committee chairmen be elected by their committees; that they be required to step down from their posts at age 70; and that Senators be appointed to no more than two committees and no more than one major committee.

Rep. Ed Edmondson (D Okla.) urged greater use of electronic devices by Congress, including sound-on-film records of important floor debates, closed-circuit television of House and Senate proceedings with receivers in every Member's office as well as a public information center for visitors to the Capitol, and electronic voting machinery. Rep. Edmondson asked the Committee to encourage greater use of joint committees, of joint meetings of House and Senate committees, and of joint meetings of committees in the same chamber dealing with related subjects. He also urged that the District of Columbia be given a voting representative in the House.

May 11 -- Rep. J. Arthur Younger (R Calif.) called for abolishing the "basic pay" method of computing the salaries of Congressional employees which "only serves to confuse the public," arguing that "Congress would not tolerate the use of its own system for computing staff salaries by any federal agency." The Committee decided to ask for reports on the matter from Senate and House officials.

Rep. Robert McClory (R Ill.) recommended establishment of a 36-member Joint Legislative Budget Committee (provided for by the 1946 Reorganization Act but abandoned in 1949); increased and improved staffing of committees; lengthening the term of Representatives to four years; earlier adjournments and periodic recesses; and the establishment of joint rules to facilitate a closer working relationship between Senate and House.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D N.Y.) proposed establishment of an Office of Management Adviser to assist Members in organizing their offices and work loads, and an Office of Personnel to assist in locating staff members and supervise an extensive intern program. He also suggested expansion of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, development of a press digest service, and funds to finance consultations with non-government experts. Rep. Rosenthal concluded with "a strong plea for a guaranteed Congressional vacation -- each summer, at specified times -- in order to allow us to be efficient family men as well as efficient Members of Congress."

Rep. John S. Monagan (D Conn.) deplored the spate of uninformed and unrealistic criticism of Congress, saying that while its practices might be improved an attack on its adequacy as an institution was unjustified. He proposed several steps to strengthen Congressional supervision of federal fiscal affairs.

Proposal for 'Ombudsman'

May 12 -- Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) spelled out his proposal for establishing the office of Administrative Counsel, modeled on the Scandinavian "ombudsman." Aided by a staff of experts, the Counsel would take over the job of investigating the many complaints received by Members from constituents regarding the decisions of administrative agencies respecting such matters as postal service, taxes, Social Security benefits, and veterans pensions. Already a major part of each Member's work load, this "casework" is bound to increase, said Reuss, because of increasing population and the expansion of Government-citizen relations through such programs as medicare.

Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) recommended that, with strictly limited exceptions, all committee meetings be opened to the public; that Senate committees with overlapping jurisdictions be combined; that Congress create a budget auditing and survey staff to service the Appropriations Committees; and that the seniority system be modified so that Senators from one section of the country could not hold chairmanships of more than one-half of the standing committees. In conclusion, Proxmire said:

"Encroachment of the Executive Branch on Congressional power and responsibility has been one of the most conspicuous developing features of American government in recent years. In my judgment this encroachment is strictly the fault of Congress. The Presidency has equipped itself with modern tools to do its job. Congress has not. The Executive Branch has moved into effective control of the purse because Congressional failure to do an adequate job has created a vacuum."

May 13 -- Rep. D. R. (Billy) Matthews (D Fla.) said he thought Congress was "reasonably well organized at the present time" and that Congressional committee operations could not be improved by changing the seniority system. He urged, however, that definite dates be set for Congressional adjournment, that committee attendance be made public, that vice chairmen be appointed by committee chairmen to conduct business when the chairman is absent, that joint introduction of bills be permitted in the House and that all votes on appropriations bills be recorded. He proposed that House terms be lengthened to four years and staggered, that Members of the House be prohibited from seeking other legislative offices while holding their House seats and that the format of the Congressional Record be made more attractive with a limitation placed on extraneous matter. He said he thought the Rules Committee served to check legislation because it was "without specific provincial interests" and gave Members not on the committee reporting the bill a final chance to appear to discuss the merits of the proposed legislation.

Rep. Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.) termed the seniority system Congress' "one basic illness" and called for shorter sessions accomplished through better scheduling of legislation. He suggested that the seniority system be modified to allow each party, by secret ballot in caucus, to choose its top ranking member on each committee -- chairman or ranking minority member -- from its three senior members on the committee. He suggested that the Joint Committee consider the following steps to shorten sessions: scheduling most of the committee work at the beginning of a session and the floor action toward the end, setting three full days a week of committee work and two of legislative business on the floor as a regular pattern, and conducting business on Monday and Friday.

Rep. Hervey G. Machen (D Md.) proposed a summer intern program in each Congressional office. (For story on House adoption of a resolution establishing such a program, see p. 684)

Rep. Jonathan B. Bingham (D N.Y.) urged creation of a joint Legislative-Executive committee on intelligence activities to review CIA and similar intelligence operations. He suggested orientation programs for both new Congressmen and their staffs, including training in the rules and procedures of Congress for the Congressmen.

Rotation of Chairmanships

May 17 -- Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) said the Rules Committee should be barred from discharging legislative committees of bills and bringing them to the floor. He called for rotation of committee chairmanships so that the leadership base would be "broadened" and chairmanships would not become "encrusted." He warned against the multiplication of subcommittees, pointing out that they resulted in "competing and conflicting" demands on Congressmen's time and attention. He emphasized the necessity of improving the quality, not the quantity of professional staffs, maintaining that "the Congress will best be served if its professional staffs remain moderate in numbers, high in competence, broad in understanding, versatile and flexible in adaptation, and non-partisan in outlook."

Sen. Gordon Allott (R Colo.) suggested that consideration of bills or resolutions be held up except by unanimous consent, until the printed bill as amended by the committee, the printed report, and the printed hearings had been available to Senators for at least 48 hours and that hearings not be held until the printed bill had been available at least a week. He asked that qualifications and specifications for staff personnel be established, that committees dealing with scientific legislation be staffed with experts to "scrutinize" technical testimony given by departments, agencies and organizations seeking funds and that minority staffing be improved.

Rep. Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) recommended the establishment of a seven-member, bipartisan House Grievance Committee "to hear complaints concerning the conduct of any member of the House" and the creation of a Commission on Ethics "to investigate complaints of unethical conduct by federal officials and employees."

May 18 -- Rep. John J. Rhodes (R Ariz.) proposed creation of a Joint Committee on the State of the Union to make a "continuing over-all study of the national economy, and of the relationships of state and local government to the national government." The committee, composed of the leadership of both houses, would, Rhodes said, serve as a Congressional steering committee and as a Legislative Bureau of the Budget. He also suggested adoption of a code of ethics and provision for the election of a temporary committee chairman when the regular chairman was disabled.

Rep. Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.) urged that House terms be lengthened to four years; that a central clearing-house be set up to schedule committee and subcommittee meetings; that Congress meet on a year-round basis with specific recesses set and that federal grant programs be reviewed every five years. She called for increased minority staffing on committees and subcommittees, additional use of temporary ad hoc committees and adoption of a code of ethics for both Members of Congress and their staffs.

Sen. James B. Pearson (R Kan.) called for upgraded committee staffs, saying they were "necessary to assure to Congress the retention of its role as a co-equal branch of government." He urged that each member of a committee be allotted a staff position and that Congress meet the year around with scheduled recesses.

Rep. William L. Springer (R Ill.) suggested that minority staffing be made proportionate to minority strength on committees; that electric voting, with one day a week set aside for voting, be instituted; and that pages be selected on a nonpartisan, competitive basis from college students of both sexes. He said use of college students "would require much less supervision by Congress, and their welfare in this large metropolitan area would give us less cause for concern...."

Rep. John R. Schmidhauser (D Iowa) called for home rule for the District of Columbia, maintaining that Congress had enough work to do without "the additional duties of legislating for the District of Columbia."

May 19 -- Rep. Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) said he felt Congress was "operating under far less than optimum conditions." He suggested that the work load of Congressmen be lightened by realigning committee jurisdiction and responsibility "so that the burden of committee work is more equalized," that an Office of Administrative Counsel be established to assist Congressmen in processing constituent inquiries, that joint committee hearings be held when committees "are dealing with the same subject matter and hearing identical witnesses."

Research Assistants on Legislation

May 20 -- Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.) proposed that each Member be assigned a legislative assistant to handle research on the Congressman's committee assignments, that the practice of having committee staffs responsible to chairmen and ranking members be eliminated, that use be made of joint hearings and that committee meetings be permitted during Senate sessions. He also suggested a cloture rule which could be invoked by a majority vote and an extension of the Senate germaneness rule to cover all debate which takes place after the morning hour.

Rep. W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.) advocated creation of a legislative Bureau of the Budget, enlargement of the Coordinator of Information's office and expansion of the Capitol police force. He suggested that campaign costs be limited by prohibiting funds from crossing state lines and by having Senators elected by state legislatures.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) urged that Rule 22 be modified to permit cloture to be invoked on debate by a majority vote; that a Joint Committee on National Security be created to hold hearings, study and make recommendations on national security; that a question and answer period be established so that Cabinet officers "might answer questions of the membership in either house at specified times and on a regular basis;" and that pre-committee staff hearings be held to "sharpen the testimony and reveal the issues which need clarification once the principals face each other in the committee room at the formal hearing." To save Congressional time, Kuchel suggested abolishing Congressional appointments to the military academies, eliminating postmaster appointments by Congress, establishment of a special board to handle private immigration bills and small claims and establishment of home rule for the District of Columbia. Criticizing the appropriations process for bearing "little relationship to the economic, tax, monetary, and fiscal policies with which it should be intimately involved," Kuchel proposed a reconstitution of the Joint Economic Committee to include the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Ways and Means and Finance Committees and perhaps the chairman and ranking minority member of the Armed Services and Public Works Committees. He also urged that the President submit more than one Economic Report a year, that the reports be submitted at some time other than the beginning of the session and that the Appropriations Committees "develop a closer relationship between the actions of their subcommittees and the over-all budget."

Sen. Gale W. McGee (D Wyo.) suggested sabbatical leaves for Congressmen.

Minority Control of Committees

May 24 -- Rep. James C. Cleveland (R N.H.) requested that when the Executive and Legislative Branches were dominated by the same political party, the control of the House and Senate Government Operations Committees be placed under the control of the minority party. He pointed out that a Democrat had been asked to head the Teapot Dome investigation when the Republicans controlled the two branches and that House Minority Leader Ford had supported such an arrangement in a March 25 speech to the National Press Club. He also urged that contested election laws be clarified so that persons other than defeated candidates could appeal to the House to consider the election.

Rep. John V. Tunney (D Calif.) asked that at least two new professionally trained assistants be provided for every Congressional office.

Rep. John C. Culver (D Iowa) recommended the creation of a Citizens Representative to work with citizens having business before government agencies and to investigate corruption charges and abuse of power in the Legislative and Executive Branches of the Government.

Rep. Paul H. Todd Jr. (D Mich.) urged a reduction in the number of ceremonies and parties, improvement of restaurant service and the abstraction of insertions and agency reports from the Congressional Record. He also suggested that short summaries of testimony be submitted to committees before hearings take place and that committee members be permitted to submit written questions to witnesses before committee hearings begin.

May 25 -- Rep. Chester L. Mize (R Kan.) termed omnibus bills "catch-alls for all matter of sundry items, which if considered separately, would never make it on their own." He said one of the "most disturbing trends" he had seen was "the practice of introducing new concepts and tying them in with accepted programs." He told the Committee he was introducing a bill to prohibit any public bill, resolution or amendment to a bill or resolution to pertain "to more than one single subject matter."

Rep. Sam M. Gibbons (D Fla.) recommended use of electronic equipment, particularly closed-circuit television, to connect Congressmen's offices with committee hearing rooms and recordings of debates. He urged that a committee majority be allowed to remove a committee chairman, that regulations be set for the holding of closed committee sessions and that an Administrative Council be created to handle constituent problems.

Rep. James Kee (D W. Va.) asked that Congressmen be permitted a minimum of 12 round-trips annually to their districts.

Rep. Claude Pepper (D Fla.) recommended that both houses be given the authority to advise and consent to treaties, that the Speaker be permitted to recognize a member of a legislative committee for the purpose of making a motion that a bill be removed from the committee, that the Speaker be allowed to set aside time for general debate, that the Legislative Reference Service be expanded, that prompt delivery service be provided between the Capitol and executive agencies and that weekly mailings to constituents be authorized.

May 26 -- Rep. Robert F. Ellsworth (R Kan.) said that "the people of this nation are short-changed because the workings of Congress are not conveyed to them through the available media." He said this could be remedied by permitting the "telecasting and broadcasting of proceedings in the Chambers of the House and Senate and the telecasting and broadcasting of proceedings before any committee of the Congress."

Rep. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) recommended admitting the Secretary of State to the floor of the House to give "explanations of what our world-wide goals are, and the procedures by which the Administration proposes to attain them." He said that because surveillance of the Central Intelligence Agency was "at best spotty," a Joint Committee on Foreign Information and Intelligence should be set up to supervise intelligence operations. He also proposed an amendment to the Administrative Procedure Act to require Members of Congress and their employees to report all communications with government regulatory agencies, if the communications concerned matters being considered by the agency.

May 27 -- Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) proposed shorter election campaigns and the holding of joint Appropriations Committee hearings.

Selective TV Coverage

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) suggested that "selected" radio and television coverage of Congressional operations be permitted; that a public address system be installed in the Senate; that the Executive agencies involved make announcements of federal grants, instead of permitting Congressmen to do so; that uniform rules be established for committee procedure; and that pre-trial court procedures be used in Congressional investigations to review testimony.

In a statement put into the Committee records, Rep. Ronald Brooks Cameron (D Calif.) pointed out that $4.4 million was spent on roll calls and quorum calls during the 88th Congress and that much of this amount could be saved by the use of electric voting. He said, "As a member of the California Assembly for four years, I and many of my colleagues in the state's Congressional delegation used such a system. It served us well."

June 2 -- Rep. David S. King (D Utah) suggested that changes in the rules of Congress might be made so as to encourage attendance during floor proceedings.

Rep. Donald Rumsfeld (R Ill.) proposed that the Legislative Reference Service prepare advance analyses of major legislation, that the policy of encouraging Members to announce federal grants and contracts be discontinued, that lame-duck Congressmen be prohibited from making Congressional trips and that discourteous Congressional employees be promptly suspended or dismissed.

Rep. Samuel S. Stratton (D N.Y.) said that, despite the work of the Committee, the Congress would "go on operating here pretty much the way we do now, pretty much in fact the way we have for the past 189 years. The average Congressman will still be a little bit harassed, a little bit frustrated, a little bit disorganized, trying hard to help both his district and his country. But in spite of everything, he'll still be tickled pink with having the luck to hold down the best darned job in the world."

Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) made the following suggestions: set fixed meeting days for committees, provide funds for Members to purchase research publications, have the House pay the staffs of the Democratic Steering and the Republican Party Committees and provide a legislative assistant for each Representative.

June 3 -- Rep. James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) said party caucuses should pass upon each committee nomination, and the nominations should be made by each party's committee on committees or by the Speaker and the Minority Leader.

Sen. Frank E. Moss (D Utah) asked that the seniority system be made "more pliant to our needs" by having committee chairmen selected from the four senior majority members on each committee and by requiring chairmen to retire from the chairmanship at the age of 70.

June 4 -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) suggested that Congress could learn a lot from "well-managed corporations."

Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) called for appropriations on a two-year basis, with an annual review of some of the provisions.

Rep. William B. Widnall (R N.J.) proposed that the Senate confirm appointments for director and deputy director of the Bureau of the Budget, that Congress create a Joint Subcommittee on the Federal Budget and Fiscal Policy in the Joint Economic Committee, and that each committee of Congress be required to report its findings concerning reports of the Comptroller General which were relevant to its jurisdiction.

Rep. Melvin R. Laird (R Wis.), in a statement submitted to the Committee, recommended that "each standing substantive committee of the Congress establish, as a permanent part of its subcommittee structure, a subcommittee on legislative oversight" to "be composed of an equal number of majority and minority members."

Uniform Rules on Investigations

Dr. James Kerr Pollock of the University of Michigan recommended that Congress adopt a uniform set of rules for Congressional investigations and that a Congressional office for personnel administration be established. He said more use should be made of question and review sessions with agency officials and that lobbying laws should be tightened.

Dr. Lawrence K. Pettit of the University of Pennsylvania suggested that funds be provided for hiring special consultants from time to time and that Members be provided with opinion survey facilities. Pettit also called for the election of subcommittee chairmen by the majority members of the full committee, the setting of subcommittee jurisdiction by the committee's majority members and the removal of the authority to hire subcommittee staffs from the chairman of the full committee.

Former Director of the Census Richard M. Scammon, currently with the Public Affairs Institute, suggested increasing the size of the House in order to lighten the individual Member's work load.

June 8 -- Michael K. O'Leary of Dartmouth College said the Committee should give attention to proposals to increase the ability of Congress to obtain organized information, and also recommended that Members be prohibited from holding reserve military commissions.

Dr. James Robinson of Ohio State University called for the establishment of a Committee on National Security Problems in each house of Congress to cover both military and foreign affairs.

Dr. Paul T. David of the University of Virginia submitted to the Committee the draft of a proposed constitutional amendment which would set the first Tuesday in October as the date for election for Congress and the President, provide for Congress to convene on the first Monday in November, set the inauguration date as the first Friday after the first Monday in November and convene Congress, in off years, either on the first Monday in November or in late October. David said, "The merits of the proposal most obviously have a high relationship to the scheduling of the fiscal year..." since Congress, under the new schedule, could organize itself and act on appropriations earlier than it currently does.

June 9 -- Dr. Ernest Griffith of American University proposed July delivery of the President's Economic Report, Joint Economic Committee hearings to follow soon thereafter, a report by the Joint Committee by January and a supplementary Presidential report in January. He suggested changing the composition of the Joint Economic Committee to consist of the senior members of the Appropriations Committees, the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee; establishing a Constituent Reference Service and a Congressional Research Service as separate divisions of the Library of Congress; and providing a liaison person between each standing committee and the Legislative Reference Service.

Dr. Daniel M. Berman of American University pointed out that the "high hopes" raised in 1946 when the Legislative Reference Service received "permanent statutory authorization" and a "more or less respectable budget" had been dashed as the staff members came to "fritter away their time" answering constituent requests and preparing "self-serving speeches to be delivered by Congressmen." He said that this was one reason he did not expect "any proposals for basic reform to emanate from Congress itself -- or, more specifically, from this Joint Committee."

Campaign Spending Reforms

Herbert E. Alexander, director of Citizens' Research Foundation and a member of President Kennedy's 1961 Commission on Campaign Costs, called for reform of campaign spending laws and practices. Presenting what he termed "my own" views on the subject, he suggested that Congress "...is not now organized to give the subject of political contributions and expenditures adequate, comprehensive, or effective attention; ...is not organized to properly publicize the campaign fund reports now required under federal law; ...has not established a means to examine or audit the filed reports"; and has not set up enforcement machinery to report violations to proper authorities. He proposed the establishment of a permanent Joint Committee on Political Finance.

June 10 -- Dr. William Y. Elliott of American University called for additional use of ad hoc and special and select committees to deal with legislation which crossed jurisdictional lines.

Dr. Alfred de Grazia of New York University said that Congress needed an adequate intelligence and research system.

Dr. E. Foster Dowell of Oklahoma City University and the Oklahoma Political Science Assn. said two major developments pointed up the need for reform: the "continuing cold war" and the growth of the Federal Government and the American economy since World War II. He recommended that the President present his Economic Report after the State of the Union Message and before his Budget Message, that the fiscal year be made to coincide with the calendar year, that November 1 be made the deadline for action on all appropriations bills and that the President be granted an item veto on appropriations bills.

June 21 -- Vincent T. Wasilewski, president of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, called for radio and television coverage of Congressional proceedings. He said, "Greater public awareness of the responsibilities and accomplishments of the Congress will inevitably lead to more enlightened and constructive public decisions. Extension of broadcast coverage of Congressional proceedings will go far to achieve this end."

Dr. Arthur Maass of Harvard University noted the increasing use of short-term authorizations and recommended that the Joint Committee obtain full information on such authorizations and then suggest guidelines to Congress. Maass said that non-statutory control of Executive agencies by appropriations subcommittees often resulted in giving control to small groups, excessive encroachment on legislative committees and the promotion of disunity in the Executive Branch. He opposed additional minority staffing on committees on the grounds that it would increase partisanship to too great a degree.

Matt Triggs of the American Farm Bureau Federation said Congress should avoid delegation of broad, discretionary powers to the Executive Branch, enact corrective legislation in the areas where the Supreme Court had encroached upon the legislature and provide additional time for non-governmental witnesses to testify at committee hearings.

Mrs. Ruth G. Desmond of the Federation of Homemakers called for establishment of a House Committee on Health and Safety with jurisdiction over false labeling and packaging of drugs, foods, cosmetics and pesticides.

Study of Congressional Rules Urged

June 22 -- Dr. Sidney Wise, chairman, Department of Government, Franklin and Marshall College, testifying for the Americans for Democratic Action (ADA), said that to "overlook (Congressional) rules is...to overlook substance" and that the ADA "resented the extent to which Congressional rules have been the pallbearers of live issues and dead bills." He urged the Joint Committee to recommend: a separate study of Congressional rules, since the Committee was not authorized to suggest specific changes in rules and procedures; a committee "bill of rights" to minimize "capricious, arbitrary actions" by committee chairmen; and a "bill of rights" for witnesses at Congressional investigations.

Francis W. Stover of the Veterans of Foreign Wars suggested establishment of a Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee with the same jurisdiction as the House Veterans' Affairs Committee has.

June 23 -- Neal Peirce, political editor of Congressional Quarterly, noted the following loopholes in the 1946 lobbying act: "Organizations which spend money out of their own funds on lobbying Congress, but which do not solicit, receive or collect money specifically for the purpose of lobbying, are apparently not covered by the requirements of the law; ...an organization is not covered by the law unless it receives money for the principal purpose of lobbying Congress through direct contacts with Members; ...(there) is the vagueness in the law about precisely what kinds of contacts with Congress constitute lobbying; ...the law leaves it up to each group or lobbyist, in practice, to determine for himself what portion of his total expenditures have been spent on lobbying and are subject to the reporting requirements" and the law included no adequate enforcement mechanism. Peirce said the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 failed to require "reports of contributions or expenditures in either Presidential or Congressional primary campaigns, or in connection with campaigns for a party's Presidential nomination." He said that although the law required candidates for Congress "to report all spending made with their 'knowledge or consent,' most candidates interpret this to cover only their so-called 'personal' campaign expenditures." Another shortcoming, Peirce said, was that "money raised is often spent within the state where it is collected -- such as a New York group paying for nationwide television or advertising -- so that the contributions never appear on the national reports."

Sidney Zagri, legislative counsel of the Teamsters Union, suggested that the "central problem of the Congress is to be found in the diffusion of power and responsibility and the absence of a mechanism which is responsive and accountable to the national will." He listed four goals of Congressional reform: "The distinctive functions of the Congress to initiate legislative proposals and to control the content of legislative policy must be restored; Congress must also maintain its oversight of the decisions of the Executive officials....; Congress must retain the confidence and respect of the electorate by performing its functions rationally, expediently, and with integrity; Congress must continue to serve the needs of the average citizen whose needs of representation in the face of the evergrowing complexities of the bureaucracy must be served." Zagri called for revision of the seniority system to prevent the majority party from being a "house divided against itself."

June 24 -- Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) favored the following changes in Congressional operations: increasing the staffing and communications allowances of Senators from the most populous states; installing closed television circuits between the floor and the Congressmen's offices and committee hearing rooms; indexing the Congressional Record daily; and delivering to each Senator's office a duplicate set of materials as placed on his desk on the floor.

John C. Davidson, vice president, Government Finance Division, National Assn. of Manufacturers, requested elimination of expenditures not channeled through the regular appropriations processes; open hearings in the House Appropriations Committee; inclusion of all Budget requests into two bills -- one covering defense and national security, the other covering all other federal programs; and establishment of an advisory council on federal credit programs including representatives of private industry.

Decline of Congress

June 25 -- Major Gen. Thomas A. Lane, representing the Americans for Constitutional Action, called for increased Congressional participation in foreign affairs. He said, "The steady usurpation of legislative power by the President and the Supreme Court in recent years and the passive acceptance of these usurpations by the Congress evidence a decline of Congress which threatens the republic." He charged that Congress was too concerned with political matters and recommended creation, in each chamber, of a bipartisan committee on the Congress to protect the functioning of Congress as a legislative body and to preserve the balance of powers.

Aug. 3 -- Dr. Joseph C. Pray of the University of Oklahoma proposed that all committee and subcommittee staff members be coordinated under a staff director. He also recommended establishment of a Joint Committee on National Security and a joint staff for the Senate and House Appropriations Committees.

Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska) suggested that a Joint Committee on Political Finance be established.

Aug. 4 -- Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) called for the "establishment of a substantially increased professional staff for legislative committees so that all legislation would be written here on the Hill." Pucinski said he did not feel that Executive agencies should write legislation and that the additional staff would enable Congress to do its own drafting. Pucinski suggested that "all new positions would be filled through a system of civil service to be established by the Congress or through the General Accounting Office."

Mrs. Donna Allen, Washington representative, National Committee to Abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee, maintained that "it weakens the Congress to have one of its committees a storm center of criticism evoking widespread condemnation of its activities, its procedures, its intent and the resulting and inevitable effect."

Aug. 9 -- George E. Agree, executive director, National Committee for an Effective Congress, suggested that Congress provide facilities for ad hoc Member study groups. He said regulations as to size, party composition, leadership permission, staff and funds could be established.

Karney A. Brasfield of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants proposed establishment of a mechanized data processing information system and periodic reviews of programs and administering agencies.

Aug. 10 -- Herbert M. Houston, national commander, Veterans of World War I, pointed out that jurisdiction over veterans' affairs was spread out over four Senate committees and urged the creation of a standing Senate committee to handle the subject.

Rep. Lester L. Wolff (D N.Y.) suggested changes in the process of amending legislation. Currently, he said, amendments are "hastily written," read aloud by the clerk and explained for five minutes by their sponsor. Wolff suggested that a procedure be devised whereby all Members could read an amendment and whereby the introducing Member's remarks on the amendment could be reproduced before voting.

Rep. Weston E. Vivian (D Mich.) suggested that small television-like facsimile displays be placed at each third House seat to present reproduction of amendments or documents being considered by the House. Vivian also proposed that electronic recordings of floor proceedings be made and that floor debates be made available on telephone lines.

Aug. 11 -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) proposed that more seats on appropriations ad hoc subcommittees be given to members of legislative committees and that a $10-tax credit be given to individuals for political contributions.

Aug. 12 -- Rep. Robert T. Stafford (R Vt.) called for joint hearings whenever high administrative public officials were required to testify. He also endorsed printing in the Congressional Record only "those remarks which are actually made on the floor."

Sen. Strom Thurmond (R S.C.) said that "it is imperative that Congress adopt procedures which allow it to keep abreast of changing times, mounting governmental expenditures and never-ending requests for funds." To do this, Thurmond endorsed creation of a Joint Committee on the Budget; splitting Congressional sessions into two a year, with the last session being for appropriations only; changing the fiscal year to coincide with the calendar year; and utilization of electronic devices such as computers.

Aug. 16 -- Rep. Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.) proposed that "exclusive jurisdiction over appropriations and...all other withdrawals of money from the Treasury, except (for) private relief bills," be placed in a single House and Senate committee.

Rep. Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) claimed that "it is too easy now for Members of Congress to be against the taxes and for the appropriations." He suggested that some way should be found to "tie the two together so that, except in times of real emergency, appropriations could not be made without the penalty of necessary revenue measures being tied to it...."

Aug. 17 -- Rep. Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.) urged that Congress "enact a law calling for the primary election of all Members of Congress to take place on the same day."

Budgetary Reforms Opposed

Rep. George H. Mahon (D Texas), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, discussed the budgetary process, suggesting that "if we are to curtail federal expenditures we need reform of the will rather than of the way." He said that the Congressional problem with the budget was "not so much one of getting more information as it is of doing more about the information and knowledge we have." Mahon also opposed establishment of a Joint Committee on the Budget, terming "every key provision of (bills) embracing the proposition...either unsound, unworkable or unnecessary," and rejected suggestions for eliminating the two-step authorization-appropriation process.

Aug. 18 -- Rep. John W. Wydler (R N.Y.) criticized the proposal for an ombudsman to handle constituent problems with the Federal Government, maintaining that such a person "would be merely one bureaucrat dealing with another...." He said, "It would just be adding another process into the already overgrown collection of bureaus, agencies, departments, boards, committees and offices."

Sen. Jack Miller (R Iowa) told the Committee that "one of the most urgent needs (of Congress) is a mechanism for establishing spending priorities among federal programs." As an example, he pointed out that the authorization for the war-on-poverty program had not been cut down to allow for increased Viet Nam defense spending, "which surely should have priority."

Rep. Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) urged that in subcommittees, committees and on the floor of Congress, Members be given a minimum of five minutes to offer amendments to the legislation being considered.

Aug. 24 -- Rep. Mahon, in a second appearance before the Committee, said that the proposal for a "five-year projection of costs on legislation would be an excellent thing for us to do" and would put program costs in a "better perspective."

Rep. Robert Dole (R Kan.) proposed that Senators' terms be shortened to four years.

Budget Director Testifies

Aug. 31 -- Charles L. Schultze, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, testified that he believed "the primary aid to (budgetary) decision-making can come from an inquiry into the future prospects for individual programs -- looking perhaps as much as five years into the future." Schultze said that the Budget Bureau wanted to "have a system which will provide the kind of specific information and analysis on the basis of which both Congress and the Executive can make better choices of where and how to allocate budgetary resources."

Sept. 9 -- Schultze said that one of the main problems of shifting the fiscal year to the calendar year would be to make "your (Congress') decisions (on programs, funds needed, etc.) even further ahead of events than we now have to do it." Monroney noted that the change "would probably increase reliance on supplementals."

Sept. 22 -- Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) reminded the Committee that he had introduced a bill (S 2501) to provide for separate budget and fiscal sessions of Congress. Magnuson said S 2501 would "provide for a regular annual fiscal session to be separate from the session on all legislative matters; establish the calendar year as the Government's fiscal year; and provide federal accounting procedures which would insure a business-like appraisal of the Government's fiscal position in the light of the President's annual budget." Magnuson's fiscal sessions would run from the second Monday of each November through December.

Sen. Birch Bayh (D Ind.) urged the creation of a Joint Committee on Research Policy as a "non-legislative study committee whose function would be to provide Congress with an agency comparable to the top-level science policy apparatus in the Executive Branch."

Sept. 23 -- Trevor N. Dupuy, president and executive director, Historical Evaluation and Research Organization, demonstrated how Congress could use an information storage and machine retrieval system to quickly gather pertinent national defense data.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS

Twelve Republican Representatives March 10 introduced resolutions proposing amendments to the House rules to permit the Speaker to recognize the Secretary of State on the House floor to allow him to answer questions from any House Member. One of the sponsors, Rep. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.), said adoption of his resolution (H Res 262) would do much to improve the "persistent problem" of inadequate communication on foreign policy matters between the Administration and Congress and the public. Other sponsors were Reps. Bell (Calif.), Conte (Mass.), Fulton (Pa.), Horton (N.Y.), McDade (Pa.), Mathias (Md.), Morse (Mass.), Reid (N.Y.), Robison (N.Y.), Stafford (Vt.) and Tupper (Maine).

The House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 5 Aug. 18-19 and 25-26 held hearings on H J Res 394, a proposal to amend the Constitution to extend the term of Members of the House from two to four years. Rep. Frank Chelf (D Ky.), who sponsored the resolution, told the Subcommittee he had polled House Members and found that 254 supported a lengthened term, while only 41 were opposed to it. The Subcommittee Oct. 13 sent the resolution to the full Judiciary Committee with the recommendation that the full Committee conduct further hearings on the proposal.

The Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress July 8 issued an interim report (S Rept 426) detailing the establishment and organization of the Committee and listing the reforms suggested by witnesses who appeared before the Committee between May 10 and June 25. The suggestions were divided into three sections: those made by Members of the House and the Senate, those offered by political scientists and those proposed by representatives of national organizations. Within each section, the proposed reforms were listed according to the following categories which they concerned: committee chairmen, committee jurisdiction, committee meetings, committee staffing, office staffing and work load, housekeeping functions, research services, fiscal controls, scheduling of sessions, floor procedures, electronic aids and television, oversight of Executive agencies, elections and campaigns, ethics, foreign policy and leadership policy.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT STANDARDS SET BY HOUSE

HR 5505 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 140) March 5, 1965.

- Passed by voice vote of the House March 16. (For roll-call vote on an amendment, see p. 942.)
- Ordered reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee Oct. 1, with amendments.

For the first time in 54 years, Congress in 1965 undertook serious consideration of legislation to set standards for U.S. House districts. Legislation introduced by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), setting the maximum permissible deviation from a state's average Congressional district population at 15 percent, cleared the House. It was ordered reported, with an amendment reducing the maximum variation to 10 percent, by the Senate Judiciary Committee late in the year. Senate floor action in 1966 was considered likely.

Background

Although Congress would constitutionally have the right, it has never chosen to exercise directly its power to draw district boundaries. In 1842, Congress provided that states with more than one Representative should establish separate districts of contiguous territory. The requirement for single districts was dropped in 1852 but reinstated in 1862. In 1872, a requirement was added that districts be as equal in population as practicable; in 1901, a requirement of compactness was added. The 1911 Reapportionment Act provided that Representatives "be elected by districts composed of a contiguous and compact territory containing as nearly as practicable an equal number of inhabitants." All these provisions were dropped, however, to improve prospects for passage of the permanent Apportionment Act of 1929, and the Supreme Court ruled them no longer in effect.

The anti-gerrymandering provisions were never enforced while they were in effect. In 1901 and 1910, the House rejected moves to deny Members seats on the grounds their districts did not conform to the federal standards.

SUPREME COURT DECISION

In a decision certain to have a substantial long-term impact on the composition of the House of Representatives, the United States Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1964, declared that Congressional districts must be as equal in population as practicable.

Ruling by a 6-3 margin in the case of Wesberry v. Sanders, a challenge to the Congressional districts of Georgia, the Court based its decision on the history and wording of Article I, Section 2 of the Constitution, which states that "Representatives shall be apportioned among the states according to their respective numbers" and "chosen by the people of the several states." This language, the Court stated, means that "as nearly as is practicable one man's vote in a Congressional election is to be worth as much as another's."

The decision strengthened the 12-year-long effort by Rep. Celler to enact enforcible standards for Congressional districts. The bills he introduced provided that any citizen might file suit in a federal district court asking that the standards be enforced. Generally, his bills stipulated a maximum 15 percent deviation in the population of any district in a state. His proposals got little attention until the Supreme Court's 1964 decision. Four months after the decision, however, House Judiciary Subcommittee No. 5 approved Celler's proposal. The bill (HR 2836), however, was not reported by the Committee before the 88th Congress adjourned.

STATE ACTION

Subsequent to the Wesberry decision and prior to the 1964 elections, the states of Georgia, Connecticut, Michigan, Colorado and Alabama, under heavy court pressure, redistricted their U.S. House seats. The Alabama plan, however, was rejected by a federal court in 1965. The Ohio General Assembly Dec. 17, 1964, approved a redistricting plan. (1964 Almanac p. 386)

In 1965, a total of 17 states redistricted. (See p. 605) For a chart of the states which would be affected by the Celler bill, see p. 605.

1965 Congressional Action

COMMITTEE -- House Judiciary.

ACTION -- March 5 reported a bill (HR 5505 -- H Rept 140) establishing standards for Congressional districts. HR 5505 was a clean bill embodying amendments added to Celler's original bill (HR 909) Feb. 10 by Judiciary Subcommittee No. 5.

Majority Views. The report noted that standards for U.S. House districts had been urged in testimony before the Committee ever since 1951 and that the 1964 Supreme Court decision in Wesberry v. Sanders had established the constitutional requirement for essentially equal populations. "The courts, however, have been reluctant to prescribe standards...without an expression of Congressional policy.... In this context, the Committee believes that Congress can no longer delay in providing the state legislatures with uniform guidelines in this significant area, without being accused of abdicating its responsibilities."

Separate Views. Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.) said that HR 5505 set too generous a maximum population variation figure and that the bill was deficient in that it did not specifically give citizens standing to sue in federal courts to compel states to adhere to the requirements of the legislation.

Major Provisions. As reported by the Judiciary Committee, HR 5505 (1) set 15 percent as the maximum percentage by which any Congressional district's population might deviate from the average of the state; (2) prohibited at-large districts for any state with more than one House seat; (3) required that districts be composed of contiguous territory, in as compact form as practicable; and (4) forbid more than one redistricting of a state between each decennial Census.

The House Rules Committee March 9 granted a semi-closed rule for floor debate on HR 5505. The rule permitted only one floor amendment to be offered to the bill, an amendment to remove the provisions barring at-large seats.

HOUSE FLOOR ACTION

The House March 16 passed HR 5505 by voice vote and sent it to the Senate. Before passage, the House rejected by voice vote a motion by James Harvey (R Mich.) to recommit (kill) the bill. No amendments were approved, leaving the bill in precisely the form reported by the House Judiciary Committee (see above).

The House rejected by a 147-255 roll-call vote a proposed amendment by Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) which would have permitted a state to elect its Members at large if it had not complied with the redistricting requirements of the bill; the amendment also would have allowed a state that had never before districted to continue to elect its Members at large. (The latter provision would have relieved New Mexico and Hawaii of the necessity of districting their states. Each has two Representatives.) The Mathias amendment first carried by a standing vote, 47-37, and then by a teller vote, 74-50. But a roll-call vote was demanded in which about 40 Members first voted "yea" and then "nay" while others withheld their votes to the last minute. Subsequently, some Democrats said House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.) had asked them to oppose the amendment. (For voting, see chart p. 942)

One reason cited for opposition to the amendment was that Southern states might use at-large elections to dilute the strength of the Negro vote. Another reason was concern by some Republicans that heavily Democratic legislatures might try to defeat individual Republican Representatives by forcing at-large elections after blocking redistricting.

The impetus for House approval of Celler's bill appeared to be the desire for protection against even more rigid criteria which the courts might impose. "We're saying to the courts that we're setting down some guidelines which we expect them to follow," James C. Corman (D Calif.) said.

During debate, backers of the bill pointed to two sections of the Constitution authorizing Congressional action to set standards. Article I, Sec. 4 provides that "The times, place and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators." Clause 1 of the same section provides: "Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own Members."

Issues Debated

Floor debate centered on the following points:

1. The 15 percent standard. Celler explained that his original 1965 bill had set 10 percent as the maximum variation, but that the figure had been adjusted upward to 12.5 percent in Subcommittee and to 15 percent in the full Judiciary Committee as a "compromise" figure. The 15 percent figure had been supported in the past by the American Political Science Assn.

Members questioned a provision of the bill, authored by Clark MacGregor (R Minn.) and inserted by the Judiciary Committee, authorizing the use in court of special enumerations made by the U.S. Census Bureau when a redistricting bill was subjected to court challenge. MacGregor said the section was inserted so that "the best and latest census figures" would be "available to validate or to uphold the action taken by the state legislature." Celler said the cost of such Census counts would have to be borne by persons seeking to sustain the validity of a redistricting bill being challenged in court. He said such Census counts could only be used to defend districting bills in an attempt to show that population changes had brought a district within the 15 percent limitation. They could not be used to attack a bill's constitutionality, he said. Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.) asserted that such Census counts, covering only parts of a state, would be "a fiction" because they would involve "comparing a special census figure, let us say of 1965, against the state census for 1960."

2. Definition of "compactness." Celler quoted from the Judiciary Committee report: "By compactness, the Committee means, with respect to any Congressional district, the absence of the conditions and purposes underlying the following dictionary definition of 'gerrymander': 1. To divide (a territorial unit) into election districts in an unnatural and unfair way with the purpose of giving one political party an electoral majority in a large number of districts while concentrating the voting strength of the opposition in as few districts as possible. 2. To divide (an area) into political units in an unnatural and unfair way with the purpose of giving special advantages to one group." Celler referred to the well-known practice of dividing up districts to make them "look like jigsaw puzzles." Richard L. Roudebush (R Ind.) said his district under a newly appointed Indiana redistricting law "looks like octopi in the mating season."

Richard H. Poff (R Va.), a Judiciary Committee member and supporter of the bill, said "the heart of the definition (of gerrymandering) is an evil political purpose or a wicked intent. Thus a district which might be a perfect square, while geographically compact, may be the result of an evil political purpose or a wicked intent associated with the definition of gerrymandering. And by the same token a district which follows a natural geographical boundary as the lines meander may appear to be anything but compact geographically, but because it was the result of a proper purpose and a good intent it would not be a gerrymander and therefore would not violate the definition of compactness as this word is used in this bill."

3. Definition of "contiguous territory." Celler said that "if it is local waters which divide a district, I do not think there is a violation of contiguity." Districts split by the Chesapeake Bay or Jamaica Bay in New York would be valid, he indicated, provided isolated islands and the like were coupled with the nearest major land mass.

4. Limitation of a state to one redistricting between decennial Censuses. Celler said this limitation referred to "valid" redistrictings, so that a state could redistrict again if a court declared its first effort unconstitutional.

5. "Triggering mechanism." Apparently contradictory legislative history was written in floor debate on the question of whether a state, having once redistricted within a decade, could proceed on its own initiative to redistrict again to conform to the standards set in the act. Celler said redistricting action "would have to come as a result of court action filed. They (the legislatures) could not, of their own volition, do so because we say there can be no more than one (valid redistricting) between two federal censuses." He indicated any redistricting would be presumed valid until a court found otherwise. But Corman, also a Judiciary Committee member, said that state legislatures could change their districts on their own initiative to conform with the bill, without being forced to do so by the courts. "If they (the state legislatures) fail to act, they may jeopardize their representation in this House," Corman said.

DEBATE -- March 16 -- Celler -- "The Supreme Court holds a sort of Damoclean sword over the heads of the states and this is not the politicians' sway and we have to recognize that.... If you are not going to pass this bill, it just means that the division or the apportionment of these Congressional districts will be left...to the courts of the states. They do not have the equipment or the expertise to be able properly to divide these districts. Very likely you have 50 different types of apportionment set forth in these various states. You have a veritable mishmash, a hodgepodge. That is the alternative to passage of this bill."

Poff -- Court standards of maximum population variation "might be as close as 2 percent unless this bill goes on the books."

James Harvey (R Mich.) -- The bill would permit a 30 percent spread, which in Michigan is 124,000 persons. He doubted the courts would accept such a wide variance.

Mathias, arguing for his proposed amendment -- "When a state's Congressional districts are declared to be out of balance, then there should be an alternative to loss of representation or to judge-made districts. Under this amendment, there could be elections at large pending the creation of new districts."

AMENDMENT REJECTED

March 16 -- Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) -- Authorize a state to elect its members at large if it had not complied with the redistricting requirements of the bill and allow a state that had never before districted to continue to elect its Members at large. Roll-call vote, 147-255.

Senate Committee Action

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary.

ACTION -- Oct. 1 ordered HR 5505 reported with amendments. No report was actually filed in 1965, however.

The amended bill required that districts not deviate more than 10 percent above or below the average population for all districts in the state. Committee members reportedly felt that the 15-percent variation in the House bill, permitting a potential total deviation of 30 percent between the largest and the smallest district was too great.

The bill also contained amendments sponsored by Sen. Hiram L. Fong (R Hawaii) that excluded military personnel from enumerations for redistricting purposes and required that both districts in Hawaii include part of the island of Oahu, on which Honolulu is situated and on which most persons in that state live.

1965 Redistricting in 17 States

In the absence of Congressional standards, state legislatures, under federal court direction, were left the responsibility of interpreting the meaning of the Supreme Court's 1964 Wesberry decision. Several states used the provisions of the Celler bill as a guideline in drawing up new districts. Two states were actually redistricted by the federal courts in 1965. States whose Congressional districts were redrawn during the year were South Dakota, Utah, Indiana, Kansas, Idaho, Maryland, Oregon, Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas, Missouri, Florida, Oklahoma, Montana, Alabama, Virginia and Illinois.

District lines were drawn by three-judge federal courts in Montana and Illinois. Redistricting actions in Maryland and Oklahoma were petitioned to referendum, and were to be voted on in the 1966 general elections. Whether these states would use the new district lines or the old district lines for the 1966 elections, or whether all their Representatives would run at large, was left to decision by the federal courts in 1966.

Redistricting action in 1966 was considered likely in Arizona, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina, and South Carolina. In addition, Georgia, Hawaii, Kentucky, Louisiana, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, Washington and West Virginia were under some pressure to redistrict.

State-by-state rundown of 1965 action:

South Dakota -- The South Dakota Legislature Feb. 19 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1931. The action was taken to ward off possible intervention by the federal courts.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 2. Average district population: 340,257. Variation from average: Both the 1st (East -- Sioux Falls) and the 2nd District (West -- Rapid City) vary by 3.4 percent from the average. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 547)

Districts Affected

The chart below shows the 16 states with districts which in 1965 violated the 15 percent variation maximum and the prohibition against at-large districts incorporated in HR 5505.

Districts in 15 other states also would have been invalid except that these states (Ala., Ark., Fla., Idaho, Ill., Ind., Kan., Mont., Mo., Ore., S.D., Tenn., Texas, Utah, Va.) had passed redistricting laws, effective with the 1966 elections, that would bring their districts within the 15 percent limitation.

In addition, numerous states' districts might be challenged in court on the grounds that they were not compact or contiguous. Individual litigation would be required to decide each case.

Redistricting laws passed in 1965 were petitioned to a referendum, to be held at the 1966 general election.*

†Including one at-large seat, outlawed by the legislation.

The new plan made both districts nearly equal in population by transferring a large portion of the state, east of the Missouri River, from the 1st to the 2nd District. The Missouri River had been the traditional boundary line between the two districts.

The two Republican incumbents would remain in separate districts under the redistricting act.

Utah -- The Utah Legislature March 4 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1917. There was no immediate court pressure to redistrict but action was taken to ward off such a possibility.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 2. Average district population: 445,314. Variation from average: Both the 1st (North, East, South -- Ogden, Provo) and the 2nd District (West -- Salt Lake City) vary by 1.5 percent from the average. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 783)

The problem of the oversized but underpopulated 1st District was solved by transferring two fast-growing suburban counties from the 2nd to the 1st District. Five lightly populated counties were transferred from the 1st to the 2nd District. The tremendous size of the old 1st District (72,398 square miles--as large as the six New England states plus Maryland) had made campaigning both difficult and expensive.

Neither incumbent (a Republican in the 1st, a Democrat in the 2nd) was forced to run against the other under the redistricting act.

Indiana -- The Indiana General Assembly March 6 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1941. The state was under federal court order to redistrict.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 11. Average district population: 423,863. District with greatest variation from average: 7th District (West Central -- Terre Haute, Bloomington), -12.8 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 780)

The redistricting brought relief to the overpopulated 11th District (Central -- Indianapolis) and reduced population inequities in several other districts. Democrats, who won control of both houses of the Legislature and retained control of the Governorship in the 1964 elections, sought to protect their six incumbents and, in particular, their two freshman Representatives. Both were strengthened. Incumbents Ralph Harvey (R) and Richard L. Roudebush (R) were placed in the same district, the new 10th (East Central -- Muncie, Richmond). A new district, the 7th, was created without an incumbent.

Kansas -- The Kansas Legislature March 9 passed the state's second redistricting bill since the 1960 Census. The first was passed in 1961 but was ruled unconstitutional by a three-judge federal panel.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 5. Average district population: 435,722. District with greatest variation from average: 3rd District (East -- Kansas City), -9.6 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 926)

The problem of the overpopulated 1st District (West -- Salina) was solved by removing a number of counties and placing them in the 4th (Central -- Wichita, Hutchinson) and 5th District (Southeast -- Emporia, Pittsburg). Sedgwick County (Wichita) was split between the 4th and 5th Districts. Wyandotte County (Kansas City) remained split between the 2nd (Northeast -- Topeka) and 3rd District.

A suit was brought in the U.S. district court challenging the constitutionality of the splitting of these two counties. The suit alleged that the split diminished the counties' political voting power.

None of the five Republican incumbents were placed in the same district by the redistricting.

Idaho -- The Idaho Legislature March 25 passed the state's first redistricing bill in 50 years. The state was under federal court order to redistrict.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 2. Average district population: 333,595. Variation from average: Both the 1st (North and West -- Boise) and the 2nd District (East -- Pocatello, Idaho Falls) vary by 9.4 percent from the average. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 1029)

The redistricting made the districts more even in population and weakened both incumbents politically. Three counties, including Ada (Boise), were transferred from the 2nd District, represented by a Republican, to the 1st, represented by a Democrat; two lightly populated counties were transferred from the 1st to the 2nd District.

Neither incumbent was forced to run against the other by the redistricting.

Maryland -- The Maryland General Assembly March 29 passed the state's third redistricting bill since the 1960 Census. A 1961 redistricting effort was overwhelmingly defeated in a referendum. A similar plan, passed in 1963, was petitioned to referendum but never voted on because a three-judge federal panel declared it unconstitutional. The federal court also declared the existing districts unconstitutional. The 1961 and 1963 plans failed to reduce the large population inequities among the seven current districts.

The 1965 redistricting action was petitioned to referendum, creating legal problems concerning the 1966 election. The three-judge federal panel was left the problem of deciding whether to allow the old districts to be used in 1966, impose the 1965 plan for use in 1966, or impose its own plan. Additional possibilities were that all eight seats would be filled at large in 1966, or that the Legislature would draw up yet another plan. The current districts were drawn in 1951.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 8. Average district population: 387,586. District with greatest variation from average: 1st District (Eastern Shore -- Salisbury, Cambridge), -14.9 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 868)

The new plan brought all districts much closer in population by giving each of the two fast-growing suburban counties of Washington, D.C., Montgomery and Prince George's, its own Congressman. To accomplish this, it was necessary, among other things, to merge Baltimore City's two underpopulated districts (the third district was close to average size and was changed little). The merger pitted Chairman George H. Fallon (D) of the Public Works Committee and Chairman Edward A. Garmatz (D) of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee against each other in the same district. Their supporters led the successful petition drive against the 1965 plan.

Rep. Carlton R. Sickles (D), currently elected at large, would be obliged to face freshman Rep. Hervey G. Machen (D) in the new 4th District (Prince George's) if he sought re-election. Sickles was regarded as a more likely candidate for Governor, however. The new 5th District (Southern Maryland -- South and West Baltimore Suburbs) had no incumbent.

Oregon -- The Oregon Legislature May 25 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1941. Redistricting action was taken to ward off possible intervention by the federal courts.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 4. Average district population: 442,172. District with greatest variation from average: 4th District (Southwest -- Eugene, Medford), -8.6 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 1384)

The redistricting solved the problem of the underpopulated 2nd District (East -- Pendleton, Salem) by adding Linn and Marion (Salem) Counties. Populous Multnomah County (Portland) was split between the 1st (Northwest -- Astoria, Corvallis) and 3rd (Portland) District.

No incumbent (there were three Democrats and one Republican) was forced to run against another by the redistricting.

Arkansas -- The Arkansas Legislature May 27 passed the state's third redistricting bill since the 1960 Census. A 1961 plan was petitioned to referendum but a second plan was passed in 1961, avoiding at-large elections in 1962. The state lost two seats after the 1960 Census. Threat of intervention by the federal courts prompted the 1965 redistricting action.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 4. Average district population: 446,568. District with greatest variation from average: 4th District (South -- Pine Bluff, El Dorado), + 1.6 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 1254)

The redistricting solved the problem of the underpopulated 1st District (East -- Blytheville, West Memphis) and 3rd District (West -- Fort Smith, Hot Springs) by adding counties formerly in the overpopulated 2nd (North Central -- Little Rock) and 4th District. Under the new plan, one of the most equitable in the country, the difference between the largest and smallest district was only 9,675 residents.

None of the four Democratic incumbents were placed in the same district.

Tennessee -- The Tennessee General Assembly May 27 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1951. The state was under direct federal court order to redistrict. A three-judge federal panel Nov. 19 ruled the 1965 redistricting action unconstitutional but allowed the plan to be used for the 1966 elections. The panel gave the Tennessee General Assembly until June 1, 1967, to enact a valid redistricting plan.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 9. Average district population: 396,343. District with greatest variation from average: 2nd District (East Central -- Knoxville, Oak Ridge), + 14.4 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 1808)

The redistricting solved the problem of the overpopulated 9th District (Shelby County -- Memphis) by splitting populous Shelby County among three districts. The underpopulated 7th (Southwest -- Jackson) and 8th Districts (Northwest) were each given a part of Shelby. This brought both districts' populations closer to the district average. The redistricting did little toward solving the problem of the overpopulated 2nd District although its population was reduced enough to bring it within 15 percent of the average. The federal panel, in ruling the 1965 action unconstitutional, cited the fact that the 2nd District contained 111,830 more residents than did the 6th District (West Central -- Clarksville). The Celler bill, as passed by the House, set a 15 percent deviation limit from the state district average. The court's decision marked the first time that a federal court had insisted on deviations of less than 15 percent.

No incumbent (six Democrats, three Republicans) was forced to run against the other under the redistricting.

Texas -- The Texas Legislature May 30 passed the state's first comprehensive redistricting bill since 1933. A bill affecting only several districts was passed in 1957. The state was under federal court order to redistrict. Challenges to the 1965 redistricting were pending at the end of the year.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 23. Average district population: 416,507. Districts with greatest variation from average: 9th (East -- Beaumont, Galveston, Port Arthur) and 14th Districts (South Gulf Coast -- Corpus Christi), + 9.7 percent; and the 17th District (West Central -- Abilene), -9.7 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 2000)

The existing 22 Texas districts contained the greatest population variations of any state in the nation. The 5th District (Dallas County), the nation's largest, had a 1960 population of 951,527, the 20th District (Bexar County -- San Antonio) had 687,151, and the 22nd District (South Houston and Suburbs) had 674,965. These oversized districts contrasted sharply with the 4th District's (Northeast) 216,371 population, the 1st District's (Northeast -- Texarkana) 245,942 and the 6th District's (Central) 248,149.

The problem of the overpopulated 5th District was solved by creating two new districts wholly within Dallas County and giving part of the county to two additional districts. The 20th District was split up in a similar manner. Harris County (Houston) was also given three seats, solving the problem of the 22nd District. An end to the at-large seat and reshuffling of county lines elsewhere in the state brought all 23 districts within 9.7 percent of the state district average.

Reps. Lindley Beckworth (D) and Ray Roberts (D) were placed in the new 4th District (East -- Tyler) and Reps. Jack Brooks (D) and Clark W. Thompson (D) were placed in the new 9th District. Rep. Joe R. Pool (D), currently elected at large, announced he would seek reelection from the new 3rd District (Western Dallas County), which lacked an incumbent. Other districts without a resident incumbent included the new 7th District (Northwest Harris County) and the new 23rd District (South -- Laredo).

Missouri -- The Missouri General Assembly June 30 passed the state's second redistricting bill since the 1960 Census. The first was passed in 1961. The redistricting action was prompted by the fear of federal court intervention.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 10. Average district population: 431,981. District with greatest variation from average: 1st District (North St. Louis City and County), + 10.4 percent. (For details and map, see 1966 Weekly Report p. 612)

The redistricting reduced the overpopulated 2nd District (Suburban St. Louis County) by adding parts of the district to the 9th District (Northeast) and redistributing precincts in St. Louis City and County among two other districts, the 1st and 3rd Districts (City of St. Louis). Precincts in Jackson County (Kansas City) were also shifted to bring about a more equitable population distribution between the 4th (West Central -- Part of Kansas City) and 5th Districts (Kansas City).

No incumbents (eight Democrats, two Republicans) were forced to run against each other by the redistricting.

Florida -- The Florida Legislature July 2 passed the state's second redistricting bill since the 1960 Census. The first was passed in 1961. The state was under a federal court order to redistrict to achieve more equal populations.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 12. Average district population: 412,630. District with greatest variation from average: 11th District (Middle portion of Dade County), 12.7 percent. (For details and map, see 1966 Weekly Report p. 758)

The redistricting solved the problem of the overpopulated 6th District (South Central) by removing populous Broward County, which was put into a district of its own (the new 10th) along with a portion of northern Dade County (Miami). To create the new district in South Florida, two northern districts, both underpopulated, were combined into one district: the 8th (Northeast) and 9th District (North) became the new 2nd District (North--Tallahassee, Gainesville). This action forced two incumbents, Reps. D. R. (Billy) Matthews (D) and Don Fuqua (D), into the same district. The new 10th District would not have a resident incumbent. Only the 1st District (Northwest -- Pensacola) remained unchanged.

Oklahoma -- The Oklahoma Legislature July 21 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1951. Fear of federal court intervention prompted the redistricting. The Democratic-controlled Legislature passed the redistricting plan over the veto of Republican Gov. Henry Bellmon. A group of Tulsa Republicans later successfully circulated petitions to force the plan to referendum in the 1966 general election. Barring court action, existing districts would remain in effect.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 6. Average district population: 388,047. District with greatest variation from average: 2nd District (Northeast -- Bartlesville, Muskogee), + 4.1 percent.

The redistricting action solved the problem of the overpopulated 1st District (North -- Tulsa), represented by the delegation's only Republican, by adding some of its territory to the 2nd and 6th Districts (Panhandle). Several counties in the 6th District were placed in the underpopulated 3rd District (Southeast) and parts of Tulsa and Oklahoma City were transferred to the underpopulated 4th District (Central). The overpopulated 5th District (Oklahoma City) was reduced to only part of Oklahoma County, with four counties being removed and placed in other districts.

No incumbents were placed together in the same district.

Montana -- A three-judge federal panel Aug. 6 redistricted the state after the Montana Legislative Assembly failed to pass its own redistricting plan. Montana was the first state to have its Congressional districts redrawn by a federal court. The state had redistricted last in 1917.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 2. Average district population: 337,384. Variation from average: Both the 1st (West -- Butte, Missoula) and the 2nd District (East -- Great Falls, Billings) vary by 3.1 percent from the average. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 2449)

The judges' redistricting transferred several counties from the overpopulated 2nd District, represented by a Republican, to the 1st District, represented by a Democrat. The population difference between the two districts was reduced from 126,379 to 20,729 under the judges' redistricting plan.

Neither incumbent was forced to run against the other under the new plan.

Alabama -- The Alabama Legislature Aug. 10 passed the state's second Congressional redistricting bill within a year. The previous bill was enacted in 1964, but a federal court found it had too many population inequities.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 8. Average district population: 408,342. District with greatest variation from average: 6th District (Birmingham), + 7.9 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 2474)

Only the underpopulated 4th (East Central -- Anniston, Selma) and overpopulated 6th Districts, both represented by Republicans, were affected by the redistricting. These two districts had been found unconstitutional by the federal court, while the others were acceptable. Under the 1964 plan, there was a population difference between the two districts of 156,077. Under the 1965 redistricting, the population difference was reduced to 32,589. Part of the 6th District was transferred to the 4th District.

No incumbents were placed in the same district by the redistricting.

Virginia -- The Virginia General Assembly Sept. 3 passed the state's first redistricting bill since 1952. The state was under pressure from the state Supreme Court of Appeals to redistrict. The court had ordered at-large elections until a constitutionally valid redistricting was enacted.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 10. Average district population: 395,342. District with greatest variation from average: 2nd District (Norfolk, Portsmouth), + 6.1 percent. (For details and map, see 1965 Weekly Report p. 2490)

The redistricting reduced the overpopulated 2nd and 10th Districts (North -- Washington, D.C., Suburbs) and added population to several undersized districts. Every district in the state was altered in some manner. The 8th District (East -- Tidewater Region) was given part of the old 10th District, represented by a Republican. Rep. Howard W. Smith (D), chairman of the House Rules Committee, had objected to the inclusion of this area in his 8th District but the General Assembly voted overwhelmingly to include it.

No incumbents (eight Democrats, two Republicans) were forced into the same district by the redistricting.

Illinois -- A three-judge federal panel, in collaboration with the Illinois Supreme Court, Oct. 13 redistricted the state's 24 Congressional districts on a more equitable population basis. Illinois was the second state to have its Congressional districts redrawn by the courts. The state had redistricted last in 1961.

New Plan -- Number of districts: 24. Average district population: 420,048. District with greatest variation from average: 8th District (Chicago -- Central, West Side), + 7.5 percent. (For details and map, see 1966 Weekly Report p. 689)

The redistricting shifted areas in Cook County (Chicago) to bring about a more equitable population distribution among its 12 U.S. House seats. Downstate districts were also altered and two downstate counties were split among two districts for the first time. Only the 15th District (North Central -- Aurora, Elgin) was left unchanged.

No incumbents (13 Democrats, 11 Republicans) were forced into the same district under the redistricting.

HOUSE REJECTS CHALLENGES IN THREE SEATING DISPUTES

The House in 1965 rejected three challenges to the seating of Representatives elected in 1964. The first challenge was to the seating of the entire five-man Mississippi delegation on grounds that Negroes had been systematically excluded from participation in the election. The second was to the seating of Rep. Richard L. Ottinger (D N.Y.), based on alleged violation of state and federal campaign spending laws. The third was to the seating of Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa), based on alleged irregularities in Gross's 419-vote plurality victory in the 1964 election.

Mississippi Challenge

The challenge to the seating of the five Mississippi Representatives elected in 1964 -- Thomas G. Abernethy (D), Jamie L. Whitten (D), John Bell Williams (D), William M. Colmer (D) and Prentiss Walker (R) -- was prepared by the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, (MFDP), a biracial organization formed in 1964 with the initial purpose of challenging the seating of the all-white regular Democratic Mississippi delegation to the 1964 Democratic National Convention. (1964 Almanac p. 1091) The grounds for objection to seating of the Congressional delegation were essentially the same as those presented at the Democratic National Convention: that Negroes had been denied the right to vote in Mississippi through the actions of state officials. (According to the Southern Regional Council, only 6.7 percent of Mississippi's voting-age Negro population participated in the 1964 elections.)

The MFDP had made some efforts to place three candidates on the ballot in the regular November 1964 Mississippi election: Mrs. Fannie Lou Hamer, Mrs. Virginia Gray and Mrs. Annie Devine, running in three of the five Mississippi House districts. When that failed, the MFDP sponsored its own extra-legal election, registering its own voters and polling them in street-corner elections. The MFDP then declared its own candidates duly elected and appealed to have them seated in place of the candidates elected in the regular state election. Gov. Paul B. Johnson (D), however, issued certificates of election to the regularly elected Congressmen.

When the 89th Congress convened Jan. 4, the three MFDP contestants for Mississippi seats sought entrance to the House floor but were barred. In view of the challenges, however, House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.) asked the regular Mississippi Congressmen-elect to stand aside while the other Members of the House were sworn in. The challenge to the Mississippi Members was presented by Rep. William Fitts Ryan (D N.Y.), who claimed that their election had been in violation of the Constitution because eligible Negro voters had been systematically excluded from participation. Ryan was joined in his objection by 16 other Democrats and five House Republicans.

After Ryan objected to seating the delegation, House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.) introduced H Res 1, which authorized the Speaker to administer the oath of office to the five regular Mississippi Congressmen. The key vote, however, came on a motion by Albert to move the previous question, which would end debate on H Res 1. Albert's motion was adopted by a 276-149 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 932) H Res 1 then was adopted by voice vote and McCormack swore in the Mississippi Congressmen.

Ryan later called the vote an "historic achievement." He said it was "a real warning to Mississippi for the future" and heralded "the beginning of the end of disenfranchisement." Ryan later said that if the previous question vote had not carried he would have introduced a "fairness resolution" to hold the swearing in of the Mississippians in abeyance until completion of an investigation of the election by the House Administration Committee and a final decision by the House.

Five Republicans later issued a joint statement saying that the majority leadership had "effectively condoned the disenfranchisement of more than 400,000 American citizens in Mississippi and missed an opportunity to rectify the wrong." Issuing the statement were Reps. John V. Lindsay (N.Y.), Silvio O. Conte (Mass.), Ogden R. Reid (N.Y.), Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (Md.), and F. Bradford Morse (Mass.).

Freedom Party Submits Challenge

With advice of lawyers recruited largely by the National Lawyers Guild, the MFDP prepared a formal challenge for submission to the Clerk of the House as required by House rules. The MFDP brief, filed May 16, included 600 depositions and alleged "conclusive evidence of officially inspired harassment" and the "admission of state officials of their participation in organized racism" in preventing Negroes from voting.

House Clerk Ralph Roberts at first declined to print the depositions, citing numerous procedural oversights. Under urging by members of the House Administration Committee, the group responsible for considering election challenges, Roberts relented and presented the printed testimony to the House for referral to House Administration July 29. The documents were entitled by Roberts, "Papers Omitted in Printing Pursuant to Provisions of the Statutes Involving the Five Congressional Districts in the State of Mississippi."

The official challenge included not only the three MFDP candidates of November 1964 -- Mrs. Hamer, Mrs. Devine and Mrs. Gray -- but also four other MFDP members: Mrs. Augusta Wheadon, Mrs. Mildred Cosey, Mrs. Evelyn Nelson and Allen Johnson.

When the House Administration Committee took no action on the depositions, a group of 31 House Members headed by Rep. Ryan Aug. 25 announced plans to bring to the floor Sept. 21 a privileged resolution which would discharge the Committee of further consideration of the Mississippi case. Under privileged resolution, all House business is suspended until a vote is taken on the issue presented. The resolution need not be referred to a committee. The Ryan group's statement cited the administrative obstacles which had been placed in the way of the seating challenge by House Clerk Roberts and cited Rule XI, Section 24, of the Rules of the House which states: "The Committee on House Administration shall make a final report to the House in all contested election cases not later than six months from the first day of the first regular session of the Congress to which the contestee is elected." The six months expired July 4. The statement added that "to date, the Committee and its Subcommittee on Elections have not scheduled a single meeting on the challenge...the facts supporting the challenge are clear...Mississippi's deliberate policy of disenfranchisement has been overwhelmingly documented."

Shortly after the Ryan group's announcement, the House Administration Committee began active consideration of the challenge. The Elections Subcommittee held hearings in closed session, Sept. 13 and 14.

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, representing virtually all major U.S. civil rights organizations, Sept. 14 urged Congress not to dismiss the challenge to the seating of the Mississippi Congressmen.

COMMITTEE ACTION

The House Administration Committee Sept. 15, by a 19-5 vote, reported H Res 585 (H Rept 1008) recommending rejection of the petition to unseat the Mississippi delegation. The Committee's Elections Subcommittee had approved the resolution Sept. 14.

Majority Views. The report cited, among others, the following major considerations taken into account in deciding on the challenge: (1) The five Mississippi Congressmen had been administered the oath of office on Jan. 4, and valid certificates of their election were on file with the Clerk of the House. Thus, they had a "prima facie" right to their seats. (2) The contestants did not avail themselves of proper legal steps or attempt to challenge the issuance of the five Members' certificates of election. (3) House precedents have precluded non-candidates from contesting elections. (4) Alleged voter discrimination, "even if true, is now a moot question," due to enactment of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The committee added that it was "cognizant of the fact that the alleged practices complained of...in the 1964 Mississippi elections would constitute violations of the new Act if occurring subsequent to its enactment." (See story p. 533) (5) Mississippi and federal election laws governing in 1964 were constitutional "inasmuch as they have not been set aside by the decision of any court...."

In conclusion, the report said the Committee was concerned over current House procedures governing election contests and recommended that the procedures be reviewed, improved and clarified "so as to deal more expeditiously" with future challenges, including those charging violations of the Voting Rights Act.

Minority Views. Committee Democrats Friedel (Md.), Nedzi (Mich.), Brademas (Ind.), Hawkins (Calif.), and Bingham (N.Y.) said that "to require an individual to be a candidate before he can contest an election in a jurisdiction where it is impossible for him or her to register and vote, let alone get his or her name on the ballot, makes a contest impossible and deprives the Constitution, statutes and rules of all meaning in this regard." They recommended "adequate public hearings" to consider the challenge on its merits "and not upon the basis of who brought the question of wrong-doing to the attention of the Committee."

FLOOR ACTION

The House Sept. 17 adopted by a 228-143 roll-call vote the resolution (H Res 585) dismissing a challenge to the 1964 election of Mississippi's five-man House delegation. The vote breakdown: R 87-34; D 141-109 (ND 54-109; SD 87-0). In addition, 10 Members voted "present," including the five contestees. (For voting, see chart p. 1004)

Prior to the final vote, the House rejected by a 129-207 teller vote a motion by Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) to recommit H Res 585 to the House Administration Committee for further hearings.

During consideration of H Res 585 Sept. 17, three of the contestants -- Mrs. Hamer, Mrs. Devine and Mrs. Gray -- were permitted on the House floor under a rule granting floor privileges to participants in an election contest.

In general, proponents of dismissing the challenge, led by Robert T. Ashmore (D S.C.), chairman of the House Administration Elections Subcommittee, took the same position as the Committee. (See above) The main thrust of their argument, however, was that since the MFDP did not have candidates on the Mississippi ballot, they were not, in the strict sense, eligible to act as contestants in the dispute. Moreover, they argued that House precedent had established that a Member should not be held responsible for the "wrongful acts" of state election officials and that, by upholding the challenge, the House would "cast a permanent cloud" over all 1964 Mississippi elections, including those for Presidential electors and Sen. John Stennis (D).

The key proponent of dismissal was Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.), chairman of the House Democratic Study Group, an informal organization of liberal Northern, Midwestern and Western Democrats and normally a strong civil rights advocate. If the House upheld the challenge, Thompson questioned whether due process would be served and also suggested that a "Pandora's box" would be opened, subjecting Members to "possible frivolous contests" by all sorts of non-candidates. Thompson added, however, that regardless of the outcome on H Res 585, a clear precedent would be established that the House would no longer "tolerate" electoral practices violating an individual's legal or constitutional rights.

Opponents of dismissal, led by Ryan, stated that official recognition of voter discrimination by Congress, the President, the Attorney General and the Civil Rights Commission was sufficient evidence to uphold the challenge. They disagreed with the position taken by proponents and the Committee majority as to the governing House precedents and argued that the real question at issue was whether the House would uphold the 15th Amendment (prohibiting disenfranchisement on the basis of race, color, etc.) or endorse Mississippi's "willful and malicious" violations of the Constitution.

Opponents also protested that the Committee failed to fully consider the challenge on its merits or hold public hearings. Anticipating that the challenge was going to be dismissed, they urged recommitting H Res 585 to the Committee for "objective and complete " hearings.

In House floor action, only one amendment, by House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.), was offered. Accepted by voice vote, the amendment was designed to placate liberals and others, who objected that the challenge was not considered on its merits, by striking from the resolution language stating that the Mississippi Congressmen were "entitled to their seats as Representatives...."

With adoption of the amendment, the language remaining in H Res 585 merely stated that the election contests brought against the five Congressmen were dismissed. Rep. William S. Moorhead (D Pa.) supported the resolution on technical legal grounds but said the Majority Leader's amendment should be adopted lest the House appear in any way "to condone discriminatory election practices." House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R Mich.) also supported the amendment.

Ottinger Challenge

A challenge to the seating of Rep. - elect Richard L. Ottinger (D N.Y. 25th District) was raised on Jan. 4, opening day of the 89th Congress, by Rep. James C. Cleveland (R N.H.). Cleveland objected to the seating of Ottinger on grounds that Ottinger's campaign expenditures had violated federal and state campaign financing laws. Speaker McCormack asked Ottinger to stand aside while the other Members were sworn in. House Majority Leader Albert subsequently offered H Res 2, authorizing the swearing in of Ottinger, which the House approved by voice vote.

The matter came to the House floor again Jan. 19 and was disposed of when the House, by a 245-102 roll-call vote (D 240-2; R 5-100), approved a resolution (H Res 126) dismissing a petition which challenged Ottinger's seating. (For voting, see chart p. 934)

The petition had been filed with the House Administration Committee by James R. Frankenberry, a New York advertising executive and chairman of a citizens' committee supporting the re-election of Ottinger's opponent, former Rep. Robert R. Barry (R N.Y.). Frankenberry Dec. 21, 1964, in a letter to the Committee, had charged that Ottinger had violated federal and state campaign financing laws. Committees working on Ottinger's behalf had reported spending a total of $192,000 in reports to the New York Secretary of State. Of the $192,000, $147,000 came from Ottinger or members of his family. New York state law limits to $8,000 the aggregate amount a candidate for the U.S. House may personally expend for his campaign, regardless of the number of committees working in his behalf (Art. 74, Sec. 781). Ottinger established 34 campaign committees, 22 of which received contributions only from members of his family.

H Res 126 dismissed the contest of election of Ottinger on grounds that Frankenberry was not a "competent" person to bring such a contest. The resolution stated that Frankenberry had not been a candidate in either the primary or general election.

Reps. Cleveland and Charles E. Goodell (R N.Y.) vigorously opposed the resolution, citing precedents in which a citizen of a Congressional district who had not been a candidate had contested the seating of a Member.

Albert argued that interpretation of the law advocated by Cleveland and Goodell (Revised statutes 105 to 130, as amended, 2 United States Code 201-226 inclusive) would open "up to anybody or to any number of individuals, for valid or spurious reasons, the right to proceed under these statutes, to contest the election of any Member of the House." Cleveland said the purpose of the law was "to safeguard the people of the United States against a situation where the defeated candidate might not either have the heart or the will or the desire to contest an election which clearly should be contested for the common good and for the cause of good government."

Gross Election Challenge

The House Oct. 11 adopted by voice vote a resolution (H Res 602) dismissing a challenge to the 1964 election of Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa). The challenge was initiated Dec. 31, 1964, by Stephen M. Peterson (D), whom Gross had defeated by a 419-vote margin. Peterson's challenge did not allege fraud, but various violations of Iowa election laws, including the burning of unused ballots after the polls had closed.

During debate, House Administration Elections Subcommittee Chairman Robert T. Ashmore (D S.C.) said dismissal was recommended on the grounds that there had been no evidence of fraud, that Peterson supplied "insufficient" evidence to establish other than "inadvertent" and "unintentional" violations of election law and that Peterson did not attempt to challenge the election on election day but only after discovering his defeat by a slim margin.

Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) argued that the House should not establish a precedent that fraud was the main grounds for contesting an election and stated that it was "absurd" that Iowa, and Texas, were the only states in the nation without procedures for an election recount. In the absence of state provision for a recount, Thompson asserted, the House should have demanded one.

In other debate, Neal Smith (D Iowa) charged that shoddy procedures by the Elections Subcommittee, which was "stacked" with Southern Democrats and Republicans, had left the impression "that the House....is a private club which will unfairly protect incumbents if possible." He urged removing jurisdiction over election contests to a special committee "which is broadly representative of the Congress."

Membership of the Elections Subcommittee consisted of six Southern Democrats, three Republicans and no Northern Democrats. The breakdown on the full House Administration Committee was 10 Northern Democrats, 7 Southern Democrats and 8 Republicans.

BACKGROUND -- The House Administration Committee Oct. 8 reported H Res 602 (H Rept 1127), paving the way for the Oct. 11 House vote.

HATCH ACT REVIEW

S 1474 -- Reported by Senate Rules and Administration Committee (S Rept 408) June 30, 1965.

- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 25.

The Senate in 1965 passed an Administration-backed bill (S 1474) authorizing the establishment of a 12-member bipartisan commission to study federal laws, particularly the Hatch Act of 1939, limiting partisan political activity by certain officers and employees of federal and state governments. The House did not act on the measure in 1965.

In its major provisions, S 1474 proposed creation of a Commission on Political Activity of Government Personnel to make "a full and complete investigation and study of the federal laws which limit or discourage the participation of federal and state officers and employees in political activity with a view to determining the effect of such laws, the need for their revision or elimination, and an appraisal of the extent to which undesirable results might accrue from their repeal." The bill provided for the appointment of 12 members to the Commission, six Democrats and six Republicans: four to be appointed by the President, two from the Executive Branch and two from private life; four by the Vice President, two from the Senate and two from private life; and four by the Speaker of the House, two from the House and two from private life. The Commission was directed to report its findings to the President and Congress within one year after the date of enactment.

In brief Senate debate on S 1474 Aug. 25, Sen. Daniel B. Brewster (D Md.), sponsor of the bill, said, "Twenty-five years have passed since the enactment of (the Hatch Act). These have been years of unparalleled progress and growth. There have been changes in governmental programs and relationships. These changes may well have affected or altered the purposes and requirements for limiting partisan political activity of government employees. They may have produced conditions which call for modifications in the methods and degree of such restrictions."

In its report (S Rept 408) on the bill, the Senate Rules and Administration Committe noted that any study of the Hatch Act should not "lose sight of the problems" that made the Act necessary in the first place. It said, "There should be no reversion to the situation where federal employees are coerced into making political donations, kickbacks from their salaries, and doing political work for the Administration in power."

At a May 10 hearing by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections there was general support for the proposed commission from all those who testified, the report said. Witnesses included Congressmen, Civil Service Commission officials, federal employee union leaders, members of local political parties and nonpartisan civic associations.

According to a Civil Service Commission spokesman, a review of the Hatch Act would probably consider extension of the Act's restrictions to employees of private non-profit groups that receive substantial federal financing, such as antipoverty groups (see Debate, below), and a reduction in the stringent penalties for violation of the Act, which make successful prosecution difficult.

Background

Limitations on active participation in partisan political activities by federal employees have been part of federal policy since the nation was formed. First in general civil service regulations and executive orders, then in the Civil Service Act of 1833 and later executive orders, detailed rules were outlined discouraging partisan engagement by government employees in political campaigns and elections. In general, most of these earlier rules and regulations applied only to classified civil servants, not to the wide range of federal employees.

It was not until 1939 that Congress, in the Hatch Political Activities Act (PL 76-252), which was named after Sen. Carl A. Hatch (D N.M., 1933-49), incorporated these various rules and regulations into a single law. Under the Act, the prohibition on political activity was extended beyond classified employees to include most other employees of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government, employees of the District of Columbia Government and certain employees of state, county and municipal agencies that were federally financed. The Act also specifically exempted from coverage: "(a) the President and Vice President of the United States; (b) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the Office of the President; (c) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; and (d) officers who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the nationwide administration of federal laws."

In addition, the Act provided a partial exemption, subject to Civil Service Commission approval, for federal employees who lived in "privileged" communities the majority of whose voters were employed by the Federal Government. As of 1965, such communities included many of the incorporated suburban areas in Maryland and Virginia surrounding Washington, D.C., but not the District of Columbia itself.

The Act's general restriction against political activity provided that a federal employee could not run for office or campaign in an election in which party designations were used. This meant that he could not run in an election, even as an independent, if he was opposed by a partisan political candidate (Democrat or Republican). Neither could he work for an independent candidate who was opposed by a party candidate or solicit political contributions. However, the employee could vote, make political contributions and attend political rallies or join political clubs so long as he did not take an active part in the conduct of the rally or the operation of the club.

In "privileged" communities, on the other hand, a federal employee, though still prohibited from engaging in partisan party politics, could run for office as an independent candidate against a party candidate, could campaign for a candidate who was running as an independent against a party candidate, could take an active part in conduct of rallies and the operation of an independent candidate's "party," and could otherwise do anything in behalf of an independent candidate that he could do in a campaign and election if he were not a federal employee.

The Act, as subsequently amended, provided penalties for violations ranging from a minimum of 30 days' suspension without pay to a maximum of removal from federal service.

1965 Debate on the Hatch Act

In 1965, discussion of the Hatch Act's restrictions came up in connection with two major bills, the antipoverty amendments bill (HR 8283) and the District of Columbia "home rule" bill (S 1118).

On the antipoverty bill, the Senate adopted a Republican-backed committee amendment to the original House-passed version extending Hatch Act coverage to two groups: employees of private, non-profit local community action agencies receiving federally funded salaries (employees of public local community action agencies were already covered) and to VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America) volunteers. The provision was later dropped in conference, in part due to opposition from Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy Jr., who complained that it would have extended the Act's restrictions to "a sizable group of persons in the private sector of community life." In addition, Congressional opponents of the provision contended that the "legislative oversight" powers of the Congressional committees were sufficient to prevent political abuse in the community action and VISTA programs. (See story p. 405)

On the D.C. home rule bill, which if enacted would provide self-government for residents of the District of Columbia, the original Senate version provided for local elections on a partisan basis and waived the Hatch Act's restrictions, thus allowing Federal and D.C. Government employees to participate in local partisan politics. The House version however, provided for local elections on a nonpartisan basis, allowing federal and D.C. workers to participate without waiving the Hatch Act. The differences in the House and Senate approach to this issue was one of several points blocking enactment of a home rule bill in 1965. (See story p. 613)

HOME RULE FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FAILS

S 1118 -- Reported by Senate District of Columbia Committee (S Rept 381) June 29, 1965.

- Passed by a 63-29 roll-call vote of the Senate July 22. (See p. 1061)
- Discharged from the House District of Columbia Committee by a discharge petition with 218 signatures Sept. 3.
- Passed, amended, by a 283-117 roll-call vote of the House Sept. 29. (See p. 1010)

Congress in 1965 failed to complete action on a bill to provide local self-government ("home rule") for the 819,000 citizens in the District of Columbia. The Senate, which had passed five home rule bills since 1949, approved the Administration's draft bill (S 1118) with only minor changes, but the House, which had never before voted for home rule, passed an entirely new proposal. Backers of home rule hoped that somehow the differences could be resolved between the two versions, but at the end of the year there was great doubt that House and Senate conferees could agree as between the widely different approaches of the bills.

The Senate-passed bill provided for election of a Mayor, partisan legislative council, nonpartisan Board of Education and non-voting Delegate to the House of Representatives, if the D.C. voters approved the plan in a special referendum. It contained a controversial automatic annual federal appropriation to the District based on the value of federal property there. The House bill provided that if D.C. voters determined in a referendum that they wanted home rule, they could elect a 15-member nonpartisan Charter Board to draw up a charter which would be submitted to the voters in another referendum. If accepted, the charter would go into effect unless disapproved by either house of Congress.

Hope for a possible compromise was based on the fact that the House actually passed a home rule bill for the first time. Previous home rule bills had been blocked by the hostile Southern-dominated House District of Columbia Committee and had never reached the floor. Past efforts to discharge the Committee from further consideration of the legislation by use of a discharge petition had been unsuccessful.

In 1965 House Democratic leaders, with the help of strong pressure from the President, obtained the necessary 218 signatures on a discharge petition and brought the Senate-passed bill to the House floor for a vote. But there, Administration forces suffered a stunning defeat when the House adopted a substitute -- the Charter Board plan -- sponsored by Rep. B. F. Sisk (D Calif.) on a 198-139 teller vote, and later on a 227-174 roll-call. On these votes considerable numbers of Western and Midwestern Democrats deserted Administration ranks. Adoption of the substitute prevented House consideration of a compromise version of the Senate bill prepared by home rule backers in order to pick up enough votes to gain passage of a bill granting immediate home rule.

Arguments for Home Rule. Backers of the proposals for home rule made three fundamental arguments for it: (1) that the right of self-government at the local level was a "fundamental right" of Americans which was being denied to approximately 800,000 citizens of the District of Columbia (presently being governed by a Presidentially appointed board of commissioners, with Congress, in effect, acting as the city council); (2) that rule by a locally elected mayor and city council would provide for a government better informed about and more responsive to the needs of the District than did rule by Congressmen, often from places far from the District, who currently made its laws and controlled its budget; and (3) that the freeing of the District government and budgets from control by the Southern-dominated House District Committee and the House and Senate Appropriations Committees would permit the District to solve some of its most pressing problems, including the need for better education and welfare services for the predominantly Negro population.

Arguments Against Home Rule. Opponents of home rule made the following arguments against it: (1) that the character of the "federal city" as the symbol of the nation would be lost if the capital were taken over by a local government; (2) that home rule was unconstitutional because the Constitution granted Congress ultimate authority over the capital; (3) that elected government would lead to graft and bossism, particularly since one party, the Democrats, could dominate the city government; and (4) that Congress should not lose control over the D.C. appropriation through the automatic payment. The fear of Negro domination of the city government, while unexpressed, was also one of the major reasons for opposition to home rule. Negroes comprise 60 percent of the Washington population. Also, Congressional direction of District affairs had resulted in low taxes on such things as property and liquor, and low taxi fares -- all of which might be lost under home rule.

Other factors widely believed to have contributed to defeat of the Administration bill were: desires to make a show of independence from the President on a matter that would not hurt at home, particularly on an issue where the Administration had used heavy-handed tactics in rounding up signatures for the discharge petition; a sincere wish to keep the "federal city" federal; fears by some Western Congressmen that if the District appeared to be "taxing" federal property within its borders, Western taxpayers would demand the right to impose local taxes on the Government's vast land holdings in the West, creating a severe political embarrassment for the Congressmen.

Finally, capping other explanations for defeat of the Administration bill, was the political plausibility of the Sisk substitute. Since the substitute did not appear to abandon home rule, but merely to delay it, Members could safely vote for it in order to kill home rule.

Background

From July 1, 1878, to the present, District of Columbia affairs were supervised by a three-man Board of Commissioners appointed by the President. There was no local representative government, no D.C. representation in Congress and -- until the 1964 Presidential election, when D.C. residents were permitted to vote for President and Vice President -- D.C. residents had no suffrage rights at any level. D.C. legislation, including appropriation of both federal and D.C. funds, required approval of Congress.

D.C. activities were financed basically from three sources: D.C. taxes on income, property, sales, etc.; a federal payment to the D.C. general fund; and borrowing, mostly for capital outlays. The federal payment (made in place of payment of D.C. real estate and related taxes by the Government) was based on a flat dollar ceiling set by Congress (currently $50 million, but Congress had never appropriated the full amount authorized). Congress also set a flat limit on the amount of D.C. borrowing from the U.S. Treasury for public works construction projects.

Home rule legislation was requested by Presidents Truman, Eisenhower and Kennedy, and the Senate in 1949, 1952, 1955, 1958 and 1959 passed bills providing some measure of home rule for the District, but none passed the House. The House District of Columbia Committee, dominated by Southern Democrats and traditionally opposed to home rule, reported a bill only once, in 1948. Efforts to bypass the Committee with discharge petitions in 1960 and 1962 were unsuccessful. Congress took no action at all on President Kennedy's request in 1963, or in 1964. (1963 Almanac p. 397)

The high proportion (60 percent in 1965) of Negroes in the District and the likelihood that they would control any elected District government was the main reason for the opposition to home rule of Southern Congressmen. However, this feeling was by no means confined to Southerners or to Congress. Many white residents of the District were willing to remain disenfranchised rather than have Negroes lead their city government.

As well as losing support over the racial issue, home rule legislation also lost Republican votes because of the District voter registration figures which in 1964 gave Democrats a 3-1/2 to 1 edge over Republicans. In the 1964 Presidential election, President Johnson received 85.5 percent of the vote, a higher percentage than in any state in the country. As a result, Republicans were unenthusiastic about granting home rule to a city where they would be the minority party.

PRESIDENT'S REQUEST

President Johnson Feb. 2 sent Congress a special message stating that "the restoration of home rule to the citizens of the District of Columbia must no longer be delayed." He said the people of the District were "ready and eager to join fully in the democratic process" as shown by the fact that "more than 90 percent of the registered voters went to the polls" in the 1964 Presidential election. He said that citizens of the capital should no longer be "taxed without representation." (For text, see p. 1408)

Accompanying the message was a draft bill, the District of Columbia Charter Act, which created a representative local government consisting of a locally elected Mayor and 15-member city council. The bill permitted District residents to elect a non-voting Delegate to the House of Representatives, and preserved existing powers of Congress and the President by permitting Congress to repeal or modify acts of the local council, permitting the President to veto such acts if they were contrary to federal interests, and providing for supervision of local fiscal affairs by the General Accounting Office. To provide for a D.C. budget, Mr. Johnson proposed: a permanent annual federal appropriation to the District equal to the real estate, personal property and business income taxes which the Federal Government would pay if it were a taxable entity; and a loan limit equal to 12 percent of the value of the property (including federal property) in the District. Limits on loans and payments are currently set by Congress and subject to annual appropriation.

Pressures For And Against Home Rule

Support. Home rule bills were supported in principle by a large number of national labor, liberal, civil rights and religious organizations, as well as citizens groups in the District itself, but few of the national groups were very active or very effective in their campaigns. Some organizations, notably the AFL-CIO and related union groups, the League of Women Voters, and the Americans for Democratic Action, did carry on lobbying activities in the capital and throughout the country, but these groups, for the most part, did not put home rule at the top of their legislative priority list.

Several umbrella groups, made up of other organizations, endorsed home rule, but did not play a major role. The Council of Republican Organizations, which includes the Committee for Forward-Looking Republicans, the Ripon Society, and the National Negro Republican Assembly, Aug. 30 urged Republicans to lead the fight for home rule, but its support proved to be ineffective. The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a group of about 100 labor, Negro, religious and other organizations interested in civil rights, endorsed home rule, but did little at the grass roots level. Of all the national Negro organizations, only the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People campaigned strongly for home rule.

In the District, there were several local groups which worked actively for home rule, including the Washington Home Rule Committee, the D.C. Democratic Central Committee and related Democratic party groups, the D.C. Republican Committee and related groups, some religious groups such as the National Council of Jewish Women, and local units of a few Negro organizations.

In Congress. The organizing and maneuvering took place in the House, where the battle was. On March 31, the Democratic Study Group, consisting of 180 Northern Democrats, set up a steering committee on home rule to help work out legislative strategy for a bill. The group was headed by Rep. Carlton R. Sickles (Md.). The chief GOP leaders in the discharge move were Reps. Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (R Md.) and Frank J. Horton (R N.Y.), and along with Sickles and Multer (D N.Y.), they were also the major sponsors of the compromise home rule bill defeated by the Sisk substitute Sept. 29.

Opposition. According to CQ sources, only three major organizations in the District of Columbia or nation actively opposed home rule for the District -- the Metropolitan Washington Board of Trade (the acknowledged spokesman for the city's business community, consisting of 6,500 individuals and business firms in the District of Columbia); the Federation of Citizens Assns. of the District of Columbia (a 55-year-old group consisting of 40 neighborhood citizens' associations representing approximately 23,000 homeowners, all but 1,000 of them white); and the General Federation of Women's Clubs (a national organization of about 800,000 per capita paying members, and affiliates having approximately 9 million members). These three organizations were the only major groups to testify against the bill at the 1965 House and Senate District Committee hearings.

Mr. Johnson said the District had had "home rule" from 1802 to 1871, when D.C. affairs were placed in the hands of the Federal Government on a "temporary" basis. Without the proposed restoration, he said, the people of the District were unable to deal with the problems which directly affected them, and "these duties fall upon busy Members of the Senate and House who -- in addition to their Congressional responsibilities -- must serve as state representatives, county supervisors and city councilmen for Washington." He added that "no major capital in the free world is in a comparable condition of disenfranchisement."

The Administration's draft bill was introduced Feb. 9 in the House (HR 4644) by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) and Feb. 11 in the Senate (S 1118) by Senate District Committee Chairman Alan Bible (D Nev.).

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate District of Columbia.

ACTION -- June 29 unanimously reported S 1118 (S Rept 381) with minor amendments. The Committee had held hearings March 9-10 on the Administration bill and on S 268, sponsored by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.). The Committee heard 17 witnesses, four of whom were from the Government. All but two of the 13 public witnesses were proponents of home rule.

Major Provisions. Contingent upon approval of its provisions by District of Columbia voters in a special referendum, the bill provided for election of a Mayor, a partisan 19-member District Council, a nonpartisan Board of Education and a non-voting Delegate to the U.S. House of Representatives. It authorized the annual federal appropriation based on federal property in the District, which was requested by the President, and also the Administration formula for determining the limit on D.C. borrowing.

Majority Views. The Committee emphasized that in granting home rule to the District, S 1118 provided Congress and the President with ample power to initiate, supervise, and overturn local acts if necessary. It also stressed the importance of the new payment formula which it called "the heart of the entire home rule proposal." The report said "if home rule in the true sense is to be accorded to the capital city of this nation, its citizenry should have the vital assistance that the federal payment formula would give." Under the provision, a certain sum (an estimated $57 million in fiscal 1966 increasing by steps to $71.2 million by fiscal 1970) would be guaranteed each year, and not subject to cuts by the Appropriations Committees.

Supplemental Views. Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) said the federal payment formula, not based "on demonstrated District financial needs," could cause the local governments to determine the federal payment first and then adjust local taxes accordingly; it could "seriously undermine the concept of tax exemption for government entities" and it could set a precedent for other areas embodying large federal property holdings. He also suggested that the Board of Education should have its own method of financing, independent of the "politically elected Mayor and Council"; the Mayor and council should be elected on a nonpartisan basis; and federal employees should not be exempted from Hatch Act provisions in D.C. elections.

Changes in Administration Bill. The Committee amended the Administration bill as follows: provided for five at-large council members in addition to one from each ward; increased the council's terms of office from two to four years and provided for staggering of terms; provided for appointment by the Mayor of a City Administrator to be his managerial aide; provided for election on a nonpartisan basis of a 14-member Board of Education (the Administration bill abolished the Board and transferred its functions to the council); stipulated that no more than three of the five at-large council members could be members of the same political party; provided for recall of any elected officer of the District (instead of only the Mayor); authorized D.C. voters to initiate and enact legislation relating to the District, independent of the Mayor and council.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate July 22 passed S 1118 without amendments by a roll-call vote of 63-29 and sent it to the House. Southerners voted against the bill by a 3-1 margin. (For voting, see chart p. 1061)

Before passage the Senate July 21 rejected seven amendments, including a potentially crippling proposal by Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) to make the federal payment to the District subject to annual appropriation by Congress. This was rejected on a 38-48 roll call.

Bill manager Alan Bible (D Nev.) opposed all seven amendments, particularly Dominick's federal payment proposal. Under the amendment, the flexible formula in S 1118 would have been retained, but instead of guaranteeing an automatic payment from the Treasury, the amendment would have given Congress an annual opportunity to reduce the appropriation. Bible noted that although the Federal Government owned about 44 percent of the total D.C. land area, the flat sum authorized by Congress as a federal contribution to the District had fallen from about 50 percent of total D.C. revenue in 1920 to about 13 percent currently, and in addition, Congress had never actually appropriated the full amount authorized. He called the automatic payment the "heart" of the bill because self-government without "control of the purse strings" would "become a hollow thing."

Dominick argued that valid assessments on which to base the formula would be difficult to obtain and the principle of a local government "taxing" the Federal Government could set a precedent.

Dominick also was defeated by roll-call votes on attempts to require that D.C. elections be conducted on a nonpartisan basis and to delete from the bill a provision that made inapplicable to D.C. elections sections of the Hatch Act which prohibited members of the federal Executive Branch from taking active part in political activities.

Dominick said nonpartisan municipal elections encouraged better government and were the trend in the country. John O. Pastore (D R.I.) replied that the District was already very partisan and to require nonpartisan elections would "create a facade, a fiction more than a reality." Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) said that "partisan organizations are the best machinery for keeping the people interested and inducing them to register and vote."

Bible strongly opposed elimination of the Hatch Act waiver, saying "Congress cannot grant home rule to 800,000 people in the city of Washington and by the same stroke of the pen sterilize 260,000 of the city's most capable individuals (federal employees) who would be of great assistance in their participation in local governmental activities." He pointed out that federal employees in Maryland and Virginia areas outside Washington were exempted by the Civil Service Commission from the Hatch Act sections covered by S 1118.

The bill's provision setting the minimum voting age at 18 for both local and Presidential elections was criticized by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) as unwise. He said the states had debated the subject "for the last 30 years," but only four had set voting ages below 21 -- Georgia, Kentucky, Alaska and Hawaii. His amendment to make the D.C. voting age 21 was rejected on a 29-66 roll call.

In a statement on the bill July 21, Robert C. Byrd (D W.Va.), chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, opposed enactment. He said the bill would bring the local police and the school program under the control of "pressure groups...guided by emotions" rather than by experience and training.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, the major provisions of S 1118:

Home Rule. Abolished the existing D.C. Board of Commissioners and Board of Education and in their place provided for election for four-year terms of a Mayor and a 19-member legislative council on a partisan basis and of a 14-member Board of Education on a nonpartisan basis. Provided for election for a two-year term on a partisan basis of a non-voting Delegate to the U.S. House. Permitted the Mayor to appoint a City Administrator to assist him. Continued the existing Board of Elections and required it to divide the District into 14 wards and to conduct primary, general, special and referendum elections. Stated that the legislative council would have one member from each ward, serving staggered terms, and five elected at large. Stipulated that no more than three of the at-large members could be from the same political party. Permitted Congress to repeal, amend or initiate local legislation. Provided for recall of any elected member under specified circumstances. Authorized D.C. voters to initiate and enact legislation relating to the District, independent of the Mayor and council, but authorized the President to veto such legislation, and any act of the council, if it was contrary to federal interests. Made inapplicable to D.C. elections sections of a 1939 law (the Hatch Act) prohibiting officers or employees of the Executive Branch from taking active part in political activities.

Borrowing. Limited total D.C. borrowing, from all sources including the Federal Government, to 12 percent of the average assessed value of the taxable real and tangible personal property (including federal property) of the District during the 10 previous fiscal years.

Federal Payment. Provided a permanent appropriation for annual federal payments to the D.C. general fund of amounts equal to the total of the real estate taxes, personal property taxes and business income and related taxes which the Federal Government could be expected to pay if it were a taxable entity. Required concurrence of the General Services Administration in the assessments. Provided for supervision of District fiscal affairs by the General Accounting Office.

Funds. Authorized appropriation of $750,000 to implement the provisions of the bill.

Referendum. Directed that within four months after enactment of the bill, a referendum would be held by the Board of Elections to determine whether D.C. voters accepted the terms of the legislation.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

July 21 -- Peter H. Dominick (R Colo.) -- Permit the Board of Education to establish the amount of D.C. revenue necessary for educational expenditures. (This replaced property and sales taxes in the bill's requirement that the Council set taxes and expenditures for all purposes, including education.) Voice vote.

Dominick -- Require nonpartisan D.C. elections. Roll call, 37-57.

Dominick -- Eliminate a provision which waived Hatch Act requirements in D.C. elections. Roll call, 37-58.

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Delete authority for the President to veto laws made by the Council or through local initiative (but retain Congress' legislative prerogatives). Roll call, 20-75.

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Change the age for eligibility to vote in D.C. elections from 18 to 21. Roll call, 29-66.

Dominick -- Make the federal payment to the District subject to annual appropriations by Congress. Roll call, 38-48.

Lausche -- Delete language giving the Council power over the appointment, selection, qualification, tenure and compensation of judges in the municipal courts of the District. Standing.

House

In spite of the President's home rule request Feb. 2, a subsequent plea in a Feb. 15 District of Columbia Development message, and the Senate's July 22 passage of S 1118, the House District of Columbia Committee made no move to hold hearings on home rule proposals.

On Aug. 4 President Johnson, in a letter to House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.), made another strong appeal for home rule, saying, "For much too long this nation has tolerated in the District of Columbia conditions that our ancestors fought a revolution to eliminate. For much too long we have imposed on many hundreds of thousands of citizens who live in the District a badge of inferiority -- the stigma of unworthiness to guide their own affairs. For much too long we have denied at our nation's capital the principles of representative government for which we stand throughout the world." Mr. Johnson said, "I cannot emphasize too strongly my conviction that this action by the Senate must not meet the fate of home rule bills passed by the Senate in previous Congresses." Calling it "a national disgrace" that Washington residents have no voice in their own affairs, Mr. Johnson urged that the House "be given the opportunity, and promptly, to restore the basic rights of democracy at the very heart of the greatest constitutional system in the world." (For text, see p. 1408)

Discharge Petition

Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) Aug. 11 filed a discharge petition to relieve the House District of Columbia Committee of jurisdiction over HR 4644, the Administration bill, and bring it to the floor. The petition required 218 signatures, a majority of the House membership. Home rule supporters hoped to gain the signatures by Sept. 2 and thereby bring the bill to the floor by Sept. 13. (Under House rules, a discharged bill can be called up only on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, except during the last six days of the session, and must have been on the discharge calendar seven legislative days before being brought up. For discharge procedure, see p. 17.)

The following day, Aug. 12, the District Committee announced that hearings on HR 4644 and related bills would start Aug. 18.

Unsuccessful efforts had been made in 1960 and 1962 to discharge the District Committee from consideration of

Discharge Petition

The discharge petition is a little-used parliamentary device designed to permit a majority of Representatives to bring to the House floor legislation that has been blocked by a legislative committee or the Rules Committee.

The modern discharge rule was first adopted in 1910. The present form of the rule, adopted in 1935, permits a majority of the House (218 Members in the 89th Congress) -- by signing a motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill (popularly called a discharge "petition") -- to bring to the House floor after a complicated series of parliamentary steps:

(1) any public bill that has been before a standing committee of the House for 30 days; or

(2) any committee-approved bill that has been before the House Rules Committee for seven legislative days without receiving a special "rule" for floor debate.

In addition, the discharge rule permits dislodging of a special rule from the Rules Committee for debate on a bill that has been before a standing committee for 30 days -- a combination of the first two procedures.

The following table shows the extent to which the discharge petition was used between its adoption in 1910 and the adjournment of the first session of the 89th Congress in October 1965. Although 23 bills were pried loose from Committee by the discharge method and 19 of those ultimately passed the House, only two were eventually enacted into law: the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and the 1960 federal pay raise bill. Others were defeated in the Senate or vetoed. However, the discharge petition was used in 1960 to force the House Rules Committee to clear a civil rights bill for floor action.

a home rule bill. In both years petitions collected over 200 signatures, but fell short of the majority needed.

White House Campaign

Two weeks after the discharge petition was filed, President Johnson began a vigorous campaign on behalf of home rule. On Aug. 24 he urged Congressional leaders to do everything possible to bring the measure to a vote.

On Aug. 25, in a highly unusual move, Mr. Johnson urged House members to sign the discharge petition. He said "it is an irony and disgrace that having extended self-government already to the Philippine Islands and to Puerto Rico...some people seem to be afraid to trust almost a million American citizens with the management of their own affairs here in the District of Columbia... No one doubts the outcome once that bill finally gets to the floor of the House.... But what is needed this morning is a commitment...to the only practical means of getting the bill on the floor, and that seems to be the petition to discharge the House District Committee from further delay of the bill."

The following day, while discussing the recent riots in Los Angeles, Calif., the President again referred to District home rule and hinted at the possibility of riots if Washington citizens were not given the vote. He said, "I want to warn you (in the District of Columbia)...that the clock is ticking...remember when people feel mistreated, and they feel injustices, and...they have no vote...I asked myself last night what can I do to see we don't have any more incidents as occurred in Los Angeles."

The petition had only 197 signatures as late as Sept. 2, when White House aides began calling Members and urging them to sign. By the end of the day, all but one of the needed signatures had been collected. The same day the House District Committee, in an effort to stop the discharge proceedings, ordered reported a greatly modified home rule bill (HR 10115). (See below)

On Sept. 3 the petition gained the last signature, allowing the bill to be brought up on Sept. 27, the next date on which the bill could be called up on the Discharge Calendar of the House.

Of the 218 Members who signed the petition, 192 were Democrats (ND 169, SD 23) and 26 were Republicans. (See list, p. 620)

The petition was signed by the chairmen of seven of the 20 House standing committees: Patman (Texas), Banking and Currency; Powell (N.Y.), Education and Labor; Morgan (Pa.), Foreign Affairs; Dawson (Ill.), Government Operations; Celler (N.Y.), Judiciary; Fallon (Md.), Public Works; Miller (Calif.), Science and Astronautics. Except for Aspinall (Colo.), chairman of the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, all chairmen who did not sign were Southerners.

Committee Bill. The House District of Columbia Committee Sept. 3 reported a modified "home rule" bill (HR 10115 -- H Rept 957), a combination of two bills sponsored by Rep. Joel T. Broyhill (R Va.) and Rep. B. F. Sisk (D Calif.). The Committee ordered the bill reported late Sept. 2, after the home rule discharge petition had reached 217 signatures. Under HR 10115 the Government would retain jurisdiction over only the old Federal City of Washington, as it existed from 1791 to 1871. The remaining area of the District, including a majority of its inhabitants, would be offered to Maryland, and if the state rejected the area the eligible voters of the rejected area would then hold a referendum on the issue of establishing a board to draft a home rule charter. If approved, the charter would be sent to Congress, subject to amendment, and would go into effect in 90 days unless disapproved by either house.

The Committee report called the formula for an automatic, annual federal payment as proposed in HR 4644 unconstitutional and charged that the federal payment would tax all the people of the U.S. for the District without representation. The report said, "United States taxpayers would pay the District $4.4 million for the Capitol... nothing but a levy by local District officials on the sacred halls of Congress."

President Johnson Sept. 4 in a letter to House Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D S.C.) said that the Justice Department had ruled that the payment formula did not permit the city to tax federal property and "does not impose an unconstitutional delegation of the appropriation power of Congress."

Strategy. The Committee bill was scheduled for House action on the next "District Day," Sept. 13, preceding the discharged bill (HR 4644) by two weeks. However, House Speaker John W. McCormack (D Mass.), the Administration bill's floor leader, blocked floor action on the Committee bill by inviting action on any one of seven other bills under the new 21-day rule by which the Speaker may recognize a Member to bring up a measure for House consideration if it had been before the Rules Committee for 21 days without having been granted a rule.

Compromise Moves. Even having won the victory on the discharge petition and forestalled earlier action on home rule, Administration forces were clearly uncertain of the votes needed to pass HR 4644. Many petition signers indicated they would not vote for the bill unless it was amended in several respects. And the House GOP Policy Committee Sept. 21 issued a policy statement which suggested "essential safeguards" which "must be included in any home rule legislation" including nonpartisan D.C. elections, retention of Hatch Act provisions and appropriation by Congress of the annual federal payment to the District.

In view of the objections, Multer Sept. 22 introduced a bill (HR 11218) which he said he would offer as a substitute amendment to HR 4644 when it reached the floor Sept. 27. HR 11218 contained the provisions of S 1118 as passed by the Senate, with these major changes: (1) it provided for annual Congressional appropriation of the federal payment to the District (while retaining the flexible formula for determining the payment ceiling); (2) it provided for election of the Mayor and all Council members for four-year terms in even-numbered non-Presidential election years, instead of staggering the terms of the Council with half elected every two years (this was designed to overcome some objections to holding partisan elections and waiving Hatch Act requirements; (3) it required that D.C. voters be 21 years old (instead of 18) and be residents for one year (instead of six months); and (4) it authorized the President to use federal troops or take over local police if necessary to protect the federal interest or to maintain order. While knocking out the automatic federal payment feature, which President Johnson had termed the "heart" of the bill, proponents of the substitute hoped to retain the partisan election feature.

FLOOR ACTION

The House Sept. 29 passed, by a roll-call vote of 283-117, and returned to the Senate a completely new version of S 1118. (For voting, see charts p. 1008, 1010)

Under the House version, if D.C. voters determined in a referendum that they wanted home rule, a 15-member D.C. Charter Board elected on a nonpartisan basis would be given seven months to prepare a charter which would then be submitted to D.C. voters in another referendum. If accepted, it would go into effect in 90 days unless disapproved by either house of Congress.

House approval of this substitute was considered a smashing defeat for the Administration and a serious blow to the prospects for home rule. The choice in the House was between the Charter Board plan, sponsored by Rep. B. F. Sisk (D Calif.), and the Multer version of the original Administration bill which contained compromises designed to gain support for passage. The crucial decision on the legislation came near the end of three days of heated debate and parliamentary maneuvers on a vote on the Sisk substitute. The amendment was accepted by a 198-139 teller vote -- later confirmed by a 227-174 roll call (ND 50-134; SD 72-17; R 105-23) on which a large number of Midwestern and Western Democrats left the Administration ranks. Only five or six Republicans voted against the Sisk substitute on the teller vote, despite the fact that House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford Jr. (R Mich.) had announced that he would support the compromised Administration bill. The key vote was the teller, rather than the roll call, because the parliamentary situation was such that the leadership had to defeat the Sisk amendment on the teller vote in order to bring the Multer substitute to a vote.

Most home rule backers doubted that an acceptable plan would eventuate from the charter proposal, or survive all of its built-in hurdles, even if the latter were accepted by the Senate in a House-Senate conference. There was widespread agreement that most (though not necessarily all) of those who voted for the Sisk substitute did so in order to block the Multer compromise and kill home rule.

Many Members who had signed the discharge petition under pressure from the White House were unwilling to support the Administration on the House floor and voted for the Sisk proposal. Of the last 26 petition signers, some of whom had reportedly been annoyed by the Administration's heavy-handed tactics, 15 voted in favor of the Sisk substitute on the confirming roll call. (See list p. 620)

House Maneuvering. At the beginning of debate Sept. 27, Multer moved to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of H Res 515, an open rule (permitting amendments) which provided for five hours of general debate on HR 4644 and five minutes on each amendment, followed by one motion to recommit the bill with or without instructions and then an immediate vote on final passage of the bill (with amendments adopted previously). The motion was agreed to by a 213-183 roll call. It was opposed by 10 Democrats who had signed the discharge petition: Cabell, de la Garza, Patman, Purcell, White and Young (Texas), Walker and Morris (N.M.), Kelly (N.Y.) and White (Idaho). It picked up "yeas" from five Republicans who had not signed: Baldwin and Mailliard (Calif.), May and Pelly (Wash.) and Robison (N.Y.).

The House then adopted the rule (H Res 515) by a 223-179 roll call and agreed by a 234-155 roll call to a motion by Multer that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for consideration of HR 4644. A majority of Republicans and Southern Democrats opposed all three votes. (For voting, see charts p. 1008, 1010)

Debate then began on HR 4644 and continued for the five hours allowed under the rule. At the end of that period, Multer Sept. 28 submitted his amendment substituting the provisions of his bill (HR 11218) for those of HR 4644 (see above). Sisk immediately offered his Charter Board plan as a substitute for the Multer substitute. Both proposals were then open for discussion and amendment simultaneously.

Debate began Sept. 29 on the substitutes and other amendments to them. Alphonzo Bell (R Calif.) offered an amendment to the Multer proposal which required nonpartisan elections for all District officers except the Delegate to the U.S. House. In a last-ditch -- but futile -- attempt to gain GOP support, Multer accepted the amendment "in furtherance of that bipartisan effort" to "perfect a good home rule bill." The amendment was first rejected on a 63-70 standing vote but then accepted on a 123-114 teller vote.

The next move caught Administration forces off guard. Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) moved to strike the enacting clause of HR 4644, which would have killed the bill entirely. The motion was first agreed to on a 144-140 teller vote, but was then rejected on a 179-219 roll call.

After this, N. Neiman Craley Jr. (D Pa.) offered an amendment to the Sisk substitute which eliminated a requirement that a majority of registered voters in the District must vote in the referendums and election. This was accepted by voice vote.

Finally, Sisk's substitute came to a vote. It was accepted by a 198-139 teller vote, and the Multer substitute as amended by the Sisk substitute (which had the effect of killing Multer's proposal) was accepted by a 198-140 teller and subsequently by a 227-174 roll call. This concluded consideration of amendments, and under the rule, the previous question (preventing amendments and bringing HR 4644 to a vote) was ordered. The only hope for the Administration forces would have been to offer the one recommittal motion permitted under the rule and to include instructions that the D.C. Committee report back the Administration bill. But under House rules a minority member opposing the bill is given the first chance at recommittal. Alvin E. O'Konski (R Wis.) moved to recommit HR 4644 without instructions (kill the bill), which was rejected by a 134-267 roll call. The House passed the bill by a 283-117 roll call and then substituted its provisions for those of S 1118 as passed by the Senate.

PROVISIONS -- The major provisions of the House-passed bill established the following plan:

The D.C. Board of Elections would establish a date, within 100 days after enactment of the bill, on which D.C. voters would participate in (1) a referendum on the question of whether they wanted some form of local self-government and (2) an election of a 15-member D.C. Charter Board on a citywide, nonpartisan basis. Candidates for the Board could be registered electors who had lived in the District for at least three years prior to the election and who had presented, at least 45 days before the election, a petition signed by at least 300 electors. (But the President, Vice President, Members of Congress and officers and employees of the District would not be eligible for Board membership.) If the referendum was approved, the Board would automatically be established. The bill authorized $300,000 for the administrative expenses of the Charter Board. Within 210 days of the date of the election, the Board would propose a charter vesting in a local D.C. government complete power over the District legislative matters currently handled by Congress, but reserving to Congress the right to amend the charter at any time and reserving to the President the right to veto any acts of the local government. Within 45 days after the charter was proposed, it would be submitted to D.C. voters for approval in a referendum. If approved by D.C. voters, the charter would be submitted to Congress and would take effect 90 days after the referendum unless it was disapproved within that period by either chamber.

If both chambers approved the charter by a concurrent resolution before 90 days were over, the charter would take effect on the date of approval.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Sept. 29 -- Alphonzo Bell (R Calif.) -- Amend the Multer (D N.Y.) substitute (below) to require nonpartisan elections for all D.C. offices except Delegate to the U.S. House. Rejected, 63-70 standing vote; accepted, 123-114 teller.

N. Neiman Craley Jr. (D Pa.) -- Amend the Sisk (D Calif.) substitute for the Multer substitute (below) to eliminate a requirement that a majority of registered voters must vote in the referendum and election. Voice.

B. F. Sisk (D Calif.) -- Substitute for pending Multer amendment (below) -- Provide for election of a D.C. Charter Board, if D.C. voters favored home rule in a referendum, to draw up a charter which would be submitted to D.C. voters in another referendum and, if approved, would take effect in 90 days if not disapproved by either chamber of Congress. (The Multer amendment would have replaced the pending Administration bill with a modified version of the Senate bill -- see below.) Teller, 198-139.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) -- Substitute for Administration bill, as amended by Sisk substitute (see above) -- (The original Multer amendment would have substituted the provisions of the Senate version with amendments providing: annual Congressional appropriation of the federal payment to the District; election of the Mayor and Council for four-year terms in non-Presidential election years; a minimum D.C. voting age of 21 years and a minimum D.C. residency of one year, and authority for the President to use federal troops or take over local police if necessary.) Teller, 198-140; roll call, 227-174.

REACTION -- Following the House vote, Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.) said D.C. home rule was a "dead duck" for the current session and "we'll be lucky to get it next year." Rep. Carlton R. Sickles (D Md.), one of the sponsors of the Administration bill, said the only hope was to gain Senate acceptance of the House bill intact.

Senate District Committee Chairman Alan Bible (D Nev.) said he was "deeply distressed" by the House action but "I have enough optimism to hope that a conference can resolve the broad differences and produce a meaningful home rule bill." Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), a Committee member, said the House action "represents a parliamentary exercise in avoiding an issue."

In a Sept. 30 statement, White House Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers said "the President believes the principle of (D.C.) self-government is as vital and as essential as it ever was." He added that it was "not the time for final judgment; it is the time for constructive cooperation and time for renewed hope that the historic pledge of self-government will be redeemed for the District."

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) said he would "stand in a state of marvel and wonderment at the wisdom" of Senate-House conferees if they could resolve the differences between the bills.

● Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote June 10.

HR 9460 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 618) July 14.

S 1483 -- Passed, amended, by the House Sept. 15, after recommittal of HR 9460 was rejected by a 128-251 roll call. (See p. 1002)

● Senate agreed to House amendments by voice vote Sept. 16.

PL 89-209 -- Signed into law Sept. 29.

After several years of growing Congressional and private support for federal aid for the study, development and presentation of the arts and humanities, Congress in 1965 established a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities. The final bill was based on an Administration proposal, which was submitted after Congressional hearings had begun on a number of bills introduced in the Senate and House. Earlier attempts to win Congressional approval for federal support of the arts had met with failure, most often because action was blocked in the House.

The National Foundation established by Congress (S 1483) consisted of two autonomous subdivisions, a National Endowment for the Arts and a National Endowment for the Humanities. Each endowment had a chairman, and a 26-member advisory council -- one on the arts and one on the humanities. Each endowment was authorized to make grants -- most of them to be matched -- for a wide range of activities. The operations of the National Foundation were to be coordinated with other federal activities through a nine-member Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities, made up of representatives of various agencies.

In addition to establishing the Foundation, S 1483 authorized two programs of financial assistance to be carried out by the Office of Education -- similar to provisions for aid for teaching science, foreign languages, history, geography and English under the National Defense Education Act. The first provided grants to state educational agencies and loans to non-profit private schools to purchase equipment suitable for use in teaching the humanities and the arts. The second provided grants for teacher training institutes to strengthen the teaching of these fields in the elementary and secondary schools. A sum of $500,000 for each of these programs was authorized for fiscal 1966 and each of two succeeding years.

S 1483 authorized appropriations for each endowment of $5 million for each of three fiscal years, 1966, 1967, and 1968. An additional annual maximum of $5 million for the Humanities Endowment and $2.25 million for the Arts Endowment were authorized to match gifts or bequests. Another $2.75 million was authorized for the Arts Endowment for matching grants to state arts agencies of $50,000 annually to each state. States without such an agency could receive a one-time grant of $25,000 -- without matching requirements -- to establish arts councils.

As enacted, S 1483 authorized total appropriations of $63 million from fiscal 1966 through 1968.

In hearings, the legislation was supported by a number of actors, educators, musicians and federal officials. There was no opposition in the Senate to the legislation. In the House, however, HR 9460, the companion bill to S 1483, was brought to the floor under the 21-day procedure because of delays by the Rules Committee.

Opponents of the legislation in the House claimed Government support of the arts and humanities would stifle private support and individual creativity. They also criticized the cost of the bill, and the speed with which it had been considered in committee.

Critics of additional federal aid to education through the Endowment for the Humanities pointed to the existing efforts of the Office of Education. Moreover, they doubted the need for a greatly expanded federal effort to help the humanities. The Wall Street Journal April 5 reported, "Since 1957 -- the year Russia's first Sputnik roared into space and the big push for more scientists got underway in the U.S. -- the annual number of U.S. college graduates with degrees in the humanities and social sciences has soared more than 50 percent, to more than 376,000.... In the same span, the total of science graduates has risen less than 20 percent, to not quite 126,000 a year."

APPOINTMENTS

S. Dillon Ripley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, was appointed Nov. 18 chairman of the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Barnaby C. Keeney, president of Brown University, was named on the same date as chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities, effective upon his resignation from Brown in July 1966. For the interim period, Henry Allen Moe, former president of the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation, was named acting chairman.

Roger L. Stevens, chairman of the National Council on the Arts before the Foundation was established, became chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts upon enactment of S 1483. A former theatrical producer and currently trustee of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts and the Metropolitan Opera Assn., Stevens was questioned about possible conflicts of interest. He issued a statement Oct. 8 declaring "unequivocally that no organization with which I have an affiliation will be entitled to funds from any Government program with which I am associated."

Provisions

As signed into law, S 1483 contained the following major provisions:

Authorized establishment of a National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities composed of a National Endowment for the Arts, a National Endowment for the Humanities and a Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Specified that the purpose of the Foundation was to "promote a broadly conceived national policy of support for the humanities and the arts in the United States."

Prohibited any federal employee or agency from directing, controlling or supervising the policy or administration of any school or other non-federal agency, institution or organization.

Arts Endowment. Defined "arts" to include (without being limited to) music, dance, drama, architecture, folk art, creative writing, painting, sculpture, photography, graphic and craft arts, industrial design, fashion design, movies, television, radio, tape recording and other arts related to the presentation, performance, execution and exhibition of these major art forms.

Established a National Endowment for the Arts within the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

Transferred the existing National Council on the Arts (established under PL 88-579) from the Executive Office of the President to the Arts Endowment to advise the chairman of the Arts Endowment, review applications for federal arts funds and make recommendations about the applications. Raised its number of members from 24 to 26.

Provided that the chairman of the existing Council would be chairman of the Arts Endowment, appointed for a four-year term and eligible for reappointment.

Aid to Groups and Individuals. Authorized the chairman of the Arts Endowment, with the advice of the National Arts Council and the Federal Council on Arts and Humanities (see below), to make matching grants to (1) individuals "engaged or concerned with the arts"; and (2) groups (including non-profit organizations and state agencies or public agencies, which, under S 1483, were distinct from state arts councils or state-sponsored arts programs -- see below).

Provided the federal grants would be used for the purpose of supporting or providing:

- Production (i.e., involving the "execution or rendition of the arts") which had "substantial artistic and cultural significance, giving emphasis to American creativity and the maintenance and encouragement of professional excellence";
- Productions "meeting professional standards or standards of authenticity," irrespective of origin which were of "significant merit" and which would otherwise be unavailable to citizens in many parts of the country;
- Projects (i.e., programs such as commissioning of works of art, awarding of medals for artistic achievements and rental, purchase or construction of facilities and purchase or rental of land) which would encourage and assist artists and enable them to achieve "standards of professional excellence";
- Workshops (i.e., amateur productions) that would encourage and develop public appreciation of the arts;
- Other relevant projects, including surveys, research and planning in the arts.

Limited the grants to one-half the total cost of a project, production or workshop, but allowed up to 20 percent of the funds allotted by the Arts Endowment for the above projects, productions or workshops for any one year to be used for grants covering up to the full cost of a project or production in cases where a group or individual could not match the funds they applied for.

Specified that no grants could go to a group if the net earnings of a project or production benefited a private stockholder or individual.

Authorized the chairman of the Arts Endowment to accept money or other property donated to the Arts Endowment.

Authorized appropriations of $5 million annually to the Arts Endowment during fiscal 1966-1968 for grants to groups and individuals.

Authorized appropriations of up to $2,250,000 to the Arts Endowment during any fiscal year to match donations to the Endowment.

Aid to State Programs. Authorized continuing, annual appropriations (beginning with fiscal 1967) of $2,750,000 to the Arts Endowment to be divided equally among the states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa and the Virgin Islands. (Each was thus allotted $50,000 annually.)

Provided that the funds would be used for matching grants to states, D.C. and the possessions to cover up to one-half the total cost of an existing state project or production or one-half the cost of developing state projects or productions that would "furnish adequate programs, facilities, and services in the arts to all the people and communities" in each state.

For a state to receive the funds, required the state to submit a plan before the first day of any fiscal year to the chairman of the Arts Endowment which:

- Designated or provided for establishment of a state agency to administer the state plan;
- Provided that funds paid to the state would be spent only on projects or productions approved by the state agency which carry out one or more of the five objectives listed above under aid to groups and individuals.

Authorized one-time, non-matching grants of up to $25,000 (taken out of the $50,000 allotment) to each state, and the possessions to plan and establish a state arts agency; provided that the $25,000 would be made available in the first fiscal year in which a state is allotted funds under this section following enactment of the bill. (There currently were 24 states without state arts councils.)

Provided that, in the case of the District of Columbia, matching grants would go to the D.C. Recreation Board.

Humanities Endowment. Defined "humanities" to include (without being limited to) the study of language, literature, jurisprudence, history, archeology, and the history, criticism, theory and practice of art; and aspects of the social sciences "which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods."

Established a National Endowment for the Humanities within the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

Authorized establishment in the Humanities Endowment of a National Council on the Humanities composed of a chairman (who would also be chairman of the Endowment) appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate for a four-year term and eligible for reappointment, and 26 members from private life appointed by the President for six-year terms.

Provided the National Council on the Humanities would advise the chairman of the Humanities Endowment, review applications for funds and make recommendations on the applications.

Authorized the chairman of the Humanities Endowment, with the advice of the National Council on the Humanities and the Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities (below), to:

- Develop and encourage a national policy to promote progress and scholarship in the humanities.
- Initiate and support research and programs to strengthen the "research potential" (e.g., libraries) of the United States by giving grants, loans and other forms of assistance to individuals or groups supporting such activities.
- Award fellowships and grants to institutions or individuals for training and workshops in the humanities. (Provided that fellowships to individuals might be used for studying or doing research at a non-profit institution of the recipient's choice. This provision was directed at the graduate level of study.)

● Foster the interchange of information in the humanities (e.g., by providing grants to universities for visiting lecturers).

● Foster, through grants or "other arrangements with groups," public understanding and appreciation of the humanities.

● Support the publication of scholarly works in the humanities.

Limited grants to workshop activities which charged admission to the general public to 30 percent of the total cost of such activities.

Authorized the chairman of the Humanities Endowment to accept money or other property donated to the Humanities Endowment.

Authorized appropriations of $5 million annually to the Humanities Endowment during fiscal 1966-1968 for grants, loans, fellowships and other types of financial assistance for the humanities, as authorized (above).

Authorized annual appropriations of up to $5 million to the Humanities Endowment to match donations to the Endowment.

Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities. Established in the Foundation a Federal Council on the Arts and Humanities to advise the chairmen of the two endowments, to coordinate the activities of the two endowments, to coordinate the programs of the Foundation with other related federal programs and to plan participation in "major and historic national events."

Provided that the Council would have the following members: the chairmen of the two endowments, the U.S. Commissioner of Education, the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the director of the National Science Foundation, the Librarian of Congress, the director of the National Gallery of Art, the chairman of the Commission of Fine Arts and a member designated by the Secretary of State.

Other Provisions. Provided that the chairmen of the Arts and Humanities Endowments, respectively, would each receive the same salary as paid to the director of the National Science Foundation (currently $28,500).

Stipulated that no grants could go to a workshop (other than a workshop conducted by a school, college or university) which directly or indirectly charged admission if the proceeds were spent for any purpose other than assisting the recipient of the grant "to develop high standards of artistic excellence or encourage greater appreciation of the arts and humanities by our citizens."

Authorized appropriations of $500,000 annually during fiscal 1966-1968 for the U.S. Commissioner of Education to make payments to state educational agencies to buy equipment used to teach the arts and humanities and to remodel laboratory and other space used for the equipment.

Authorized appropriations of $500,000 annually during fiscal 1966-1968 for the Commissioner of Education to make grants to or contracts with universities to operate teacher training programs to strengthen teaching of the arts and humanities in primary and secondary schools.

Background

The Federal Government had given extensive support to scientific research and technology, and to the study of science, languages, and some social studies under the National Defense Education Act, but its support for the arts and humanities in general had been expressed through spasmodic patronage rather than direct subsidy. Over the years, there were increasing proposals for direct federal aid for the arts -- both to support large but uneconomical endeavors, such as National Opera Companies, and to support local projects, so as to spread the development and enjoyment of the arts around the country.

Much of the involvement of the Federal Government in the arts and humanities had been federally connected activities in the District of Columbia: the commissioning of buildings, parks and monuments and the establishment and support of the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution and the National Gallery of Art (the latter supported in large part by private patrons, such as the Mellon family). A Commission of Fine Arts reviews and comments on architectural and urban design affecting the federally owned portion of the District.

Following are the highlights of proposals and activities expanding federal interest in the arts and humanities over the past 12 years:

● In 1953 the Commission of Fine Arts, at the request of President Truman, issued a report on "Art and Government" recommending the use of federal funds to purchase American art for the National Collection of Fine Arts (a part of the Smithsonian) and to assist public high schools in acquiring equipment for teaching the arts.

● In 1955 President Eisenhower proposed that Congress establish a Federal Advisory Commission on the Arts under the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, but no such legislation was enacted during the Eisenhower Administration.

● In 1958 Congress passed a bill to construct a National Cultural Center in the District. The bill donated federal land, but construction funds were to be raised from private contributions. In 1963 the law was amended to authorize matching federal contributions for construction of the center, renamed for President Kennedy. (1963 Almanac p. 387)

● In 1961 President Kennedy backed legislation to establish a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts similar to President Eisenhower's proposal, but it was rejected by the House Sept. 21, 1961, on a 166-173 roll-call vote. (1961 Almanac p. 387)

● In 1961 Secretary of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, after arbitrating a N.Y. Metropolitan Opera Assn. labor dispute, issued a report Dec. 14 on "The State of the Performing Arts," in which he urged aid to the performing arts "as a new community responsibility." He supported the proposal for a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts and recommended tax concessions, federal scholarships, and housing and custodial aid by local and state governments for opera and symphony companies.

● In March 1962, President Kennedy appointed August Heckscher as Special Consultant on the Arts. Heckscher May 28, 1963, issued a report, "The Arts and the National Government," recommending establishment of a National Arts Foundation "on the model of the existing foundations in science and health" to provide the focus for federal efforts to stimulate the arts.

● In 1963 Mr. Kennedy issued an Executive Order creating the President's Advisory Council on the Arts. (However, the Council was never activated). In the same year the Senate passed a Kennedy bill (S 2379) establishing a National Council on the Arts and a National Arts Foundation to make matching federal grants to the states and non-profit professional groups to encourage and support the arts. S 2379 authorized appropriations of $5 million for grants in the first year and $10 million each year thereafter. (1963 Almanac p. 394)

● In 1964 the Office of Education added a separate Cultural Affairs Branch to give increased attention to the arts and humanities.

● In 1964 Congress passed the National Arts and Cultural Development Act establishing a National Council on the Arts in the Executive Office of the President. The Council's role was to be advisory, not to subsidize the arts. (1964 Almanac p. 427)

● In a Sept. 18, 1964, speech at Brown University, President Johnson said, "I look with greatest favor on the proposal for a national foundation for the humanities."

The President's speech at Brown followed the issuance of a report by the National Commission on the Humanities, headed by Brown University president Barnaby C. Keeney (later named chairman of the Humanities Endowment established under the 1965 bill). The Commission was established jointly in 1963 by the American Council of Learned Societies, the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States. In its 1964 report, it called for the establishment of a National Humanities Foundation to support study, teaching and research in the arts and humanities through federal grants and fellowships and through assistance in construction and expansion of libraries, classrooms, etc. The report said that the United States faced "a crisis of national leadership" because the development of the humanities lagged far behind science and technology.

ROCKEFELLER REPORT

On March 8, 1965, The Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Inc., released a report, after a two-year study, on "The Performing Arts: Problems and Prospects." The report recommended a major expansion of federal, state and local effort in support of the arts. It placed the "major responsibility" for the survival and growth of the arts on private initiative, but said that local, state and federal governments should also give their support. In particular, it said, the states should foster arts councils, support touring companies, remove tax burdens and various kinds of restrictive legislation, and encourage regional cooperation.

The Federal Government, the report said, should provide matching grants for theater construction, amend the copyright laws to protect artists, and abolish the 10-percent federal theater ticket tax.

1965 Developments

In his Jan. 6 State of the Union Message, President Johnson said: "To help promote and honor creative achievements, I will propose a National Foundation on the Arts." He made no mention of a Humanities Foundation. A number of bills were introduced in Congress, however, to establish a Humanities as well as an Arts Foundation. A bill (HR 334) introduced by Rep. William S. Moorhead (D Pa.) for a humanities foundation gained 87 co-sponsors (72 Democrats, 15 Republicans), more, it was claimed, than any other legislative proposal before the House. In the Senate a similar bill (S 316) was introduced by Claiborne Pell (D R.I.), chairman of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Special Subcommittee on Arts and Humanities. The Pell bill had 32 co-sponsors. In addition, Rep. Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.), chairman of the House Education and Labor Special Labor Subcommittee, and Sen. Pell sponsored identical bills (HR 3617, S 315) to establish a National Arts Foundation.

It was not until House-Senate hearings were underway on bills to provide federal aid to the arts and humanities that the Johnson Administration submitted its own legislative proposals.

In a March 10 letter to Congress President Johnson proposed legislation to establish a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities with two Endowments, and to authorize $10 million a year for grants, plus up to another $10 million if matched by private contributions. The President said, "Pursuit of artistic achievement, and making the fruits of that achievement available to all its people, is also among the hallmarks of a Great Society." (For text, see p. 1350)

The Administration bill was introduced March 10 in the Senate (S 1483) by Pell and in the House by Frank Thompson (HR 6050).

The bill stated that support of the arts and humanities was "primarily a matter for private and local initiative," but it was also an "appropriate matter of concern to the Federal Government" to assist programs supported by local, state, regional and private agencies and organizations.

In addition to establishing the Foundation, the Administration bill authorized $1 million for two programs, operated through the Office of Education, to purchase equipment and finance teacher training institutes to strengthen teaching in the arts and humanities. Any person attending such a workshop or institute could qualify for a stipend of $75 a week during attendance, plus $15 a week for each dependent.

NATIONAL ARTS COUNCIL AUTHORIZATION

Congress Aug. 13 approved legislation (HR 4714 -- PL 89-125) which authorized appropriations for the National Council on the Arts on an annual basis. The bill amended the 1964 law (PL 88-579) which established the Council and authorized appropriations of $150,000 for it. PL 88-579 did not indicate that the authorization was intended to be an annual one; in the absence of HR 4714 the authorization would apply for the life of the Council.

HR 4714 was passed by the House April 29 on a 239-116 roll-call vote. Voting for the bill were 55 Republicans and 184 Democrats; voting against it were 70 Republicans and 46 Democrats. The bill had previously (March 15) been rejected by a 217-113 roll-call vote when it was considered on the floor under suspension-of-the-rules procedure. (For voting, see charts p. 942, 956). At that time, the bill failed by three votes of receiving the two-thirds majority necessary for passage under suspension of the rules. Supporters then obtained from the Rules Committee a rule for floor consideration of the bill, which required only a majority of the votes for passage.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare, Special Subcommitte on Arts and Humanities.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 23-March 5 on legislation to establish a national foundation to provide federal assistance to the arts and humanities. (The Senate Subcommittee and the House Special Subcommittee on Labor held joint hearings Feb. 23, but continued hearings separately). Highlights of testimony:

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 23 -- Roger L. Stevens, Special Adviser to the President on the Arts and chairman of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, said the Administration would send Congress its recommendations for legislation to create a foundation for the arts and humanities "in the very near future." He said the combined foundation should draw on both private and federal funds to enable private, city and state institutions to offer their services to the public. He said the foundation would stimulate construction of facilities for the arts and humanities, thus reducing unemployment and aiding the economy.

Stevens announced that President Johnson had appointed him chairman of the National Council on the Arts.

Francis Keppel, U.S. Commissioner of Education, said, "Federal responsibility to the arts and humanities is no different from our responsibility to the other components of our society."

L. Quincy Mumford, Librarian of Congress, also testified in support of federal assistance to the arts and the humanities.

S. Dillon Ripley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, said his interest in proposed legislation to promote progress in the arts and humanities was based not only on the traditional concern of the Smithsonian Institution but also "on recognition that (as stated in the 1964 Report of the Commission on Humanities), 'The state of the humanities today creates a crisis for national leadership.'" He added, "Humanistic knowledge, it is generally agreed, has been neglected...at great peril to the present and the future of our country and the world."

Support from Educators and Musicians

Feb. 24 -- Barnaby C. Keeney, president of Brown University and chairman of the National Commission on the Humanities, said the establishment of a foundation for both the humanities and the arts was in the national interest and an "appropriate activity" of the Federal Government. (The Commission was established in 1963 by the American Council of Learned Societies. See p. 624).

David Winstein, member of the International Executive Board of the American Federation of Musicians, AFL-CIO, asked that Congress provide assistance "for the health of all the arts and all performing and creative artists." But creative arts and artists must not be circumscribed by statute or state control, he said.

Theodore Bikel, vice president of Actors' Equity, said the expansion of America's cultural resources is a matter of "dire national need...we ask for the tools to fill that need." He added, "The myth of government subsidy being synonymous with government control or interference has been dispelled."

Frederick O'Neal, president of Actors' Equity Assn., recommended that the differences "inherent" between "education in the humanities and training for the artistic professions" and "quality efforts and student attempts" be respected in the Federal Government's role in arts and humanities.

Hy Faine, national executive secretary of the American Guild of Musical Artists, recommended separate legislation for the arts and the humanities, as did Harold Weston, chairman of the National Council on the Arts and Government, Inc.

John A. Ryan, president of the Philadelphia Federation of Teachers of the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, supported establishment of a National Humanities Foundation to support both the arts and the humanities.

Feb. 25 -- Arlan R. Coolidge, professor of music at Brown University, supported establishment of separate foundations. Absorption into the physical sciences of scholars and lack of funds for research and artistic endeavors "fully justify" federal support of both areas, he said.

Albert Bush-Brown, president of the Rhode Island School of Design, said federal aid to the arts and humanities was "long overdue." He approved of the "general, non-regulatory character" of the bills.

Rise Stevens, Metropolitan Opera singer, supported federal aid to both the arts and the humanities. She said that Americans learning the arts should be able to study in this country instead of going to Europe.

Ernest W. Hartung, acting president of the University of Rhode Island, supported federal aid to both arts and humanities, in keeping with assistance provided for the sciences.

Paul Van K. Thomson, director of the liberal arts honors program of Providence College, said providing proper facilities in colleges for arts and humanities programs necessitated some federal aid.

Feb. 26 -- Gustav O. Arlt, president of the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States, supported a single foundation for the arts and humanities, because "the arts are humanities."

Whitney J. Oates, professor of humanities at Princeton University, represented the United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa. He endorsed the concept of a combined arts and humanities foundation and said that "virtually the entire academic profession" was in favor of such a foundation.

Frederick Dorian, professor of music at the Carnegie Institute of Technology and author of "Commitment to Culture," said small and medium-sized communities could not maintain an "adequate art life" without government help. "An antipoverty program," he concluded, "must fight also cultural starvation."

Frederick Burkhardt, president of the American Council of Learned Societies, said: "A lopsided, half-starved educational system is something this country simply cannot afford.... Science itself will suffer in such a culture." Burkhardt supported a combined arts and humanities foundation.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee reported the Administration bill (S 1483 -- S Rept 300) June 8 with amendments. The bill authorized appropriations of $63 million from fiscal 1966-68.

The amendments made the following changes in S 1483 as introduced: (1) authorized $2,750,000 specifically for matching grants of up to $50,000 annually for states' arts programs; (2) expanded the activities of the proposed Federal Council to include planning of "major and historic national events"; (3) included linguistics and jurisprudence under the "humanities" definition; (4) provided that standards of "professional excellence" would be encouraged in the arts and used in determining those productions eligible for federal assistance (however, the Committee report said that the addition would not preclude nonprofessional groups or individuals from receiving aid); (5) added "research" to activities which could be supported by the National Endowment for the Arts; (6) provided that the appropriations authorization for each endowment would be $5 million annually during fiscal 1966-68 (the Administration had requested $5 million in 1966 and no limit thereafter).

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate June 10 passed S 1483 by voice vote and sent it to the House with the committee amendments. There was no opposition to the legislation, and only brief discussion.

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor, Special Labor Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- Feb. 23 and March 3 jointly with the Senate Special Subcommittee on Arts and Humanities; Feb. 24, March 22-24, separately, hearing many of the witnesses who testified before the Senate Committee.

ACTION -- July 14 reported HR 9460 (H Rept 618), a clean bill replacing HR 6050, the Administration bill. The Committee bill contained all the major provisions of the Administration bill and the Senate-approved amendments to S 1483.

The Committee made additional amendments to provide that the director of the National Gallery of Art and the chairman of the Commission of Fine Arts would be members of the Federal Council; workshops (designed to encourage the artistic development or enjoyment of amateur, student and other non-professional participants) would be included in productions assisted by the arts endowment; and that grants to workshop activities charging admission to the general public would be limited to 30 percent of the total cost of the activities.

Majority Views. The report said the proposed Foundation would serve to correct a "financial crisis facing the arts in the United States, which stems primarily from the inadequacy of private sources to support artistic excellence at an appropriate level," and a "serious imbalance between federal support for the natural or pure sciences and for humanistic research and studies." The majority report also said the Foundation would "decentralize" the arts in the United States so that "artistic excellence could be enjoyed and appreciated by far greater numbers of our citizens."

Minority Views. Seven out of ten Republican Committee members signed a report which said the bill had been "railroaded" through the Committee, and called the Committee's handling of the bill "hasty," "frivolous" and "a mockery of the legislative process." The report contended that the Committee should have waited for a report and recommendations from the National Council on the Arts before considering an expanded federal role in, and "control over," the arts and humanities. The report criticized the Committee for having given "no consideration whatsoever" to other alternatives, such as tax reforms, for federal assistance in these areas. The minority group called HR 9460 a "long step in the wrong direction" and suggested that direct federal subsidies to the arts would lower the nation's "cultural level" and "at worst" lead to "attempts at political control of culture." The report characterized the proposed Foundation as "an impenetrable thicket of duplication and overlapping" and a "formidable bureaucratic framework...only a portent of the more lavish expenditures of federal funds" to come. The report also called the view that America was culturally backward a "myth" -- America had more museums than "the total in all of Western Europe," the report stated, more than half of the world's symphony orchestras, and a number of free libraries "unparalleled anywhere in the world." Republican Committee members who signed the minority report were: Ayres (Ohio); Griffin (Mich.); Quie (Minn.); Goodell (N.Y.); Martin (Neb.); Andrews (Ala.); and Gurney (Fla.).

Additional Views. Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) opposed establishment of a national arts foundation but not of a national humanities foundation "because of the virtual identity of activities in the humanities with the formal structure of higher education to which the Federal Government already makes a major contribution." However, Quie said, grants should not be made to individuals in the humanities field but directly to an institution which would then choose the recipient. Quie stated that contrary to grants to individuals in the sciences, which were "project oriented," grants to individuals in the humanities could result in "disruptive" university relationships. Quie contended that such grants could lead to disagreements between a recipient and his institution, which the institution could not resolve because of the independent status of the recipient. Or, he said, a university might hire a person mainly because of his ability to secure a grant.

FLOOR ACTION

The House Sept. 15 passed HR 9460 with an amendment by voice vote after rejecting, by a 128-151 roll-call vote a motion by Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.) to recommit (kill) the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 1002)

The House subsequently substituted the language of HR 9460 for that of the Senate-passed bill (S 1483), and passed the amended bill by voice vote.

HR 9460 was brought to the House floor under the 21-day procedure after the Rules Committee had failed to grant the bill a rule for floor debate. The special rule for House debate on this bill (H Res 478) was filed by Rep. Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.), chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, and adopted by the House Sept. 13 by a 260-114 roll-call vote. Small majorities of Republicans and Southern Democrats opposed the rule. (For description of the 21-day rule, see p. 585.)

The House accepted one minor amendment to the bill and rejected five others. Three of these were proposed by H. R. Gross (R Iowa), who called the bill a "boondoggle" and said passage of it was a "further going-away party for the Treasury of the United States." His amendments would have enlarged the scope of arts activities (defined in the bill) to include belly dancing, baseball, football, other sports and pinochle and poker.

The House defeated by a 27-86 standing vote an amendment by Ogden R. Reid (R N.Y.), a supporter of the bill, to require that the Advisory Councils on the Arts and Humanities approve the proposed allocation of federal funds to assist their programs. Also rejected, by a 39-86 standing vote, was an amendment by Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) which called for Senate confirmation of the chairman of the National Arts Endowment. Under the bill's terms, the chairman of the existing National Council on the Arts, Roger L. Stevens, was to be named chairman of the Arts Endowment.

Republicans Lead Criticism of Bill

Opponents of the legislation questioned the power that would be vested in the chairmen of the Arts and Humanities Endowments and their respective Councils. The chairmen could approve federal funds for programs with the advice, but not the express consent, of their respective Councils.

Critics also argued that there was no need for Government support of the arts and humanities, claimed that Government support of the arts would discourage private support, stifle individual artistic creativity and encourage mediocrity, and emphasized the cost of the bill.

William S. Broomfield (R Mich.) said that there "could be no more painful death to truly creative art in the United States, no surer punishment for the great artists in our country for daring to be different, than passage into law of HR 9460." Paul Findley (R Ill.) contended that mid-19th century and pre-World War II literature, "the greatest periods in American literature," occurred "when not one penny of either state or federal money was spent to support the arts."

Robert B. Duncan (D Ore.) asked whether it was desirable to "force the follower of Matt Dillon (a TV sheriff) to support the creative efforts in an off-Broadway avant garde theater he will not only not visit, but does not want to?" Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) called the bill "clumsy" and said it plunged the Government into the cultural world "with about the grace of a two-ton Tony Galento doing a minuet."

Inserted in the Congressional Record during House debate was a statement by the House Republican Policy Committee opposing HR 9460. The statement contended the arts and humanities were "thriving" and would continue to thrive "so long as the deadening hand of the federal bureaucracy is kept from the palette, the chisel and the pen."

Supporters See Crisis for Arts, Humanities

Sponsor of the House bill, Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.), told the House that "we are the last civilized nation on the earth to recognize that the arts and the humanities have a place in our national life."

In an opinion voiced the same day by numerous House supporters of the bill, Carlton R. Sickles (D Md.) said the bill's cost was "modest" in comparison to the federal aid given to the sciences. He said passage of the measure was necessary to meet the "grave financial crisis facing the arts in the United States" and the crisis of inadequate teaching in the humanities. Sickles also said the bill would "correct the imbalance" between federal aid to the sciences and to the arts and humanities, would "decentralize the arts so that they can be enjoyed by a greater number of people" and would not mean political control of the two fields just as federal funds did not "diminish the stature of the Smithsonian Institution" or state funds hinder the Lincoln Center.

PROVISIONS -- See p. 621.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Sept. 15 -- William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Provide that federal grants to state arts councils would, in the case of the District of Columbia, go to the D.C. Recreation Board. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Sept. 15 -- H. R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Include belly dancing in the artistic activities which would be eligible to receive federal financial aid under the bill. Voice.

Gross -- Include baseball, football, golf, tennis, squash, pinochle and poker in the artistic activities which would be eligible to receive federal financial aid. Voice.

Ogden R. Reid (R N.Y.) -- Require the National Arts Council to pass on actions taken by the chairman of the Arts Endowment in granting federal aid to the arts; require the same of the National Council on the Humanities in regard to grants from the Humanities Endowment. Standing vote, 27-86.

Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) -- Provide that the chairman of the Arts Endowment be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Standing, 39-86.

Gross -- Authorize federal grants to aid the arts in Appalachia and the "poverty-stricken areas" of New York and New Jersey. Voice.

Final Actions

The Senate Sept. 16 concurred in House amendments to S 1483. This action sent the measure to the White House.

Bill Signed. President Johnson Sept. 29 signed S 1483 into law (PL 89-209), establishing a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities.

Mr. Johnson said the Foundation, with the help of state and local governments and private groups, would create: a National Repertory Theater to perform modern and ancient theater classics throughout the country; a National Opera Company; a National Ballet Company; and an American Film Institute to bring together film artists, educators and other persons "who wish to pursue this 20th century art form as their life's work." He said it also would commission musical works by American composers, support American symphony orchestras and bring more artists to schools and universities by creating grants for their residence. The Foundation, the President said, would have "an unprecedented effect on the arts and humanities of our great nation." For the first time, he said, Congress had created a device to channel money into areas which had been in "the basement" where financial help was concerned.

Chairmen of the Endowments and the Federal Council were named in November and in January 1966 the President appointed the 26 members of the Humanities Council and the two additional members of the Arts Council.

Appropriations. The Foundation received appropriations of $10,700,000 -- $7,210,000 less than requested -- in the General Supplemental bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 11588 -- PL 89-309). Of the total amount, $5,000,000 was to be divided equally between the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities. In addition, $2,000,000 ($250,000 less than requested) for the National Endowment for the Arts, and $3,000,000 ($2,000,000 less than requested) for the National Endowment for the Humanities was provided for federal matching grants. In making the cuts, the House Appropriations Committee said it would be "more prudent to first establish sound and practical operating procedures...than to administer the program in haste and commit costly errors...."

Also appropriated was the requested $1 million to the Office of Education for the procurement of school equipment and materials, and for teacher training to strengthen education in the arts and humanities.

ANTICRIME PROGRAM PRESENTED TO CONGRESS

Congress in 1965 passed several anticrime and criminal rehabilitation bills, enacting part of President Johnson's legislative proposals, but it took no action on Administration requests for a firearms control law or for a bill providing civil commitment for drug addicts.

While the session produced only a small quantity of anticrime legislation, it marked a turning point in Congressional and Administration views of the crime problem. The emphasis in the session was more on study of the underlying causes of crime than on immediate action and more on prevention and rehabilitation measures than on strictly punitive laws.

The President appointed two commissions, one national in scope and the other concentrating on the District of Columbia, and gave them the task of developing new approaches to solving the generally worsening crime problem. In addition, he emphasized his antipoverty and education programs as the long-run solution to crime.

Among bills enacted were those providing for federal assistance in training local law enforcement officers, extending federal control over stimulants and depressants (so-called "pep pills"), renewing existing juvenile delinquency legislation, authorizing new rehabilitation techniques for federal prisoners and providing for a study of manpower needs in the field of correctional rehabilitation. (See stories p. 634, 352, 632, 635, 631)

A new law made it a federal crime to kill, kidnap or assassinate the President; while another bill made it a federal crime to travel in interstate commerce for the purpose of committing arson. The latter was the so-called "fire for hire" law aimed at professional arsonists, and was the major law against organized crime passed during the session.

The President March 8 made his program known in a major message to Congress, the first Presidential message devoted exclusively to crime. (For text of the message, see p. 1394)

THE PRESIDENT'S VIEWS

Despite the emergence of street crime as a national issue in the 1964 Presidential election campaign and despite rising crime rates nationwide (as reported by the Federal Bureau of Investigation), both the President and Congress appeared reluctant to approach the problem with sweeping new legislative proposals. There appeared to be several reasons for this reluctance, including the desire of the President and Congressional Democratic leaders to push through the massive "Great Society" program during the first session of the Congress.

In addition, the President and Congressional leadership of both parties continued to see law enforcement as essentially a local problem. "Our system," the President said in his March 8 message, "rejects the concept of a national police force. The protection responsibilities lie primarily with state and local government." Time and time again in floor debate on anticrime measures, Senators and Representatives spoke against potential infringement of federal activity in state and municipal law enforcement, an area sacrosanct in local politics.

Moreover, while the President saw crime as the "malignant enemy" of life in the Great Society, as he called it in his March 8 message, he also conceived of its cure more in terms of patient therapy than urgent surgery. He said in that message:

"Plainly, laws are less likely to command the respect of those forced to live at the margins of our society. Stability and order have little meaning and small advantage to those who exist in poverty, hopelessness, and despair.

"The long-run solution to this view of crime is jobs, education and hope. This is a goal to which this country is now committed."

The President thus placed himself in tune with such modern criminological theory that found typical neighborhood and street crimes, such as muggings, rapes and breaking and entering, to be functions of poverty and ghetto life. His remarks seemed prescient of the summer riots in Los Angeles, Chicago and Springfield, Mass., which he denounced as "tragic and shocking" but which he said pointed all the more to the need to "strike at the unjust conditions from which disorder largely flows."

Mr. Johnson Sept. 8 developed his thoughts on his approach to crime in an address to the first meeting of the National Crime Commission in Washington. Turning again to the metaphor of crime as disease, he called it "a sore on the face of America." He said a major effort must be made to determine the deeper causes of crime, an effort employing all available modern scientific and technological knowledge. He added, "So let the nation know that today we have taken a pledge not only to reduce crime but to banish it," thus expressing a degree of optimism shared by few, if any, contemporary criminologists.

Background

REFERENCES: "Criminal Justice and Crime Control" (1965 Editorial Research Reports p. 123); "Anticrime Legislation" (Congress and the Nation p. 1671).

The FBI's Uniform Crime Reports, compiled from statistics submitted by state and local law enforcement agencies, showed a steady increase in the national crime rate since the early 1950s. Mr. Johnson said in his March 8 message that the nation's crime rate doubled from 1940 to 1965 and that it increased five times faster than did the population from 1958 to 1965. (For 1963 crime statistics, see 1964 Almanac p. 257) Though widely accepted, the FBI's statistical reports were criticized by some social observers as reflecting better reporting procedures by local enforcement agencies rather than an actual increase in criminal activities.

NATURE OF CRIME

Criminal activity in America in the 1960s took place in a context of a growing population which showed a strong and continuing tendency to locate in urban areas. Crime generally fell into two categories: organized crime and random crimes against the person or property.

Organized crime was by far the less visible, more complex and more profitable. Historically, organized crime, or racketeering, was the successor to the gangland style operations of major bootlegging and gambling personalities during the 1920s and 1930s. Characteristically, however, organized crime in the 1960s had moved away from murder, bombings and other forms of violence as standard operational procedures. Organized crime was said to depend in large measure on illegal gambling as its major source of income, although there were strong indications that it had moved well into the field of illicit drug traffic because of the unusually high profits in that area.

Witnesses before the 1963 hearings of the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee unfolded a detailed picture of organized crime established on a nationwide basis under the control of regional heads. One witness was Joseph Valachi, alleged to have been a former member of the "Cosa Nostra" (Our Family), the successor to the Mafia in the United States. He described the operations of that organization in several sections of the country. (1963 Almanac p. 1101)

Organized crime was the more difficult for law enforcement officers to combat because it worked just beyond the fringes of the law, often with profits being pumped into quasi-legitimate businesses to serve as fronts for illicit operations. It made use of expensive legal talent. It avoided violence as that would invite police investigation and public outrage.

The other type of crime was perpetrated by individuals or small groups. It was often directed toward violence for its own sake -- such as assault, mugging, rape, or wanton destruction of property -- or toward relatively small profits (compared with organized crime) -- such as housebreaking, burglary, "tailgating" (stealing from parked trucks), highjacking, purse-snatching and shoplifting. In combating this type of crime, the overwhelming majority of which fell within the jurisdiction of state and local police, law enforcement officers found themselves hampered by jurisdictional boundaries, search warrant laws, and out-of-date procedures.

Two other factors complicated the crime picture: Supreme Court rulings on the rights of individuals and the migration of many Negroes to urban areas.

Beginning in the 1950s, the Court developed a line of cases extending to persons accused of both federal and state crimes a number of rights, including the rights to counsel and to be advised that nothing need be said by a suspect to police during interrogation. The Court held that these rights applied as soon as police charged a person with crime and did not remain suspended until the time of trial.

The thrust of the Court's decisions, however, was largely limited to confessions and their admissibility in court. It held in Escobedo v. Illinois (1964) that a confession obtained while the prisoner was being denied an opportunity to speak with his lawyer was inadmissible at trial. The Court did not say, however, that the defendant could not be tried and convicted on evidence other than his confession.

That case and others gave rise to criticism of the Court. Law enforcement officials, including FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, contended that the Court's rulings were inhibiting standard police investigative procedures to the detriment of the public safety. Other observers charged, however, that police had long been accustomed to relying on confessions for their major evidence and that the new rulings simply meant that new police methods had to be developed, methods directed more toward obtaining physical evidence.

The Negro migration to the cities raised a number of problems in law enforcement, the most visible of which was the attitude of police and Negro toward each other. During final debate Sept. 8 on the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965, Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) discussed this problem and concluded that "new and innovating programs" of training and education were necessary to overcome it. Special branches concerned with community relations were established in police departments of many cities, particularly in the North, to deal with allegations of "police brutality" and generally to attempt to smooth areas of friction between Negroes and police.

The President's Program

It was against this background that the President March 8 urged Congress to enact a number of anticrime measures. He emphasized that the Federal Government could act best in four areas: "organized crime, narcotic and drug control, regulation of gun sales, and law enforcement activities in the District of Columbia." He added that federal efforts in the areas of juvenile delinquency studies, assistance in training local peace officers and in providing comprehensive surveys of crime would be useful. The rest, he said, meaning the major burden of combating crime, would fall to state and local governments.

Organized Crime. Pointing to a "tenfold increase in racketeering convictions" by the Justice Department since 1961, the President said that coordinated federal efforts in this area were increasingly effective. He said these efforts were "a mere beginning," however, and that the Justice Department would submit legislative proposals to "strengthen and expand these efforts generally." He made no specific proposals in the message.

Major proposals introduced during the session were contained in a package of four bills submitted June 24 by Sens. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio). They were:

S 2187: Made it a crime to be a member of the Mafia or any other such "secret society...dedicated to commit unlawful acts against the United States."

S 2188: Made it a crime to obstruct federal investigations by attempting to bribe or intimidate a federal agent or his informant.

S 2189: Legalized certain wiretapping by federal agents for violations of federal law. The Justice Department in past years supported similar legislation. (See 1964 Almanac p. 77)

S 2190: Permitted witnesses in federal grand jury investigations to be compelled to testify and provided that they could be granted immunity from prosecution based on their compelled statements. The Justice Department supported this "witness immunity" bill.

The package of four bills was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee, but no hearings were held in 1965.

The legislation was an outgrowth of hearings held by the Senate Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee. The Subcommittee, of which McClellan was chairman, March 3 released a report (S Rept 72) on its 1963 investigations into organized crime and the Cosa Nostra and its 1964 hearings on illicit traffic in narcotics. The report recommended the four bills above.

A majority of the Subcommittee proposed a national commission that would act as a clearinghouse for criminal intelligence and as an investigative agency in organized crime, "in a status similar to that of a Congressional committee." Sens. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) opposed the recommendation as a step toward establishment of a national police force, "which is contrary to our traditional concepts of local self-government in this subject area." (Continued on next page)

Narcotic and Drug Control. The President asked for laws extending federal control over depressant and stimulant drugs, the so-called "pep pills," and providing for civil commitment and limited mandatory minimum sentences for narcotics addicts. The Administration backed a bill (HR 2) which fulfilled the first request, becoming a law (PL 89-74) as the Drug Abuse Control Amendments of 1965 to the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. The law extended federal regulation to barbiturates, amphetamines and other drugs affecting the central nervous system or producing hallucinogenic effects. (See story p. 352)

The Administration also supported two bills (S 2152, HR 9167) providing for civil commitment of drug addicts in lieu of imprisonment. Senators McClellan and Lausche introduced a similar bill (S 2191) as part of their anti-racketeering proposals. Hearings were held in the House, but no bill was reported. (See story p. 673)

Firearms. Mr. Johnson asked for amendments to the 1938 Federal Firearms Act to prohibit firearms shipments in interstate commerce except among importers, manufacturers and dealers licensed by the Treasury Department (thus stopping mail order deliveries to individuals), to prohibit licensees from selling firearms to persons under 21 years of age or shotguns or rifles to persons under 18 and to enable states to strengthen their own gun control laws.

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) March 22 introduced an Administration bill (S 1592), and Rep. John M. Murphy (D N.Y.) March 23 introduced an identical bill (HR 6628), one of 20 such measures introduced in the House. The Senate Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency under Dodd's chairmanship and the House Ways and Means Committee held extensive hearings on the bills, but none was reported. (See story p. 640)

Juvenile Delinquency. The President asked for additional funds for federally sponsored study and demonstration projects on juvenile delinquency. The Administration subsequently asked for a two-year extension of the 1961 Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act, but the House cut the request to one year and authorized an appropriation of $6.5 million for fiscal 1966, down from the $10 million fiscal 1965 appropriation. The extension became law (PL 89-69) on July 8. (See story p. 632)

Law Enforcement Assistance. Mr. Johnson urged enactment of the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965 to supplement such federal training programs for local law enforcement officers as the FBI had conducted for a number of years. The Act was intended to provide training programs and demonstration projects in police work to update and improve the standards of local law enforcement personnel.

The House Aug. 2 passed an amended Administration bill (HR 8027), introduced May 31 by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.). The Senate Sept. 8 passed HR 8027 and cleared it for the President. The bill authorized an appropriation of $10 million to implement the Act in fiscal 1966. (See story p. 634)

Presidential Commission. The President March 8 announced his intention to appoint a national commission to study the causes and cures of crime. He subsequently by Executive Order established the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice and July 26 appointed Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach as its chairman.

The other members of the Commission were: Miss Genevieve Blatt, former deputy attorney general of Pa.; Judge Charles D. Breitel of New York State Supreme Court, appellate division; Kingman Brewster Jr., president of Yale University; Garrett Byrne, district attorney of Suffolk County, Mass.; Thomas J. Cahill, chief of police, San Francisco; Otis Chandler, publisher of the Los Angeles Times; Leon Jaworski, lawyer, of Houston, Texas; Thomas Lynch, attorney general of Calif.; Ross L. Malone Jr., former Deputy Attorney General; William P. Rogers, former Attorney General; U.S. District Court Judge James B. Parsons of Chicago; Lewis F. Powell, Jr., president of the American Bar Assn.; Robert G. Storey, lawyer, of Dallas, Texas; Mrs. Robert J. Stuart, president of the League of Women Voters; Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York City; Herbert Wechsler, professor of law at Columbia University; Whitney M. Young, Jr., executive director of the National Urban League; and U.S. District Court Judge Luther W. Youngdahl of Washington, D.C.

The members of the President's crime commission for the District of Columbia, named July 16, were: Herbert J. Miller Jr., former Assistant Attorney General, chairman; Marjorie Lawson, former judge of the D.C. Juvenile Court, vice chairman; Frederick C. Ballard, former president of the D.C. Bar Assn.; Donald Bittinger, president of the Washington Gas Light Co.; Clarence Ferguson, dean of the Howard University Law School; Abe Crash, lawyer, of the Washington firm of Arnold and Porter; David A. Pine, retired district court judge; William P. Rogers, former Attorney General; and Patricia M. Wald, lawyer.

When the President announced his appointments to the District Commission, he emphasized that he wanted to make the District a model of law enforcement for the nation. He stressed his "determination that crime in the District of Columbia, like crime in all our cities, must, and will, be brought under control."

In remarks to the national commission Sept. 8, the President said: "I want to know why one-third of all parolees revert to crime. I want to know why one man breaks the law and another living in the same circumstances does not. I want to know why drug addiction is increasing among our youth. I want to know why organized crime continues to expand despite our best efforts to prevent it. I want to know why juvenile delinquency knows no economic or educational barriers."

Legislation authorizing funds for the two commissions (S J Res 102 -- PL 89-196) was enacted in September. It authorized $1.5 million, divided between the 18-month study of the national commission ($1.1 million) and the 12-month study of the District of Columbia commission ($400,000). Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) Aug. 5 introduced S J Res 102, which was reported Aug. 16 by the Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 602) and passed by the Senate by voice vote on Aug. 18. The House Judiciary Committee Aug. 31 reported the bill (H Rept 902) and the House passed it by a roll-call vote of 339-0 on Sept. 7. It was signed into law Sept. 21. (For voting, see chart p. 996)

Other Legislation

Arson. Congress in July enacted a bill (HR 6507 -- PL 89-68) which made it a federal crime to travel in interstate commerce for the purpose of committing arson, a practice called "fire for hire." Such activity could be punished by a maximum $10,000 fine and/or five years in prison. In requesting the law, an amendment to the interstate racketeering law, the Justice Department said that professional arson had become a "profitable business" in organized crime and had cost more than $16 million in insurance claims in the prior 10 years. State law enforcement was frustrated when arsonists fled to another state, the Department said.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) March 18 introduced HR 6507, which was reported April 27 by the House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 264) and passed by the House by voice vote May 3. The Senate Judiciary Committee June 22 reported the bill (S Rept 351) and the Senate passed it by voice vote on June 24. It was signed into law on July 7.

Bomb Threats. Another bill (HR 6848 -- PL 89-64) provided a civil penalty of not more than $1,000 against persons who falsely reported bombs aboard planes, motor vehicles, railroads or vessels. The penalty was to be recovered by a civil action brought in the name of the United States. The Justice Department requested the law. Prior to 1961, the law provided penalties of up to $1,000 fine and/or one-year imprisonment for false bomb threats. In 1961 it was amended to include persons who made such reports without malicious intent, and for persons having malicious intent, maximum penalties of fines up to $5,000 and/or five-year imprisonment were provided. The Department said it found it difficult to obtain convictions against persons of good repute who reported bombs as a joke or prank but without malice, as juries were reluctant to render verdicts of guilty. HR 6848 eliminated the fine and prison sentences for persons acting without malice, but left the $5,000/five-year penalty for malicious intent intact.

Celler March 26 introduced the bill, which was reported April 27 by the House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 263) and passed by the House by voice vote May 3. The Senate Judiciary Committee June 22 reported the bill (S Rept 352) and the Senate passed it by voice vote on June 24. It was signed into law July 7.

Presidential Assassination. Congress also enacted a bill (HR 6097 -- PL 89-141) making it a federal crime to kill, kidnap or assault the President and certain other high Government officials. (See story p. 582)

Prisoner Rehabilitation. Congress enacted a bill (HR 6964 -- PL 89-176) providing for new methods of rehabilitating federal prisoners, including establishment of prerelease treatment centers ("halfway houses"), emergency leaves and work-release programs. (See story p. 635)

Correctional Rehabilitation. Also enacted was a bill (HR 2263 -- PL 89-178) authorizing a three-year study of the manpower and training needs in the field of correctional rehabilitation . (See story in next column)

D.C. Crime. Both the House and Senate passed versions of a bill (HR 5688) amending the District of Columbia Criminal Code and providing for three-hour police interrogation of suspects, but the bill remained in conference at the end of the session. (See story p. 662)

Boxing Commission. The House passed but the Senate did not act upon a bill (HR 8635) establishing a Federal Boxing Commission to rid that sport of racketeering. (See story p. 669)

Bail Reform. The Senate Sept. 21 passed an omnibus bail bill (S 1357), the Bail Reform Act of 1965, but the House took no action on the measure. (See story p. 636)

Pretrial Information. Subcommittees of the Senate Judiciary Committee held hearings on a bill (S 290) to restrict information released to the press about persons accused of federal crime, but did not report the bill. (See story p. 633)

FBI -- JUSTICE SKIRMISH

A brief flareup of charges and counter-charges between the Justice Department and the FBI occurred in July during the hearings on invasion of privacy by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure. (See story p. 1526) The hearings probed activities of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), especially its use of wiretaps and other electronic eavesdropping devices, and news reports tied in the hearings with the Department's organized crime drive, as follows:

July 17 -- According to news reports, a Justice Department official said disclosures in the Subcommittee of wiretap violations by IRS agents "will kill" the Department's campaign against crime. Justice Department sources reportedly also said the campaign had deteriorated since President Kennedy's death. The FBI stopped giving information to the Organized Crime Section of the Justice Department, Department officials reportedly said, and "we started running out of gas."

July 20 -- In an Associated Press interview, Attorney General Katzenbach denied that the FBI had stopped cooperating in the campaign against organized crime. Katzenbach said the FBI's commitment to the campaign was "beyond question." However, he said, the FBI and the other 26 federal agencies involved in the anti-organized crime drive had "a great deal of professional pride and organizational jealousy" which kept them from giving the Justice Department information. (Though a division of the Justice Department, the FBI in practice is semi-autonomous.)

July 22 -- FBI director J. Edgar Hoover strongly denied Katzenbach's allegation and stated that there had been "no diminuation of reports by the FBI" to the Justice Department.

CORRECTIONAL TRAINING

HR 2263 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 381) May 27, 1965.
- Passed by the House by voice vote June 21.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 543) Aug. 6.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by voice vote Aug. 11.
- House agreed by voice vote to the Senate amendments Aug. 26.

PL 89-178 -- Signed into law Sept. 10.

A three-year study of the nation's needs in manpower and training in the field of rehabilitation of prisoners and delinquents was authorized and funded by Congress in 1965. The bill (HR 2263 -- PL 89-178), known as the Correctional Rehabilitation Study Act of 1965, was sponsored by Rep. Edith Green (D Ore.).

HR 2263 amended the Vocational Rehabilitation Act to authorize the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to make grants for studies of personnel needs in the correctional field -- probation officers, social workers, rehabilitation counselors and the like.

It was generally anticipated that the study would be carried out by the Joint Commission on Correctional Manpower and Training, a private organization established in March 1965. The Commission's directors included representatives of the American Bar Assn.,

American Correctional Assn., National Council on Crime and Delinquency and other professional organizations.

When President Johnson Sept. 10 signed the bill into law, he said: "If we are to find new and better ways to help parolees return to society and to a good and useful life for themselves and their families, we must have highly trained specialists at our disposal. The studies to be financed under this bill will tell us the kind of specialists we need, the number we must have, and what training we must provide for them."

The bill was supported by the Departments of Justice and HEW, and endorsed by 25 Governors and more than 100 state and local officials in the correctional field.

There was no opposition to it in Congress, and the House and Senate versions of the bill differed in only one respect. The House version specified that advice on the grants should come from the National Advisory Council on Vocational Rehabilitation while the Senate version called for a new Advisory Council on Correctional Manpower and Training to furnish the advice. The House accepted this amendment without controversy.

The full authorized amount of $500,000 to carry out the first year of the study was provided in the general supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 11588).

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law HR 2263:

Authorized the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to make grants to cover part of the cost of a coordinated, three-year study of personnel needs, training resources and teaching methods in correctional rehabilitation. The grants could go to one or more non-governmental organizations engaged in correctional rehabilitation activities.

Established the National Advisory Council on Correctional Manpower and Training, to consist of 12 members appointed by the Secretary to advise him on applications for grants.

Authorized appropriations of $500,000 for fiscal 1966 and $800,000 for each of the two succeeding years to carry out the study program.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY ACT

HR 8131 -- Reported, amended, by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 363) May 20, 1965.
S 1566 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 318) June 11.
HR 8131 -- Passed by the House by voice vote June 24.
● Passed by the Senate by voice vote June 29.
PL 89-69 -- Signed into law July 8.

Congress in 1965 passed a bill (HR 8131) extending the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act of 1961 for one year, to June 30, 1967, and authorizing appropriations of $6.5 million for fiscal 1966 and $10 million for fiscal 1967. The bill made no changes in the substance of the Act.

The Act had been amended in 1964 to run through fiscal 1966, but no funds had been authorized for that year, which began June 30, 1965. The appropriation bill for the Health, Education and Welfare Department (HR 7765) provided the full $6.5 million in authorized funds.

President Johnson March 8 in his message on crime asked Congress to extend the Act. (For text of the message, see p. 1394)

BACKGROUND -- Congress in 1961 in PL 87-274 established the anti-juvenile delinquency program for three years and authorized $10 million a year. In 1964 the program was extended through fiscal 1966, but funds, totaling $10 million, were authorized only for fiscal 1965. Fiscal 1965 appropriations for programs under the Act amounted to $10 million, plus an additional $1.5 million for a special demonstration program in the District of Columbia. (1961 Almanac p. 204, 1964 Almanac p. 256)

PL 87-274 provided three major methods to combat juvenile delinquency: (1) grants for comprehensive or special demonstration projects involving control, prevention and rehabilitation; (2) grants and contracts for training personnel in delinquency control; and (3) technical assistance services such as dissemination of information from demonstration projects.

Rep. John Brademas (D Ind.) June 24 said that under the Act 16 communities in 13 states had undertaken comprehensive demonstration projects and that 24 special demonstration projects would be underway in July. He said that over 100 training projects had been established at 12 university-based training centers, and that over 12,500 persons had participated in information seminars on juvenile delinquency control techniques which had been established by over 50 grants. He said comprehensive demonstration projects to be supported under funds authorized by HR 8131 would be only those currently operating in Boston, New Haven, New York City and the District of Columbia.

Brademas May 12 introduced HR 8131 and Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) March 18 introduced a similar bill in the Senate. The bills proposed to extend the Act for two additional years.

House

COMMITTEE -- Education and Labor.

ACTION -- May 20 reported (H Rept 363) HR 8131 with an amendment to extend the Act for only one year, until June 30, 1967. The bill also authorized $6.5 million for the program in fiscal 1966 and $10 million in fiscal 1967.

The report said the Committee planned to review the operations of the program in 1966. It noted that many of the juvenile delinquency programs established with federal aid were being "phased into" the programs financed through the Office of Economic Opportunity.

In separate views, Hugh L. Carey (D N.Y.) said the program was particularly useful to the "Mobilization for Youth" program of New York City. He said the New York police commissioner had endorsed an extension of the law.

Albert H. Quie (R Minn.) said the program had been "a major disappointment" to its Congressional supporters because of excessive planning and little action.

Floor Action. The House June 24 passed HR 8131 by voice vote with the committee amendment.

During debate on the bill, Reps. Roman C. Pucinski (D Ill.) and Albert H. Quie (R Minn.), members of the Education and Labor Committee, said they would oppose any further extension of the program. Pucinski said the program had not taken "advantage of the excellent opportunity given" in the original Act, but had "conveniently transferred all of the programs in the large cities...over to the antipoverty program." He contended that not "one new concept...or idea" for combatting juvenile delinquency had come out of the program since it began in 1961.

John Brademas (D Ind.), sponsor of HR 8131, said that results of the program were "encouraging" and were making "headway" in combatting delinquency. Brademas confirmed that many of the major community demonstration projects were being "phased into" the war on poverty program under the Office of Economic Opportunity, and said it had always been intended that state and local governments, rather than the Federal Government, would permanently finance programs authorized under the Act. However, he said, no decision should be made on phasing out federal involvement until recommendations were made by the Presidential Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice, which was making a "continuing review" of the program.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION -- June 11 reported S 1566 (S Rept 318), amended, extending the Act for two years, to June 30, 1968, and authorizing appropriations of $6.5 million for fiscal year 1966 and $8.3 million each for fiscal years 1967 and 1968.

The report said the additional funds for fiscal years 1967 and 1968, amounting to $1.8 million above the requested $6.5 million each year, were for the specific purpose of encouraging training of youth workers by the Office of Juvenile Delinquency. The additional funds were sponsored by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.).

FLOOR ACTION. The Senate June 29 by voice vote passed and sent the House bill (HR 8131) to the President.

MADISON MEMORIAL LIBRARY

A law (PL 89-260) signed by the President Oct. 19 authorized a third building for the Library of Congress, to be named in honor of James Madison, fourth President of the United States. It met both the expanding needs of the Library of Congress and the desire for a monument to Madison in Washington, D.C. The Madison Memorial Commission, set up by Congress in 1960, had recommended a smaller, independent library to honor him.

The enacted bill was the House version of a Senate bill (S J Res 69 -- S Rept 641) which had originally directed the General Services Administration to construct the library. The Senate bill reflected criticism of recent construction by the Architect of the Capitol, J. George Stewart. (1963 Almanac p. 176)

The House version of S J Res 69, as enacted, authorized construction of the library by the Capitol Architect under the direction of the Congressional Office Building Commissions and the Joint Committee on the Library, and after consultation with architects designated by the American Institute of Architects. The bill authorized appropriations of up to $75 million for the building and an additional $10,000 for expenses of the Madison Commission.

The House bill (H J Res 642) was passed by a 328-5 roll-call vote Oct. 1 after a motion by Rep. James C. Cleveland (R N.H.) to authorize a study of a visitors' center near the Capitol was rejected on a 17-321 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 1012) The House then substituted the language of its bill for the text of S J Res 69, and the Senate accepted the changes by voice vote Oct. 5.

PRETRIAL INFORMATION

The controversy over balancing the constitutional guarantees of a free press and fair trial was the subject of Senate hearings Aug. 17-20. No action was taken on the bill (S 290).

The issue of prejudicial pretrial publicity was brought sharply into focus in the Warren Report on the assassination of President Kennedy, a report critical of news media handling of the alleged guilt of the President's assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald, and of Oswald's murderer, Jack Ruby. (1964 Almanac p. 986)

Some legal spokesmen critical of press treatment of persons accused of crime advocated cutting off prejudicial information at the source, and that was the aim of S 290. The hearings were held jointly by the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittees on Constitutional Rights and on Improvements in Judicial Machinery.

S 290 was introduced Jan. 6 by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and 14 co-sponsors -- Republicans: Cooper (Ky.), Fong (Hawaii), Prouty (Vt.), Scott (Pa.) and Young (N.D.); Democrats: Burdick (N.D.), Dodd (Conn.), Inouye (Hawaii), Johnston (S.C.), Long (Mo.), McGee (Wyo.), Moss (Utah), Yarborough (Texas) and Young (Ohio).

S 290 provided: "It shall constitute a contempt of court for any employee of the United States, or for any defendant or his attorney or the agent of either, to furnish or make available for publication information not already properly filed with the court which might affect the outcome of any pending criminal litigation, except evidence that has already been admitted at the trial. Such contempt shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000."

TESTIMONY -- Aug. 17 -- Morse, a former law school dean, said that while it might not be desirable or constitutional to curb the press, "it is both desirable and constitutional to limit what attorneys may cause to be published prior to a trial." He urged setting a "standard at the federal level."

Fred M. Vinson Jr., Assistant Attorney General in charge of the criminal division, said the bill might infringe upon a defendant's right to maintain his innocence. He said that such legislation was premature in light of the many studies underway on the problem and in light of the Attorney General's April 16 ban on prejudicial statements by Department employees.

Alfred Friendly, managing editor of The Washington Post and chairman of the press-bar committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, said S 290 could lower an "iron curtain behind which prejudiced or corrupt police and courts could enjoy invulnerability."

Aug. 18 -- Judge William F. Smith of the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals said the bill was needed but its language pertaining to the type of information to be suppressed should be tightened to withstand constitutional attack.

Sidney Zagri, legislative counsel to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, supported the bill, saying it would avoid repetition of the kind of "trial by press release" to which he said Teamster President James R. Hoffa had been subjected by the Justice Department.

Aug. 19 -- Prof. Philip B. Kurland of the University of Chicago Law School said that because of his long interest in the subject, he agreed to draft the original version of S 290 when it was suggested by Zagri.

Aug. 20 -- Charles E. Moylan Jr., State's attorney for Baltimore City, said that self-discipline by members of the press and bar was preferable to legislation.

LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING

HR 8027 -- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 695) July 29, 1965.
- Passed, amended, by the House by a 326-0 roll-call vote Aug. 2. (See p. 984)
- Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 672) Aug. 31.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 8.

PL 89-197 -- Signed into law Sept. 22.

The 89th Congress enacted the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965 (HR 8027 -- PL 89-197) and opened a new era in federal assistance in upgrading the quality of local law enforcement.

The Act authorized the Attorney General to make grants for studies of new police procedures and for demonstration projects of such new techniques. The aim was to determine the efficacy of new methods of crime control and to make those methods available to local law officers, either in training sessions or by other means.

Previously, federal assistance to local law officers was largely limited to training sessions given by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. While the Act envisioned continuation of those sessions, it also authorized far broader assistance. It was conditioned on the belief that many police departments lacked the resources to undertake studies of new methods of crime detection and control.

The concept of federal studies of crime control and local law enforcement problems was articulated by the Civil Rights Commission, which in 1961 urged passage of legislation authorizing the Attorney General to make grants for such studies. (1961 Almanac p. 397-398)

President Johnson March 8, 1965, in his message on crime urged passage of the Act, saying that a "major opportunity" for crime control lay in developing and testing experimental methods of law enforcement. (For text of the message, see p. 1394)

The Act authorized expenditures of $10 million in fiscal 1966, and Congress appropriated an initial $7,249,000 for the program in the general supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 11588). (See story p. 182)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 8027:

Authorized the Attorney General to make grants to public and private non-profit agencies or organizations to establish or improve programs to train local law enforcement personnel.

Authorized the Attorney General to make grants for demonstration projects on new methods of law enforcement and control, to make studies of organization, techniques and practices in the field of law enforcement and to collect, evaluate and publish the results of these studies and other matters relating to law enforcement.

Required the Attorney General to report on the program to the President and Congress by April 1, 1966, and each year thereafter, and specified that nothing in the Act should be construed as authorizing federal direction, supervision or control over any state or local law enforcement agencies.

Authorized appropriations of $10 million in fiscal 1966 to carry out the Act; required additional authorizations at a later date for fiscal 1967 and 1968.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HELD HEARINGS -- May 20 on a bill (HR 8027), the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965, which authorized the Attorney General to make grants for studies of new police methods and for demonstration projects of their efficacy.

The bill was introduced May 10 by Rep. James C. Corman (D Calif.) and had the support of the American Bar Assn. as well as of several local law enforcement associations. President Johnson March 8 recommended the legislation in his message on crime.

The Committee July 29 reported HR 8027 (H Rept 695) with two amendments. It provided a $10 million authorization for fiscal 1966 instead of the open-ended authorization sought by the Administration. It also required annual reports to Congress by the Attorney General concerning the program.

Floor Action. The House Aug. 2 passed the bill by a 326-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 984)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary, Special Subcommittee on the Law Enforcement Assistance Act of 1965.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 22, 23 and 30, on bills (S 1792, S 1825) which were identical to the original version of HR 8027. Sen. Frank E. Moss (D Utah) and others April 21 introduced S 1792 and Sen. Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), who sponsored similar legislation in the 87th and 88th Congresses, April 26 introduced S 1825.

TESTIMONY -- July 22 -- Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach said the Administration had requested $10 million as an initial appropriation to finance the program for fiscal 1966, the first year of its proposed three-year duration. He said the "alarming rise in crime throughout the nation" warranted expansion of federal assistance to law enforcement. While a massive federal subsidy program was "undesirable," he said, the Federal Government could "provide selective support for model programs, programs designed to show what is possible." He mentioned new police communications techniques and use of computers as subjects for study, as well as removing such crimes as drug addiction and intra-family assaults from the criminal process. One-third of the approximately 6,000,000 arrests in the nation in 1964 were for drunkenness, he said, and methods of removing these cases from overburdened courts and crowded jails should be studied.

July 23 -- Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) said the legislation complemented the proposed Correctional Rehabilitation Study Act of 1965 (HR 2263). While S 1792 and S 1825 provided "action programs" for training, he said, HR 2263 provided for background studies to determine manpower and educational needs before personnel training began. (For story on HR 2263, see p. 631)

ACTION -- Following House passage of HR 8027, the Senate Committee reported the bill without amendment (S Rept 672) on Aug. 31.

Floor Action. The Senate Sept. 8 passed HR 8027, by voice vote without opposition.

President Johnson Sept. 22 said, in signing the bill into law (PL 89-197): "Because the anchor of society must be an abiding respect for law and order, it is appropriate that the Federal Government provide material aid to resist crime and promote the rule of law on the local level." He noted that the Government had provided aid to local communities "for years" in the fields of housing, employment, mental health, education, transportation and welfare.

PRISONER REHABILITATION

HR 6964 -- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 694) July 29, 1965.

- Passed by the House on a 325-0 roll-call vote Aug. 2. (See p. 984)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 613) Aug. 16.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 18.
- House agreed by voice vote to Senate amendments Aug. 25.

PL 89-176 -- Signed into law Sept. 10.

New rehabilitation procedures for inmates of the federal prison system were authorized by Congress in HR 6964 -- PL 89-176, which amended the U.S. Code (Title 18, Section 4082). The new procedures, which had been in effect in some state prison systems for several years, authorized use of "halfway houses" for prisoners about to be released, permitted emergency leaves for prisoners and daytime release for paid jobs or training programs.

Only minor changes were made in the Administration measure. These reflected the fears of some Senators and Representatives about the impact on local labor markets of the work-release program. The bill was thus amended in the Judiciary Committees of both the Senate and House to stiffen safeguards for local labor pools.

The House bill required that work-release prisoners not displace employed workers and that their work and pay conditions be reasonable. The Senate added a requirement that prison officials consult local labor leaders and guarantee that existing labor pools and working conditions not be adversely affected. This was accepted by the House.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 6964:

Authorized the Attorney General to commit adult federal prisoners or youths committed to the National Training School for Boys to prerelease residential treatment centers, known as "halfway houses," whether the centers were maintained by the Federal Government or otherwise.

Authorized the Attorney General to grant trustworthy prisoners leave of up to 30 days to visit a dying relative (spouse, child, parent, brother or sister), to attend a relative's funeral, to obtain medical services not otherwise available, to meet with prospective employers or "for any other compelling reason consistent with the public interest."

Authorized the Attorney General to permit prisoners to obtain gainful employment or to enter work-training programs in communities near their places of confinement so long as the prisoners returned to confinement when not working.

Required assurances that no employed workers be displaced, that pay rates and working conditions equal those provided for similar work in the community and that prison officials consult with local labor leaders so as not to affect adversely the local labor pool or working or pay conditions.

Permitted the Attorney General to require prisoners to pay reasonable costs of their confinement.

Specified that failure to obey the terms of release constituted an escape under terms of the Escape Act.

House

Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Committee March 31 introduced HR 6964. The Committee May 20 held a hearing on the bill and reported it (H Rept 694) July 29 with an amendment. The House Aug. 2 passed the bill with the amendment by a 325-0 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 984)

The Administration's draft bill was amended by the Committee to ensure that work-release program participants would not displace employed workers and that pay rates and working conditions for the prisoners would match those prevailing in the community. The amendment also provided that prisoners released for employment could be required to pay a reasonable part of their earnings toward the cost of their confinement.

In brief debate on HR 6964, Edwin E. Willis (D La.), a member of the Committee, said that of the approximately 22,000 prisoners in federal custody, an estimated 1,000 to 1,500 could be expected to participate in the work-release program. He said the program would cost the Federal Government nothing, and that on the contrary, prisoners taking part in the work-release program would contribute to the cost of their own confinement.

Basil L. Whitener (D N.C.) said his state pioneered in the work-release program. From its inception in 1957 until July 1, 1965, he said, the program had 6,080 participants who earned $4.4 million, paid $1.5 million for their board and keep in confinement, and $370,000 for transportation, contributed $1,212,000 for support of their families and paid unspecified amounts in federal and state income taxes. The rate of recidivism (return to criminal activities) for these prisoners, he said, was 6.8 percent, well below the national average, and the 1961 prison population of 12,000 was cut to 10,600 in 1965, despite an overall increase in state population. North Carolina was able to close 22 field units in its prison system, each designed to accommodate 100 prisoners, because of the program's success, he said.

Senate

Sen. Edward V. Long (D Mo.) and others April 23 introduced a bill (S 1808) similar to HR 6964. The Senate Judiciary Committee July 29 held a hearing on S 1808, and on Aug. 16 reported HR 6964 (S Rept 613) with an amendment. The Senate Aug. 18 passed the bill by voice vote.

The main concern of the Senate was the work-release provision, and the Committee's amendment stiffened the bill's safeguards to the local labor force. The amendment required consultation with local labor leaders and guarantees that local existing wage rates and working conditions would not be adversely affected.

FINAL ACTION

The House Aug. 25 agreed by voice vote to the Senate amendment to HR 6964, thus sending the bill to the White House. The President Sept. 10 signed the bill (PL 89-176).

SENATE EASES BAIL SYSTEM FOR ACCUSED PERSONS

S 1357 -- Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 750) Sept. 16, 1965.

- Passed by voice vote of the Senate Sept. 21.

The Senate Sept. 21 passed by voice vote and sent to the House a comprehensive amended bill (S 1357), the Bail Reform Act of 1965, authorizing the release of accused persons prior to trial and making a number of other changes in pretrial procedures affecting, in most cases, the indigent. The House Judiciary Committee did not act on S 1357 in 1965.

In all state and federal courts, bail could be required of a prisoner as a precondition to release following arrest. The bail could take the form of cash or collateral supplied by the defendant or others or by a professional bondsman, who charged a fee and sometimes required collateral as well. The purpose of bail was to insure the presence of the accused at his trial, and failure to appear customarily resulted in forfeiture of the bail. Increasingly in recent years the system was criticized as unfairly penalizing those who could not afford to post bail.

S 1357 had strong bipartisan backing and the support of the Administration. It was an omnibus bill, drawing together a number of proposals contained in other bills (S 646, S 647 and S 648) which, in turn, were based on similar legislation introduced but not acted upon in 1964, when the Senate Judiciary Committee began work on the subject.

S 1357 as amended provided that when a person on a noncapital charge first appeared before a judicial officer, he would be released on personal recognizance or unsecured bond unless found unlikely to appear later in court. In that event, the judicial officer could authorize release under supervision, on travel restrictions, during daytime only, on 10-percent deposit of bond, on bail bond or any other reasonable condition.

The bill gave credit toward subsequent fines or prison sentences for time served in jail awaiting trial. While eliminating the existing federal bail-jumping law, it provided similar penalties for nonappearance in court.

Joseph B. Tydings (D Md.) Sept. 21 told the Senate in brief debate that the bill was not intended to deal with preventive detention of persons thought likely to commit further crimes while on bail. That problem, he said, needed further study.

Background

REFERENCE -- Indigent Legal Aid. (1964 Almanac p. 432)

The Bail Reform Act of 1965 was the outgrowth of several years of study and experimentation at the federal, state and municipal levels and by private organizations.

STUDIES UNDERTAKEN

Chicago. As early as 1927 Arthur Lawton Beeley published a study on The Bail System in Chicago. Beeley found that nearly three-quarters of Chicago's criminal cases were being initiated by arrests and, despite the 60 percent probability that the accused would be discharged or acquitted, the arrested persons were jailed pending bail determinations. Of the 20 percent of those who remained in jail because they were unable to post the bail (usually ranging between $5,000 and $20,000), 28 percent, he said, were unnecessarily detained before trial, while many others were granted unconditional release and never returned for trial. "In too many instances," Beeley concluded, "the present system...neither guarantees security to society nor safeguards the rights of the accused." He called the system "lax with those with whom it should be stringent and stringent with those with whom it could safely be less severe." His recommendations included: (1) greater use of the summons to avoid unnecessary arrests, (2) a constitutional amendment to deny bail to hardened offenders charged with felonies, and (3) the initiation of fact-finding investigations so that bail could be tailored to the individual.

Philadelphia. A 1954 study of the administration of bail in Philadelphia, conducted by a University of Pennsylvania Law School team under the direction of Professor Caleb Foote, revealed that in two-thirds of the cases the amount of bail set by the magistrates was determined in police stations on the basis of police evidence alone (merely the charge coupled with the name, address and occupation of the defendant). The study quoted magistrates as admitting that they set high bail to "break" crime waves, keep the defendant in jail, cut him off from his narcotics supply, protect women, "make an example" of a particularly abusive defendant, make him "serve some time" even where acquittal was a certainty, or protect arresting officers from false arrest suits. As a result, the study said, three out of four defendants ended up staying in jail between arrest and trial, at a cost to the city of Philadelphia of $300,000 annually for pretrial detainees alone. Out of 1,000 cases in which the accused was jailed without bail, the study found only 18 percent not convicted, compared with 48 percent of the bailed sample. Of those convicted, jailed defendants got prison terms 2½ times as often as those who had been freed on bail. The study recommended: increased releases on personal bond, a statute to penalize nonappearance as a criminal offense and lowering the standard amounts of bail.

New York. A Study of the Administration of Bail in New York City (also under the direction of Foote), undertaken in 1957 because of the reported "serious overcrowding" of detention facilities, found that 13.5 percent of the jailed defendants in 1955 received suspended sentences, compared with 54.2 percent of their bailed counterparts. Despite the fact that 25 percent of all defendants were unable to raise $500 bail, 45 percent to raise $1,500 bail, and 63 percent could not raise bail set at $2,500, the report said, no bail hearings inquired into how much bond defendants could afford.

Another New York City study made in 1963 by the Judiciary Committee of the New York State Assembly developed conclusions similar to those in the Philadelphia report. The Committee found evidence of judges using bail to give defendants "a taste of jail" by arbitrarily setting bond beyond their financial means and "observed" judges engaging in the misuses of bail power "to coerce" defendants in some aspect of the case. The Committee further noted New York City Department of Correction statistics showing an 82.6 percent increase in the number of pretrial detainees since 1950, accounting for 45 percent of the city's total prison census, at a cost to the city in 1962 of over $10,000,000 annually.

District of Columbia. In Washington, D.C., the District Assn.'s Junior Bar Section analyzed the operation of the D.C. bail system in 1962 and published its findings in 1963. It found that the minimum bail for a felony was $1,000, even where the charge was minor, no violence was involved, the defendant had roots in the community, and there appeared to be no reason to doubt that the defendant would appear as required. The study of detention facilities showed that 30 to 40 percent of the District Jail population was comprised of pretrial prisoners; that 84 percent of these had bail set but had been unable to post it; that the average detention period lasted 51 days and cost $200 per defendant; that pretrial detention in 1962 cost a total or $500,000; and that pretrial jail conditions were at least as severe as confinement after sentence.

Federal Government. Federal bail practices were reviewed in the Feb. 25, 1963, Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Poverty and the Administration of Federal Criminal Justice. The report found that the only determinants in an initial bail decision by U.S. commissioners were the charge against the defendant and the circumstances of the alleged offense, as communicated to the court by the prosecuting attorney. Bail for indigent defendants, the report said, was set without the presence of counsel and generally without any "investigative mechanisms" available to the commissioner or judge to secure reliable information relevant to the bail decision.

The report concluded that the federal bail system, as administered, "results in serious problems for defendants of limited means, imperils the effective operation of the adversary system, and may even fail to provide the most effective deterrence to non-appearance by accused persons." It recommended: increased use of the summons in lieu of arrest, institution of bail fact-finding investigations, announcement by the Justice Department of a policy favoring pretrial release of arrested persons, utilization of non-monetary inducements such as pretrial supervision by probation officers, and the posting of cash or property of a value less than the bail amount which would be refundable upon the defendant's appearance at trial.

ACTION PROGRAMS

Justice Department. In conjunction with the Justice Department's report, former Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy March 11, 1963, instructed all U.S. Attorneys "to take the initiative in recommending the release of defendants on their own recognizance when they are satisfied that there is no substantial risk of the defendants' failure to appear at the specified time and place." (The Attorney General's Committee had defined release on recognizance (r.o.r.) in the federal system as "the procedure whereby the accused is granted liberty upon his execution of a personal bond in the bail amount without being required to supply additional assurances of his presence at trial in the form of a surety bond or other acceptable securities.")

A follow-up study by the Justice Department in March 1964 to determine the impact of the Attorney General's r.o.r. directive on the federal system showed the following results: (1) district courts generally followed the U.S. Attorney's recommendations; (2) the rate of r.o.r. recommendations and releases had nearly tripled between 1960 and 1964, from 6.4 to 17.4 percent of all criminal cases; (3) over 6,000 defendants in federal criminal cases had been released on r.o.r. within the past year, with a default rate at trial of only 2.5 percent; and (4) sixteen of the 92 federal districts reported releasing more than 30 percent of all defendants on r.o.r., with the Districts of Alaska (72.4 percent), Eastern Michigan (71.7 percent), Connecticut (71.1 percent) and Massachusetts (66.7 percent) topping the list.

Programs to promote release on recognizance were currently underway in state or federal courts in New York, Washington, Detroit, Des Moines, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Tulsa and Nassau County (N.Y.). Many were backed by Ford Foundation grants.

Manhattan Bail Project. The pioneer endeavor in this field, after which most of the other programs had been modeled, was the Manhattan Bail Project, begun in 1961 in New York City's criminal court. Toward the end of 1960 Louis Schweitzer, a New York philanthropist, set up the non-profit, charitable Vera Foundation (named after his mother) whose stated purpose was "to further equal protection of the laws for the indigent through research into neglected aspects of criminal law." Aided by a $115,000 Ford Foundation grant and staffed by New York University law students under the supervision of Vera Foundation director Herbert Sturz, the foundation launched a fact-finding project in the Borough of Manhattan which it called the Manhattan Bail Project.

The program was conducted by staff members, who interviewed arrested felony defendants (primarily indigents) during the brief time between arrest and arraignment to determine whether the defendants had appropriate community ties and were good risks for being released on their personal recognizance. In evaluating whether a defendant was a good risk, the project considered four key factors: residential stability, employment history, family contacts in the city and prior criminal record. A summary of the information gathered for each defendant considered a good risk was submitted to the arraignment court and copies were distributed to the magistrate, the assistant district attorney and defense counsel. With this evidence and recommendations, the court was in a position to make an individualized bail decision.

From Oct. 16, 1961, through April 8, 1964, out of 10,000 defendants interviewed 4,000 were recommended by the Project for release on recognizance; 2,195 of those recommended were paroled by the court, and only 15 of those paroled failed to show up in court (a default rate of less than .7 percent). During the same time period, defendants freed on bail in New York City defaulted three times as often.

On Sept. 1, 1964, the Office of Probation, a city agency, took over the bail project as a continuing program and applied it to all five boroughs of New York City.

Bail Conference. The National Conference on Bail and Criminal Justice, which was held May 27-29, 1964, in Washington, D.C., clarified and provided additional impetus for the need to reform the bail system. The Conference, whose stated purpose was to "focus public attention on the defects in the bail system, the need for its overhaul and the methods of improving it," was initiated June 1, 1963, with the assistance of a grant under Public Law 87-274 from the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Crime. (1961 Almanac p. 204) A report, reviewing existing bail practices and describing the range of alternatives which had emerged from proposals for reform and projects already underway, was compiled under the direction of Patricia M. Ward and Daniel J. Freed and delivered to the Conference.

The report concluded, on the basis of studies of the bail system (see above), that the existing system had not worked very well. It said that many accused persons, who were forced to spend the interval between arrest and trial in jail, "are detained only because they cannot pay the bondsman's premium or put up the collateral he asks." The report found that this detainment period often cost the defendant his job, disrupted his family life, reduced his chances for acquittal, diminished his probation chances, and handicapped his quest for equal justice.

The report suggested that, in place of financial bail, a "more rational formula" for pretrial release should be employed which would evaluate a defendant's background "to assess the likelihood of his return." Such alternatives to detainment as release on recognizance, parole in the custody of a third party, probation under an officer's supervision, a refundable cash deposit and daytime release from jail for employment were mentioned. But "pretrial detention for any reason," the report said, "should be accompanied by provisions for effective review, speedy trial, better detention facilities and credit against sentence."

The report also stated that the practice of jailing juveniles, which is designed to "rehabilitate rather than punish," "is in desperate need of overhaul." "In any jurisdiction where children are detained before trial, for long periods, without hearings, in miserable quarters, or comingled with adults," it added, "the philosophy of the juvenile court system is betrayed."

Other Projects. The American Bar Assn. Feb. 8, 1965, said that it would cooperate with the Office of Economic Opportunity (poverty program) in expanding legal services to the poor. Included in these expanded services were bail projects. New York Supreme Court Judge Bernard Botein Feb. 6 told the National American Bar Assn. President's Conference in New Orleans that the Federal Government was contemplating sending 100 VISTA Workers (Volunteers in Service to America, otherwise known as the "domestic peace corps") to assist communities in launching bail programs for the pretrial release of persons without bond. The American Bar Assn.'s committee on bail was currently carrying on bail studies in 11 major cities.

1964 LEGISLATION

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) May 14, 1964, introduced three bills (S 2838-40) on bail reform and Rep. Thomas L. Ashley (D Ohio) May 26, 1964, introduced companion bills (HR 11382-84) in the House. The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, of which Ervin was chairman, held hearings with the Subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery on the Senate bills Aug. 4-6, 1964, and issued a Committee print in December 1964. The bills were not reported to the full committee.

After summarizing the "most significant opinions" expressed during the hearings in regard to the proposed legislation, the Subcommittee concluded that the existing federal bail system "is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution and in direct conflict with the basic tenets that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty by a court of law, and that justice should be equal and accessible to all." The "inequities and irrationality of our federal bail procedures" primarily lie, the report said, in the fact that the system is based on "financial inducements" to assure the presence of the accused at trial and ignores the character or community ties of the accused. Such procedures, the report said, "inevitably disadvantage persons of limited means."

Ervin and Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), chairman of the Subcommittee on Improvements in Judicial Machinery, in the preface to the Subcommittee's report advocated measures to "minimize the impact of poverty on a person's guilt or innocence" to prevent American justice from becoming "a marketplace commodity available only to the highest bidder." If such efforts were not made, they warned, "poverty would, in effect, become a punishable offense."

1965 Legislation

In 1965 Ervin Jan. 22 introduced three bills (S 646-48) and Ashley Jan. 26 introduced companion bills (HR 3576-78) which incorporated most of the proposals made in the 1964 measures.

Those proposals were:

S 646 (HR 3576) -- Release on personal recognizance of any person charged with a federal crime unless good cause could be shown that he was not qualified. The 1964 bill (S 2838) had been limited to indigents.

S 647 (HR 3577) -- Credit for pretrail confinement for persons convicted of federal crimes. This bill had been S 2839 in 1964, when the Justice Department called it "long overdue."

S 648 (HR 3578) -- Refundable cash deposit for accused persons otherwise eligible for bail who put up a cash deposit equal to 10 percent of their bail. They would receive back 90 percent of the deposit, less fines or court costs. This bill had been S 2840 in 1964.

Ervin and 20 co-sponsors March 4 introduced an omnibus measure (S 1357) drawing together in one bill many of the proposals included in the measures he and Ashley had introduced earlier.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Subcommittees on Constitutional Rights and on Improvements in Judicial Machinery.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 15, 16, and 17 on the Bail Reform Act of 1965 (S 1357).

TESTIMONY -- June 15 -- Deputy Attorney General Ramsey Clark endorsed S 1357 as "fundamental to an enlightened system" of federal bail practice. Clark said the current system had "imposed intolerable injustice, meaningless deprivations of liberty and harmful losses to individuals and society for decades." Statistics pointed to "an appalling picture of pretrial detention which had developed out of a system created to enable pretrial release," Clark said. Furthermore, accused persons "generally" were not prone to flee and money was not usually needed to assure their appearance; however, he said, districts with low release-on-recognizance rates or high rates of detention seemed "to be relying too heavily on money bail." He added that detention could be "drastically" reduced and society "better protected" through "careful individual tailoring of release conditions and techniques to meet the needs of particular cases."

Clark recommended numerous major amendments to S 1357 intended to make the bill "go farther": (1) "spell out" the reliability factors which a judicial officer could consider in predicting whether a defendant was likely or not to flee, including family ties, employment, length of residence in the community, record of convictions and of prior failures to appear at court proceedings; (2) establish a set of priorities for release alternatives, which would "not curtail the discretion of judges, but would express a Congressional policy against unnecessary reliance on monetary bail"; (3) tighten up criminal penalties for flight from trial proceedings and make a defendant's intentional failure to appear for trial "suffice for conviction"; (4) specify that credit given to a defendant for time spent in custody be applied only "in connection with the offense for which he was arrested or for which sentence was imposed," and limit "any detention" of material witnesses. Clark also discussed the possibility of making preventive detention a "complete substitute" for the money-based bail system but concluded that legislative authorization of preventive detention "at this time, seems unwarranted." (Preventive detention could apply to a suspect believed to be dangerous and predisposed to committing further crime, or to fleeing prosecution, were he released.)

Ronald Goldfarb, former special attorney in the Justice Department and author of a forthcoming book, "Ransom -- Critique of the Bail System," called the current American bail system a "scandal...run predominantly by the bail-bond business, one which compromises and prostitutes the administration of justice...."

Bail Bondsman Criticizes Bill

A professional bail bondsman of Lexington, Ky., Carroll Stewart, criticized the premises of S 1357. "It is contrary to the nature of the average defendant to reappear for trial when he knows that by doing so he may be jeopardizing his own liberty," Stewart said. He contended the proposals for pretrial release were based on who was a "good risk" or a "bad risk," and that a professional bondsman was "better qualified" than the courts to determine a good or bad risk. "Our aptitude is proven by the fact that our percentage of 'skips' is far less than all other plans encompassing the release of all persons, regardless of the magnitude of the crime," Stewart argued.

June 16 -- Jack T. Conway, deputy director of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), said current bail practices contributed to "the hostility, fear, and resentment with which the poor view the law," were economically harmful to the individual and to the nation and were "symbolic and symptomatic of the condition of the poor in our society," i.e., their helplessness and powerlessness. Conway said the OEO supported S 1357 as "an essential part of the entire antipoverty effort."

Lawrence Speiser, director of the Washington office of the American Civil Liberties Union, and Carl Rachlin, general counsel of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), endorsed S 1357.

June 17 -- J. Braxton Craven Jr., chief judge of the U.S. District Court of Morganton, N.C., supported S 1357 and said the likelihood of a defendant's voluntary appearance was "in inverse proportion to the magnitude of the bond. This is generally recognized in capital cases.... Depositing money or a justified bond simply will not insure the presence of the defendant. More often than otherwise, it isn't his money, and it is his freedom."

James V. Bennett, former director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, stated that aside from "humanitarian considerations, there are also economic reasons for minimizing the use of pretrial detention. For the current fiscal year the Federal Government will spend about $4.5 million in reimbursing county jails for the detention of federal prisoners."

Judge William F. Smith, chairman of the Judicial Conference Committee on the Administration of Criminal Law, and David J. McCarthy, director of the District of Columbia Bail Project endorsed S 1357 but recommended amendments which would primarily provide for extensive procedural safeguards and more judicial discretion.

Bill Reported

ACTION -- The Judiciary Committee Sept. 16 reported the bill (S Rept 750) with an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Ervin. The substitute was principally one of form and did not amount to a "departure from the main purpose and thrust of the original bill," according to the report.

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate Sept. 21 passed by voice vote S 1357 as reported by the Judiciary Committee. There was only brief discussion of, and no opposition to the bill.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1357:

Provided that any person charged with a noncapital federal crime, on appearance before a judicial officer, would be released on personal recognizance or unsecured bond unless determined to be unlikely to appear for trial. In that event, authorized the following conditional forms of release: under supervision of another person or a probation officer, on travel or living restrictions, during daytime only, on deposit of 10 percent of bond, on bail bond or on any other reasonable conditions.

Provided that review by the judicial officer of these conditions would be available within 24 hours for any one still detained in custody. Specified that any person still detained after this review would have prompt review by a federal court, and its finding would be subject to prompt appeal to the proper appellate court.

Provided that in capital offenses or between conviction and appeal in other offenses, a person would be treated according to the provisions above, unless he was determined to be a risk to the community or was likely to flee.

Entitled material witnesses to benefits of the provisions above, but permitted detention for the taking of depositions.

Provided that a person charged with a felony willfully failing to appear would be fined up to $5,000 or imprisoned for five years or both; if charged with a misdemeanor, fined up to the maximum for that offense or imprisoned for one year or both; if a material witness, fined up to $1,000 or imprisoned for one year or both.

Required jail sentences to run from the time of detention, and required credit toward fines to be figured at the minimum federal hourly wage times eight hours per day of detention, unless the judge took into account pretrial confinement in sentencing.

HEARINGS HELD ON ADMINISTRATION GUN CONTROL BILL

Lengthy hearings were held in Congress in 1965 on Administration-sponsored legislation to control the sale of mail-order weapons, but no bills were reported out of committee and Congress took no action on the issue.

Strong pressures against the legislation were generated by the membership of the National Rifle Assn. (723,000 members at year's end), other sports shooting and outdoor organizations, and gun importers.

Support for passage of a firearms control bill, on the other hand, was less unified. Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), who had advocated such legislation for years, continued to prompt interest in its passage, but no sufficiently large and solid block of support for a law developed.

The basic argument for the legislation centered on the ease with which known criminals, psychopaths and youths could obtain weapons -- from small concealable arms to anti-tank cannons. The availability of these weapons to criminals or otherwise unstable elements of society, it was argued, contributed materially to the national crime rate.

Opponents argued that the criminal or the psychopath, and not the weapon, should be the target of legislation. They analogized firearms control legislation to prohibiting the ownership of automobiles in order to cut down on the number of highway deaths. Further, they argued that the proposed legislation would have little effect on the crime rate, as weapons of some sort always could be made or obtained, and contended that the legislation in any case would violate the constitutional guarantee that a citizen could possess firearms for his own security. The legislation would affect legitimate sportsmen and hunters more than it would criminals, it was said.

Background

The Senate Commerce Committee held hearings in late 1963 and in 1964 on firearms controls, but failed to report a bill. The hearings grew out of a study by the Senate Judiciary Committee's Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee, headed by Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), which showed that existing federal laws did not restrain mail-order gun sales to juveniles and to felons, narcotic addicts and other "undesirables." But the hearings were given their impetus by the assassination of President Kennedy on Nov. 22, 1963, with a mail-order rifle. Gun-owners put pressure on Congress to stop the legislation. Although the top officials of the National Rifle Assn. said they supported Dodd's bill (S 1975), a large segment of NRA membership was active in the pressure campaigns against controls. (1964 Almanac p. 270)

The principal bills considered by the Committee in 1964 were S 1975, by Dodd, and S 2345, by Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.). S 1975 was originally designed to restrict mail-order sales of hand guns, but following the Kennedy assassination it was broadened to cover rifles and shotguns. It prohibited interstate firearms sales to persons under 18 or to persons convicted of a crime punishable by more than a year in jail and required a person (other than a licensed dealer) wishing to purchase a gun in interstate commerce to provide a sworn affidavit that he was not violating federal, state or local law in receiving the weapon. The affidavit was required to list the principal local law enforcement officer, and the dealer was obliged to provide this officer with a copy of the affidavit and a description of the weapon, including serial number. S 2345 required that a person wishing to purchase a weapon in interstate commerce supply a written certificate executed by a local law enforcement official, stating the purpose of the purchase and the criminal record and "mental competence and stability" of the purchaser. The dealer would have to keep this certificate on record for 10 years, available to law enforcement officials.

Both bills would have broadened federal firearms controls, embodied in the 1934 National Firearms Act and the 1938 Federal Firearms Act, which were designed to regulate firearms transported in interstate and foreign commerce and to assist in enforcing state firearms regulations which were being circumvented through interstate commerce. The 1934 Act sought to restrict possession and traffic in machine guns, sawed-off shotguns and other gangster weapons by imposing stiff taxes on the importation, manufacture and transfer of such weapons and by requiring manufacturers, dealers and importers of such weapons to register with the Secretary of the Treasury. The 1938 Act and its amendments required a license from the Secretary of the Treasury to ship arms and most types of ammunition in interstate commerce and sought to deny criminals lawful access to weapons by making it illegal for a person under indictment or convicted of a felony punishable by more than a year in prison or a fugitive from justice to buy such a weapon in interstate commerce.

The 1938 Act did not deter criminals from obtaining mail-order weapons by falsifying statements to a dealer or manufacturer that they had never been convicted of a crime. Dodd's Subcommittee established that firearms dealers had evaded the federal law's prohibition against delivering weapons via the mail by shipping the mail-order firearms via common carrier c.o.d. to a prospective purchaser, and that juveniles and criminals had access to these mail-order firearms because there was no federal requirement that common carriers notify local authorities to determine the legitimacy of the purchaser.

Though strongly opposed by gun clubs, S 1975 was considered mild by many observers, especially law enforcement officials.

1965 LEGISLATION

Dodd Jan. 6 introduced a bill (S 14) identical to the revised version of S 1975. On Feb. 18 he introduced a new bill (S 1180) to restrict importation of military surplus weapons and heavy ordnance weapons. Unless it were passed, Dodd said, "an influx into the United States of assorted machine guns, mortars, bazookas, antitank guns, cannons and flame throwers, will continue unabated and we will see increasing acts of violence throughout the land."

On March 8, President Johnson told Congress, in a message on crime, that "the ease with which any person can acquire firearms" was a "significant factor" in the rise of violent crime in the United States. Mr. Johnson proposed legislation to prohibit interstate shipment of arms except by dealers licensed by the Treasury, thus halting mail-order sales, to curb imports of surplus military weapons, to place stricter curbs on gun sales by retail dealers and to raise licensing fees. He called the proposed laws "a sensible use of federal authority to assist local authorities in coping with an undeniable menace to law and order and to the lives of innocent people."

Dodd March 22 introduced the President's bill (S 1592), which amended the 1938 Federal Firearms Act. Unlike the earlier gun bills, the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, not the Commerce Committee. At the same time, Dodd introduced a bill (S 1591) to amend the 1934 National Firearms Act to make dealers, manufacturers or importers of "destructive weapons" (bombs, grenades, rockets, bazookas, etc.) subject to the registration provisions and taxes applied to persons dealing in or making gangster-type weapons (machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, etc.). The bill also doubled the tax rates provided in the 1934 Act. It was referred to the Finance Committee. Rep. John M. Murphy (D N.Y.) March 23 introduced a similar bill (HR 6628) in the House.

On introducing S 1592, Dodd and Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, said the bill would first go to Judiciary because of the questions raised by the bill involving the Constitution's guarantee of the right to bear arms. Magnuson said the Commerce Committee would get the bill when Judiciary finished with it.

In a March 22 speech, Dodd charged that opponents of firearms controls comprised "one of the most formidable and effective lobbies in legislative history." He said his efforts had been defeated by "the blind, almost mindless, efforts of a segment of the gun enthusiasts, with their shabby, time-worn slogans."

Dodd said that 5,000 people were murdered in 1963 with firearms. Of these, 1,400 were killed with rifles and shotguns. Also of these, 2,500 were killed with mail-order weapons. According to Dodd, during 1963 and 1964, almost 2.5 million weapons were imported into the United States and, when channeled through mail orders, made the task of local authorities "insuperable." Dodd said the homicide rate by firearms was "substantially higher" in areas where firearms regulations were "lax": 72 percent in Dallas, Texas, and 65.9 percent in Phoenix, Ariz., in 1963, compared to 25 percent for New York City, which had strict laws.

NRA Letter. The National Rifle Assn. April 9 sent a letter to its members urging them to write their Congressmen to oppose S 1592. The letter said the bill could lead to elimination of "the private ownership of all guns" and would give the Secretary of the Treasury "unlimited power to surround all sales of guns by dealers with arbitrary and burdensome regulations." The letter warned NRA members that "if the battle is lost, it will be your loss, and that of all who follow."

Hickenlooper Bill. Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa), a member of the NRA, May 13 introduced a bill (S 1965) in the Senate comparable in effect to Dodd's original 1963 bill. The bill would prohibit interstate shipment to individuals of handguns, but not rifles or shotguns, and would require a shipper to send a description of the firearm to the principal law enforcement official in the recipient's locality. Hickenlooper May 13 said the Administration proposals would "relegate to a subsidiary position the right of the reputable citizen to own and use firearms...for...defense, marksmanship training and sport."

Heavy Lobbying Campaign

While a number of organizations gave their support to firearms control legislation, strong pressures developed against it. In a Senate speech Oct. 15, Dodd called the opposition to the legislation "an intensive, well-financed and powerful lobby working night and day to see that it is never adopted." He said this lobby "distorted the facts, confused the issue, in some cases lied outright" and represented "only a small minority of the American people."

In addition to the concern of NRA members over the legislation, pressures developed within the firearms industry. Gun importers saw in some of the proposed provisions a veiled attack on their business and charged that the legislation was supported by the domestic gun industry, much of which was located in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

A major importer, International Armament Corp. (Interarmco) of Alexandria, Va., June 21 registered as a lobbyist and employed William Neale Roach of Washington, D.C., as another registrant. Neale Roach Associates June 16 employed A. Z. Snows, also of Washington, D.C., as a registrant for the same purposes, which were given as opposition to the Senate bills as written but support for some provisions.

An Interarmco spokesman Dec. 12 said the firm also opposed legislation to place prohibitively high duties on imported guns. Such legislation was proposed in two bills to amend the Antidumping Act of 1921: these were S 1448, introduced March 8 by Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and co-sponsored by Dodd, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.) and Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), and HR 5563, an identical bill, introduced in the House March 1 by Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.). No hearings were held on these bills, which were referred to the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees, respectively.

Domestic gun manufacturers also employed professional lobbyists. Four manufacturers, Savage Arms of Westfield, Mass., Redfield Gun Sight Co. of Denver, Colo., O. F. Mossberg & Sons Inc. of New Haven, Conn., and High Standard Corp. of Hammond, Conn., were listed as employers on lobby registrations filed July 7 by Burr P. Harrison of Winchester, Va., a former U.S. Representative (D Va. 1946-63), and Clinton M. Hester of Washington, D.C. Both registered as against S 1591 and S 1592, the Administration bill, and for S 14 with amendments. Harrison's annual compensation was listed at $4,000 plus per diem pay and Hester's was listed at $10,000.

Dodd identified further opposition in an article published in the March issue of Ladies Home Journal and reprinted March 16 in the Congressional Record. He said opponents included "a sizable number of the estimated 20,000,000 hunters and trapshooters" in the nation, the "Minutemen, an anti-Communist guerrilla organization, claiming 25,000 members," gun industry publications, sportsmen and gun enthusiasts, "a number of wildlife groups that are linked in one way or another with the gun industry," "politically influential sportsmen," "decent people who are misled and misinformed" and "crackpots and vigilantes."

The American Legion, meeting for its annual convention Aug. 24-26 in Portland, Ore., opposed legislation "that would require federal registration or control of firearms," but urged adoption of the practice of obtaining a permit from local law enforcement officials in order to purchase a concealable firearm.

Support for firearms control came from the American Bar Assn. at its annual meeting in Miami Beach, Fla. on Aug. 9-13 when it urged passage of the Administration bill. The International Assn. of Chiefs of Police Oct. 7, at their annual convention in Miami, Fla., also endorsed S 1592.

Senate Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Special Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency.

HELD HEARINGS -- May 19-21, June 2-4, 8-11, 24, 25 and 30 and July 20 and 27, 1965, on the Administration bill (S 1592) amending the Federal Firearms Act of 1938 to prohibit interstate shipment of firearms to individuals, increase fees for manufacturing and selling firearms and ammunition and curb importation of surplus military weapons into the United States.

TESTIMONY -- May 19 -- Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach "sought to make it plain" that S 1592 "applies only to the sale and distribution of firearms; their use would remain a question for state and local law." Katzenbach denounced as "preposterous," "misleading" and "inconceivable" the NRA's arguments against the legislation. He also rejected charges that the bill violated the Commerce Clause and the 2nd Amendment of the Constitution (guaranteeing the right "to keep and bear arms"). He asked: "Which is more significant, the right not to be slightly inconvenienced in the purchase of a firearm, or the right not to be terrorized, robbed, wounded, or killed?" The ability to get guns through mail order "just for the heck of it makes murder easy," Katzenbach said, and added that 27 percent of bank robberies were currently committed by "amateur felons."

Secretary of the Treasury Henry H. Fowler said his Department's experience with the existing Federal Firearms Act "has resulted in a feeling of frustration since the controls provided by it are so obviously inadequate." Fowler also referred to the NRA letter as a "widely publicized misconception" that the bill would make it difficult to obtain guns for legitimate sporting purposes. "This is absolutely not so," he said, and suggested sportsmen would only be inconvenienced by not being able to go to another state to buy a pistol or to receive a shipment of firearms from another state.

Sheldon S. Cohen, Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service, agreed with Fowler and said "clearly the bill would not destroy our skeet and target clubs etc., as has been asserted in correspondence." He added that "to anyone who...follows in the daily press the tragic stories on the misuse of firearms by juveniles, it must be apparent this problem has reached alarming proportions."

Secretary of the Army Stephen Ailes said, "No function of the Defense Department will be impaired by enactment of this legislation." Under questioning by Dodd, Ailes said the Army had ordered a study of its program, under the National Board to Promote Rifle Practice, of assisting civilian marksmanship clubs by lending or selling them guns and providing free ammunition. Ailes said, "It is quite conceivable that we don't need the program any more."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said the Subcommittee should consider "the danger of arms in the hands of extremists" such as the Minutemen and "other private armies" who "think they should protect the United States against itself."

Sen. Dodd referred to a Treasury Department investigation of gun dealers in Maryland, where there was no waiting time required to deliver a gun over the counter. Dodd said the records of Apple Hardware in Chillum, Md., showed that 58 percent of sales during 1964 and early 1965 were to District of Columbia residents, 40 percent of whom had criminal records. "Every citizen of the District should be worried and appalled," Dodd said, "at the ease with which a felon or habitual misdemeanant can take a short bus ride and purchase a deadly weapon."

May 20 -- Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.), a cosponsor of S 1592, said, "For too long we dealt with these deadly weapons as if they were harmless toys. Yet their very presence, the ease of their acquisition and the familiarity of their appearance have led to thousands of deaths each year. With the passage of this bill we will begin to meet our responsibilities. It would save hundreds of thousands of lives in this country and spare thousands of families...grief and heartache...." Kennedy urged the Subcommittee to consider ways of "curtailing and eliminating" the "private arsenals of secret groups" such as the Ku Klux Klan, the Black Muslims and the Minutemen. Kennedy also denounced what he called a "massive publicity campaign" against the bill, which, he said, was doing the nation a "great disservice."

California Attorney General Thomas C. Lynch agreed that private arsenals should be curtailed and said, "We cannot stop people from preaching hate, but we can prevent them from arming their hate." Lynch urged strict licensing requirements for gun dealers which would prevent leaders of "private armies" from setting themselves up as gun dealers in order to arm their units. Lynch also read from a catalogue advertising a 60-mm. mortar as "an ideal item for your den or front lawn...this is the perfect tool for getting even with those neighbors you don't like. Perfect for demolishing houses or for backyard plinking on Sunday afternoons."

The first opponent to the bill was Harry R. Woodward, director of the Colorado Game, Fish and Parks Department. Woodward said he opposed the bill because it would "restrict a non-resident hunter's ability to bring firearms into Colorado with which to hunt" and would thereby deal "a body-blow to this department's self-financing ability."

Dodd denied the bill would affect the interests of a legitimate hunter and said, "It shocks me that the Colorado Commissioner of Parks would fall for this kind of propaganda."

Robert N. Margrave, director of the State Department's Office of Munitions Control, which restricts imports of Soviet bloc weapons, supported the bill. Dodd said it would transfer control of such imports to the Treasury Department.

May 21 -- Sen. Gordon Allott (R Colo.) opposed the bill on the grounds that it "rejects self defense as a legitimate use" of firearms by making it "impossible" for the ordinary citizen to buy a pistol. Allott also said the bill would be a "real imposition" on citizens in remote areas, who cross state lines to do their shopping, including to buy guns, and that the high cost of license fees would "stamp out" guns and ammunition stocks in small stores, thereby leading to a "further concentration" of the gun industry in metropolitan areas. Allott criticized the "unnecessarily broad grant of discretion" to the Secretary of the Treasury in issuing licenses "which would preclude any reasonable hope of reversing the Secretary's decision." Allott also indicated there were "many types" of surplus military weapons suitable for sporting purposes, the importation of which would not be allowed under the bill. Allott said the bill might apply unfairly to gun collectors because most old guns fell into the category of "destructive devices."

Harmon C. Leonard, president of the American Society of Arms Collectors, opposed the bill largely on the grounds that it would hinder antique collectors in efforts to trade and buy guns from persons in other states.

National Rifle Assn. Testimony

NRA executive vice president Franklin L. Orth said S 1592 was "highly restrictive legislation" and was "unsound and premature." Orth told the Subcommittee the NRA would support legislation which would reduce criminal use of firearms, but he said "the NRA stands squarely on the premise that the ownership of firearms must not be denied American citizens of good repute so long as they use them for lawful purposes." Orth contended the bill would give the Secretary of the Treasury such broad regulatory powers that the Secretary's interpretation of the bill could restrict legitimate gun users. Orth also objected to the ban on interstate gun commerce except among licensed persons and objected to the proposed increase in license fees, which he called "completely unreasonable and set at such an exorbitant rate as to discourage the purchase (of licenses) rather than regulate a legitimate commercial activity."

Dodd told Orth that portions of the NRA's April 9 letter to members asking them to oppose S 1592 were "simply...not true." He said that "many major difficulties" had been caused by the NRA letter, adding, "It seems to me your organization is doing what I would consider lobbying against this bill." Orth said the errors in interpreting the bill had not been intentional, but Dodd replied, "I don't think it was a mistake. Your readers apparently got an impression the writer intended."

Sen. Paul J. Fannin (R Ariz.) argued that the Administration bill "would not prevent the determined criminal from obtaining firearms; instead it would impose severe penalties on millions of honest, law-abiding citizens."

June 2 -- Dodd said an agent hired by the Subcommittee had infiltrated the Minutemen, an organization whose purpose, he said, was "to develop a vast underground guerrilla army." The agent had received training in weaponry and had recently purchased a Russian-made mortar, a Finnish mortar, a bazooka, a rifle with grenade launcher, rifle grenades and mortar and bazooka ammunition, with no questions asked. "I cite this case...to indicate the ease with which anyone in this country...can purchase weapons which were designed for the mass destruction of human beings," Dodd said.

Dodd said he would support amendments to S 1592 to avoid hardships to antique gun collectors and persons living in isolated rural areas.

Howard Carter Jr., representing the National Shooting Sports Foundation, Inc., said he feared the legislation would be the first step toward complete gun registration in the United States and that it placed "too many restrictions on the responsible sportsman." Dodd said the Foundation had sent "misstatements" and "false statements" to gun dealers about what the Administration bill proposed. (The Foundation's membership included 87 companies that manufactured hunting and shooting equipment, as well as publishers of sporting publications).

C. R. Guttermuth, representing the Wildlife Management Institute, said "the certain inconvenience" of the bill "far outweighs its scant promise of effectiveness."

State Officials Support Bill

John B. Layton, District of Columbia Chief of Police, cited cases in which crimes were committed in the District with guns purchased in other states. Layton said the proposed legislation would have a "wholesome and beneficial effect in the District of Columbia."

June 3 -- New Jersey Attorney General Arthur J. Sills said the nation deserved to "inherit the legacy of a Lee Harvey Oswald" if the assassination of President Kennedy did not lead to tighter controls on firearms. Sills added there was danger that Americans "may become the unfortunate victims of the outlandish campaign against this legislation, which seems to thrive on misinformation and ignorance." Sills cited cases in which persons with criminal records in New Jersey had bought weapons over the counter in Maryland.

Richard R. Caples, Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety, testified that "many legitimate sports and shooting enthusiasts have blindly provided the unscrupulous gun merchants with a protective cover of inadequate and weak laws." Caples added, "Something must be done to stop the irresponsible conduct on the part of a few so-called American businessmen, who are nothing more than parasites reaping their material harvest, with misery and death as by-products." Caples stated that six out of the last seven Massachusetts police killed or wounded by criminals were shot with guns procured from out of state.

Testifying against the Administration bill, Rep. John D. Dingell (D Mich.) said attention should be focused on the criminal, not the gun. Dingell showed the Subcommittee some homemade zip guns, brass knuckles and other weapons confiscated from juveniles recently by the police, and said neither the Administration bill nor any other bill would be capable of stopping traffic in these weapons.

Rep. John P. Saylor (R Pa.) criticized the arrangement District of Columbia police had with the Railway Express Agency whereby the agency did not deliver hand guns until police had investigated the purchaser.

June 8 -- Two members of the Maryland General Assembly testified they had received death threats and abusive telephone calls because of their support for proposed state control over gun sales. Leonard S. Blondes accused the National Rifle Assn. (NRA) of being responsible for the campaign of vilification by taking "words out of context." Angelo F. Palmisano said he had received mail and calls from gun club members threatening his life and questioning his patriotism, parenthood and religion. "Individuals who engage in this sort of vitriolic and scurrilous attack are the very ones against whom the American public must be protected by effective gun legislation," Palmisano said.

Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) criticized an NRA bulletin, which, he said, had encouraged a "campaign" against Maryland legislation to control pistol sales.

Hilliard Comstock, former president of the NRA, said, "All this pressure does not come from the NRA by any means." Comstock said other groups, including the Boy Scouts of America and the American Legion, opposed the Administration bill. When Dodd questioned Comstock's statement, Comstock said he had no official proof to support it. Dodd replied, "Your testimony is worthless."

HEARINGS RESUME

June 24 -- James V. Bennett, former director of federal prisons, commented on the May 21 testimony by Franklin L. Orth of the NRA that he had no intention of misleading NRA members about the purpose of S 1592. Bennett asked, "How can he come here with a straight face and try to disclaim this as unintentional, or weasel out of it on the grounds that the statement was prepared by a committee on which there were lawyers?" Bennett said Orth's statement was "sheer hypocrisy."

Douglas R. Hellstrom, executive vice president of Smith and Wesson Inc., gun manufacturers, endorsed new laws "to stamp out the troublemakers and pulp magazine gun runners." Hellstrom stated that failure to pass an "effective" gun control bill would result in "ill effect" on the entire legitimate gun industry. Hellstrom recommended changes in the language of S 1592 to make the bill more understandable to the average person.

Edward P. Nolan, sales manager of Sturm, Ruger and Co. Inc., said his firm was opposed to parts of S 1592. He said it was "wrong and pointless" to include in the bill a prohibition of over-the-counter sales of pistols and revolvers to non-residents of a state. The prohibition, Nolan said, would be a "severe blow" to target shooters. Nolan also suggested a tariff system instead of an outright ban on imports of surplus military weapons.

However, the bill's sponsor, Dodd, and Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.), a target shooter, told Nolan that the over-the-counter sales restriction proposed in S 1592 would not handicap the legitimate target shooter who could arrange to purchase the guns from his own gun dealer. Both Nolan and Hellstrom agreed that the proposed legislation would have practically no effect on sales of their products. Neither firm represented by the two men dealt in the mail-order gun sales which would be prohibited under S 1592.

H. T. Jenkins, Atlanta police chief, endorsed S 1592. He said that racial unrest in the South in recent years had caused an upsurge in the purchase of firearms by both Negroes and whites.

June 30 -- Frank Foote, a section chief of the Nebraska Game, Forestation and Parks Commission, opposed any new gun controls as proposed in S 1592 and suggested instead "enforcement of present laws to the greatest possible extent." Foote said current federal gun control laws had not been enforced in Nebraska and that he knew of no prosecution in cases where persons were arrested for carrying sawed-off shotguns, a violation of existing law. Foote added he knew of cases in which the federal enforcement official in Nebraska presented the United States attorney with well-documented cases against persons who had violated federal law by transporting pistols across the state lines. "The U.S. attorney failed to prosecute these cases," Foote said.

St. Louis police chief Curtis Brostron supported the proposed legislation and stated, "The ease with which guns can be obtained increases crime and the danger to police officers doing their duty." During the year ending May 31, 1965, Broston said, St. Louis police arrested 657 persons for carrying concealed weapons. But he said the individual arrested was "more often than not, free to go right back out and obtain another gun with which to commit a crime."

July 1 -- Sen. Dodd accused Thomas J. Siatos, editor and publisher of Guns and Ammo, a sportsman's magazine, of printing "malicious falsehoods" about the proposed bill. Dodd called Siatos "the most violent opponent of this legislation that I know of.... Your magazine is by far the most violent in its attacks on me, and that's saying something." Dodd added that Siatos was "guilty of gross misrepresentations" and cited an article in the July issue of Guns and Ammo opposing S 1592 which, Dodd said, was "almost 100 percent in error" and "about as wilful a misrepresentation of this bill as I have read or heard about." Dodd also said Siatos was the first witness the Subcommittee had to subpena for the hearings. Siatos answered that he had canceled his earlier request to testify on the advice of his lawyer who felt the testimony would be redundant and would merely repeat what had already been said by the NRA and others.

Robert T. Dennis, representing the Izaak Walton League of America, opposed S 1592 as too restrictive.

Hardy Richbeil, representing the National Retail Hardware Assn., said hardware dealers were "alarmed... at the impact...that bill would have on hardware stores handling guns and ammunition." He recommended reducing the bill's proposed $100 license fee for gun dealers to $10 or less. Richbeil said hardware dealers generally favored the bill's objective of reducing criminal use of guns.

House Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 12-14, 19-23, and 26-28, 1965, on the Administration bill (HR 6628) introduced by Rep. John M. Murphy (D N.Y.) which was identical to S 1592. A total of 53 witnesses appeared.

TESTIMONY -- July 13 -- Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach supported HR 6628 and said a "major source of needless contention" had resulted from confusion and "deliberate misrepresentation" of the bill's provisions. Katzenbach stressed that the bill had "virtually nothing to do with the sportsman" but rather that it attempted to close the "gaps between state and federal laws" which allowed the "unmistakable invitation to abuse" of firearms by criminals and juveniles. Katzenbach criticized the National Rifle Assn. (NRA), which had consistently opposed the Administration bill, for not accepting the "common sense" conclusion that the "availability of firearms is a factor in the crime rate." Katzenbach said the Justice Department would agree with an amendment to the bill to exempt dealers trading only in ammunition from licensing and fees and to reduce the fee for dealers trading only in rifles and shotguns to "substantially less" than the $100 proposed in HR 6628. The Department also would be willing, he said, to add amendments providing for formal notice and hearing procedures in connection with the proposed supervision by the Treasury Secretary over who should be licensed to manufacture, import or deal in deadly weapons.

Joseph W. Barr, Under Secretary of the Treasury, and Sheldon S. Cohen, Internal Revenue Commissioner, supported HR 6628. Cohen recommended amending HR 6628 to: exclude from the definition of "firearm" (therefore from the provisions of the bill) bona fide antiques and replicas; exempt all ammunition, except ammunition for destructive devices, from the bill's provisions; modify dealers' license fees; and provide for hearing procedures in issuing regulations, similar to those under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act.

The bill was opposed by Ronald T. Speers, Commissioner of the Maine Department of Inland Fisheries and Game. Speers stated he objected "strenuously" to all regulations "to restrict or control the private ownership of guns." The bill, he contended, would have a "tremendously adverse effect" on Maine's economy "by the eventual decrease in number of sportsmen who would continue to own guns, and hunt in Maine."

July 16 -- Representatives of the Camp Fire Club of America opposed the bill on the grounds that the seven states composing the Atlantic Flyway of migratory waterfowl were opposed to the bill, that the bill did not make clear what activities involving firearms were lawful, and that the Secretary of the Treasury would have overly "broad and sweeping powers."

NRA Favors Handgun Bill

July 19 -- Franklin L. Orth, executive vice president of the National Rifle Assn., opposed the Administration bill as "wholly unacceptable to the sportsmen of this country." Orth said the bill, "by attempting to regulate all firearms, relates the law-abiding sportsman...with criminals and delinquents and this cannot be made acceptable." Orth urged enactment of HR 7472, introduced in the House April 14 by Rep. Cecil R. King (D Calif.), because, Orth said, the bill retained exceptions in existing law for shipment of firearms and ammunition to institutions, organizations and people authorized by the Army Department to receive the equipment as part of the civilian marksmanship program. (The marksmanship program was administered by the Army's National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.) Orth stressed that control of crime should relate to the criminal and not to the firearm. (HR 7472 would prohibit interstate shipment to individuals of handguns, but not other firearms. The bill was similar to S 1965, introduced by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa).

Thomas L. Kimball, executive director of the National Wildlife Federation, called the Administration bill a "first, but significant, step" towards making firearms "completely unavailable to the general public." Kimball objected to placing shotguns and rifles in the same category as concealable weapons or handguns, which he contended were the type of firearms primarily involved in homicide cases. Kimball urged "penalizing the criminal rather than looking for scapegoats in the tools of their trade."

July 21 -- Rep. Bob Casey (D Texas) stated that "all" of the bills pending before the Committee would "do little ...toward curbing the illegal use of firearms." Casey recommended "stiff penalties" for the criminal abuse of firearms, rather than the "outlandish fees" proposed in HR 6628 which, he said, would be "tantamount" to putting the small gun businessman out of business. (Casey was sponsor of HR 5642, a bill to set a 25-year mandatory federal penalty for using or possessing a firearm carried across state lines to commit a crime of violence.)

July 22 -- La Dow Johnston, president of the Ohio Gun Collector's Assn., described the Administration proposals as going "far beyond" the scope of crime control. The "fundamental tenor of these bills," he said, "is severe and unwarranted control" which bordered on hysteria and cast a "pall of suspicion on the countless thousands of hunters, sportsmen and collectors of guns who use guns properly."

July 23 -- Deputy Commissioner of the New York Police Department Leonard E. Reisman supported HR 6628 as being in the interest of law and social order and of help to New York in its war on crime. Reisman conceded that while the "die-hard criminal" could find a way of obtaining a weapon regardless of restrictions, the removal of the currently easy methods to circumvent state laws "will result in an appreciable decrease in the number of crimes perpetrated with firearms." Reisman suggested amending HR 6628 to cover "instruments" such as starter pistols, which were not designed as weapons but could be used as such, and adding a requirement of fingerprinting and investigation of applicants for gun dealers' licenses.

July 26 -- The Administration bill was strongly opposed by Woodson D. Scott, a target shooter and instructor, who called the bill an "oppressive anti-gun bill ...so drastic" that it would "virtually prohibit the private ownership and use of firearms in the United States." Scott said he supported legislation to regulate mail-order hand gun sales, to outlaw destructive devices and to impose heavy penalties for the misuse of firearms. He contended that HR 6628 would require the registration of firearms, which he said would be an "intolerable burden" to the average person.

Representing the North Carolina Rifle and Pistol Assn., a sporting and competitive marksmanship group, Arthur S. Beckham said a better and far simpler method of correcting firearms abuse would be for each state to enact legislation patterned after North Carolina law. Under North Carolina law, anyone purchasing a hand gun or wishing to order a rifle through the mail or by express carrier was required to obtain a permit from an official of the resident's own county. Beckman insisted that strict state regulations and qualifications for gun ownership would make federal legislation "absolutely unnecessary," and would not handicap small gunsmiths, reloaders and civilian marksmen but would "unquestionably" hamper crooks, criminals and the mentally unbalanced.

July 27 -- Robert P. Beamer, representing the National Retail Hardware Assn., opposed raising the current nominal dealers' license fee of $1. Beamer said any increase in the fee could eliminate or unreasonably burden the small gun dealer, encourage black market activities which would make guns available to the criminal element, and deprive rural communities of obtaining guns at local hardware stores which could not afford to pay an increased license fee. Beamer said a fee "does not determine the fitness of the dealer to handle firearms" and "has no clear relation to crime prevention."

Maj. Adolph Jacobsmeyer of the St. Louis, Missouri, police department, said it was time "responsible legislators...(did) everything in their power to provide police officers with the legal tools to make the job of the police officer more effective." He supported the Administration bill.

July 28 -- W.B. Hicks Jr., executive secretary of the Liberty Lobby, opposed HR 6628 because, he said, it attacked the symptom, not the cause, of crime, attempted too much and relieved the states of too much responsibility in regulating firearms. Hicks insisted that the federal courts were responsible for the Government's "failure" to protect its citizens from violence. "Is it any wonder that persons with criminal records of 10, 20, even 70 convictions go out and buy guns?" Hicks asked, adding, "The real wonder is that such persons are free to walk on the streets."

The Ways and Means Committee took no action on pending bills before the session adjourned.

FEDERAL JUDGESHIPS

Congress in 1965 took partial action on a bill (S 1666) to establish 44 new federal judgeships to alleviate crowded dockets in a number of federal district courts and circuit courts of appeals. The bill was passed by voice vote of the Senate June 30 but bogged down in the House Judiciary Committee.

S 1666 was introduced April 1 by Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) at the request of the Judicial Conference of the United States, the governing body of the federal judiciary, which makes judgeship recommendations to Congress every four years. The Conference urged establishment of 42 new judgeships (7 circuit and 35 district court).

The Senate Judiciary Committee omitted five of the district judgeships recommended by the Conference and added one that was not recommended. On the Senate floor, three of the district judgeships were reinstated and three additional circuit court judgeships were approved. As sent to the House, S 1666 established 34 district court and 10 new circuit court judgeships; four of the circuit and five of the district court posts were to be temporary.

Background

REFERENCE -- Congress Creates 73 New Judgeships (1961 Almanac p. 372).

No federal judgeships had been established since the Omnibus Judgeship Act of 1961, which created 10 new circuit court and 63 new district court judgeships. From 1961 to 1965, the number of district judgeships fell from 304 to 302 because of the expiration of two temporary judgeships.

Meanwhile, the caseload increased. The Senate Committee's report on S 1666 (S Rept 303) said that from fiscal 1960 to fiscal 1964, the caseload in courts of appeals rose 50 percent (from 3,899 to 6,023) and the caseload rose 13 percent in civil cases filed in district courts (from 59,284 to 66,930). Some districts were particularly hard hit, as was the Southern district of Alabama, which experienced a 20-percent rise in its caseload, largely from commercial litigation and marine personal injury suits generated by the growth of Mobile as a major port.

The Judicial Conference in March recommended 42 new judgeships -- 7 in circuit courts and 35 in district courts. Four of the circuit appointments were to be temporary additions to the 5th circuit, where an unusually heavy load of civil rights appeals had overburdened the court.

Senate

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported S 1666, with amendments, June 9. The report said the Judicial Conference study of docket conditions and workload showed that "certain courts are overwhelmed by the volume of their business." The report termed the need for additional judgeships "urgent."

The Committee amended the bill by deleting three temporary district judges for Eastern Pennsylvania, a temporary district judge for Alaska and a new permanent district judge for Southern Georgia. It added a new district judgeship for Southern Mississippi.

Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.), a member of the Committee, had requested the amendment deleting the Pennsylvania judgeships and the Georgia Senators had requested deletion of the judge for their state. The change for Alaska was made because the current judge was about to retire.

FLOOR ACTION

On the floor June 30, Scott said he had not been consulted about the need for the judgeships. Declaring his interest in the "bipartisan" administration of justice, Scott said that since 1961 all 14 federal judges appointed in Pennsylvania were Democrats. However, when his colleague, Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), asked unanimous consent for withdrawal of the amendment deleting the judgeships, Scott made no objection. But he said he would "feel very much hurt indeed" if he were not consulted about the appointment of the three judges.

The Senate also accepted an amendment by Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.), floor manager of the bill, increasing from one to two the additional circuit court judges provided for the 4th and 6th circuits and providing one new judge in the 8th circuit. These were additions to those recommended by the Judicial Conference. An amendment by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) limiting the 6th circuit to one rather than two new judgeships was rejected. Lausche claimed that there was "no pressing need for two new judges in the circuit."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1666:

Created six new permanent circuit court judgeships: two in the 4th circuit (Md., W.Va., Va., N.C., S.C.); two in the 6th circuit (Ohio, Mich., Ky., Tenn.); one each in the 7th circuit (Ind., Ill., Wis.) and 8th circuit (Minn., Iowa Mo., Ark., Neb., N.D., S.D.).

Created four temporary judgeships in the 5th circuit (Ga., Fla., Ala., Miss., La., Texas, Canal Zone).

Created 29 new permanent district judgeships: Middle and Southern Alabama, 1; Arizona, 1; Northern Florida, 1; Middle Florida, 1; Southern Florida, 2; Northern Illinois, 1; Southern Indiana, 1; Eastern Louisiana, 4; Maryland, 1; Northern Mississippi, 1; Southern Mississippi, 1; Western New York, 1; Northern Ohio, 1; Southern Ohio, 1; Rhode Island, 1; Southern Texas, 2; Western Texas, 1; Vermont, 1; Eastern Virginia, 2. In California, four new district judges were added to the existing 22 and all districts were reapportioned.

Created five new temporary district judgeships: Kansas, 1; Eastern Pennsylvania, 3; Eastern Wisconsin, 1.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

June 30 -- Joseph D. Tydings (D Md.) -- Increase from one to two the additional circuit court judges for the 4th and 6th circuits, and provide one additional circuit judge for the 8th circuit. Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

June 30 -- Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Delete from Tydings' amendment the second judge for the 6th circuit. Voice.

House

A subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee held hearings on S 1666 for eight days during September. Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and ranking minority member William M. McCulloch (R Ohio) Sept. 1 said they had doubts about the need for more judges. The Committee took no action on the bill.

At its annual meeting in Miami Beach in August, the American Bar Assn. (ABA) endorsed S 1666 as well as another bill (HR 8207), introduced May 17 by Rep. Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.), to establish a Federal Salary Review Commission to make periodic studies and recommendations on judicial and Congressional salaries. No action was taken on HR 8207, and a similar provision in the federal pay-increase bill (HR 10281) was deleted.

The ABA also called for a study by the American Bar Foundation of the problems of removal, retirement or other replacement of federal and state judges too ill, infirm or otherwise incapacitated to serve, as well as judges not carrying out their duties.

The Administrative Office of the United States Courts Sept. 24 reported that federal courts continued in fiscal 1965 to fall behind in their caseload. Courts of appeals docketed 6,766 cases, up 12 percent from fiscal 1964. While 5,771 were disposed of, 4,775 were pending at year's end, an all-time high. The 5th circuit, handling much civil rights business, continued to be the most heavily burdened.

District court work appeared to level off at 67,678 civil cases filed, up 1 percent. But habeas corpus and other applications in criminal cases rose to 4,664, up from 3,531 in 1964 and 1,903 in 1963. These constituted 12 percent of district court civil business. Criminal cases were up 5 percent, to 31,569, mostly through removal of 1,192 cases to federal courts from state and local courts, largely under provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 338)

JURY COMMISSIONS

Congress in 1965 failed to enact a bill (HR 5640), requested by the Justice Department, to tighten supervision by federal district court judges over selection procedures for federal trial juries. The House May 3 passed the bill by voice vote, but the Senate took no action.

Another bill (HR 3998) to raise the fees of commissioners from $5 to $10 a day, a provision contained in HR 5640, was passed March 15 by the House by voice vote but was not acted upon by the Senate.

Existing law provided for jury commissions for federal district courts, but the Department argued that in "many districts" judges exercised "little if any control" over jury selection. The Judicial Conference of the United States, the governing body of the federal judiciary, endorsed HR 5640, and the American Bar Assn. at its annual meeting in August endorsed both bills.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 5640:

Established a jury commission for each federal judicial district to assist in the selection of jury lists. The commission was to consist of the court's clerk and one or more commissioners appointed by the district judge on a bipartisan basis to serve under his supervision.

Specified that the commission would be full- or part-time and would work within specified guidelines, such as choosing jurors without regard to "race, sex, political or religious affiliation, or economic or social status."

Raised the pay of part-time commissioners from $5 to $10 for each day worked. (This was the sole provision of HR 3998).

BACKGROUND -- Rep. Jack Brooks (D Texas) March 2 introduced HR 5640, which the House Judiciary Committee April 27 reported (H Rept 261) with a technical amendment. Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) Feb. 1 introduced HR 3998, which the Committee reported (H Rept 134) March 3.

SUPREME COURT SALARIES

In a controversy that lingered on from the previous session, the House March 17 ended a heated debate by rejecting, on a 178-202 roll-call vote, a bill (HR 5374) to restore pay raises for the Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices of the Supreme Court which were trimmed in the 1964 federal pay raise bill. A majority of Republicans and Southern Democrats opposed the bill: R 23-104; SD 21-68; ND 134-30. (For voting, see chart p. 942) Prior to consideration of the bill, the House adopted an open rule for debate by a 202-183 roll call.

HR 5374 was designed to restore the differential between Supreme Court salaries and those of federal judges in lower courts that existed prior to enactment of the omnibus 1964 federal pay raise bill (PL 88-426). HR 5374 would have raised the Chief Justice's salary by $3,000 (to $43,000) and the salaries of the Associate Justices by the same amount (to $42,500), retroactive to Jan. 1, 1965.

Opposition to HR 5374 centered on such peripheral issues as recent, controversial Court decisions and the personal lives of several of the Justices. Proponents of the measure described the opposition as "nitpicking," "vengeance," "petty piques," "resentment," and "vindictiveness." Proponents argued that the only question before the House was "fairness and equity" in the matter of establishing Supreme Court salaries.

DEBATE -- March 17 -- John B. Anderson (R Ill.) -- Arguments advanced against a further pay increase for the Justices include the facts that they: (1) are appointed for life; (2) can retire at full pay at age 70 after 10 years of service or at age 65 after 15 years of service; (3) make no contribution to a retirement fund; and (4) take regular summer vacations.

Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) -- "I am just curious to know why this third chamber of the legislative body...is so much more highly paid than this body and the Senate." (The 1964 pay bill raised Congressmen's salaries to $30,000, the Speaker's and the Vice President's to $43,000, and those of district court judges, and some other officials, to $30,000.)

Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) -- "They (the Court) legislate on everything else; let them legislate on their salaries. They do not pay any attention to the Constitution any more anyhow."

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) -- If a critic of the bill got "into jeopardy and someone sought to filch his civil rights from him or take away his inalienable rights, he would bless the Supreme Court...." The Court "will continue to flourish and...will stand at the grave of its tormentors."

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) -- With reference to the fact that widows of Supreme Court Justices receive a $5,000 annuity, "I would like to know, when Justice (William O.) Douglas passes on, how much of his widows we will be required to compensate?" (Celler, floor manager of the bill, objected to this reference to Justice Douglas' three marriages as "quite unworthy," and urged Williams to strike the words from the record. Williams let the remark stand.)

Claude Pepper (D Fla.) -- The Court's decisions "are not at issue here today. If they were, I would say thank God for them and for a court with...courage and character...."

BACKGROUND -- The 1964 federal pay bill (PL 88-426) provided pay increases of $4,500 for the Chief Justice (to $40,000) and Associate Justices (to $39,500) of the Supreme Court, but raised the pay of all other federal judges by $7,500. The House version of the bill provided the full $7,500 increase for the Supreme Court, but the Senate adopted an amendment by Gordon Allott (R Colo.) to give the Supreme Court justices only a $2,500 raise. Allott said his amendment was intended to bring a "semblance of equity" to the relationship between Supreme Court and Congressional salaries, raised by the bill from $22,500 to $30,000 a year. But Rep. Charles S. Joelson (D N.J.) charged that the Senate's cut was an "act of vengeance" for recent Court decisions. House-Senate conferees set the increase at $4,500. (1964 Almanac p. 416)

The House Judiciary Committee March 3 reported HR 5374 (H Rept 136). No minority views were filed.

AGENCY LAW PRACTICE

Congress in 1965 enacted a bill (S 1758 -- PL 89-332) eliminating special requirements by federal agencies for the practice of law before them. In its final form, the law applied to all agencies except the Patent Office.

The intent of the legislation was to open agency practice to all members of the bar and to give litigants free choice in selecting counsel.

The Senate Sept. 21 passed the bill in a form applying to all agencies. The House Oct. 18 passed an amended version, exempting the Patent Office, and the Senate Oct. 20 concurred in that amendment, sending the bill to the President. All action was by voice vote. The President Nov. 8 approved the bill (PL 89-332).

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 1758:

Authorized any member of a state or the District of Columbia bar association to practice before any federal agency except the Patent Office.

Background

Over a period of years, various federal agencies developed special requirements (sometimes involving a test) for lawyers practicing before them. Most agencies eventually abandoned these requirements, and in 1965 only two major agencies -- the Patent Office and the Internal Revenue Service -- still had them.

Sen. Edward V. Long (D Mo.) and others April 9 introduced S 1758, which was reported (S Rept 755) Sept. 17 in an amended form by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The bill gave no exemption to the Patent Office or the Internal Revenue Service, both of which opposed passage.

The House Judiciary Committee Oct. 12 reported the bill (H Rept 1141), amending it to make an exception for the Patent Office on grounds that practice before that agency required special engineering or scientific skills. That version was enacted into law.

MEMBERS' ALLOWANCES

Congress in 1965, in the legislative appropriations bill for fiscal 1966 (HR 8775 -- PL 89-90) and in three separate bills, increased Members' allowances for travel, telephone service, postage and maintaining an office in their home state or district. The House, but not the Senate, provided funds to permit its Members to hire college students for a summer Congressional "intern" program.

Home Offices. The legislative appropriations raised from $600 to $1,200 annually the rental allowance a Senator could receive for an office in his home state when suitable space was not available in a post office or other federal building. Later in 1965 the House passed a bill increasing from $1,200 to $2,400 a year the total amount allowed a Representative for rental of either one or two offices in his home district. When the Senate considered the bill, it made the same provisions applicable to Senators (HR 10014 -- PL 89-211).

Trips Home. Allowances for Senators' trips home during a Congressional session were increased from two to six in the legislative appropriations bill. House Members' compensable round trips were increased from three to five by HR 9947 (PL 89-147). The bill also provided an optional formula whereby Members from districts within commuting distance of Washington, D.C., could elect to take a lump sum of $300 instead of actual payments for the five trips.

A Senate amendment to HR 9947 repealed a prohibition in existing law against payment of travel expenses to Senators returning to their home state and to Representatives returning to their districts unless the trips were (1) specifically authorized by law, (2) for official participation in the funeral of a deceased Member, or (3) for official business while Congress was not in session. The provision, which was adopted in 1960 as an anti-junket device, was considered unfair since it prohibited travel payments, for example, to a Member attending committee hearings in his own district. (1960 Almanac p. 408; 1961 Almanac p. 158)

HR 9947 allowed round trips to a Member's district for two staff members once or for one staff member twice in a calendar year, while the legislative appropriations raised to six (instead of four) the number of paid trips for the staff of Senators from the six states with a population of 10 million or more.

Telephones, Postage. House Members received a 20-percent increase in the amount of long-distance calls for which they could be reimbursed from Government funds (in HR 10139 -- PL 89-131). Senators received similar increases in the legislative appropriations bill, plus raises in their postage allowances.

Summer Interns. The House June 16, by a 229-153 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 416) permitting each Representative to hire a college student for two and a half months in the summer at a salary of $300 per month. Although a few Members preferred that the interns be paid from the clerk-hire funds already available to Members, H Res 416 provided payment from the contingent fund. (For voting, see chart p. 970) The Senate failed to act on a similar measure (S Res 139) for employment of summer interns by Senators.

Sponsored by Rep. John Brademas (D Ind.), H Res 416 permitted each Member to hire a college student for two and a half months between June 1-Aug. 31 each year, at a rate of $300 per month. Samuel N. Friedel (D Md.) said the House Administration Committee would set regulations requiring that the interns serve in the Washington offices of Congressmen, rather than in their home districts, and that no more than two could be hired in any summer by a Representative.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES GET ANOTHER PAY RAISE

HR 10281 -- Reported by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 792) Aug. 16, 1965.

- Passed by the House, amended, by a 370-7 roll-call vote Sept. 30. (See p. 1012)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee (S Rept 910) Oct. 18.
- Passed by the Senate by a 67-0 roll-call vote Oct. 22. (See p. 1080)
- House agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote Oct. 22.

PL 89-301 -- Signed into law Oct. 29.

Congress in 1965 passed legislation (HR 10281) providing a 3.6-percent across-the-board pay increase for about 1.8 million federal career, postal, legislative and judicial employees, retroactive to Oct. 1, 1965.

The bill also liberalized postal overtime and relocation allowances; granted substitute postal workers time-and-a-half for overtime for the first time; and established, for the first time, a severance pay system applicable to nearly all federal civilian workers. Pay provisions of the measure were estimated to cost $488.2 million a year; fringe benefit provisions, $153.3 million a year, a total of $641.5 million a year for the bill as a whole. The increases were the 11th pay raise received by postal workers and the 12th received by classified employees since 1945.

Congress was under heavy pressure from federal employee and postal worker unions to grant a far more costly pay increase than finally enacted. They sought a 7-percent raise. An increase of that general magnitude, they argued, would be necessary to maintain the principle of "comparability" established in the 1962 federal pay bill, namely, that federal salaries should be comparable to those paid in private industry for the same level of work.

President Johnson, on the other hand, on the basis of April 15 recommendations of a special pay panel he had established, recommended a 3-percent increase in a May 12 message to Congress.

Mr. Johnson, in statements at various times, indicated that a 3-percent raise would be consistent with his desire that wage and price increases in the economy conform with "guideposts" aimed at avoiding inflation which were established by the Council of Economic Advisers in 1962 and repeated in documents accompanying Mr. Johnson's 1965 Economic Report. According to the guideposts, in order to avoid inflation, wage increases should not exceed the average increase in worker productivity nationally over the previous five years. The Council said this productivity rate in 1964 was 3.2 percent.

Mr. Johnson indicated that because of the possible inflationary effect, he strongly opposed any federal pay increase exceeding the limit derived from the wage-price guideposts. In several statements, he gave Congress reason to believe that he would veto any federal pay increase bill granting raises much in excess of his 3-percent recommendation.

When the House, acting first on the pay raise bill, passed a version granting a 4-percent increase as of Oct. 1, 1965, with an additional automatic increase ranging from 3 to 8 percent to take effect a year later, it appeared that Congress and the President were on a collision course. However, only hours before adjournment the Senate passed an amended version of the bill that provided only a single-step 3.6-percent increase.

Some Members urged the House to reject the Senate version and stand firm behind its own proposal, arguing that the Senate bill would bring salaries close to comparability only at the lower grades and not at the middle and higher grades which were furthest from comparability. The House bill, they said, would bring federal workers closer to the comparability goal. But Chairman Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.) of the House Post Office and Civil Service Compensation Subcommittee said that leaders of the federal and postal employee unions preferred to accept a 3.6-percent raise in 1965 rather than risk a veto by the President of a bill containing a larger raise. Consequently, the House agreed to the Senate version and the President signed the measure into law.

UNION LOBBYING CAMPAIGN

Federal employee and postal worker unions directed their efforts, for the most part, toward winning a 7-percent raise for their members. The unions' campaign, which extended from June through September, included letter-writing drives, "legislative conferences," and intensive lobbying of members of House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees.

Rep. James H. Morrison (D La.), second-ranking Democrat on the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, June 21 pledged the National Assn. of Letter Carriers (AFL-CIO) "the highest amount we can get." He predicted a raise more generous than the Administration's 3-percent proposal.

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), a member of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, told the same audience, "You letter carriers are the organization and muscle of the postal workers and federal employees of this country. You have personally been responsible for 90 percent of the pay raises and other beneficial legislation for federal employees approved in recent years."

Although the unions' efforts were strenuous, one union spokesman said they were merely typical of efforts by federal and postal employee groups in any pay raise campaign. He said they did not constitute an unusually heavy lobbying campaign. Another union spokesman said, "It's like this every time we go up for a raise."

Provisions

As signed by the President, HR 10281, the Federal Employees Salary Act of 1965:

Pay Raises. Authorized an across-the-board, 3.6-percent federal pay increase, retroactive to Oct. 1, 1965, for persons covered by the Classification Act of 1949, the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955 and related Acts, the Foreign Service Act of 1946, the Medicine and Surgery Salary System of the Veterans Administration and the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service's County Committee salary system; for officers and employees of the Legislative and Judicial Branches and for federal and District of Columbia officers and employees whose salaries were fixed administratively, other than in accordance with prevailing wage rates.

Provided that no federal employee salary rate shall exceed that of Level V of the Federal Executive Salary Schedule ($26,000).

Increased from $30,000 to $35,000 annually the salaries of the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Limited maximum salaries for officers and employees of the Senate, whose rates were not fixed by law, to $23,770 annually, and reserved to each Senator the authority to determine whether the pay increases would apply to his own employees.

Fringe Benefits. Required the heads of departments and agencies, "to the maximum extent practicable," to schedule all official travel away from an employee's official duty station within his regularly scheduled workweek.

Established a basic workweek of five eight-hour days for all postal workers and required, "to the maximum extent practicable," the assignment of senior regular employees to a basic workweek, Monday-through-Friday.

Provided that substitute postal employees would be paid at time-and-a-half rates (that is, at 150 percent of their regular rate) for overtime and for work on Christmas day, but at straight-time rates for work on other holidays. (Previously, substitute postal employees were paid only at regular, straight-time rates for overtime, Christmas and other holidays.)

Provided that regular postal employees would receive time-and-a-half pay for overtime if in postal grade 7 or below, and either time-and-a-half pay or compensatory time if in grade 8 or above. (Previously, employees in grade 8 or above could receive only compensatory time.)

Provided that regular postal employees would receive double-time pay (twice the normal rate) for holiday work if in grade 7 or below, and either double-time pay or compensatory time for work on holidays if in grade 8 or higher. (Previously, those in grade 7 or below received either double-time pay or compensatory time for holidays, and those in grade 8 or above received only compensatory time.)

Gave the Postmaster General discretion, in applying the two provisions described immediately above, to determine whether compensation for overtime by employees of grade 8 and over should take the form of time-and-a-half pay or the form of compensatory time.

Provided that regular postal employees would be paid at 2½ times their regular rate for work on Christmas day. (Same as before.)

Provided that regular postal employees would be paid for Sunday work, if falling within their basic workweek, at the rate of 125 percent of the regular hourly wage for their level. (Previously, they merely received their regular rate of pay.)

Authorized the Postmaster General, retroactive to July 1, 1965, to grant postal employees required to relocate by the Department (1) a per diem allowance for each member of his family while en route to his new location, (2) subsistence expenses for each member of his family for not to exceed 30 days while occupying temporary quarters at his new location and (3) five days of extra leave with pay.

Increased from $100 to $125 annual allowances for all federal employees required to wear a uniform.

Established, effective upon enactment, a system of severance pay, for nearly all federal employees losing their jobs through no fault of their own and not entitled to immediate civil service retirement benefits, of an amount equal to the sum of (1) one week's pay for each of the employees' first 10 years of service, plus (2) two weeks' pay for each year of service beyond 10 years, plus (3) 10 percent of the basic severance allowance (the sum of 1 and 2) for each year the employee was over age 40 (total severance pay could not exceed the equivalent of one year's pay).

Allowed a federal employee whose in-grade raises were denied by his agency because of poor performance on the job to appeal the denial to the Civil Service Commission. (Under the 1962 federal pay bill, employees not performing at an "acceptable level of competence" could be denied in-grade raises until their work improved. There was no appeal beyond the head of their own agency. HR 10281 now permitted an appeal to the Civil Service Commission.)

Background

REFERENCES -- For history of federal pay bills from 1954-60, see 1960 Almanac p. 240. For subsequent action, see the following Almanacs: 1961, p. 371; 1962, p. 355; 1963, p. 403; 1964, p. 416.

Raises From 1945-64. From 1945-64, federal postal workers were voted pay raises 10 times and federal classified employees were voted pay raises 11 times. Other federal employees and officers, such as legislative and judicial workers, Members of Congress, judges and members of the foreign service, also received raises on numerous occasions.

The most recent pay legislation was in 1962 and 1964. The 1962 legislation provided for a two-step increase raising postal salaries an average of 11.2 percent and classified worker salaries an average of 9.6 percent. The 1964 bill provided increases ranging from 3 to 33 percent.

Comparability Principle -- In the 1962 legislation, a provision of major importance for future raises was written into law: "comparability." According to this principle, federal career salary rates should be comparable to salaries paid in private industry for similar work. It was hoped that, eventually, federal salaries at all except the top levels could be made comparable with those in private industry. The greatest discrepancies were at the higher salary levels.

1965 Presidential Requests. In his Jan. 25 Budget Message, President Johnson said that he was considering whether to recommend a new federal pay raise, and was appointing a special panel to study the problem. The President indicated that he favored the principle of comparability in federal pay. But he said it was "essential to assure" that any pay raises granted in 1965 "be compatible with our national wage and price objectives" -- a reference to his desire to avoid inflation by adhering to guideposts of the Council of Economic Advisers. (For text, see p. 1351)

Pay Panel Report -- The panel to study federal employee pay raises was appointed by the President Jan. 28, and issued its report to him April 15. The panel's recommendations on federal civilian employee pay are described below. For recommendations on military pay, see story on military pay bill, p. 702.

Marion B. Folsom of the Eastman Kodak Co., former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, was panel chairman. Other public members were Gen. Omar N. Bradley of the Bulova Watch Co.; George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO; Sydney Stein Jr. of Stein Roe and Farnham; and Don K. Price, dean of the Graduate School of Public Administration, Harvard University.

Government members were Robert S. McNamara, Secretary of Defense; John A. Gronouski, Postmaster General; W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary of Labor; Kermit Gordon, director of the Budget Bureau; and John W. Macy Jr., chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

In its report, the panel endorsed the establishment "at the earliest practicable time, of full comparability between civilian salaries and salaries paid in private enterprise for the same levels of work." It also endorsed a 3-percent pay raise for federal civilian employees for fiscal 1966, and made several additional recommendations. (The 3-percent raise fell within the guideposts for raises set by the Council of Economic Advisers: the Council had said that the average increase in productivity over the past five years, as of 1964, was 3.2 percent; therefore, a 3-percent pay raise was permissible.)

President's Recommendations -- President Johnson May 12 sent a special message to Congress endorsing the general findings of the pay panel and transmitting its report to Congress. The President said he believed in the comparability principle: it was not only fair, but would attract good personnel to Government employment. (See text, p. 1377)

In the May 12 message, the President specifically endorsed seven of the pay panel's recommendations on civilian employees and said draft legislation would be sent to Capitol Hill to carry out the recommendations. Total annual cost of these recommendations was later estimated at $542.7 million, of which about $400 million was for pay raises, the rest for fringe benefits. (See box, last page of story) The following were the seven recommendations and their ultimate fate at the hands of Congress:

(1) Enact a 3-percent average pay raise for federal employees, effective Jan. 1, 1966. Request fulfilled in the final version of HR 10281, but made effective as of Oct. 1, 1965.

(2) Establish a Federal Salary Review Commission to study federal salary scales at four-year intervals. Permit the President, on the basis of these studies, to recommend federal salary changes that would go into effect automatically, without new legislation, unless disapproved by either chamber of Congress. Not included in the final version of HR 10281 or any other 1965 bill.

(3) Permit the President, in periods between the four-year reviews, to recommend annual increases in federal pay whenever necessary to keep pace with changes in non-federal pay rates. Provide for these increases to go into effect automatically, without new legislation, unless disapproved by either chamber of Congress. Not included in the final version of HR 10281 or any other 1965 bill.

(4) For the purpose of determining the comparability of federal and non-federal pay, permit the President to study and consider the wages paid to employees of non-profit organizations and state and local government agencies as well as employees of private business. (Under existing law, comparisons were based solely on surveys of wages paid in private business.) Not included in the final version of HR 10281 or any other 1965 bill.

(5) Provide premium pay for overtime work for federal employees not already receiving it. Although couched in general terms, this request was understood to apply primarily to postal workers, many of whom (notably, substitutes) were receiving no premium pay for overtime work. The final version of HR 10281 fulfilled this request, giving substitute postal employees time-and-a-half overtime pay for the first time; and permitting postal workers above grade 7 to receive time-and-a-half for overtime (instead of only compensatory time). (See final provisions, above, for details and other changes.)

(6) Pay certain relocation and moving expenses for employees transferred to new locations for the convenience and benefit of the Government. Request fulfilled with regard to postal workers in the final version of HR 10281. For classified workers, the request was not considered as part of HR 10281, because the Post Office and Civil Service Committees, which handled HR 10281, did not have jurisdiction over moving expenses of classified employees. Instead, moving expenses and other relocation benefits for classified workers were considered separately in bills (HR 10607, S 2374) introduced by Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D N.Y.) and Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.) and referred to the Government Operations Committees. The House Government Operations Committee Oct. 21 reported HR 10607 (H Rept 1199) but there was no further action on HR 10607 or S 2374 in 1965. Consequently, no new moving expense compensation was provided for classified workers in 1965.

(7) Establish a system of severance pay for employees involuntarily separated from federal service through no fault of their own. Request fulfilled in final version of HR 10281.

Bills Introduced -- Following the President's message, the Administration draft bill was introduced in the House (HR 8207) by Rep. Udall and in the Senate (S 1997, 1998, 2085, 2086) by Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), by request. Monroney split up the requests among several different bills.

House

COMMITTEE -- Post Office and Civil Service, Compensation Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 1-2, 10, 15-16, 18, 21-24 and 29 on the Administration bill (HR 8207) and other pay proposals. During the hearings all six major federal and postal worker unions said that President Johnson's 3-percent pay raise proposal was inadequate. The unions, in the hearings or in organization publications, took the following positions:

National Rural Letter Carriers Assn. (Ind.), 43,000 members -- Favored a raise of about 7 percent, as contained in the bills introduced by Rep. Arnold Olsen (D Mont.) and others. (Olsen introduced two 7-percent bills, HR 8663 and HR 9030, differing somewhat in some provisions.)

National Assn. of Letter Carriers (AFL-CIO), 150,000 members -- Supported a 7-percent raise, as in HR 9030.

United Federation of Postal Clerks (AFL-CIO), 145,000 members -- Favored 7 percent, as in HR 9030 and HR 8663.

American Federation of Government Employees (AFL-CIO), 160,000 members -- Favored a 7-percent across-the-board raise, and for that reason, did not favor the exact provisions of the Olsen bills, which provided somewhat lower increases for employees in the upper and middle levels.

National Federation of Federal Employees (Ind.), 49,500 members -- Considered 3 percent inadequate, but did not specify any percent it wished. Stressed that it strongly favored putting into practice the principle of "comparability" as set forth in the 1962 federal pay raise bill. A spokesman said that at present, lower grade federal employees were closer to achieving comparability than were middle and upper grade federal employees, who often received far less than for a corresponding non-federal job. He said the Olsen bill, by providing somewhat higher percentage increases for lower grade employees than for middle and higher grade, would increase this "distortion."

National Postal Union (Ind.), -- 43,000 members -- Favored 7 percent, as in the Olsen bills.

Bill Reported

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee Aug. 16 reported a clean bill (HR 10281 -- H Rept 792) by a 20-3 vote. As reported, the bill provided an across-the-board 4.5-percent pay increase effective Oct. 1, 1965, and an additional estimated 3-to 8-percent increase -- depending on trends in private industry pay scales -- effective Oct. 1, 1966. The bill also liberalized overtime rates and other fringe benefits for classified and postal workers, set up a system of severance pay, created a permanent commission to provide a continuing review of federal salary systems, and established a permanent procedure automatically linking pay increases for Members of Congress and federal judges and executives to future increases granted federal career workers. The bill was estimated to cost $828.4 million a year for the first-step raises and fringe benefits, and an additional $777.6 million a year (for a $1.6 billion total) once the second-stage increases went into effect on a full-year basis.

Majority Views. The report said HR 10281 was designed to "honor -- through moderate but timely and meaningful salary adjustments -- the pledges made by the Committee, by the Congress and by two Presidents (Kennedy and Johnson)...that federal salary rates shall be comparable with those paid by private enterprise for the same levels of work."

Minority Views. Committee Republicans H. R. Gross (Iowa), Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.) and James T. Broyhill (N.C.) argued that the bill was "potentially inflationary" and warned that overtime changes for postal workers could lead to curtailment of Saturday mail deliveries and that postal pay and fringe benefit provisions in general would make a postal rate increase a "distinct possibility."

In additional minority views, Republicans Robert J. Corbett (Pa.), Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.), John H. Buchanan Jr. (Ala.) and Broyhill stated that endorsement now of a future pay boost for Congressmen and federal judges and executives was "untimely and unwise."

Individual Views. In individual views, Broyhill reiterated his opposition to certain aspects of the bill but noted that he fully subscribed to a 4.5-percent first-phase increase for all federal employees.

President Disapproves. On Aug. 9, while the pay raise legislation was still under consideration by the Committee, President Johnson pressed his insistence on a non-inflationary increase. He did so on the occasion of signing a bill (HR 1771 -- PL 89-116) providing a five-day workweek for postmasters. He said, "I do want to say to all of you that it is going to be pretty difficult for the President of the United States to be the first person to be the chief wrecker of a non-inflationary wage and price policy." He also said, "I hope that the postmasters who will benefit from what we are doing today, and the other federal employees who will benefit from the recommendations that we have made on all this legislation this year, will not ask for any special privileges over and above what we ask the rest of the country to follow."

In his press conference Aug. 25, nine days after the Committee reported HR 10281, President Johnson was asked if he thought the pay increases in the bill, which far exceeded 3 percent, violated the wage-price guideposts. Mr. Johnson answered, "I do think that it would violate the guidelines. I do hope that the Congress will carefully and thoroughly consider the destructive effect it would have if we should pass the bill in its present form." He said the Committee bill would be "very disastrous to our price-wage stability policy in this country."

Special Rule Adopted

The House Sept. 13 bypassed its Rules Committee by adopting, under a special 21-day procedure established in January, a rule for floor consideration of HR 10281, on which the Rules Committee had failed to take action. The rule for debate on HR 10281 (H Res 536) was filed by James H. Morrison (D La.), second-ranking Democrat on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. It was approved by the House by a 289-84 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 998; for 21-day rule action on other bills, see story p. 585)

FLOOR ACTION

The House Sept. 30 passed HR 10281 by a 370-7 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 1012)

Prior to passage, the House adopted by a 107-33 standing vote an amendment reducing the first-step pay increase from 4½ percent to 4 percent, thus reducing the annual cost of the bill by about $70 million a year. It also adopted by a 238-140 roll call, a recommittal motion deleting an automatic-pay increase for Members of Congress and federal executives and judges in 1967. (For details on these two votes, see below)

In its major provisions, HR 10281 provided an across-the-board 4-percent pay increase for all federal employees effective Oct. 1, 1965, and an additional estimated 3-to 8-percent increase -- depending on trends in private industry pay scales -- for the same employees effective Oct. 1, 1966. The bill also liberalized overtime rates for both postal and classified workers; increased House Majority and Minority Leader salaries to $35,000 a year; provided relocation assistance for postal workers; increased federal employee uniform allowances from $100 to $150; set up a system of severance pay; and established a permanent Federal Salary Commission to provide a continuing review of federal salary systems and report to the President. The bill was estimated to cost $755 million a year for the first-step raises and fringe benefits and $1.5 billion annually after the second-step pay raises went into effect on a full-year basis.

During House floor action Sept. 30, debate centered on Administration opposition to the 4.5-percent pay raise and on Members' opposition to a provision authorizing an automatic pay increase, effective January 1967, for Members of Congress and federal executives and judges equal to percentage increases granted in the future to top classified employees (GS 18) or the over-all average increases granted all classified employees, whichever was greater.

Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.), chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Compensation Subcommittee, offered the amendment to reduce the pay raise from 4.5 to 4 percent which was adopted by a 107-33 standing vote. Udall said that while he supported the 4.5-percent boost, "in view of the realities (i.e., the rush for adjournment and the possibility of a Presidential veto)...we are either going to reduce (HR 10281) to 4 percent and get a bill this year, or we are going to stand pat and get no bill."

The attack on the provision granting an automatic raise to Members of Congress and federal executives and judges in 1967 was led by James T. Broyhill (R N.C.). Broyhill argued that inclusion of the automatic provision was "subterfuge" and would result in Congress' abdication of its responsibility to pass on its own pay. Udall, Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.), ranking Committee Republican, and others insisted that the provision was necessary to ensure that Congress' frequent failure to raise its own pay would not act to "compress" the entire federal salary system. This was a reference to the fact that Congress traditionally has refused to place a federal employee's pay above its own. Without the automatic linkage between Members' and top career employees' pay, proponents argued, the top career workers' pay would remain static while the pay of persons in the lower career levels continued to rise with each new pay boost enacted. Udall, who sponsored a similar automatic provision for the 1964 federal pay bill (PL 88-426), said that if the provision were deleted from HR 10281 he would "quit the battle." He also predicted that it would be "15 or 20 years" before Congress raised its pay above the current level of $30,000 set in 1964. (1964 Almanac p. 416)

An amendment by Broyhill to delete the provision failed in the committee of the whole by a 111-135 teller vote. However, the recommittal motion by Broyhill with instructions to delete the provision succeeded on a 238-140 roll call (R 115-7; D 123-133).

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Sept. 30 -- Morris K. Udall (D Ariz.) -- Reduce from 4.5 to 4 percent the October 1965 across-the-board pay increase for all federal employees. Standing vote, 107-33.

Udall -- Exclude from severance pay provisions officers and employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA). Voice vote.

Udall -- Provide that pay increases for employees whose salaries were fixed administratively shall not apply to wage board employees whose salaries were fixed in accordance with prevailing rates or practices. Voice.

Udall -- Authorize the Postmaster General, in order to provide postal service on days other than those included in the basic workweek of five eight-hour days, to assign substitute employees to duty on any day of the week, including Sunday. Voice.

Leonor K. Sullivan (D Mo.) -- Provide severance pay for U.S.-employed aliens in the Canal Zone. Voice.

Byron G. Rogers (D Colo.) -- Include in the purview of the Federal Salary Review Commission's review of federal judicial salaries the following: referees in bankruptcy; the director and deputy director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts; and the commissioners of the Court of Claims; and extend to referees in bankruptcy the automatic salary increases effective in January 1967. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Sept. 30 -- Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.) -- Substitute for pending Udall amendment (above) -- Reduce from 4.5 to 3 percent the October 1965 across-the-board pay increase for all federal employees. Standing vote, 8-103.

Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.) -- Substitute for pending Broyhill amendment (below) -- Change from January 1967 to January 1969 the effective date of automatic pay increases for Members of Congress and federal executives and judges. Voice vote.

James T. Broyhill (R N.C.) -- Delete section authorizing automatic pay increases in January 1967 for Members of Congress and federal executives and judges. Teller vote, 111-135. (Note: This provision was later adopted by means of a recommittal motion. See text, above.)

Joseph P. Vigorito (D Pa.) -- Delete provision authorizing automatic pay increases in January 1967 for Members of Congress. Voice.

Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) -- Make Congressional pay increases contingent on a reduction in the national debt and a balanced budget for two successive fiscal years. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Post Office and Civil Service.

HELD HEARINGS -- Aug. 16, 23, 26-27, 30 and Oct. 5-6 and 8 on federal pay legislation. During the hearings the National Federation of Federal Employees (Ind.) supported HR 10281 as reported by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, providing for a 4.5-percent first-step increase. The National Rural Letter Carriers Assn. (Ind.) called the salary increase provision a "responsible step toward comparability." Four other major federal and postal worker unions asked for a salary increase of 7 percent.

Bill Reported

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee Oct. 18 reported HR 10281 (S Rept 910) with amendments in the nature of a substitute bill. As reported, the bill provided for a one-step raise of 3.6 percent, plus fringe benefits, the whole package to cost $641.5 million a year. The key changes made by the Committee were the reduction of the first-step pay raise from 4 percent to 3.6 percent, and the dropping of the proposed second-step automatic raise.
